DECLARATION

I. INTRODUCTION

1. This Declaration is issued in the context of an Independent Review Process (“IRP”) as provided for in Article IV, Section 3 of the Bylaws of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”; “ICANN Bylaws” or “Bylaws”). In accordance with those Bylaws, the conduct of this IRP is governed by the International Arbitration Rules of the International Centre for Dispute Resolution as amended and in effect June 1, 2009 (“ICDR”; “ICDR Rules”) as supplemented by the Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) Independent Review Process (“Supplementary Procedures”).
2. The subject matter of the dispute here concerns alleged conduct by the ICANN Board in relation to one particular facet of the process by which new generic top-level domains (“gTLDs”, also known as gTLD “strings”) are applied for, reviewed and delegated into the Internet’s domain name system (“DNS”) root zone.
3. As explained in this Declaration, the Applicant, Booking.com, alleges that, in establishing and overseeing the process by which so-called string similarity reviews are conducted, and in refusing to reconsider and overturn a decision to place Booking.com’s applied-for gTLD string .hotels in a so-called string contention set, the Board acted in a manner inconsistent with applicable policies, procedures and rules as set out in ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and gTLD Applicant Guidebook (“Guidebook”).
4. Reading between the lines of the parties’ submissions, the Panel senses that both sides would welcome the opportunity to contribute to an exchange that might result in enabling disputants in future cases to avoid having to resort to an IRP to resolve issues such as have arisen here. Certainly the Panel considers that the present matter would ideally have been resolved amicably by the parties. This is particularly true given that the matter here concerns two of ICANN’s guiding principles – transparency and fairness – as applied to one of ICANN’s most essential activities – the delegation of new gTLDs<sup>2</sup> – in circumstances in which various members of the Internet community, including certain members of the ICANN Board’s New gTLD Program Committee, have expressed their own concerns regarding the string similarity review process. That being the case, though, the Panel does not shy away from the duty imposed by the Bylaws to address the questions before it and to render the present Declaration, in accordance with, and within the constraints of the Bylaws, the ICDR Rules and the Supplementary Procedures.

<sup>2</sup> As stated in the very first sentence of the Guidebook: “New gTLDs have been in the forefront of ICANN’s agenda since its creation.”

II. THE PARTIES

A. The Applicant: Booking.com

5. The Applicant, Booking.com, is a limited liability company established under the law of the Netherlands. Booking.com describes itself as “the number one online hotel reservation service in the world, offering over 435,605 hotels and accommodations.”<sup>3</sup> Booking.com’s primary focus is on the U.S. and other English-language markets.
6. Booking.com is represented in this IRP by Mr. Flip Petillion and Mr. Jan Janssen of the law firm Crowell & Moring in Brussels, Belgium.

B. The Respondent: ICANN

7. The Respondent, ICANN, is a California not-for-profit public benefit corporation, formed in 1998. As set forth in Article I, Section 1 of its Bylaws, ICANN’s mission is “to coordinate, at the overall level, the global Internet’s system of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internet’s unique identifier systems.” ICANN describes itself as “a complex organization that facilitates input from a wide variety of Internet stakeholders. ICANN has a Board of Directors and staff members from around the globe, as well as an Ombudsman. ICANN, however, is much more than just the corporation—it is a community of participants.”<sup>4</sup>
8. ICANN is represented in this IRP by Mr. Jeffrey A. LeVee, Esq. and Ms. Kate Wallace, Esq. of the law firm Jones Day in Los Angeles, California, USA.

III. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND – IN BRIEF

9. We recount here certain uncontested elements of the factual and procedural background to the present IRP. Other facts are addressed in subsequent parts of the Declaration, where the parties’ respective claims and the Panel’s analysis are discussed.

A. ICANN’s Adoption of the New gTLD Program and the Applicant Guidebook

10. Even before the introduction of ICANN’s New gTLD Program (“Program”), in 2011, ICANN had, over time, gradually expanded the DNS from the original six gTLDs (.com; .edu; .gov; .mil; .net; .org) to 22 gTLDs and over 250 two-letter country-code TLDs.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, as noted above, the introduction of new gTLDs has been “in the forefront of ICANN’s agenda” for as long as ICANN has existed.

11. The Program has its origins in what the Guidebook refers to as “carefully deliberated policy development work” by the ICANN community.<sup>6</sup>
12. In 2005, ICANN’s Generic Names Supporting Organization (“GNSO”), one of the groups that coordinates global Internet policy at ICANN, commenced a policy development process to consider the introduction of new gTLDs.<sup>7</sup> As noted in the Guidebook:

Representatives from a wide variety of stakeholder groups – governments, individuals, civil society, business and intellectual property constituencies, and the technology community – were engaged in discussions for more than 18 months on such questions as the demand, benefits and risks of new gTLDs, the selection criteria that should be applied, how gTLDs should be allocated, and the contractual conditions that should be required for new gTLD registries going forward.

13. In October 2007, the GNSO formally completed its policy development work on new gTLDs and approved a set of 19 policy recommendations.
14. In June 2008, the ICANN Board decided to adopt the policies recommended by the GNSO.<sup>8</sup> As explained in the Guidebook, ICANN’s work next focused on implementation of these recommendations, which it saw as “creating an application and evaluation process for new gTLDs that is aligned with the policy recommendations and provides a clear roadmap for applicants to reach delegation, including Board approval.”<sup>9</sup>
15. This process concluded with the decision by the ICANN Board in June 2011 to implement the New gTLD Program and its foundational instrument, the Guidebook.<sup>10</sup>
16. As described by ICANN in these proceedings, the Program “constitutes by far ICANN’s most ambitious expansion of the Internet’s naming system. The Program’s goals include

See also Guidebook, Preamble. Booking.com refers to the GNSO as “ICANN’s main policy-making body for generic top-level domains”. Article X of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation provides: “There shall be a policy-development body known as the Generic Names Supporting Organization (GNSO), which shall be responsible for developing and recommending to the ICANN Board substantive policies relating to generic top-level domains” (Section 1); the GNSO shall consist of “a number of Constituencies” and “four Stakeholder Groups” (Section 2).

<sup>9</sup> Guidebook, Preamble: “This implementation work is reflected in the drafts of the applicant guidebook that were released for public comment, and in the explanatory papers giving insight into rationale behind some of the conclusions reached on specific topics. Meaningful community input has led to revisions of the draft applicant guidebook.”

<sup>10</sup> RM 10 (ICANN resolution). The Guidebook (in its 30 May 2011 version) is one of seven “elements” of the Program implemented in 2011. The other elements were: a draft communications plan; “operational readiness activities”; a program to ensure support for applicants from developing countries; “a process for handling requests for removal of cross-ownership restrictions on operators of existing gTLDs who want to participate in the [Program]”; budgeted expenditures; and a timetable.

enhancing competition and consumer choice, and enabling the benefits of innovation via the introduction of new gTLDs ...”.<sup>11</sup>

17. The Guidebook is “continuously iterated and revised”, and “provides details to gTLD applicants and forms the basis for ICANN’s evaluation of new gTLD applications.”<sup>12</sup> As noted by Booking.com, the Guidebook “is the crystallization of Board-approved consensus policy concerning the introduction of new gTLDs.”<sup>13</sup>

B. Booking.com’s Application for .hotels, and the Outcome

18. In accordance with the process set out in the Guidebook, Booking.com filed an application (Application ID 1-1016-75482) for the gTLD string .hotels.
19. At the same time, Despegar Online SRL (“Despegar”), a corporation established under the law of Uruguay, applied (Application ID 1-1249-87712) for the string .hoteis.
20. “Hoteis” is the Portuguese word for “hotels”.
21. According to Booking.com, Despegar is “a competitor of Booking.com”.<sup>14</sup> Booking.com claims that it intends “to operate .hotels as a secure Internet environment providing hotel reservation services for consumers, hotels, and other stakeholders,”<sup>15</sup> while Despegar similarly intends .hoteis to be dedicated primarily to “individuals that are interested in, and businesses that offer, hotel- and travel-related content.”<sup>16</sup> That being said, a key difference between the two applications, as Booking.com acknowledges, is that Booking.com intends to focus the services it will offer under its proposed gTLD “on the U.S. (with its strongly Anglo-Saxon traditions) and other English-language markets,”<sup>17</sup> whereas Despegar intends to target “Portuguese-speaking” markets.<sup>18</sup>
22. As part of the Initial Evaluation to which all applied-for gTLDs were subject, .hotels and .hoteis were each required to undergo so-called string review in accordance with the Guidebook, the first component of which is a process known as string similarity review. As provided by the Guidebook, the string similarity review was conducted by an independent

<sup>12</sup> Response, ¶ 14. The resolution (RM 10) adopting the Guidebook explicitly “authorizes staff to make further updates and changes to the Applicant Guidebook as necessary and appropriate, including as the possible result of new technical standards, reference documents, or policies that might be adopted during the course of the application process, and to prominently publish notice of such changes.”

<sup>13</sup> Request, ¶ 13. See also Guidebook, Module 1-2: “This Applicant Guidebook is the implementation of Board approved consensus policy concerning the introduction of new gTLDs, and has been revised extensively via public comment and consultation over a two-year period.”

String Similarity Panel (“SSP”) selected and engaged by ICANN for this purpose. (Extracts of the relevant provisions of the Guidebook can be found below, at Part IV of this Declaration.) ICANN engaged InterConnect Communications Ltd. (“ICC”), a company registered under the law of England and Wales, specializing in communications sector strategy, policy and associated regulatory frameworks,<sup>19</sup> in cooperation with University College London, to act as the SSP.

23. On 26 February 2013 ICANN published the results of all of the string similarity reviews for all of the applications for new gTLDs submitted as part of the Program. The announcement revealed, among other things, that two “non-exact match” contention sets had been created: .hotels & .hoteis; and .unicorn & .unicom.<sup>20</sup> Booking.com’s applied for string .hotels (as well as the .hoteis, .uncorn and .unicom strings) had thus failed the string similarity review.
24. The results of the string similarity review were notified to Booking.com by ICANN that same day. In its letter of 26 February 2013 ICANN wrote:

After careful consideration and extensive review performed against the criteria in Section 2.2.1.1 of the Applicant Guidebook, the String Similarity Panel has found that the applied-for string (.hotels) is visually similar to another applied-for string (.hoteis), creating a probability of user confusion.

Due to this finding, the ... two strings have been placed in a contention set.<sup>21</sup>

25. The impact of being put into a contention set is that the proposed strings in the set will not be delegated in the root zone unless and until the applicants reach agreement on which single string should proceed (with the other proposed string therefore rejected), or until after an auction is conducted, with the highest bidder being given the right to proceed to the next step in the review process.

C. DIDP Request and Request for Reconsideration

26. On 28 March 2013 Booking.com submitted a request for information under ICANN’s Documentary Information Disclosure Policy (“DIDP Request”) asking for “all documents directly and indirectly relating to (1) the standard used to determine whether gTLD strings are confusingly similar, and (2) the specific determination that .hotels and .hoteis are confusingly similar.”<sup>22</sup>
27. On the same date, Booking.com also filed a formal Request for Reconsideration (“Request for Reconsideration”). The “specific action(s)” that Booking.com asked to be reconsidered were: the decision to place .hotels and .hoteis in a contention set; and the decision not to

provide a “detailed analysis or a reasoned basis” for the decision to place .hotels in contention.<sup>23</sup>

28. ICANN responded to the DIDP Request on 27 April 2013. Although ICANN provided certain information regarding the review process, in its response to the DIDP Request, ICANN also noted:

The SSP is responsible for the development of its own process documentation and methodology for performing the string similarity review, and is also responsible for the maintenance of its own work papers. Many of the items that are sought from ICANN within the [DIDP] Request are therefore not in existence within ICANN and cannot be provided in response to the DIDP Request. ICANN will, however, shortly be posting the SSP's String Similarity Process and Workflow on the New gTLD microsite ...<sup>24</sup>

29. By letter dated 9 May 2013 Booking.com replied to ICANN, writing that “ICANN’s response fails to provide any additional information or address any of Booking.com’s concerns as conveyed in its DIDP Request or Request for Reconsideration.”<sup>25</sup> On 14 May 2013, ICANN answered that it “intends to post the string similarity process documentation on or before ... 17 May 2013.”<sup>26</sup> ICANN further informed Booking.com that “ICANN will afford you 30 days from the posting of the process document for the submission of a revised Request for Reconsideration.”<sup>27</sup>
30. On 7 June 2013, ICANN published the “String Similarity New gTLD Evaluation Panel [i.e., the SSP] – Process Description” (“SSP Process Description”).<sup>28</sup>
31. On 26 June 2013 Booking.com wrote to ICANN regarding both its DIDP Request and its 28 March 2013 Request for Reconsideration. In its letter, Booking.com noted among other things that “the generalized information ICANN thus far has provided does not explain a rationale for or analysis for the decision to put .hotels and .hoteis in a contention set and therefore does not allow Booking.com to appropriately amend its Request for Reconsideration.” The letter concluded by stating: “Considering ICANN’s obligations of transparency and accountability, there cannot be any ‘compelling reason for confidentiality’.

<sup>23</sup> Request, Annex 12, §3. The Request for Reconsideration (which appears to be in the form of a template) expressly states at §2 that it is a “Request for Reconsideration of ... Staff [vs. Board] action/inaction.” The cover letter attaching the Request states that, “[d]espite the fact that the origin of the decisions is unclear, this Reconsideration Request is being submitted as a reconsideration of a ‘Staff action’. In the event that the decisions referenced above are determined to be a ‘Board action’, this request may be amended.” As explained below, the Request for Reconsideration was amended on 7 July 2013. That amendment did not alter the stated nature of the request in §2 or the description of the specific actions that Booking.com sought to have reconsidered (§3). Unless otherwise indicated, all further references in this Declaration to the Request for Reconsideration are understood to be the amended Request for Reconsideration.

And ... there are numerous compelling reasons for publication of [the information requested by Booking.com].<sup>29</sup>

32. ICANN responded on 25 July 2013, explaining among other things that “the evaluation of the .hotels string by the SSP panel was performed according to the [SSP Process Description] ...” and “[t]he SSP’s work was subjected to quality review, as has been publicly discussed.”<sup>30</sup> Approximately six months later, on 9 January 2014, ICANN posted a letter dated 18 December 2013 addressed to ICANN by the SSP Manager at ICC (Mr. Mark McFadden) providing a further “summary of the process, quality control mechanisms and some considerations surrounding the non-exact contention sets for the string similarity evaluation ...” (“SSP Manager’s Letter”).<sup>31</sup> According to that Letter:

When ALL of the following features of a pairwise comparison [of non-exact match strings] are evident the evaluators found the string pair to be confusingly similar:

- Strings of similar visual length on the page;
- Strings within +/- 1 character of each other;
- Strings where the majority of characters are the same and in the same position in each string; and
- The two strings possess letter combinations that visually appear similar to other letters in the same position in each string

o For example m~m & l~i

33. Meanwhile, on 7 July 2013 Booking.com had submitted its amended Request for Reconsideration. In its letter attaching the amended Request for Reconsideration, Booking.com stated: “Booking.com reserves the right to further amend its Request for Reconsideration upon receipt of the information it previously requested and urges ICANN to publish the requested information as specified in our letter of 26 June 2013.”<sup>32</sup>
34. By virtue of Article IV, Section 3 of the Bylaws, ICANN’s Board Governance Committee (“BGC”) is charged with evaluating and making recommendation to the Board with respect to requests for reconsideration. The Board’s New gTLD Program Committee (“NGPC”) receives and acts on such recommendations on behalf of the ICANN Board. In accordance with this procedure, Booking.com’s Request for Reconsideration was evaluated by the BGC. In a detailed analysis dated 1 August 2013, the BGC “conclude[d] that Booking.com has not stated proper grounds for reconsideration and we therefor recommend that Booking.com's request be denied" ("BGC Recommendation").<sup>33</sup>

35. At a telephone meeting held on 10 September 2013 the NGPC, "bestowed with the powers of the Board", considered, discussed and accepted the BGC Recommendation. Booking.com's Request for Reconsideration was denied.<sup>34</sup>

D. The Cooperative Engagement Process

36. Booking.com thereafter filed a request for a Cooperative Engagement Process ("CEP") on 25 September 2013, with a view to attempting to reach an amicable resolution of its dispute with ICANN. In its CEP request, Booking.com wrote:

Booking.com is of the opinion that Resolution 2013.09.10.NG02 [the Board resolution denying its Request for Reconsideration] violates various provisions of ICANN's Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. In particular Booking.com considers that ICANN's adoption of [the Resolution] is in violation of Articles I, II(3), II and IV of the ICANN Bylaws as well as Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation. In addition, Booking.com considers that ICANN has acted in violation of Articles 3, 5, 7 and 9 of ICANN's Affirmation of Commitment ...<sup>35</sup>

37. The CEP ultimately did not result in a resolution, and Booking.com duly commenced the present IRP.
38. One further point should be made, here, prior to describing the commencement and conduct of the present IRP proceedings: The determination by the SSP that .hotels and .hoteis are so visually similar as to give rise to the probability of user confusion, and the resulting placement of those applied-for strings into a contention set, does not mean that Booking.com's application for .hotels has been denied or that .hotels will not proceed to delegation to the root zone. Rather, as noted above and explained in the extracts from the Guidebook reproduced below, the Guidebook establishes a process for resolving such contention, under which the applicants for the contending strings in the set – here, Booking.com and Despegar – may resolve the contention by negotiation, failing which the matter will proceed to auction. Ultimately, no matter the outcome of these IRP proceedings, Booking.com may yet be successful and .hotels may yet be delegated into the Internet root zone. However, the fact that .hotels has been put into a contention set does raise the risk that .hotels may never be delegated into the root zone, or that it may be more costly for Booking.com to obtain approval of its proposed string. It also has caused a significant delay in the potential delegation of the string into the root zone (which could prove to be detrimental to the ultimate success of Booking.com's proposed string if other applicants

E. The IRP Proceedings

39. On 19 March 2014, Booking.com submitted a Notice of Independent Review, dated 18 March 2014, as well as a Request for Independent Review Process (“Request”) accompanied by numerous supporting documents and reference materials.
40. In accordance with Article IV, Section 3(9) of the ICANN Bylaws, Booking.com requested that a three-member IRP panel be constituted to consider and determine the Request. As the omnibus standing panel referred to in Article IV, Section 3(6) of the ICANN Bylaws had yet to be established, Booking.com further proposed, in accordance with Article 6 of the ICDR Rules, that each party appoint one panelist, with the third (the Chair of the panel) to be appointed by the two party-appointed panelists.
41. On 25 April 2014, ICANN submitted a Response to ICANN’s Request with supporting documents (“Response”).
42. The parties having thereafter agreed on the number of panelists and the method of their appointment, David H. Bernstein, Esq. was duly appointed as panelist by Booking.com on 1 May 2014, and the Hon. A Howard Matz was duly appointed as panelist by ICANN on 30 May 2014.
43. On 17 July 2014, the ICDR notified the parties that Mr. Stephen L. Drymer had been duly nominated by the two party-appointed panelists as Chair of the Panel. Mr. Drymer’s appointment became effective and the Panel was duly constituted as of 1 August 2014.
44. On 21 August 2014, further to consultations among the panelists and between the Panel and the parties, the Panel convened a preparatory conference with the parties (by telephone) for the purpose of discussing organizational matters, including a timetable for any further written statements or oral argument. Both parties requested the opportunity to make supplemental submissions and to present oral argument.
45. On 22 August 2014 the Panel issued Procedural Order No. 1 in which, among other things, it established a Procedural Timetable for the IRP. As specifically requested by the parties, the Procedural Order and Timetable provided for the submission of additional written statements by the parties as well as for a brief oral hearing to take place by telephone, all on dates proposed by and agreed between the parties.<sup>36</sup>
46. In accordance with the Procedural Timetable, on 6 October 2014 Booking.com submitted its Reply to ICANN’s Response, accompanied by additional documents (“Reply”).

<sup>36</sup> Paragraph 6 of Procedural Order No. 1 provided that, in its forthcoming Reply to ICANN’s Response, “Booking.com shall only address two issues raised in Respondent’s Response: (1) the nature and scope of the IRP requested; (2) the nature of the relief sought by Claimant.” Paragraph 7 of Procedural Order No. 1 provided that “Respondent’s Sur-Reply ... shall address only the issues raised in the Reply.”

47. In accordance with the Procedural Timetable, ICANN submitted a Sur-Reply on 20 November 2014 (“Sur-Reply”).

F. The Hearing

48. As provided by Procedural Order No. 1 and the Procedural Timetable, a hearing was held (by telephone) on 10 December 2011, commencing at 9:00 PST/18:00 CET.
49. In the light of the significance of the issues raised by the parties, and given the many questions prompted by those issues and by the parties’ extensive written submissions and supporting materials, the Panel indicated that it would allow the hearing to continue beyond the approximately one hour originally envisaged. The hearing ultimately lasted two and one-half hours. Counsel for each party made extensive oral submissions, including rebuttal and sur-rebuttal submissions, and responded to the panelists’ questions.
50. Prior to the close of the hearing each party declared that it had no objection concerning the conduct of the proceedings, that it had no further oral submissions that it wished to make, and that it considered that it had had a full opportunity to present its case and to be heard.
51. As agreed and ordered prior to the close of the hearing, the parties were provided the opportunity to file limited additional materials post-hearing, in relation to a certain question asked of them by the Panel. This was done, and, on 13 December 2014, the proceedings were declared closed.

IV. ICANN ARTICLES, BYLAWS AND POLICIES – KEY ELEMENTS

52. We set out here the key elements of ICANN’s Articles of Association, Bylaws and policies on which the parties rely in their submissions and to which the Panel will refer later in this Declaration.

A. Articles of Association

4. The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets. To this effect, the Corporation shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations.

[Underlining added]

B. Bylaws

ARTICLE I: MISSION AND CORE VALUES

Section 1. MISSION

The mission of The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”) is to coordinate, at the overall level, the global Internet’s systems of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internet's unique identifier systems.

Section 2. CORE VALUES

In performing its mission, the following core values should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN:

- 1. Preserving and enhancing the operational stability, reliability, security, and global interoperability of the Internet.*
- 2. Respecting the creativity, innovation, and flow of information made possible by the Internet by limiting ICANN's activities to those matters within ICANN's mission requiring or significantly benefiting from global coordination.*
- 3. To the extent feasible and appropriate, delegating coordination functions to or recognizing the policy role of other responsible entities that reflect the interests of affected parties.*
- 4. Seeking and supporting broad, informed participation reflecting the functional, geographic, and cultural diversity of the Internet at all levels of policy development and decision-making.*
- 5. Where feasible and appropriate, depending on market mechanisms to promote and sustain a competitive environment.*
- 6. Introducing and promoting competition in the registration of domain names where practicable and beneficial in the public interest.*
- 7. Employing open and transparent policy development mechanisms that (i) promote well-informed decisions based on expert advice, and (ii) ensure that those entities most affected can assist in the policy development process.*
- 8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.*
- 9. Acting with a speed that is responsive to the needs of the Internet while, as part of the decision-making process, obtaining informed input from those entities most affected.*
- 10. Remaining accountable to the Internet community through mechanisms that enhance ICANN's effectiveness.*
- 11. While remaining rooted in the private sector, recognizing that governments and public authorities are responsible for public policy and duly taking into account governments' or public authorities' recommendations.*

These core values are deliberately expressed in very general terms, so that they may provide useful and relevant guidance in the broadest possible range of circumstances. Because they are not narrowly prescriptive, the specific way in which they apply, individually and collectively, to each new situation will necessarily depend on many factors that cannot be fully anticipated or enumerated; and because they are statements of principle rather than practice, situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible. Any ICANN body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand, and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.

ARTICLE III: TRANSPARENCY

Section 1. PURPOSE

ICANN and its constituent bodies shall operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness.

ARTICLE IV: ACCOUNTABILITY AND REVIEW

Section 1. PURPOSE

In carrying out its mission as set out in these Bylaws, ICANN should be accountable to the community for operating in a manner that is consistent with these Bylaws, and with due regard for the core values set forth in Article I of these Bylaws. The provisions of this Article, creating processes for reconsideration and independent review of ICANN actions and periodic review of ICANN's structure and procedures, are intended to reinforce the various accountability mechanisms otherwise set forth in these Bylaws, including the transparency provisions of Article III and the Board and other selection mechanisms set forth throughout these Bylaws.

Section 2. RECONSIDERATION

1. ICANN shall have in place a process by which any person or entity materially affected by an action of ICANN may request review or reconsideration of that action by the Board.

2. Any person or entity may submit a request for reconsideration or review of an ICANN action or inaction ("Reconsideration Request") to the extent that he, she, or it have been adversely affected by:

a. one or more staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policy(ies); or

b. one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that have been taken or refused to be taken without consideration of material information, except where the party submitting the request could have submitted, but did not submit, the information for the Board's consideration at the time of action or refusal to act; or

c. one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that are taken as a result of the Board's reliance on false or inaccurate material information.

3. The Board has designated the Board Governance Committee to review and consider any such Reconsideration Requests. The Board Governance Committee shall have the authority to:

a. evaluate requests for review or reconsideration;

- b. summarily dismiss insufficient requests;
- c. evaluate requests for urgent consideration;
- d. conduct whatever factual investigation is deemed appropriate;
- e. request additional written submissions from the affected party, or from other parties;
- f. make a final determination on Reconsideration Requests regarding staff action or inaction, without reference to the Board of Directors; and
- g. make a recommendation to the Board of Directors on the merits of the request, as necessary.

Section 3. INDEPENDENT REVIEW OF BOARD ACTIONS

1. In addition to the reconsideration process described in Section 2 of this Article, ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

2. Any person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws may submit a request for independent review of that decision or action. In order to be materially affected, the person must suffer injury or harm that is directly and causally connected to the Board's alleged violation of the Bylaws or the Articles of Incorporation, and not as a result of third parties acting in line with the Board's action.

3. A request for independent review must be filed within thirty days of the posting of the minutes of the Board meeting (and the accompanying Board Briefing Materials, if available) that the requesting party contends demonstrates that ICANN violated its Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation. Consolidated requests may be appropriate when the causal connection between the circumstances of the requests and the harm is the same for each of the requesting parties.

4. Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Process Panel ("IRP Panel"), which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The IRP Panel must apply a defined standard of review to the IRP request, focusing on:

- a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;
- b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
- c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company [ICANN]?

11. The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:

- a. summarily dismiss requests brought without standing, lacking in substance, or that are frivolous or vexatious;
- b. request additional written submissions from the party seeking review, the Board, the Supporting Organizations, or from other parties;
- c. declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; and
- d. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP;
- e. consolidate requests for independent review if the facts and circumstances are sufficiently similar; and
- f. determine the timing for each proceeding.

14. Prior to initiating a request for independent review, the complainant is urged to enter into a period of cooperative engagement with ICANN for the purpose of resolving or narrowing the issues that are contemplated to be brought to the IRP. [...]

15. Upon the filing of a request for an independent review, the parties are urged to participate in a conciliation period for the purpose of narrowing the issues that are stated within the request for independent review. A conciliator will be appointed from the members of the omnibus standing panel by the Chair of that panel. [...]

16. Cooperative engagement and conciliation are both voluntary. However, if the party requesting the independent review does not participate in good faith in the cooperative engagement and the conciliation processes, if applicable, and ICANN is the prevailing party in the request for independent review, the IRP Panel must award to ICANN all reasonable fees and costs incurred by ICANN in the proceeding, including legal fees.

18. The IRP Panel should strive to issue its written declaration no later than six months after the filing of the request for independent review. The IRP Panel shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties, and in its declaration shall specifically designate the prevailing party. The party not prevailing shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the IRP Provider, but in an extraordinary case the IRP Panel may in its declaration allocate up to half of the costs of the IRP Provider to the prevailing party based upon the circumstances, including a consideration of the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest. Each party to the IRP proceedings shall bear its own expenses.

[Underlining added]

53. Lest there be any misunderstanding as regards the proper subject matter of IRP proceedings or the role of the Panel, we note that, as was clearly established during the hearing, it is common ground between the parties that the term "action" (or "actions") as used in Article IV, Section 3 of the Bylaws is to be understood as action(s) or inaction(s) by the ICANN Board. The Panel observes that this understanding comports not only with the provisions of Article

IV, Section 2 of the Bylaws concerning “Reconsideration”, which expressly refer to “actions or inactions of the ICANN Board”, but with the clear intent of Section 3 itself, which stipulates at sub-section 11 that “[t]he IRP Panel shall have the authority to: ... (c) declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.”

C. The gTLD Applicant Guidebook

54. As noted above and as understood by all, the Guidebook is (to borrow Booking.com’s phrase) “the crystallization of Board-approved consensus policy concerning the introduction of new gTLDs.”<sup>37</sup>
55. The Guidebook is divided into “Modules”, each of which contains various sections and sub-sections. The three Modules of primary relevance here are Modules 1, 2 and 4. Module 1, titled “Introduction to the gTLD Application Process,” provides an “overview of the process for applying for a new generic top-level domains.”<sup>38</sup> Module 2, titled “Evaluation Procedures,” describes the “evaluation procedures and criteria used to determine whether applied-for gTLDs are approved for delegation.”<sup>39</sup> Module 4, titled “String Contention Procedures,” concerns “situations in which contention over applied-for gTLD strings occurs, and the methods available to applicants for resolving such contention cases.”

(i) *Initial Evaluation

56. As explained in Module 1, “[i]mmediately following the close of the application submission period, ICANN will begin checking all applications for completeness.”<sup>40</sup> Initial Evaluation begins “immediately after the administrative completeness check concludes. All complete applications will be reviewed during Initial Evaluation.”<sup>41</sup>
57. Initial Evaluation is comprised of two main elements or types of review: string review, which concerns the applied-for gTLD string; and applicant review, which concerns the entity applying for the gTLD and its proposed registry services. It is the first of these – string review, including more specifically the component known as string similarity review – that is particularly relevant.

(ii) *String Review, including String Similarity Review

58. String review is itself comprised of several components, each of which constitutes a separate assessment or review of the applied-for gTLD string, conducted by a separate reviewing body or panel. As explained in Module 2:

- String Reviews
  - String similarity
  - Reserved names
  - DNS stability
  - Geographic names

An application must pass all these reviews to pass the Initial Evaluation. Failure to pass any one of these reviews will result in a failure to pass the Initial Evaluation.<sup>42</sup>

59. As indicated, all complete applications are subject to Initial Evaluation, which means that all applied-for gTLD strings are subject to string review. String review is further described in Module 2 as follows:

[String review] focuses on the applied-for gTLD string to test:

- Whether the applied-for gTLD string is so similar to other strings that it would create a probability of user confusion;
- Whether the applied-for gTLD string might adversely affect DNS security or stability; and
- Whether evidence of requisite government approval is provided in the case of certain geographic names.<sup>43</sup>

60. The various assessments or reviews (i.e., string similarity, reserved names, DNS stability, etc.) that comprise string review are elaborated at Section 2.2.1 of Module 2. As mentioned, the most relevant of these reviews for our purposes is string similarity review, which is described in detail at Section 2.2.1.1. Because of the central importance of the string similarity review process in the context of the present dispute, this section of the Guidebook is reproduced here at some length:

2.2.1.1 String Similarity Review

This review involves a preliminary comparison of each applied-for gTLD string against existing TLDs, Reserved Names (see subsection 2.2.1.2), and other applied-for strings. The objective of this review is to prevent user confusion and loss of confidence in the DNS resulting from delegation of many similar strings.

Note: In this Applicant Guidebook, “similar” means strings so similar that they create a probability of user confusion if more than one of the strings is delegated into the root zone.

<sup>42</sup> Module 2-2. The same is true of applicant review, which is also comprised of various assessments concerning the applicant entity.

<sup>43</sup> Guidebook, §2.2: “Initial Evaluation”, Module 2-4 (underlining added). See also Module 1-9: “String reviews include a determination that the applied-for gTLD string is not likely to cause security or stability problems in the DNS ...”

The visual similarity check that occurs during Initial Evaluation is intended to augment the objection and dispute resolution process (see Module 3, Dispute Resolution Procedures) that addresses all types of similarity.

This similarity review will be conducted by an independent String Similarity Panel.

2.2.1.1.1 Reviews Performed

The String Similarity Panel's task is to identify visual string similarities that would create a probability of user confusion.

The panel performs this task of assessing similarities that would lead to user confusion in four sets of circumstances, when comparing:

- Applied-for gTLD strings against other applied-for gTLD strings;

Similarity to Other Applied-for gTLD Strings (String Contention Sets) – All applied-for gTLD strings will be reviewed against one another to identify any similar strings. In performing this review, the String Similarity Panel will create contention sets that may be used in later stages of evaluation.

A contention set contains at least two applied-for strings identical or similar to one another. Refer to Module 4, String Contention Procedures, for more information on contention sets and contention resolution.

2.2.1.1.2 Review Methodology

The String Similarity Panel is informed in part by an algorithmic score for the visual similarity between each applied-for string and each of other existing and applied- for TLDs and reserved names. The score will provide one objective measure for consideration by the panel, as part of the process of identifying strings likely to result in user confusion. In general, applicants should expect that a higher visual similarity score suggests a higher probability that the application will not pass the String Similarity review. However, it should be noted that the score is only indicative and that the final determination of similarity is entirely up to the Panel's judgment.

The algorithm, user guidelines, and additional background information are available to applicants for testing and informational purposes. [footnote in the original: See <http://icann.sword-group.com/algorithm/>] Applicants will have the ability to test their strings and obtain algorithmic results through the application system prior to submission of an application.

The panel will examine all the algorithm data and perform its own review of similarities between strings and whether they rise to the level of string confusion. In cases of strings in scripts not yet supported by the algorithm, the panel's assessment process is entirely manual.

The panel will use a common standard to test for whether string confusion exists, as follows:

Standard for String Confusion – String confusion exists where a string so nearly resembles another visually that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion. For the likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user. Mere association, in the sense that the string brings another string to mind, is insufficient to find a likelihood of confusion.

2.2.1.1.3 Outcomes of the String Similarity Review

An application that fails the String Similarity review due to similarity to an existing TLD will not pass the Initial Evaluation, and no further reviews will be available. Where an application does not pass the String Similarity review, the applicant will be notified as soon as the review is completed.

An application for a string that is found too similar to another applied-for gTLD string will be placed in a contention set.<sup>44</sup>

[Underlining added]

61. Module 4 of the Guidebook, as mentioned, concerns "situations in which contention over applied-for gTLD strings occurs, and the methods available to applicants for resolving such contention cases." As explained in Module 4:

4.1 String Contention

String contention occurs when either:

1. Two or more applicants for an identical gTLD string successfully complete all previous stages of the evaluation and dispute resolution processes; or
2. Two or more applicants for similar gTLD strings successfully complete all previous stages of the evaluation and dispute resolution processes, and the similarity of the strings is identified as creating a probability of user confusion if more than one of the strings is delegated.

ICANN will not approve applications for proposed gTLD strings that are identical or that would result in user confusion, called contending strings. If either situation above occurs, such applications will proceed to contention resolution through either community priority evaluation, in certain cases, or through an auction. Both processes are described in this module. A group of applications for contending strings is referred to as a contention set.

<sup>44</sup> Module 2-5 to 2-9. As regards the concept of string contention, see also Guidebook, §1.1.2.10: "String Contention", Module 1-13: "String contention applies only when there is more than one qualified application for the same or similar gTLD strings. String contention refers to the scenario in which there is more than one qualified application for the identical gTLD string or for similar gTLD strings. In this Applicant Guidebook, "similar" means strings so similar that they create a probability of user confusion if more than one of the strings is delegated into the root zone."

(In this Applicant Guidebook, "similar" means strings so similar that they create a probability of user confusion if more than one of the strings is delegated into the root zone.)

4.1.1 Identification of Contention Sets

Contention sets are groups of applications containing identical or similar applied-for gTLD strings. Contention sets are identified during Initial Evaluation, following review of all applied-for gTLD strings. ICANN will publish preliminary contention sets once the String Similarity review is completed, and will update the contention sets as necessary during the evaluation and dispute resolution stages.

The String Similarity Panel will also review the entire pool of applied-for strings to determine whether the strings proposed in any two or more applications are so similar that they would create a probability of user confusion if allowed to coexist in the DNS. The panel will make such a determination for each pair of applied-for gTLD strings. The outcome of the String Similarity review described in Module 2 is the identification of contention sets ...

As described elsewhere in this guidebook, cases of contention might be resolved by community priority evaluation [NB: community priority evaluation applies only to so-called "community" applications; it is not relevant here] or an agreement among the parties. Absent that, the last-resort contention resolution mechanism will be an auction.

[...]

62. As provided in Module 4, the two methods relevant to resolving a contention such as between .hotels and .hoteis are self-resolution (i.e., an agreement between the two applicants for the contending strings) and auction:

4.1.3 Self-Resolution of String Contention

Applicants that are identified as being in contention are encouraged to reach a settlement or agreement among themselves that resolves the contention. This may occur at any stage of the process, once ICANN publicly posts the applications received and the preliminary contention sets on its website.

Applicants may resolve string contention in a manner whereby one or more applicants withdraw their applications.

4.3 Auction: Mechanism of Last Resort

It is expected that most cases of contention will be resolved by the community priority evaluation, or through voluntary agreement among the involved applicants. Auction is a tie-breaker method for resolving string contention among the applications within a contention set, if the contention has not been resolved by other means.

63. Module 5 of the Guidebook, titled Transition to Delegation, describes “the final steps required of an applicant for completion of the process, including execution of a registry agreement with ICANN and preparing for delegation of the new gTLD into the root zone.”<sup>45</sup> Section 5.1 states:

ICANN’s Board of Directors has ultimate responsibility for the New gTLD Program. The Board reserves the right to individually consider an application for a new gTLD to determine whether approval would be in the best interest of the Internet community. Under exceptional circumstances, the Board may individually consider a gTLD application. For example, the Board might individually consider an application as a result of GAC Advice on New gTLDs or of the use of an ICANN accountability mechanism.<sup>46</sup>

V. SUMMARY OF THE PARTIES’ POSITIONS

64. The following brief summary of the parties’ respective positions is provided with a view solely to assisting the reader to understand the present Declaration. It is not intended to recapitulate – and it does not recapitulate – the entirety of the parties’ allegations and arguments. Additional references to the parties’ positions, including submissions made by them in the course of the proceedings, are contained in the discussion at Part VI below.

A. Booking.com’s position

(i) The Panel’s Authority

65. Booking.com submits that the mandate of the Panel is “to determine whether the contested actions of the ICANN Board are consistent with applicable rules”.<sup>47</sup> According to Booking.com:

The set of rules against which the actions of the ICANN Board must be assessed includes: (i) ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws – both of which must be interpreted in light of ICANN’s Affirmation of Commitments, and both of which require compliance with inter alia International law and generally accepted good governance principles – and (ii) secondary rules created by ICANN, such as the Applicant Guidebook. In setting up, implementing and supervising its policies and processes, the Board must comply with the fundamental principles embodied in these rules. That obligation includes a duty to ensure compliance with its obligations to act in good faith, transparently, fairly, and in a manner that is non-discriminatory and ensures due process.<sup>48</sup>

66. Booking.com submits that IRP panels have broad authority to evaluate actions of the ICANN Board. An overly restrictive interpretation of the standard of review, such as proposed by ICANN in these proceedings, would, says Booking.com, “fail to ensure accountability on the part of ICANN and would be incompatible with ICANN’s commitment to maintain (and improve) robust mechanisms for accountability, as required by Article 9.1 of ICANN’s Affirmation of Commitments and ICANN’s core values.”<sup>49</sup>

(ii) Booking.com’s Claims

67. The purpose of the IRP initiated by Booking.com is, in its own words, “to challenge the ICANN Board’s handling of Booking.com’s application for the new gTLD .hotels.”<sup>50</sup> This includes the determination of the SSP to place .hotels and .hoteis in contention and the refusal of the Board (and its committees) to revise that determination. Elsewhere in its submissions, Booking.com makes an even broader claim; it asserts that it challenges the conduct of the ICANN Board in relation to what Booking.com refers to as the setting up, implementation, supervision and review of the entire of string similarity review process, and the Board’s alleged failure “to ensure due process and to respect its fundamental obligations to ensure good faith, transparency, fairness and non-discrimination” throughout.<sup>51</sup>
68. In effect, Booking.com’s specific claims can be divided into two broad categories: claims related to the string similarity review process generally; and claims related to the particular case of .hotels.
69. Booking.com professes that this case “is not about challenging a decision on the merits [i.e., the decision to place .hotels in contention]”; it is about “ICANN’s failure to respect fundamental [procedural] rights and principles in handling New gTLD applications, in particular in the context of String Similarity Review.”<sup>52</sup>
70. Booking.com also repeatedly emphasizes – and this is crucial – that it does not challenge the validity or fairness of the process as set out in the Guidebook. Rather, as indicated, it contests “the way in which that process was established, implemented and supervised by (or under the authority of) the ICANN Board.”<sup>53</sup> Equally crucial, as will be seen, is Booking.com’s acknowledgment that the established process was followed in the case of the review of .hotels.

a. The string similarity review process

71. According to Booking.com, the problem began when the ICANN Board failed to “provide transparency in the SSP selection process,” in particular by failing “to make clear how [ICANN] would evaluate candidate responses or how it ultimately did so.”<sup>54</sup> The problem was compounded by the selection of ICC/University College London to perform string similarity reviews as the independent SSP. In Booking.com’s words:

[T]he identities of the unsuccessful candidates (if any) to perform the String Similarity Review remain unknown. Applicants have never been given any information in relation to the candidate responses that were submitted. ... There is no indication that any other candidate expressed an interest in performing the String Similarity Review. No information has been provided as to the steps (if any) taken by ICANN to reach out to other potential candidates. Numerous questions remain: How did ICANN deal with the situation if there was only one (or only a very few) respondent(s) wishing to perform the String Similarity Review? How did this impact on the discussions with InterConnect Communications? What are the terms of ICANN’s contract with InterConnect Communications?<sup>55</sup>

72. Booking.com also faults ICANN for “allowing the appointed SSP to develop and perform an unfair and arbitrary review process”, specifically, by allowing the SSP “to perform the String Similarity Review (i) without any (documented) plan or methodology ... (ii) without providing any transparency regarding the evaluators or the evaluation criteria ... and (iii) without informing applicants of its reasoning ...”.<sup>56</sup>
73. Among other things, Booking.com takes ICANN to task for establishing and posting the SSP Process Description and the SSP Manager’s Letter (see Part III.C above) only long after the string similarity review process had ended.<sup>57</sup>
74. It also alleges that the factors identified in the SSP Manager’s Letter are “arbitrary and baseless ... not supported by any methodology capable of producing compelling and defensible conclusions ... [which] has allowed applications with at least equally serious visual string similarity concerns – such as .parts/.paris, .maif/.mail, .srt/.srl, .vote/.voto and .date/.data ... – to proceed while singling out .hotels/.hoteis.”<sup>58</sup> According to Booking.com: “The failure to take actual human performance into account is at odds with the standard for assessment, i.e., the likelihood of confusion on the part of the average Internet user. Hence, the approach is directly contrary to ICANN’s own policy.”<sup>59</sup>
75. Booking.com further contends that the SSP process is unfair and non-transparent due to the fact that the identity of SSP members has never been publicly disclosed.<sup>60</sup>
76. Further, Booking.com argues that the process is unfair, non-transparent and arbitrary – and thus violates ICANN policy – for failing to provide for a “well-documented rationale” for each

SSP determination. In the absence of reasons for each string similarity determination, says Booking.com, “there is no basis on which decisions can be evaluated and, where appropriate, challenged.”<sup>61</sup>

77. Another ground for Booking.com’s challenge is the alleged failure by the ICANN Board to providing “effective supervision or quality control” of the SSP: “If nobody but the evaluator has any insight into how the evaluation was carried out, no effective quality control can be performed.”<sup>62</sup> Nor, according to Booking.com, does the quality review of the SSP’s work supposedly performed by JAS Advisers (the independent consultant engaged by ICANN for this purpose) overcome the problem of a lack of transparency:

Booking.com is not aware that any selection process was put in place in relation to the appointment of JAS Advisors to perform the String Similarity Review quality control. No criteria for performing the quality control were published. When ICANN was looking for evaluators, no call for expressions of interest or similar document was issued for the selection of quality controllers.<sup>63</sup>

78. In any case, says Booking.com, the “quality control review over a random sampling of applications to, among other things, test whether the process [set out in the Guidebook] was followed,” which ICANN claims was performed on the SSP’s work,<sup>64</sup> could not provide adequate quality control of the string similarity review process.<sup>65</sup> Finally, Booking.com argues that the arbitrary and unfair result of the string similarity review concerning .hotels – i.e., the decision to place .hotels and .hoteis in contention – demonstrates that, “whatever quality control review ICANN may have engaged in ... must therefore have been deficient.”<sup>66</sup>

b. The case of .hotels

79. Booking.com argues, in part on the basis of expert evidence which it adduces in this IRP proceeding,<sup>67</sup> that “[t]here is no probability of user confusion if both .hotels and .hoteis were delegated as gTLD strings into the Internet root zone ... The SSP could not have reasonably found that the average reasonable Internet user is likely to be confused between the two strings.”<sup>68</sup> It continues:

Since .hotels and .hoteis are not confusingly similar, the determination that they are is contradictory to ICANN policy as established in the Applicant Guidebook. Acceptance of the determination, and repeated failure to remedy the wrongful determination, is a failure to act with due diligence and independent judgment, and a failure to neutrally and fairly apply established policies as required by Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation.<sup>69</sup>

80. According to Booking.com, the Board should have acted to overturn the determination of the SSP either in the context of the Request for Reconsideration or under the authority accorded it by Module 5-4 of the Guidebook to “individually consider a gTLD application”.<sup>70</sup>
81. Booking.com claims that its DIDP Request alerted the Board to the need to intervene to “correct the errors in the process” related to .hotels, and that its Request for Reconsideration of the SSP determination further informed the Board of the many errors in the SSP’s review of .hotels, “giving the Board ample opportunity to correct those errors.”<sup>71</sup> Booking.com claims that the Board’s failure, when responding to the DIDP Request, “to offer any insight into the SSP’s reasoning”, its refusal to reconsider and overturn the SSP determination regarding .hotels on the sole ground (says Booking.com) that “the Reconsideration process is not available as a mechanism to re-try the decisions of evaluation panels”, and its failure to investigate Booking.com’s complaints of a lack of fairness and transparency in the SSP process, constitute violations of ICANN’s governing rules regarding string similarity review.<sup>72</sup>
82. According to Booking.com, among the most compelling evidence of ICANN’s failure in this regard are the statements made on the record by several members of the NGPC during its 10 September 2013 meeting at which Booking.com’s Request for Reconsideration was denied.<sup>73</sup> Given the importance that the Panel attaches to these statements, they are addressed in some detail in the Analysis in Part VI, below.
83. In its written submissions Booking.com asks the Panel to grant the following relief:

Finding that ICANN breached its Articles of Incorporation, its Bylaws, and the gTLD Applicant Guidebook;

Requiring that ICANN reject the determination that .hotels and .hoteis are confusingly similar and disregard the resulting contention set;

Awarding Booking.com its costs in this proceeding; and

Awarding such other relief as the Panel may find appropriate or Booking.com may request.

84. At the hearing Booking.com further requested that the Panel not only require ICANN to disregard the SSP determination regarding .hotels/.hoteis, but also order ICANN to “delegate both .hotels and .hoteis.”

B. ICANN’s position

85. ICANN’s position is best summed up by ICANN itself:

Booking.com’s IRP Request is really about Booking.com’s disagreement with the merits of the String Similarity Panel’s conclusion that .hotels and .hoteis are confusingly similar. But the Panel’s determination does not constitute Board action, and the Independent Review Process is not available as a mechanism to re-try the decisions of an independent evaluation panel. The IRP Panel is tasked only with comparing contested actions of the ICANN Board to ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation; it is not within the IRP Panel’s mandate to evaluate whether the String Similarity Panel’s conclusion that .hotels and .hoteis are confusingly similar was wrong.<sup>74</sup>

86. According to ICANN, the Board “did exactly what it was supposed to do under its Bylaws, its Articles of Incorporation, and the Guidebook.”<sup>75</sup>

(i) The Panel’s Authority

87. Throughout its submissions ICANN repeatedly stresses what it says is the very limited authority enjoyed by IRP panels.
88. As provided in Article IV, Section 3(4) of ICANN’s Bylaws, ICANN observes that this Panel (as all IRP panels) is charged only with “comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>76</sup>
89. ICANN notes that, in undertaking this compare-and-declare mission, the Panel is further constrained to apply the very specific “standard of review” set out in Bylaw Article IV, Section 3(4), which requires the Panel to focus on three particular questions: “did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?”; “did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?”; and “did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company [ICANN]?”<sup>77</sup>

90. ICANN further asserts that the IRP process “is not available as a mechanism to challenge the actions or inactions of ICANN staff or third parties that may be involved in ICANN activities,”<sup>78</sup> such as the action of the SSP which resulted in .hotels and .hoteis being placed in contention. Nor, says ICANN, may the IRP process be used as an “appeal mechanism” by which to overturn substantive decisions – such as the determination that .hotels and .hoteis are confusingly visually similar – with which an applicant may disagree.<sup>79</sup>
91. In this regard ICANN states that the affirmative relief sought by Booking.com – specifically, a declaration requiring that ICANN “reject the determination that .hotels and .hoteis are confusingly similar and disregard the resulting contention set” and (as requested at the hearing) that ICANN “delegate both .hotels and .hoteis” – exceeds the authority of the Panel.<sup>80</sup>

(ii) ICANN’s Response to Booking.com’s Claims

a. The string similarity review process

92. According to ICANN, “[e]arly on in the iterations of the Guidebook, it was determined that, in the initial evaluation stage, the String Similarity Panel would only examine strings for visual confusion;” and “[i]f applied-for strings are determined to so nearly resemble each other visually that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion, the string will be placed in a contention set, which is then resolved pursuant to the contention set resolution processes in Module 4 of the Guidebook.”<sup>81</sup>
93. According to ICANN, it was also determined early on that, as stated in Section 2.2.1.1 of the Guidebook, “[t]his similarity review will be conducted by an independent String Similarity Panel,” not by ICANN itself. ICC was duly selected to perform the string similarity review further to “an open and public request for proposals,” pursuant to which, as the successful bidder, “ICC was responsible for the development of its own process documents and methodology for performing the String Similarity Review consistent with the provisions of the Guidebook.”<sup>82</sup> ICANN emphasizes that “the Guidebook does not provide for any process by which ICANN (or anyone else) may conduct a substantive review of ICC’s results.”<sup>83</sup>
94. In ICANN’s submission, the alternative proposed by Booking.com, that “the ICANN Board – and the ICANN Board alone – was obligated to perform the String Similarity Review for the more than 1,900 new gTLD applications submitted,” is “untenable and is not supported by ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles.”<sup>84</sup> As noted by ICANN, the Guidebook defines six distinct review processes that every gTLD application is required to go through, including string similarity review; each of those review processes was conducted by independent experts specifically engaged by ICANN staff for the purpose.

95. ICANN submits that “there simply is no requirement – under ICANN’s governing documents or imposed by law – that would mandate that the ICANN Board inject itself into the day-to-day affairs of the evaluation process in the manner Booking.com proposes.”<sup>85</sup> It asserts that, consistent with well-settled legal principles, “neither ICANN’s Bylaws, nor the Articles, nor the Guidebook requires the ICANN Board to conduct any analysis of the decisions of third party experts retained to evaluate string similarity.”<sup>86</sup>
96. Moreover, ICANN asserts that “[s]imply because the ICANN Board has the discretion [under Section 5.1 (Module 5-4) of the Guidebook] to consider individual applications does not mean it is required to do so or that it should do so, particularly at an initial evaluation stage.”<sup>87</sup>
97. ICANN claims that that Booking.com’s repeated invocation of the Board’s so-called obligation to ensure “due process” in the administration of the New gTLD Program is misplaced. First, neither applicable California law nor any provision of the Bylaws, Articles of Incorporation or Guidebook “specifically affords any gTLD applicant a right to procedural ‘due process’ similar to that which is afforded in courts of law.”<sup>88</sup> Second, because ICANN conducts its activities in the public interest it nevertheless provides “more opportunity for parties to be heard and to dispute actions taken”<sup>89</sup> than most private corporate entities. Third, the “decision to proceed with the New gTLD Program followed many years of discussion, debate and deliberation within the ICANN community, including participation from end users, civil society, technical experts, business groups, governments and others.”<sup>90</sup> Fourth, and perhaps most importantly, “ICANN adhered to the policies and procedures articulated in its Bylaws, Articles of Incorporation, and the Guidebook, the latter of which was adopted only after being publicly vetted with ICANN’s stakeholders and the broader Internet community.”<sup>91</sup>
98. ICANN’s response to Booking.com’s various allegations regarding particular elements of the string similarity review process – including for example the selection of the SSP, the publication of the SSP’s methodology, the anonymity of the individuals SSP members, the supposed lack of quality control – is essentially three-fold: first, the actions challenged by Booking.com are not Board actions, but actions of ICANN staff or third parties, which cannot be challenged by means of IRP proceedings; second, in any case, Booking.com's claims are factually incorrect, and there has been no violation of the Bylaws, Articles of Incorporation or Guidebook; third, Booking.com's claims are time-barred given that Article IV, Section 3(3) of the Bylaws requires that IRP requests "must be filed within thirty days of the posting of the minutes of the Board meeting ... that the requesting party contends demonstrates that ICANN violated its Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation."<sup>92</sup>

99. ICANN's position as regards the determination to place .hotels and .hoteis in contention is similar in many respects to its position regarding the string similarity review process generally. ICANN argues that the Board played no role whatsoever in performing the review of .hotels; that the SSP's determination was in any event well supported and there was no violation of applicable rules; and that the Guidebook does not provide for any process by which ICANN (or any other body, including an IRP panel) may conduct a substantive review of a string similarity determination.
100. In any event, ICANN asserts that .hotels and .hoteis in fact meet every one of the visual similarity criteria applied by the SSP, as set out in the SSP Manager's Letter. Moreover, .hotels and .hoteis scored a stunning 99% for visual similarity under the publicly available SWORD algorithm which, as provided by Section 2.2.1.1.2 (Module 2-7) of the Guidebook, establishes "one objective measure for consideration by the [SSP]". According to ICANN (in response to a question posed by the Panel during the hearing), this was the highest algorithmic score among the comparison of all non-identical pairs within the 1917 new gTLD applications received by ICANN;<sup>93</sup> the only other pair of non-exact match strings found to be confusingly visually similar – .unicorn and .unicom – scored only 94%.<sup>94</sup>
101. According to ICANN, "it was not clearly 'wrong,' as Booking.com argues, for the [SSP] to find that .hotels/.hoteis are confusingly similar."<sup>95</sup>
102. In conclusion, ICANN states that its conduct with respect to Booking.com's application for .hotels, including in evaluating Booking.com's Request for Reconsideration, was fully consistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, its Bylaws and the procedures established in the Guidebook; and the fact that Booking.com disagrees with the SSP's determination to put .hotels and .hoteis in a contention set does not give rise to an IRP.
103. ICANN asks the Panel to deny Booking.com's IRP Request.

104. The jurisdiction and authority of an IRP panel is expressly prescribed – and expressly limited – by the ICANN Bylaws. To recap, Article IV, Section 3 of the Bylaws provides:

4. [The IRP Panel] shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The IRP Panel must apply a defined standard of review to the IRP request, focusing on:

- a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;*
- b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and*
- c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company [ICANN]?*

- 11. The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:*

[...]

c. declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; and

d. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP;

[...]

18. [...] The IRP Panel shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties [...]

[Underlining added]

105. Similarly, Article 8 of the Supplementary Procedures reads:

8. Standard of Review

The IRP is subject to the following standard of review: (i) did the ICANN Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision; (ii) did the ICANN Board exercise due diligence and care in having sufficient facts in front of them; (iii) did the ICANN Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?

If a requestor demonstrates that the ICANN Board did not make a reasonable inquiry to determine it had sufficient facts available, ICANN Board members had a conflict of interest in participating in the decision, or the decision was not an exercise in independent judgment, believed by the ICANN Board to be in the best interests of the company, after taking account of the Internet community and the global public interest, the requestor will have established proper grounds for review.

106. There is no dispute as regards the Panel's duty to compare the actions of the Board to ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws (and, in this case, Guidebook) with a view to declaring whether those actions are inconsistent with applicable policies. Where the parties disagree is with respect to the standard of review to be applied by the Panel in assessing Board conduct.

107. ICANN submits that its Bylaws “specify that a deferential standard of review be applied when evaluating the actions of the ICANN Board ... the rules are clear that the appointed IRP Panel is neither asked to, nor allowed to, substitute its judgment for that of the Board.”<sup>96</sup> Booking.com argues that this “is simply wrong. No such specification is made in ICANN’s Bylaws or elsewhere, and a restrictive interpretation of the standard of review would ... fail to ensure accountability on the part of ICANN and would be incompatible with ICANN’s commitment to maintain (and improve) robust mechanisms for accountability.”<sup>97</sup>
108. In the opinion of the Panel, there can be no question but that the provisions of the ICANN Bylaws establishing the Independent Review Process and defining the role of an IRP panel specify that the ICANN Board enjoys a large degree of discretion in its decisions and actions. So long as the Board acts without conflict of interest and with due care, it is entitled – indeed, required – to exercise its independent judgment in acting in what it believes to be the best interests of ICANN. The only substantive check on the conduct of the ICANN Board is that such conduct may not be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws – or, the parties agree, with the Guidebook. In that connection, the Panel notes that Article 1, Section 2 of the Bylaws also clearly states that in exercising its judgment, the Board (indeed “[a]ny ICANN body making a recommendation or decision”) shall itself “determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand.”
109. In other words, in making decisions the Board is required to conduct itself reasonably in what it considers to be ICANN’s best interests; where it does so, the only question is whether its actions are or are not consistent with the Articles, Bylaws and, in this case, with the policies and procedures established in the Guidebook.
110. There is also no question but that the authority of an IRP panel to compare contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and to declare whether the Board has acted consistently with the Articles and Bylaws, does not extend to opining on the nature of those instruments. Nor, in this case, does our authority extend to opining on the nature of the policies or procedures established in the Guidebook. In this regard it is recalled that Booking.com itself repeatedly stresses that it does not contest the validity or fairness of the string similarity review process as set out in the Guidebook, but merely whether ICANN’s actions were consistent with various elements of that process. Stated differently, our role in this IRP includes assessing whether the applicable rules – in this case, the rules regarding string similarity review – were followed, not whether such rules are appropriate or advisable.
111. Nevertheless, this does not mean that the IRP Panel may only review ICANN Board actions or inactions under the deferential standard advocated by ICANN in these proceedings. Rather, as explained below, the IRP Panel is charged with “objectively” determining whether or not the Board's actions are in fact consistent with the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook, which the Panel understands as requiring that the Board's conduct be appraised independently, and without any presumption of correctness.

112. In the only other IRP of which the Panel is aware in which such questions were addressed in a published decision, the distinguished members of the IRP panel had this to say about the role of an IRP panel, and the applicable standard of review, in appraising Board action:

The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers is a not-for profit corporation established under the law of the State of California. That law embodies the 'business judgment rule'. Section 309 of the California Corporations Code provides that a director must act 'in good faith, in a manner such director believes to be in the best interests of the corporation and its shareholders...' and shields from liability directors who follow its provisions. However ICANN is no ordinary non-profit California corporation. The Government of the United States vested regulatory authority of vast dimension and pervasive global reach in ICANN. In 'recognition of the fact that the Internet is an international network of networks, owned by no single nation, individual or organization' – including ICANN – ICANN is charged with 'promoting the global public interest in the operational stability of the Internet...' ICANN 'shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law...' Thus, while a California corporation, it is governed particularly by the terms of its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, as the law of California allows. Those Articles and Bylaws, which require ICANN to carry out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law, do not specify or imply that the International [sic] Review Process provided for shall (or shall not) accord deference to the decisions of the ICANN Board. The fact that the Board is empowered to exercise its judgment in the application of ICANN's sometimes competing core values does not necessarily import that that judgment must be treated deferentially by the IRP. In the view of the Panel, the judgments of the ICANN Board are to be reviewed and appraised by the Panel objectively, not deferentially. The business judgment rule of the law of California, applicable to directors of California corporations, profit and nonprofit, in the case of ICANN is to be treated as a default rule that might be called upon in the absence of relevant provisions of ICANN's Articles and Bylaws and of specific representations of ICANN ... that bear on the propriety of its conduct. In the instant case, it is those Articles and Bylaws, and those representations, measured against the facts as the Panel finds them, which are determinative.<sup>98</sup>

113. While on no way bound by that decision, we agree with its conclusions in this respect.
114. At the end of the day we fail to see any significant difference between the parties' positions in this regard. The process is clear, and both parties acknowledge, that the Panel is tasked with determining whether or not the Board's actions are consistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and the Guidebook. Such a determination calls for what the panel in the ICM Registry matter called an “objective” appraisal of Board conduct as measured against the policies and rules set out in those instruments; all agree that it is the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook which are determinative.

115. That being said, we also agree with ICANN to the extent that, in determining the consistency of Board action with the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook, an “IRP Panel is neither asked to, nor allowed to, substitute its judgment for that of the Board.” In other words, it is not for the Panel to opine on whether the Board could have acted differently than it did; rather, our role is to assess whether the Board’s action was consistent with applicable rules found in the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook. Nor, as stated, is it for us to purport to appraise the policies and procedures established by ICANN in the Guidebook (since, again, this IRP is not a challenge to those policies and procedures themselves<sup>99</sup>), but merely to apply them to the facts.
116. With the foregoing firmly in mind, the Panel turns now to the issues to be determined in order to resolve the present dispute.

B. The String Similarity Review Process

117. The Panel is not unsympathetic to Booking.com’s complaints regarding the string similarity review process as established by the Guidebook. There is no question but that that process lacks certain elements of transparency and certain practices that are widely associated with requirements of fairness. For example, the Guidebook provides no means for applicants to provide evidence or make submissions to the SSP (or any other ICANN body) and so be fully “heard” on the substantive question of the similarity of their applied-for gTLD strings to others.
118. Indeed, as stated at the outset of this Declaration, these observations and the concerns that they engender were voiced by several members of the ICANN Board’s New gTLD Program Committee which voted to accept the BGC’s Recommendation to deny Booking.com’s Request for Reconsideration. The Panel can do no better than reproduce the statements made by the NGPC members in this respect, as recorded in the minutes of the NGPC’s 10 September 2013 meeting:<sup>100</sup>

<sup>99</sup> As discussed in more detail in the following section (at para. 117 and following) and again at Part IV of this Declaration, the important questions that Booking.com highlights in its pleadings, as to whether the string similarity review process is consistent with ICANN’s guiding principles of transparency and fairness, and regarding the published views of various members of ICANN’s NGPC in this respect, are matters which the ICANN Board, in its discretion, may wish to consider on its own motion in the context of the present case, in accordance with its authority under Section 5.1 (Module 5-4) of the Guidebook, or when it issues the Guidebook for round two of the New gTLD Program. Those questions include a lack of clarity surrounding the way in which the string similarity review is conducted by the SSP, and the absence of any means for applicants to be heard in the string similarity review process where they may have evidence to adduce or arguments to make (such as the evidence and arguments presented by Booking.com to this Panel), which could in fact be relevant to the SSP’s determination.

- Mr. George Sadowski stated his intention to abstain from the vote because, although “he understood that the BGC did the right thing, [he] thought the end result that was contrary to ICANN’s ... and the user’s best interests.”
  - Ms. Olga Madruga-Forti also stated her intention to abstain from voting on the BGC recommendation “because there was not sufficient rationale provided for why the string similarity review panel made its determination.”
  - In response to a comment by the Chair that the Request for Reconsideration deserved to be denied “[b]ecause the process was followed,” Mr. Ray Plzak “agreed that the process was followed, but noted that the process needs to be reviewed to potentially add a mechanism that would allow persons who don’t agree with the outcome to make an objection, other than using a Reconsideration Request.”
  - Mr. Plzak “recommended the Committee send a strong signal to the BGC, or adopt a resolution recommending that the BGC consider development of a different mechanism to provide an avenue for the community to appeal the outcome of a decision based on the merits.”
  - Ms. Madruga-Forti agreed and “recommended that in the future, a remand or appeals mechanism may help alleviate the concerns noted.”
  - Mr. Bill Graham also agreed with Mr. Plzak’s suggestion, and noted that “generally, there is a considerable level of discomfort and dissatisfaction with the process as expressed by Committee members.”
  - The Chair “agreed with [Mr. Graham’s] sentiment.”
  - The General Counsel and Secretary noted that ICANN ... “has tried to encourage more use of the ombudsman, or other accountability mechanisms for these types of concerns.”
119. Ultimately, five members of the NGPC voted in favour of the resolution accepting the BGC’s Recommendation; two members were unavailable to vote; and four members abstained. The abstaining members offered the following voting statements:
- Mr. Plzak stated that he abstained from voting “because he is disappointed in what is being done to remedy the situation. [He] would like to see more resolve to fix the process.”
  - Ms. Madruga-Forti stated that:

[T]he BGC has done an appropriate job of applying a limited review standard to the application for reconsideration, but unfortunately, in this circumstance, to apply that limited review accompanied by a lack of information regarding the rationale of the string similarity review panel is not possible in a logical and fair manner. The public interest would not be served by applying the limited review standard without proper information on the basis and reasoning for the decision of the panel. In my opinion, the public interest would be better served by abstaining and continuing to explore ways to establish a better record of the rationale of the string similarity review panel in circumstances such as this.

- Mr. Kuo-Wei Wu agreed with Ms. Madruga-Forti's and Mr. Plzak's voting statements.
- Mr. Sadowsky provided the following detailed statement:

I have a strong concern regarding the ratification of the BGC recommendation to deny the reconsideration request regarding string contention between .hoteis and .hotels, and I therefore have therefore abstained when the vote on this issue was taken.

The reconsideration process is a very narrowly focused instrument, relying solely upon investigating deviations from established and agreed upon process. As such, it can be useful, but it is limited in scope. In particular, it does not address situations where process has in fact been followed, but the results of such process have been regarded, sometimes quite widely, as being contrary to what might be best for significant or all segments of the ... community and/or Internet users in general.

The rationale underlying the rejection of the reconsideration claim is essentially that the string similarity process found that there was likely to be substantial confusion between the two, and that therefore they belonged in a contention set. Furthermore, no process has been identified as having been violated and therefore there is nothing to reconsider. As a Board member who is aware of ICANN's ... Bylaws, I cannot vote against the motion to deny reconsideration. The motion appears to be correct based upon the criteria in the Bylaws that define the reconsideration process and the facts in this particular case. However, I am increasingly disturbed by the growing sequence of decisions that are based upon a criterion for user confusion that, in my opinion, is not only both incomplete and flawed, but appears to work directly against the concept that users should not be confused. I am persuaded by the argument made by the proponents of reconsideration in this case that users will in fact not be confused by .hoteis and .hotels, since if they enter the wrong name, they are very likely to be immediately confronted by information in a language that they did not anticipate.

Confusion is a perceptual issue. String similarity is only one consideration in thinking about perceptual confusion and in fact it is not always an issue. In my opinion, much more perceptual confusion will arise between .hotel and .hotels than between .hotels and .hoteis. Yet if we adhere strictly to the Guidebook and whatever instructions have or have not been given to string similarity experts, it is my position that we work against implementing decisions that assist in avoiding user confusion, and we work in favor of decisions that are based upon an incorrect, incomplete and flawed ex ante analysis of the ICANN Network real issues with respect to user confusion.

The goal of the string similarity process is the minimization of user confusion and ensuring user trust in using the DNS ... The string similarity exercise is one of the means in the new gTLD ... process to minimize such confusion and to strengthen user trust. In placing our emphasis, and in fact our decisions, on string similarity only, we are unwittingly substituting the means for the goal, and making decisions regarding the goal on the basis of a means test. This is a disservice to the Internet user community.

I cannot and will not vote in favor of a motion that reflects, directly or indirectly, an unwillingness to depart from what I see as such a flawed position and which does not reflect in my opinion an understanding of the current reality of the situation.

120. These statements reflect to an important degree the Panel's own analysis.
121. The elements of the string similarity review process were established and widely published several years ago, after extensive consultation and debate among ICANN stakeholders and the Internet community. Booking.com correctly describes the process established (or "crystallized") in the Guidebook as a component of "a consensus policy" concerning the introduction of new gTLDs.<sup>101</sup>
122. The Guidebook makes clear that, as part of the initial evaluation to which all applied-for gTLDs are subject, each string would be reviewed for a number of factors, one of which is "string similarity", which involves a determination of "whether the applied-for gTLD string is so similar to other strings that it would create a probability of user confusion"<sup>102</sup>. The term "user" is elaborated elsewhere in the Guidebook, which speaks of confusion arising "in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user."<sup>103</sup>
123. The Guidebook explains that string similarity review comprises merely a "visual similarity check",<sup>104</sup> with a view to identifying only "visual string similarities that would create a probability of user confusion."<sup>105</sup>
124. The Guidebook makes clear that string similarity reviews would be conducted by an independent third party – the SSP – that would have wide (though not complete) discretion both in formulating its methodology and in determining string similarity on the basis of that methodology.
125. Section 2.2.1.1.2 of the Guidebook, titled "Review Methodology", provides that the SSP "is informed in part by an algorithmic score for ... visual similarity," which "will provide one objective measure for consideration by the [SSP]." Section 2.2.1.1.2 further states that, in addition to "examin[ing] all the algorithm data," the SSP will "perform its own review of similarities between strings and whether they rise to the level of string confusion." It is noted that the objective algorithmic score is to be treated as "only indicative". Crucially, "the final determination of similarity is entirely up to the [SSP's] judgment." (Underlining added)
126. In sum, the Guidebook calls for the SSP to determine whether two strings are so "visually similar" as to create a "probability of confusion" in the mind of an "average, reasonable Internet user." In making this determination, the SSP is informed by an "algorithmic score", to ensure that the process comprises at least one "objective measure". However, the algorithmic score is not determinative. The SSP also develops and performs "its own review". At the end of the day, the determination is entirely a matter of "the [SSP's] judgment."

127. By its very nature this process is highly discretionary. It is also, to an important degree, subjective. The Guidebook provides no definition of “visual similarity”, nor any indication of how such similarity is to be objectively measured other than by means of the SWORD algorithm. The Guidebook provides no definition of “confusion,” nor any definition or description of an “average, reasonable Internet user.” As Mr. Sadowski of the NGPC put it: “Confusion is a perceptual issue.” (Mr. Sadowski further noted: “String similarity is only one consideration in thinking about perceptual confusion, and in fact it is not always an issue.) The Guidebook mandates the SSP to develop and apply “its own review” of visual similarity and “whether similarities rise to the level of user confusion”, in addition to SWORD algorithm, which is intended to be merely “indicative”, yet provides no substantive guidelines in this respect.
128. Nor does the process as it exists provide for gTLD applicants to benefit from the sort of procedural mechanisms – for example, to inform the SSP’s review, to receive reasoned determinations from the SSP, or to appeal the merits of those determinations – which Booking.com claims are required under the applicable rules. Clearly, certain ICANN NGPC members themselves consider that such input would be desirable and that changes to the process are required in order for the string similarity review process to attain its true goal, which Mr. Sadowski referred to as “the minimization of user confusion and ensuring user trust in using the DNS”. However, as even the abstaining members of the NGPC conceded, the fact is that the sort of mechanisms that Booking.com asserts are required (and which those NGPC members believe should be required) are simply not part of the string similarity review process as currently established. As to whether they should be, it is not our place to express an opinion, though we note that such additional mechanisms surely would be consistent with the principles of transparency and fairness.
129. We add that we agree with ICANN that the time has long since passed for Booking.com or any other interested party to ask an IRP panel to review the actions of the ICANN Board in relation to the establishment of the string similarity review process, including Booking.com’s claims that specific elements of the process and the Board decisions to implement those elements are inconsistent with ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws. Any such claims, even if they had any merit, are long since time-barred by the 30-day limitation period set out in Article IV, Section 3(3) of the Bylaws. As ICANN expressed during the hearing, if Booking.com believed that there were problems with the Guidebook, it should have objected at the time the Guidebook was first implemented.
130. When asked during the hearing about its failure to object timely, Booking.com argued that it could not have known how the Board’s actions – that is, how the process established in the Guidebook – would affect it prior to the submission of its application for .hotels. However, that is not a persuasive or meritorious answer. As did all stakeholders, Booking.com had the opportunity to challenge the Board’s adoption of the Guidebook, at the time, if it considered any of its elements to be inconsistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

C. The Case of .hotels

131. In the light of the preceding analysis of Booking.com’s challenge concerning the ICANN Board’s actions in relation to the string similarity review process generally, the Panel is not persuaded by its challenge concerning the Board's conduct in relation to the review of .hotels specifically.

132. There are two principal elements to this part of Booking.com's case: a challenge in relation to the process followed by the SSP; and a challenge in relation to the Board's handling of Booking.com's Request for Reconsideration of the SSP's determination. However, the fundamental obstacle to Booking.com's case is that the established process was followed in all respects.
133. Booking.com itself acknowledges that "the process was followed" by the SSP, which determined that .hotels and .hotels were so visually similar as to warrant being placed in a contention set. So too did all of the NGPC members who commented on the matter recognize that "the process was followed" – for all their stated misgivings concerning the outcome of the process.
134. The same is true of the Request for Reconsideration. The Panel is struck by the extent and thoughtfulness not only of the NGPC's consideration of the issue, certain aspects of which are discussed above, but of the BGC's detailed analysis and its Recommendation to the NGPC, on the basis of which Booking.com's Request for Reconsideration was denied. Contrary to Booking.com's allegations, in neither instance was this merely a blind acceptance of a decision of a subordinate body. In fact, the reconsideration process itself, however limited and perhaps imperfect it may be, is inconsistent with Booking.com's claims of lack of "due process".
135. Although not addressed in great detail by the parties, the Panel considers several observations made by the BGC in its 1 August 2013 Recommendation to be particularly apposite:
- These standing requirements [for Requests for Reconsideration] are intended to protect the reconsideration process from abuse and to ensure that it is not used as a mechanism simply to challenge an action with which someone disagrees, but that it is limited to situations where the staff [or the Board] acted in contravention of established policies.<sup>106</sup>
  - Although the String Similarity Review was performed by a third party, ICANN has determined that the Reconsideration process can properly be invoked for challenges of the third party's decisions where it can be stated that either the vendor failed to follow its process in reaching the decision, or that ICANN staff failed to follow its process in accepting that decision.<sup>107</sup>
  - Booking.com does not suggest that the process for String Similarity Review set out in the Applicant Guidebook was not followed, or that ICANN staff violated any established ICANN policy in accepting the [SSP] decision on placing .hotels and .hotels in contention sets. Instead, Booking.com is supplanting what it believes the review

methodology for assessing visual similarity should have been, as opposed to the methodology set out at Section 2.2.1.1.2 of the Applicant Guidebook. In asserting a new review methodology, Booking.com is asking the BGC (and the Board through the New gTLD Program Committee (NGPC)) to make a substantive evaluation of the confusability of the strings and to reverse the decision. In the context of the New gTLD Program, the Reconsideration process is not however intended for the Board to perform a substantive review of [SSP] decisions. While Booking.com may have multiple reasons as to why it believes that its application for .hotels should not be in contention set with .hoteis, Reconsideration is not available as a mechanism to re-try the decisions of the evaluation panels.<sup>108</sup>

▪ Booking.com also claims that its assertions regarding the non-confusability of the .hotels and .hoteis strings demonstrate that “it is contrary to ICANN policy to put them in a contention set.” (Request, pages 6-7.) This is just a differently worded attempt to reverse the decision of the [SSP]. No actual policy or process is cited by Booking.com, only the suggestion that – according to Booking.com – the standards within the Applicant Guidebook on visual similarity should have resulted in a different outcome for the .hotels string. This is not enough for Reconsideration.<sup>109</sup>

▪ Booking.com argues that the contention set decision was taken without material information, including Booking.com’s linguistic expert’s opinion, or other “information that would refute the mistaken contention that there is likely to be consumer confusion between ‘.hotels’ and ‘.hoteis.’” (Request, page 7.) However, there is no process point in the String Similarity Review for applicants to submit additional information. This is in stark contrast to the reviews set out in Section 2.2.2 of the Applicant Guidebook, including the Technical/Operational review and the Financial Review, which allow for the evaluators to seek clarification or additional information through the issuance of clarifying questions. (AGB, Section 2.2.2.3 (Evaluation Methodology).)<sup>110</sup>

▪ Just as the process does not call for additional applicant inputs into the visual similarity review, Booking.com’s call for further information on the decision to place .hotels and .hoteis in a contention set ... is similarly not rooted in any established ICANN process at issue.[...] While applicants may avail themselves of accountability mechanism to challenge decisions, the use of an accountability mechanism when there is no proper ground to bring a request for review under the selected mechanism does not then provide opportunity for additional substantive review of decisions already taken.<sup>111</sup>

▪ [W]hile we understand the impact that Booking.com faces by being put in a contention set, and that it wishes for more narrative information regarding the [SSP’s] decision, no such narrative is called for in the process.<sup>112</sup>

▪ The Applicant Guidebook sets out the methodology used when evaluating visual similarity of strings. The process documentation provided by the String Similarity Review Panel describes the steps followed by the [SSP] in applying the methodology

set out in the Applicant Guidebook. ICANN then coordinates a quality assurance review over a random selection of [SSP's] reviews to gain confidence that the methodology and process were followed. That is the process used for a making and assessing a determination of visual similarity. Booking.com's disagreement as to whether the methodology should have resulted in a finding of visual similarity does not mean that ICANN (including the third party vendors performing String Similarity Review) violated any policy in reaching the decision (nor does it support a conclusion that the decision was actually wrong).<sup>113</sup>

▪ The [SSP] reviewed all applied for strings according to the standards and methodology of the visual string similarity review set out in the Applicant Guidebook. The Guidebook clarifies that once contention sets are formed by the [SSP], ICANN will notify the applicants and will publish results on its website. (AGB, Section 2.2.1.1.1.) That the [SSP] considered its output as "advice" to ICANN (as stated in its process documentation) is not the end of the story. Whether the results are transmitted as "advice" or "outcomes" or "reports", the important query is what ICANN was expected to do with that advice once it was received. ICANN had always made clear that it would rely on the advice of its evaluators in the initial evaluation stage of the New gTLD Program, subject to quality assurance measures. Therefore, Booking.com is actually proposing a new and different process when it suggests that ICANN should perform substantive review (instead of process testing) over the results of the String Similarity Review Panel's outcomes prior to the finalization of contention sets.<sup>114</sup>

▪ As there is no indication that either the [SSP] or ICANN staff violated any established ICANN policy in reaching or accepting the decision on the placement of .hotels and .hoteis in a non-exact contention set, this Request should not proceed.<sup>115</sup>

136. These excerpts of the BGC Recommendation not only illustrate the seriousness with which Booking.com's Request for Reconsideration was heard, they mirror considerations to which we fully subscribe and which we find apply as well, with equal force and effect, in the context of Booking.com's IRP Request.
137. It simply cannot be said – indeed, it is not even alleged by Booking.com – that the established process was not followed by the ICANN Board or any third party either in the initial string similarity review of .hotels or in the reconsideration process.
138. Booking.com was asked at the hearing to identify with particularity the ICANN Board's actions (including inactions) in this case that it claims are inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Guidebook and regarding which it asks the Panel to render a declaration. It identified four:
- The Board's adoption of certain provisions of the Guidebook, including the allegedly ill-defined, unfair and non-transparent procedures for selecting the SSP and supervising the SSP's performance of the string similarity review process. As discussed, any claims in this regard are time-barred.

- The Board’s acceptance of the SSP determination. As ICANN argues, there was no action (or inaction) by the Board here, no decision made (or not made) by the Board or any other body to accept the SSP’s determination. The Guidebook provides that applied-for strings “will be placed in contention set” where the SSP determines the existence of visual similarity likely to give rise to user confusion. Simply put, under the Guidebook the Board is neither required nor entitled to intervene at this stage to accept or not accept the SSP’s determination. Booking.com is correct that the Board could nevertheless have stepped in and reversed the SSP determination under Section 5.1 (Module 5-4) of the Guidebook, but did not do so; that inaction is addressed below.
  - The Board’s denial of Booking.com’s Request for Reconsideration. As discussed above, there is nothing in the evidence that even remotely suggests that ICANN’s conduct in this regard was inconsistent with its Articles, Bylaws or the Guidebook. On the contrary, we have already stated that the detailed analysis performed by the BGC and the extensive consideration of the BGC Recommendation by the NGPC undermine any claim that ICANN failed to exercise due care and independent judgment, or that its handling of the Request for Reconsideration was inconsistent with applicable rules or policy. As discussed above, just as in the present IRP, the question in the reconsideration process is whether the established process was followed. This was the question that the BGC and NGPC asked themselves in considering Booking.com’s Request for Reconsideration, and which they properly answered in the affirmative in denying Booking.com’s request.
  - The Board’s refusal to “step in” and exercise its authority under Section 5.1 (Module 5-4) of the Guidebook to “individually consider an application for a new gTLD to determine whether approval would be in the best interest of the Internet community.” As pointed out by ICANN during the hearing, the fact that the ICANN Board enjoys such discretion and may choose to exercise it any time does not mean that it is bound to exercise it, let alone at the time and in the manner demanded by Booking.com. In any case, the Panel does not believe that the Board’s inaction in this respect was inconsistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws or indeed with ICANN’s guiding principles of transparency and fairness, given (1) Booking.com’s concession that the string similarity review process was followed; (2) the indisputable conclusion that any challenge to the adoption of the SSP process itself is time-barred; (3) the manifestly thoughtful consideration given to Booking.com’s Request for Reconsideration by the BGC; and (4), the fact that, notwithstanding its protestations to the contrary, Booking.com’s real dispute seems to be with the process itself rather than how the process was applied in this case (given that, as noted, Booking.com concedes that the process was indeed followed).
139. The Panel further considers that these – in addition to any and all other potential (and allegedly reviewable) actions identified by Booking.com during the course of these proceedings – fail on the basis of Booking.com’s dual acknowledgement that it does not challenge the validity or fairness of the string similarity review process, and that that process was duly followed in this case.

140. Finally, the panel notes that Booking.com's claim – largely muted during the hearing – regarding alleged “discrimination” as regards the treatment of its application for .hotels also founders on the same ground. Booking.com acknowledges that the established string similarity review process was followed; and there is absolutely no evidence whatsoever that .hotels was treated any differently than any other applied-for gTLD string in this respect. The mere fact that the result of the string similarity review of .hotels differed from the results of the reviews of the vast majority of other applied-for strings does not suggest discriminatory treatment. In any event, the Panel cannot but note the obvious, which is that .hotels is not alone in having been placed in contention by the SSP. So too was .hoteis; and so too were .unicom and .unicorn. Moreover, and once again, it is recalled that Booking.com does not claim to challenge the merits of the string similarity review, that is, the determination that .hotels and .hoteis are so visually similar as to warrant placement in a contention set.

D. Conclusion

141. In launching this IRP, Booking.com no doubt realized that it faced an uphill battle. The very limited nature of IRP proceedings is such that any IRP applicant will face significant obstacles in establishing that the ICANN Board acted inconsistently with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws. In fact, Booking.com acknowledges those obstacles, albeit inconsistently and at times indirectly.
142. Booking.com purports to challenge “the way in which the [string similarity review] process was established, implemented and supervised by (or under the authority of) the ICANN Board”; yet it also claims that it does not challenge the validity or fairness of the string similarity review process as set out in the Guidebook. It asks the Panel to overturn the SSP's determination in this case and to substitute an alternate result, in part on the basis of its own “expert evidence” regarding similarity and the probability of user confusion as between .hotels and .hoteis; yet it claims that it does not challenge the merits of the SSP determination and it acknowledges that the process set out in the Guidebook was duly followed in the case of its application for .hotels.
143. In sum, Booking.com has failed to overcome the very obstacles that it recognizes exist.
144. The Panel finds that Booking.com has failed to identify any instance of Board action or inaction, including any action or inaction of ICANN staff or a third party (such as ICC, acting as the SSP), that could be considered to be inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws or with the policies and procedures established in the Guidebook. This includes the challenged actions of the Board (or any staff or third party) in relation to what Booking.com calls the implementation and supervision of the string similarity review process generally, as well as the challenged actions of the Board (or any staff or third party) in relation to the string similarity review of .hotels in particular.
145. More particularly, the Panel finds that the string similarity review performed in the case of .hotels was not inconsistent with the Articles or Bylaws or with what Booking.com refers to as the “applicable rules” as set out in the Guidebook.
146. To the extent that the Board's adoption and implementation of specific elements of the new gTLD Program and Guidebook, including the string similarity review process, could potentially be said to be inconsistent with the principles of transparency or fairness that underlie ICANN's Articles and Incorporation and Bylaws (which the Panel does not say is the case), the time to challenge such action has long since passed.

147. Booking.com's IRP Request must be denied.

VII. THE PREVAILING PARTY; COSTS

148. Article IV, Section 3(18) of the Bylaws requires that the Panel "specifically designate the prevailing party." This designation is germane to the allocation of costs, given that Article IV, Section 3(18) provides that the "party not prevailing shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the IRP Provider."
149. The same provision of the Bylaws also states that "in an extraordinary case the IRP Panel may in its declaration allocate up to half of the costs of the IRP Provider to the prevailing party based upon the circumstances, including a consideration of the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest. Each party to the IRP proceedings shall bear its own expenses."
150. Similarly, the Supplementary Procedures state, at Article 11:

The IRP PANEL shall fix costs in its DECLARATION. The party not prevailing in an IRP shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the proceedings, but under extraordinary circumstances the IRP PANEL may allocate up to half of the costs to the prevailing party, taking into account the circumstances of the case, including the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest.

In the event the Requestor has not availed itself, in good faith, of the cooperative engagement or conciliation process, and the requestor is not successful in the Independent Review, the IRP PANEL must award ICANN all reasonable fees and costs incurred by ICANN in the IRP, including legal fees.

151. The "IRP Provider" is the ICDR, and, in accordance with the ICDR Rules, the costs to be allocated between the parties – what the Bylaws call the "costs of the IRP Provider", and the Supplementary Procedures call the "costs of the proceedings" – include the fees and expenses of the Panel members and of the ICDR (we refer to all of these costs as "IRP costs").
152. ICANN is undoubtedly the prevailing party in this case. That being said, the Panel considers that the nature and significance of the issues raised by Booking.com, and the contribution to the "public interest" of its submissions, are such that it is appropriate and reasonable that the IRP costs be shared equally by the parties. We consider that the extraordinary circumstances of case – in which some members of ICANN's New gTLD Program Committee have publicly declared that, in their view, the rules on the basis of which Booking.com's claims fail should be reconsidered by ICANN – warrants such a holding.
153. The Panel cannot grant Booking.com the relief that it seeks. A panel such as ours can only declare whether, on the facts as we find them, the challenged actions of ICANN are or are not inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. We have found that the actions in question are not inconsistent with those instruments. The process established by ICANN under its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws and set out in the Guidebook was followed, and the time to challenge that process (which Booking.com asserts is not its intention in these proceedings in any event) has long passed.

154. However, we can – and we do – acknowledge certain legitimate concerns regarding the string similarity review process raised by Booking.com, discussed above, which are evidently shared by a number of prominent and experienced ICANN NGPC members. And we can, and do, encourage ICANN to consider whether it wishes to address these issues in an appropriate manner and forum, for example, when drafting the Guidebook for round two of the New gTLD Program or, more immediately, in the exercise of its authority under Section 5.1 (Module 5-4) of the Guidebook (which it may choose to exercise at any time, in its discretion) to consider whether, notwithstanding the result of the string similarity review of .hotels and .hoteis, approval of both of Booking.com's and Despegar's proposed strings would be in the best interest of the Internet community.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, the Panel hereby declares:

- (1) Booking.com's IRP Request is denied;
- (2) ICANN is the prevailing party;
- (3) In view of the circumstances, each party shall bear one-half of the costs of the IRP Provider, including the fees and expenses of the Panel members and the fees and expenses of the ICDR. As a result, the administrative fees and expenses of the ICDR, totaling US$4,600.00, as well as the compensation and expenses of the Panelists totaling US$163,010.05 are to be borne equally. Therefore, ICANN shall pay to Booking.com the amount of US$2,300.00 representing that portion of said fees and expenses in excess of the apportioned costs previously incurred by Booking.com or are not inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. We have found that the actions in question are not inconsistent with those instruments. The process established by ICANN under its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws and set out in the Guidebook was followed, and the time to challenge that process (which Booking.com asserts is not its intention in these proceedings in any event) has long passed.
- (4) This Final Declaration may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original, and all of which together shall constitute the Final Declaration of this IRP Panel.

154. However, we can – and we do – acknowledge certain legitimate concerns regarding the string similarity review process raised by Booking.com, discussed above, which are evidently shared by a number of prominent and experienced ICANN NGPC members. And we can, and do, encourage ICANN to consider whether it wishes to address these issues in an appropriate manner and forum, for example, when drafting the Guidebook for round two of the New gTLD Program or, more immediately, in the exercise of its authority under Section 5.1 (Module 5-4) of the Guidebook (which it may choose to exercise at any time, in its discretion) to consider whether, notwithstanding the result of the string similarity review of .hotels and .hoteis, approval of both of Booking.com's and Despegar's proposed strings would be in the best interest of the Internet community.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, the Panel hereby declares:

- (1) Booking.com's IRP Request is denied;
- (2) ICANN is the prevailing party;
- (3) In view of the circumstances, each party shall bear one-half of the costs of the IRP Provider, including the fees and expenses of the Panel members and the fees and expenses of the ICDR. As a result, the administrative fees and expenses of the ICDR, totaling US$4,600.00, as well as the compensation and expenses of the Panelists totaling US$163,010.05 are to be borne equally. Therefore, ICANN shall pay to Booking.com the amount of US$2,300.00 representing that portion of said fees and expenses in excess of the apportioned costs previously incurred by Booking.com
- (4) This Final Declaration may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original, and all of which together shall constitute the Final Declaration of this IRP Panel.

I. BACKGROUND

1. DCA Trust is non-profit organization established under the laws of the Republic of Mauritius on 15 July 2010 with its registry operation – DCA Registry Services (Kenya) Limited – as its principal place of business in Nairobi, Kenya.
2. DCA Trust was formed with the charitable purpose of, among other things, advancing information technology education in Africa and providing a continental Internet domain name to provide access to internet services for the people of Africa and not for the public good.
3. In March 2012, DCA Trust applied to ICANN for the delegation of the .AFRICA top-level domain name in its 2012 General Top-Level Domains (“gTLD”) Internet Expansion Program (the “New gTLD Program”), an internet resource available for delegation under that program.
4. ICANN is a non-profit corporation established on 30 September 1998 under the laws of the State of California, and headquartered in Marina del Rey, California, U.S.A. According to its Articles of Incorporation, ICANN was established for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole and is tasked with carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law, international conventions and local law.
5. On 4 June 2013, the ICANN Board New gTLD Program Committee (“NGPC”) posted a notice that it had decided not to accept DCA Trust’s application.
6. On 19 June 2013, DCA Trust filed a request for reconsideration by the ICANN Board Governance Committee (“BGC”), which denied the request on 1 August 2013.
7. On 19 August 2013, DCA Trust informed ICANN of its intention to seek relief before an Independent Review Panel under ICANN’s Bylaws. Between August and October 2013, DCA Trust and ICANN participated in a Cooperative Engagement Process (“CEP”) to try and resolve the issues relating to DCA Trust’s application. Despite several meetings, no resolution was reached.
8. On 24 October 2013, DCA Trust filed a Notice of Independent Review Process with the ICDR in accordance with Article IV, Section 3 of ICANN’s Bylaws.

9. In an effort to safeguard its rights pending the ongoing constitution of the IRP Panel, on 22 January 2014, DCA Trust wrote to ICANN requesting that it immediately cease any further processing of all applications for the delegation of the .AFRICA gTLD, failing which DCA Trust would seek emergency relief under Article 37 of the ICDR Rules.
10. DCA Trust also indicated that it believed it had the right to seek such relief because there was no standing panel as anticipated in the Supplementary Procedures for ICANN Independent Review Process (“Supplementary Procedures”), which could otherwise hear requests for emergency relief.
11. In response, on 5 February 2014, ICANN wrote:

Although ICANN typically is refraining from further processing activities in conjunction with pending gTLD applications where a competing applicant has a pending reconsideration request, ICANN does not intend to refrain from further processing of applications that relate in some way to pending independent review proceedings. In this particular instance, ICANN believes that the grounds for DCA’s IRP are exceedingly weak, and that the decision to refrain from the further processing of other applications on the basis of the pending IRP would be unfair to others.
12. In its Request for Emergency Arbitrator and Interim Measures of Protection subsequently submitted on 28 March 2014, DCA Trust pleaded, inter alia, that, in an effort to preserve its rights, in January 2014, DCA requested that ICANN suspend its processing of applications for .AFRICA during the pendency of this proceeding. ICANN, however, summarily refused to do so.
13. DCA Trust also submitted that “on 23 March 2014, DCA became aware that ICANN intended to sign an agreement with DCA’s competitor (a South African company called ZACR) on 26 March 2014 in Beijing [...] Immediately upon receiving this information, DCA contacted ICANN and asked it to refrain from signing the agreement with ZACR in light of the fact that this proceeding was still pending. Instead, according to ICANN’s website, ICANN signed its agreement with ZACR the very next day, two days ahead of plan, on 24 March instead of 26 March.”
14. According to DCA Trust, that same day, “ICANN then responded to DCA’s request by presenting the execution of the contract as a fait accompli, arguing that DCA should have sought to stop ICANN from proceeding with ZACR’s application, as ICANN had already informed DCA of its intention [to] ignore its obligations to participate in this proceeding in good faith.”

15. DCA Trust also submitted that on 25 March 2014, as per ICANN's email to the ICDR, "ICANN for the first time informed DCA that it would accept the application of Article 37 of the ICDR Rules to this proceeding contrary to the express provisions of the Supplementary Procedures of ICANN has put in place for the IRP Process."
16. In its Request, DCA Trust argued that it "is entitled to an accountability proceeding with legitimacy and integrity, with the capacity to provide a meaningful remedy. [...] DCA has requested the opportunity to compete for rights to .AFRICA pursuant to the rules that ICANN put into place. Allowing ICANN to delegate .AFRICA to DCA's only competitor – which took actions that were instrumental in the process leading to ICANN's decision to reject DCA's application – would eviscerate the very purpose of this proceeding and deprive DCA of its rights under ICANN's own constitutive instruments and international law."
17. Finally, among other things, DCA Trust requested the following interim relief:
  - a. An order compelling ICANN to refrain from any further steps toward delegation of the .AFRICA gTLD, including but not limited to execution or assessment of pre-delegation testing, negotiations or discussions relating to delegation with the entity ZACR or any of its officers or agents; [...]
18. On 24 April and 12 May 2014, the Panel issued Procedural Order No. 1, a Decision on Interim Measures of Protection, and a list of questions for the Parties to answer.
19. In its 12 May 2014 Decision on Interim Measures of Protection, the Panel required ICANN to "immediately refrain from any further processing of any application for .AFRICA until [the Panel] heard the merits of DCA Trust's Notice of Independent Review Process and issued its conclusions regarding the same".
20. In the Panel's unanimous view, among other reasons, it would have been "unfair and unjust to deny DCA Trust's request for interim relief when the need for such a relief...[arose] out of ICANN's failure to follow its own Bylaws and procedures." The Panel also reserved its decision on the issue of costs relating to that stage of the proceeding until the hearing of the merits.
21. On 27 May and 4 June 2015, the Panel issued Procedural Order No. 2 and a Decision on ICANN's request for Partial Reconsideration of certain portions of its Decision on Interim Measures of Protection.

22. In its 4 June 2014 Decision on ICANN's request for Partial Reconsideration, the Panel unanimously concluded that ICANN's request must be denied. In that Decision, the Panel observed:

9. After careful consideration of the Parties' respective submissions, the Panel is of the unanimous view that ICANN's Request must be denied for two reasons.

10. First, there is nothing in ICANN's Bylaws, the International Dispute Resolution Procedures of the ICDR effective as at 1 June 2009 or the Supplementary Procedures for ICANN Independent Review Process that in any way address the Panel's ability to address ICANN's Request. The Panel has not been able to find any relevant guidance in this regard in any of the above instruments and ICANN has not pointed to any relevant provision or rule that would support its argument that the Panel has the authority to reconsider its Decision of 12 May 2014.

11. Moreover, ICANN has not pointed to any clerical, typographical or computation error or shortcoming in the Panel's Decision and it has not requested an interpretation of the Panel's Decision based on any ambiguity or vagueness. To the contrary, ICANN has asked the Panel to reconsider its prior findings with respect to certain references in its Decision that ICANN disagrees with, on the basis that those references are in ICANN's view, inaccurate.

12. Second, even if the Panel were to reconsider based on any provision or rule available, its findings with respect to those passages complained of by ICANN as being inaccurate in its Decision – namely paragraphs 29 to 33 – after deliberation, the Panel would still conclude that ICANN has failed to follow its own Bylaws as more specifically explained in the above paragraphs, in the context of addressing which of the Parties should be viewed as responsible for the delays associated with DCA Trust's Request for Interim Measures of Protection. It is not reasonable to construe the By-law proviso for consideration by a provider-appointed ad hoc panel when a standing panel is not in place as relieving ICANN indefinitely of forming the required standing panel. Instead, the provider appointed panel is properly viewed as an interim procedure to be used before ICANN has a chance to form a standing panel. Here, more than a year has elapsed, and ICANN has offered no explanation why the standing panel has not been formed, nor indeed any indication that formation of that panel is in process, or has begun, or indeed even is planned to begin at some point.

The Panel also reserved its decision on the issue of costs relating to that stage of the proceeding until the hearing of the merits.

23. On 14 August 2014, the Panel issued a Declaration on the IRP Procedure ("2014 Declaration") pursuant to which it (1) ordered a reasonable documentary exchange, (2) permitted the Parties to benefit from additional filings and supplementary briefing, (3) allowed a video hearing, and (4) permitted both Parties at the hearing to challenge and test the veracity of any written statements made by witnesses.

The Panel also concluded that its Declaration on the IRP and its future Declaration on the Merits of the case were binding on the Parties. In particular, the Panel decided:

98. Various provisions of ICANN's Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures support the conclusion that the Panel's decisions, opinions and declarations are binding. There is certainly nothing in the Supplementary Rules that renders the decisions, opinions and declarations of the Panel either advisory or non-binding.

100. Section 10 of the Supplementary Procedures resembles Article 27 of the ICDR Rules. Whereas Article 27 refers to "Awards", section 10 refers to "Declarations". Section 10 of the Supplementary Procedures, however, is silent on whether Declarations made by the IRP Panel are "final and binding" on the parties.

101. As explained earlier, as per Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 8 of the Bylaws, the Board of Directors of ICANN has given its approval to the ICDR to establish a set of operating rules and procedures for the conduct of the IRP set out in section 3. The operating rules and procedures established by the ICDR are the ICDR Rules as referred to in the preamble of the Supplementary Procedures. These Rules have been supplemented with the Supplementary Procedures.

102. This is clear from two different parts of the Supplementary Procedures. First, in the preamble, where the Supplementary Procedures state that: "These procedures supplement the International Centre for Dispute Resolution's International Arbitration Rules in accordance with the independent review procedures set forth in Article IV, Section 3 of the ICANN Bylaws".

103. And second, under section 2 entitled (Scope), that states that the "ICDR will apply these Supplementary Procedures, in addition to the INTERNATIONAL DISPUTE RESOLUTION PROCEDURES, in all cases submitted to the ICDR in connection with the Article IV, Section 3(4) of the ICANN Bylaws". It is therefore clear that ICANN intended the operating rules and procedures for the independent review to be an international set of arbitration rules supplemented by a particular set of additional rules.

104. There is also nothing inconsistent between section 10 of the Supplementary Procedures and Article 27 of the ICDR Rules.

105. One of the hallmarks of international arbitration is the binding and final nature of the decisions made by the adjudicators. Binding arbitration is the essence of what the ICDR Rules, the ICDR itself and its parent, the American Arbitration Association, offer. The selection of the ICDR Rules as the baseline set of procedures for IRP's, therefore, points to a binding adjudicative process.

106. Furthermore, the process adopted in the Supplementary Procedures is an adversarial one where counsel for the parties present competing evidence and arguments, and a panel decides who prevails, when and in what circumstances. The panellists who adjudicate the parties' claims are also selected from among experienced arbitrators, whose usual charter is to make binding decisions.

107. The above is further supported by the language and spirit of section 11 of ICANN's Bylaws. Pursuant to that section, the IRP Panel has the authority to summarily dismiss requests brought without standing, lacking in substance, or that are frivolous or vexatious. Surely, such a decision, opinion or declaration on the part of the Panel would not be considered advisory.

110. ICANN points to the extensive public and expert input that preceded the formulation of the Supplementary Procedures. The Panel would have expected, were a mere advisory decision, opinion or declaration the objective of the IRP, that this intent be clearly articulated somewhere in the Bylaws or the Supplementary Procedures. In the Panel's view, this could have easily been done.

111. The force of the foregoing textual and construction considerations as pointing to the binding effect of the Panel's decisions and declarations are reinforced by two factors: 1) the exclusive nature of the IRP whereby the non-binding argument would be clearly in contradiction with such a factor; and, 2) the special, unique, and publicly important function of ICANN. As explained before, ICANN is not an ordinary private non-profit entity deciding for its own sake who it wishes to conduct business with, and who it does not. ICANN rather, is the steward of a highly valuable and important international resource.

115. Moreover, assuming for the sake of argument that it is acceptable for ICANN to adopt a remedial scheme with no teeth, the Panel is of the opinion that, at a minimum, the IRP should forthrightly explain and acknowledge that the process is merely advisory. This would at least let parties know before embarking on a potentially expensive process that a victory before the IRP panel may be ignored by ICANN. And, a straightforward acknowledgment that the IRP process is intended to be merely advisory might lead to a legislative or executive initiative to create a truly independent compulsory process. The Panel seriously doubts that the Senators questioning former ICANN President Stuart Lynn in 2002 would have been satisfied had they understood that a) ICANN had imposed on all applicants a waiver of all judicial remedies, and b) the IRP process touted by ICANN as the "ultimate guarantor" of ICANN accountability was only an advisory process, the benefit of which accrued only to ICANN. [Underlining is from the original decision.]

The Panel also reserved its decision on the issue of costs relating to that stage of the proceeding until the hearing of the merits.

24. On 5 September and 25 September 2014, the Panel issued Procedural Orders No. 3 and No. 4. In Procedural Order No. 3, the Panel notably required the Parties to complete their respective filing of briefs in accordance with the IRP Procedure Guidelines by 3 November 2014 for DCA Trust and 3 December 2014 for ICANN.
25. In Procedural Order No. 4 dated 25 September 2014, the Panel reached a decision regarding document production issues.
26. On 3 November 2014 and 3 December 2014, the Parties filed their Memorial and Response Memorial on the Merits in accordance with the timetable set out in Procedural Order No. 3.
27. On 26 February 2015, following the passing away of the Hon. Richard C. Neal (Ret.) and confirmation by the ICDR of his replacement arbitrator, the Hon. William J. Cahill (Ret.), ICANN requested that this Panel consider revisiting the part of this IRP relating to the issue of hearing witnesses addressed in the Panel's 2014 Declaration.
28. In particular, ICANN submitted that given the replacement of Justice Neal, Article 15.2 of the ICDR Rules together with the Supplementary Procedures permitted this IRP to in its sole discretion, determine "whether all or part" of this IRP should be repeated.
29. According to ICANN, while it was not necessary to repeat all of this IRP, since the Panel here had exceeded its authority under the Supplementary Procedures when it held in its 2014 Declaration that it could order live testimony of witnesses, the Panel should then at a minimum consider revisiting that issue.
30. According to ICANN, panelists derived "their powers and authority from the relevant applicable rules, the parties' requests, and the contractual provisions agreed to by the Parties (in this instance, ICANN's Bylaws, which establish the process of independent review). The authority of panelists is limited by such rules, submissions and agreements."
31. ICANN emphasized that "compliance with the Supplementary Procedures [was] critical to ensure predictability for ICANN, applicants for and objectors to gTLD applications, and the entire ICANN community...", and while "ICANN [was] committed to fairness and accessibility...ICANN [was] also committed to predictability and the like treatment of all applicants. For this Panel to change the rules for this single applicant [did] not encourage any of these commitments.”

32. ICANN also pleaded that, DCA specifically agreed to be bound by the Supplementary Procedures when it initially submitted its application, the Supplementary Procedures apply to both ICANN and DCA alike, ICANN is now in the same position when it comes to testing witness declarations and finally, in alternative dispute resolution proceedings where cross examination of witnesses is allowed, parties often waive cross-examination.

33. Finally, ICANN advanced that:

[T]he Independent Review process is an alternative dispute resolution procedure adapted to the specific issues to be addressed pursuant to ICANN’s Bylaws. The process cannot be transformed into a full-fledged trial without amending ICANN’s Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures, which specifically provide for a hearing that includes counsel argument only. Accordingly, ICANN strongly urges the Panel to follow the rules for this proceeding and to declare that the hearing in May will be limited to argument of counsel.

34. On 24 March 2015, the Panel issued its Declaration on ICANN’s Request for Revisiting of the 14 August Declaration on the IRP Procedure following the Replacement of Panel Member. In that Declaration, the newly constituted Panel unanimously concluded that it was not necessary for it to reconsider or revisit its 2014 Declaration.

35. In passing and not at all as a result of any intended or inadvertent reconsideration or revisiting of its 2014 Declaration, the Panel referred to Articles III and IV of ICANN’s Bylaws and concluded:

Under the general heading, Transparency, and title “Purpose”, Section 1 of Article III states: “ICANN and its constituent bodies shall operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness.” Under the general heading, Accountability and Review, and title “Purpose”, Section 1 of Article IV reads: “In carrying out its mission as set out in these Bylaws, ICANN should be accountable to the community for operating in a manner that is consistent with these Bylaws, and with due regard for the core values set forth in Article I of these Bylaws.” In light of the above, and again in passing only, it is the Panel’s unanimous view, that the filing of fact witness statements (as ICANN has done in this IRP) and limiting telephonic or in-person hearings to argument only is inconsistent with the objectives setout in Articles III and IV setout above.

The Panel again reserved its decision on the issue of costs relating to that stage of the proceeding until the hearing of the merits.

36. On 24 March and 1 April 2015, the Panel rendered Procedural Orders No. 5 and 6, in which, among other things, the Panel recorded the Parties' "agreement that there will no cross-examination of any of the witnesses" at the hearing of the merits.
37. On 20 April 2015, the Panel rendered its Third Declaration on the IRP Procedure. In that Declaration, the Panel decided that the hearing of this IRP should be an in-person one in Washington, D.C. and required all three witnesses who had filed witness statements to be present at the hearing.
38. The Panel in particular noted that:

13. [...] Article IV, Section 3, and Paragraph 4 of ICANN's Bylaws (reproduced above) – the Independent Review Process – was designed and set up to offer the Internet community, an accountability process that would ensure that ICANN acted in a manner consistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.

14. Both ICANN's Bylaws and the Supplementary Rules require an IRP Panel to examine and decide whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. As ICANN's Bylaws explicitly put it, an IRP Panel is "charged with comparing contested actions of the Board [...], and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.

15. The IRP is the only independent third party process that allows review of board actions to ensure their consistency with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws. As already explained in this Panel's 14 August 2014 Declaration on the IRP Procedure ("August 2014 Declaration"), the avenues of accountability for applicants that have disputes with ICANN do not include resort to the courts. Applications for gTLD delegations are governed by ICANN's Guidebook, which provides that applicants waive all right to resort to the courts:

"Applicant hereby releases ICANN [...] from any and all claims that arise out of, are based upon, or are in any way related to, any action or failure to act by ICANN [...] in connection with ICANN's review of this application, investigation, or verification, any characterization or description of applicant or the information in this application, any withdrawal of this application or the decision by ICANN to recommend or not to recommend, the approval of applicant's gTLD application. APPLICANT AGREES NOT TO CHALLENGE, IN COURT OR ANY OTHER JUDICIAL FORA, ANY FINAL DECISION MADE BY ICANN WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION, AND IRREVOCABLY WAIVES ANY RIGHT TO SUE OR PROCEED IN COURT OR ANY OTHER JUDICIAL FORA ON THE BASIS OF ANY OTHER LEGAL CLAIM AGAINST ICANN ON THE BASIS OF ANY OTHER LEGAL CLAIM."

Thus, assuming that the foregoing waiver of any and all judicial remedies is valid and enforceable, then the only and ultimate "accountability" remedy for an applicant is the IRP.

16. Accountability requires an organization to explain or give reasons for its activities, accept responsibility for them and to disclose the results in a transparent manner.

21. In order to keep the costs and burdens of independent review as low as possible, ICANN's Bylaws, in Article IV, Section 3 and Paragraph 12, suggests that the IRP Panel conduct its proceedings by email and otherwise via the Internet to the maximum extent feasible, and where necessary the IRP Panel may hold meetings by telephone. Use of the words "should" and "may" versus "shall" are demonstrative of this point. In the same paragraph, however, ICANN's Bylaws state that, "in the unlikely event that a telephonic or in-person hearing is convened, the hearing shall be limited to argument only; all evidence, including witness statements, must be submitted in writing in advance."

22. The Panel finds that this last sentence in Paragraph 12 of ICANN's Bylaws, unduly and improperly restricts the Panel's ability to conduct the "independent review" it has been explicitly mandated to carryout in Paragraph 4 of Section 3 in the manner it considers appropriate.

23. How can a Panel compare contested actions of the Board and declare whether or not they are consistent with the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, without the ability to fact find and make enquiries concerning those actions in the manner it considers appropriate?

24. How can the Panel for example, determine, if the Board acted without conflict of interest, exercised due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of it, or exercised independent judgment in taking decisions, if the Panel cannot ask the questions it needs to, in the manner it needs to or considers fair, just and appropriate in the circumstances?

25. How can the Panel ensure that the parties to this IRP are treated with equality and that each party has the right to be heard and is given a fair opportunity to present its case with respect to the mandate the Panel has been given, if as ICANN submits, "ICANN's Bylaws do not permit any examination of witnesses by the parties or the Panel during the hearing"?

26. The Panel is unanimously of the view that it cannot. The Panel is also of the view that any attempt by ICANN in this case to prevent it from carrying out its independent review of ICANN Board's actions in the manner that the Panel considers appropriate under the circumstances deprives the accountability and review process set out in the Bylaws of any meaning.

27. ICANN has filed two 'Declarations' in this IRP, one signed by Ms. Heather Dryden, a Senior Policy Advisor at the International Telecommunications Policy and Coordination Directorate at Industry Canada, and Chair of ICANN Government Advisory Committee from 2010 to 2013, and the other by Mr. Cherine Chalaby, a member of the Board of Directors of ICANN since 2010. Mr. Chalaby is also, since its inception, one of three members of the Subcommittee on Ethics and Conflicts of ICANN's Board of Governance Committee.

28. In their respective statements, both individuals have confirmed that they "have personal knowledge of the matters set forth in [their] declaration and [are] competent to testify to these matters if called as a witness."

29. In his Declaration, Mr. Chalaby states that “all members of the NGPC were asked to and did specifically affirm that they did not have a conflict of interest related to DCA’s application for .AFRICA when they voted on the GAC advice. In addition, the NGPC asked the BGC to look into the issue further, and the BGC referred the matter to the Subcommittee. After investigating the matter, the Subcommittee concluded that Chris Disspain and Mike Silber did not have conflicts of interest with respect to DCA’s application for .AFRICA.”

30. The Panel considers it important and useful for ICANN’s witnesses, and in particular, Mr. Chalaby as well as for Ms. Sophia Bekele Eshete to be present at the hearing of this IRP.

31. While the Panel takes note of ICANN’s position depicted on page 2 of its 8 April 2015 letter, the Panel nonetheless invites ICANN to reconsider its position.

32. The Panel also takes note of ICANN’s offer in that same letter to address written questions to its witnesses before the hearing, and if the Panel needs more information after the hearing to clarify the evidence presented during the hearing. The Panel, however, is unanimously of the view that this approach is fundamentally inconsistent with the requirements in ICANN’s Bylaws for it to act openly, transparently, fairly and with integrity.

33. As already indicated in this Panel’s August 2014 Declaration, analysis of the propriety of ICANN’s decisions in this case will depend at least in part on evidence about the intentions and conduct of ICANN’s top personnel. Even though the Parties have explicitly agreed that neither will have an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses of the other in this IRP, the Panel is of the view that ICANN should not be allowed to rely on written statements of its top officers attesting to the propriety of their actions and decisions without an opportunity for the Panel and thereafter DCA Trust’s counsel to ask any follow-up questions arising out of the Panel’s questions of ICANN’s witnesses. The same opportunity of course will be given to ICANN to ask questions of Ms. Bekele Eshete, after the Panel has directed its questions to her.

34. The Parties having agreed that there will be no cross-examination of witnesses in this IRP, the procedure for asking witnesses questions at the hearing shall be as follows:

- a) The Panel shall first have an opportunity to ask any witness any questions it deems necessary or appropriate;
- b) Each Party thereafter, shall have an opportunity to ask any follow-up questions the Panel permits them to ask of any witness.

The Panel again reserved its decision on the issue of costs relating to that stage of the proceeding until the hearing of the merits.

39. On 27 April and 4 May 2015, the Panel issued its Procedural Order No. 7 and 8, and on that last date, it held a prehearing conference call with the Parties as required by the ICDR Rules. In Procedural Order No. 8, the Panel set out the order of witness and party presentations agreed upon by the Parties.

40. On 18 May 2015, and in response to ZA Central Registry's (ZACR) request to have two of its representatives along with a representative from the African Union Commission (AUC) attend at the IRP hearing scheduled for 22 and 23 May 2015 in Washington, D.C., the Panel issued its Procedural Order No. 9, denying the requests made by ZACR and AUC to be at the merits hearing of this matter in Washington, D.C.
41. In a letter dated 11 May 2015, ZACR and AUC's legal representative had submitted that both entities had an interest in this matter and it would be mutually beneficial for the IRP to permit them to attend at the hearing in Washington, D.C.
42. ZACR's legal representative had also argued that "allowing for interests of a materially affected party such as ZACR, the successful applicant for the dotAfrica gTLD, as well as broader public interests, to be present enhances the legitimacy of the proceedings and therefore the accountability and transparency of ICANN and its dispute resolution procedures."
43. For the Panel, Article 20 of the ICDR Rules, which applied in this matter, stated that the hearing of this IRP was "private unless the parties agree otherwise". The Parties in this IRP did not consent to the presence of ZACR and AUC. While ICANN indicated that it had no objection to the presence of ZACR and AUC, DCA Trust was not of the same view. Therefore, ZACR and AUC were not permitted to attend.
44. The in-person hearing of the merits of this IRP took place on 22 and 23 May 2015 at the offices of Jones Day LLP in Washington, D.C. All three individuals who had filed witness statements in this IRP, namely Ms. Sophia Bekele Eshete, representative for DCA Trust, Ms. Heather Dryden and Mr. Cherine Chalaby, representatives for ICANN, attended in person and answered questions put to them by the Panel and subsequently by the legal representatives of both Parties. In attendance at the hearing was also Ms. Amy Stathos, Deputy General Counsel of ICANN.
45. The proceedings of the hearing were reported by Ms. Cindy L. Sebo of TransPerfect Legal Solutions, who is a Registered Merit Real-Time Court Reporter.

46. On the last day of the hearing, DCA Trust was asked by the Panel to clearly and explicitly articulate its prayers for relief. In a document entitled Claimant's Final Request for Relief which was signed by the Executive Director of DCA Trust, Ms. Sophia Bekele and marked at the hearing as Hearing Exhibit 4, DCA Trust asked the Panel to:

Declare that the Board violated ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and the Applicant Guidebook (AGB) by:

- Discriminating against DCA and wrongfully assisting the AUC and ZACR to obtain rights to the .AFRICA gTLD;
- Failing to apply ICANN's procedures in a neutral and objective manner, with procedural fairness when it accepted the GAC Objection Advice against DCA; and
- Failing to apply its procedures in a neutral and objective manner, with procedural fairness when it approved the BGC's recommendation not to reconsider the NGPC's acceptance of the GAC Objection Advice against DCA;

And to declare that:

- DCA is the prevailing party in this IRP and, consequently, shall be entitled to its costs in this proceeding; and
- DCA is entitled to such other relief as the Panel may find appropriate under the circumstances described herein.

Recommend, as a result of each of these violations, that:

- ICANN cease all preparations to delegate the .AFRICA gTLD to ZACR;
- ICANN permit DCA's application to proceed through the remainder of the new gTLD application process and be granted a period of no less than 18 months to obtain Government support as set out in the AGB and interpreted by the Geographic Names Panel, or accept that the requirement is satisfied as a result of the endorsement of DCA Trust's application by UNECA; and
- ICANN compensate DCA for the costs it has incurred as a result of ICANN's violations of its Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and AGB.

47. In its response to DCA Trust's Final Request for Relief, ICANN submitted that, "the Panel should find that no action (or inaction) of the ICANN Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws, and accordingly none of DCA's requested relief is appropriate."

48. ICANN also submitted that:

DCA urges that the Panel issue a declaration in its favor...and also asks that the Panel declare that DCA is the prevailing party and entitled to its costs. Although ICANN believes that the evidence does not support the declarations that DCA seeks, ICANN does not object to the form of DCA's requests.

At the bottom of DCA's Final Request for Relief, DCA asks that the Panel recommend that ICANN cease all preparations to delegate the .AFRICA gTLD to ZACR, and that ICANN permit DCA's application to proceed and give DCA no less than 18 additional months from the date of the Panel's declaration to attempt to obtain the requisite support of the countries in Africa. ICANN objects to that appropriateness of these requested recommendations because they are well outside the Panel's authority as set forth in the Bylaws.

Because the Panel's authority is limited to declaring whether the Board's conduct was inconsistent with the Articles or the Bylaws, the Panel should limit its declaration to that question and refrain from recommending how the Board should then proceed in light of the Panel's declaration. Pursuant to Paragraph 12 of that same section of the Bylaws, the Board will consider the Panel's declaration at its next meeting, and if the Panel has declared that the Board's conduct was inconsistent with the Articles or the Bylaws, the Board will have to determine how to act upon the opinion of the Panel.

By way of example only, if the Panel somehow found that the unanimous NGPC vote on 4 June 2013 was not properly taken, the Board might determine that the vote from that meeting should be set aside and that the NGPC should consider the issue anew. Likewise, if the Panel were to determine that the NGPC did not adequately consider the GAC advice at [the] 4 June 2013 meeting, the Board might require that the NGPC reconsider the GAC advice.

In all events, the Bylaws mandate that the Board has the responsibility of fashioning the appropriate remedy once the Panel has declared whether or not it thinks the Board's conduct was inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The Bylaws do not provide the Panel with the authority to make any recommendations or declarations in this respect.

49. In response to ICANN's submissions above, on 15 June 2015, DCA Trust advanced that the Panel had already ruled that its declaration on the merits will be binding on the Parties and that nothing in ICANN's Bylaws, the Supplementary Procedures or the ICDR Rules applicable in these proceedings prohibits the Panel from making a recommendation to the ICANN Board of Directors regarding an appropriate remedy. DCA Trust also submitted that:

According to ICANN's Bylaws, the Independent Review Process is designed to provide a remedy for "any" person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board. Further, "in order to be materially affected, the person must suffer injury or harm that is directly and causally connected to the Board's alleged violation of the Bylaws or the Articles of Incorporation. Indeed, the ICANN New gTLD Program Committee, operating under the delegated authority of the ICANN Board, itself suggested that DCA could seek relief through ICANN's accountability mechanisms or, in other words, the Reconsideration process and the Independent Review Process. If the IRP mechanism – the mechanism of last resort for gTLD applicants – is intended to provide a remedy for a claimant materially injured or harmed by Board action or inaction, and it serves as the only alternative to litigation, then naturally the IRP Panel may recommend how the ICANN Board might fashion a remedy to redress such injury or harm.

50. On 25 June 2015, the Panel issued its Procedural Order No. 10, directing the Parties to by 1 July 2015 simultaneously file their detailed submissions on costs and their allocation in these proceedings.
51. The additional factual background and reasons in the above decisions, procedural orders and declarations rendered by the Panel are hereby adopted and incorporated by reference in this Final Declaration.
52. On 1 and 2 July 2015, the Parties filed their respective positions and submissions on costs.

II. BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE PARTIES' POSITIONS ON THE MERITS & REQUEST FOR RELIEF

53. According to DCA Trust and as elaborated on in its Memorial on Merits dated 3 November 2014, the central dispute between it and ICANN in this IRP may be summarized as follows:

32. By preventing DCA'S application from proceeding through the new gTLD review process and by coordinating with the AUC and others to ensure that the AUC obtained the rights to .AFRICA, ICANN breached its obligations of independence, transparency and due process contained in its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, including its obligation to conduct itself consistent with its duty of good faith under relevant principles of international law.

54. According to DCA Trust, among other things, "instead of functioning as a disinterested regulator of a fair and transparent gTLD application process, ICANN used its authority and oversight over that process to assist ZACR and to eliminate its only competitor, DCA, from the process."
55. DCA Trust also advanced that, "as a result, ICANN deprived DCA of the right to compete for .AFRICA in accordance with the rules ICANN established for the new gTLD program, in breach of the Applicant Guidebook ("AGB") and ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws."

56. In its 3 December 2014 Response to DCA's Memorial on the Merits, among other things, ICANN submitted that, "ICANN's conduct with respect to DCA's application for .AFRICA was fully consistent with ICANN's Bylaws, its Articles of Incorporation and the Applicant Guidebook. ICANN also pleaded that it acted through open and transparent processes, evaluated DCA's application for .AFRICA in accordance with the procedures set forth in the Guidebook, and followed the procedures set forth in its Bylaws in evaluating DCA's Request for Reconsideration."
57. ICANN advanced that, "DCA is using this IRP as a mean to challenge the right of African countries to support a specific (and competing) application for .AFRICA, and to rewrite the Guidebook."
58. ICANN also added that, "ICANN provided assistance to those who requested, cooperated with governmental authorities, and respected the consensus advice issued by the GAC, which speaks on behalf of the governments of the world."
59. In its Final Request for Relief filed on 23 May 2015, DCA Trust asked this Panel to:
  1. Declare that the Board violated ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and the Applicant Guidebook (AGB);
  2. Declare that DCA Trust is the prevailing party in this IRP and, consequently entitled to its costs in this proceeding; and
  3. Recommend as a result of the Board violations a course of action for the Board to follow going forward.
60. In its response letter of 1 June 2015, ICANN confirmed that it did not object to the form of DCA Trust's requests above, even though it believes that the evidence does not support the declarations that DCA Trust seeks. ICANN did, however, object to the appropriateness of the request for recommendations on the ground that they are outside of the Panel's authority as set forth in the Bylaws.

III. THE ISSUES RAISED AND THE PANEL'S DECISION

61. After carefully considering the Parties' written and oral submissions, perusing the three witness statements filed and hearing viva voce the testimonies of the witnesses at the in-person hearing of this IRP in Washington, D.C., the Panel answers the following four questions put to it as follows:

1. Did the Board act or fail to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook?

Answer: Yes.

2. Can the IRP Panel recommend a course of action for the Board to follow as a consequence of any declaration that the Board acted or failed to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook (AGB)?

Answer: Yes.

3. Who is the prevailing party in this IRP?

Answer: DCA Trust

4. Who is responsible for bearing the costs of this IRP and the cost of the IRP Provider?

Answer: ICANN, in full.

Summary of Panel's Decision

For reasons explained in more detail below, and pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (c) of ICANN's Bylaws, the Panel declares that both the actions and inactions of the Board with respect to the application of DCA Trust relating to the .AFRICA gTLD were inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws of ICANN.

Furthermore, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (d) of ICANN's Bylaws, the Panel recommends that ICANN continue to refrain from delegating the .AFRICA gTLD and permit DCA Trust's application to proceed through the remainder of the new gTLD application process.

Finally, DCA Trust is the prevailing party in this IRP and ICANN is responsible for bearing, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 18 of the Bylaws, Article 11 of Supplementary Procedures and Article 31 of the ICDR Rules, the totality of the costs of this IRP and the totality of the costs of the IRP Provider.

As per the last sentence of Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 18 of the Bylaws, DCA Trust and ICANN shall each bear their own expenses. The Parties shall also each bear their own legal representation fees.

IV. ANALYSIS OF THE ISSUES AND REASONS FOR THE PANEL'S DECISION

1) Did the Board act or fail to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook?

62. Before answering this question, the Panel considers it necessary to quickly examine and address the issue of "standard of review" as referred to by ICANN in its 3 December 2014 Response to DCA's Memorial on the Merits or the "law applicable to these proceedings" as pleaded by DCA Trust in its 3 November 2014 Memorial on the Merits.

63. According to DCA Trust:

30. The version of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and its Bylaws in effect at the time DCA filed its Request for IRP applies to these proceedings. [Articles of Incorporation of Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (21 November 1998) and Bylaws of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (11 April 2013)]. ICANN's agreement with the U.S. Department of Commerce, National Telecommunications & Information Administration ("NTIA"), the "Affirmation of Commitments," is also instructive, as it explains ICANN's obligations in light of its role as regulator of the Domain Name System ("DNS"). The standard of review is a de novo "independent review" of whether the actions of the Board violated the Bylaws, with focus on whether the Board acted without conflict of interest, with due diligence and care, and exercised independent judgment in the best interests of ICANN and its many stakeholders. (Underlining added).

31. All of the obligations enumerated in these documents are to be carried out first in conformity with "relevant principles of international law" and second in conformity with local law. As explained by Dr. Jack Goldsmith in his Expert Report submitted in ICM v. ICANN, the reference to "principles of international law" in ICANN's Articles of Incorporation should be understood to include both customary international law and general principles of law.

64. In response, ICANN submits that:

11. The IRP is a unique process available under ICANN's Bylaws for persons or entities that claim to have been materially and adversely affected by a decision or action of the ICANN Board, but only to the extent that Board action was inconsistent with ICANN's Bylaws or Articles. This IRP Panel is tasked with providing its opinion as to whether the challenged Board actions violated ICANN's Bylaws or Articles. ICANN's Bylaws specifically identify the deferential standard of review that the IRP Panel must apply when evaluating the actions of the ICANN Board, focusing on:

- a. Did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;
- b. Did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
- c. Did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?

12. DCA disregards the plain language of ICANN's Bylaws and relies instead on the IRP Panel's declaration in a prior Independent Review proceeding, ICM v. ICANN. However, ICM was decided in 2010 under a previous version of ICANN's Bylaws. In its declaration, the ICM Panel explicitly noted that ICANN's then-current Bylaws "d[id] not specify or imply that the [IRP] process provided for s[hould] (or s[hould] not) accord deference to the decisions of the ICANN Board." As DCA acknowledges, the version of ICANN's Bylaws that apply to this proceeding are the version as amended in April 2013. The current Bylaws provide for the deferential standard of review set forth above. [Underlining is added]

- 65. For the following reasons, the Panel is of the view that the standard of review is a de novo, objective and independent one examining whether the Board acted or failed to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.
- 66. ICANN is not an ordinary California nonprofit organization. Rather it has a large international purpose and responsibility to coordinate and ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internet's unique identifier systems.
- 67. Indeed, Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation require ICANN to "operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets." ICANN's Bylaws also impose duties on it to act in an open, transparent and fair manner with integrity.
- 68. ICANN's Bylaws (as amended on 11 April 2013) which both Parties explicitly agree that applies to this IRP, reads in relevant parts as follows:

ARTICLE IV: ACCOUNTABILITY AND REVIEW

Section 3. INDEPENDENT REVIEW OF BOARD ACTIONS

1. In addition to the reconsideration process described in Section 2 of this Article, ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

4. Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Process Panel [...], which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The IRP Panel must apply a defined standard of review to the IRP request, focusing on:
  - a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?
  - b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
  - c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?

69. Section 8 of the Supplementary Procedures similarly subject the IRP to the standard of review set out in subparagraphs a., b., and c., above, and add:

If a requestor demonstrates that the ICANN Board did not make a reasonable inquiry to determine it had sufficient facts available, ICANN Board members had a conflict of interest in participating in the decision, or the decision was not an exercise in independent judgment, believed by the ICANN Board to be in the best interests of the company, after taking account of the internet community and the global public interest, the requestor will have established proper grounds for review.

70. In the Panel's view, Article IV, Section 3, and Paragraph 4 of ICANN's Bylaws (reproduced above) – the Independent Review Process – was designed and set up to offer the Internet community, a de novo, objective and independent accountability process that would ensure that ICANN acted in a manner consistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.
71. Both ICANN's Bylaws and the Supplementary Rules require an IRP Panel to examine and decide whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. As ICANN's Bylaws explicitly put it, an IRP Panel is "charged with comparing contested actions of the Board [...], and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.

72. The IRP is the only independent third party process that allows review of board actions to ensure their consistency with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws. As already explained in this Panel’s 14 August 2014 Declaration on the IRP Procedure (“August 2014 Declaration”), the avenues of accountability for applicants that have disputes with ICANN do not include resort to the courts. Applications for gTLD delegations are governed by ICANN’s Guidebook, which provides that applicants waive all right to resort to the courts:

Applicant hereby releases ICANN [...] from any and all claims that arise out of, are based upon, or are in any way related to, any action or failure to act by ICANN [...] in connection with ICANN’s review of this application, investigation, or verification, any characterization or description of applicant or the information in this application, any withdrawal of this application or the decision by ICANN to recommend or not to recommend, the approval of applicant’s gTLD application. APPLICANT AGREES NOT TO CHALLENGE, IN COURT OR ANY OTHER JUDICIAL FORA, ANY FINAL DECISION MADE BY ICANN WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION, AND IRREVOCABLY WAIVES ANY RIGHT TO SUE OR PROCEED IN COURT OR ANY OTHER JUDICIAL FORA ON THE BASIS OF ANY OTHER LEGAL CLAIM AGAINST ICANN ON THE BASIS OF ANY OTHER LEGAL CLAIM.

73. Thus, assuming that the foregoing waiver of any and all judicial remedies is valid and enforceable, then the only and ultimate “accountability” remedy for an applicant is the IRP.
74. As previously decided by this Panel, such accountability requires an organization to explain or give reasons for its activities, accept responsibility for them and to disclose the results in a transparent manner.
75. Such accountability also requires, to use the words of the IRP Panel in the Booking.com B.V. v. ICANN (ICDR Case Number: 50-20-1400-0247), this IRP Panel to “objectively” determine whether or not the Board’s actions are in fact consistent with the Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and Guidebook, which this Panel, like the one in Booking.com “understands as requiring that the Board’s conduct be appraised independently, and without any presumption of correctness.”
76. The Panel therefore concludes that the “standard of review” in this IRP is a de novo, objective and independent one, which does not require any presumption of correctness.
77. With the above in mind, the Panel now turns its mind to whether or not the Board in this IRP acted or failed to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook.

DCA Trust's Position

78. In its 3 November 2014 Memorial on the Merits, DCA Trust criticizes ICANN for variety of shortcomings and breaches relating to the Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and Applicant Guidebook. DCA Trust submits:

32. By preventing DCA's application from proceeding through the new gTLD review process and by coordinating with the AUC and others to ensure that the AUC obtained the rights to .AFRICA, ICANN breached its obligations of independence, transparency and due process contained in its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, including its obligation to conduct itself consistent with its duty of good faith under relevant principles of international law.

79. DCA Trust also pleads that ICANN breached its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws by discriminating against DCA Trust and failing to permit competition for the .AFRICA gTLD, ICANN abused its Regulatory authority in its differential treatment of the ZACR and DCA Trust applications, and in contravention of the rules for the New gTLD Program, ICANN colluded with AUC to ensure that the AUC would obtain control over .AFRICA.

80. According to DCA Trust:

34. ICANN discriminated against DCA and abused its regulatory authority over new gTLDs by treating it differently from other new gTLD applicants without justification or any rational basis— particularly relative to DCA's competitor ZACR—and by applying ICANN's policies in an unpredictable and inconsistent manner so as to favor DCA's competitor for .AFRICA. ICANN staff repeatedly disparaged DCA and portrayed it as an illegitimate bidder for .AFRICA, and the Board failed to stop the discriminatory treatment despite protests from DCA.

35. Moreover, ICANN staff Redacted to ensure that ZACR, but not DCA, would be able to pass the GNP evaluation, even going so far as to Redacted

While ICANN staff purported to hold DCA to the strict geographic support requirement set forth in the AGB, once DCA was removed from contention for .AFRICA, ICANN staff immediately bypassed these very same rules in order to allow ZACR's application to pass the GNP evaluation. After DCA's application was pulled from processing on 7 June 2013, ICANN staff Redacted

Redacted This was a complete change of policy for ICANN, which had insisted (until DCA's application was no longer being considered) that the AUC endorsement was not material to the geographic requirement.

36 However Redacted Redacted Redacted ICANN staff then took the remarkable step of Redacted

Redacted

37. In its Response to the GAC Advice rendered against its application, DCA raised concerns that the two .AFRICA applications had been treated differently, though at the time it had no idea of just how far ICANN was going or would go to push ZACR's application through the process. Apparently the NGPC failed to make any inquiry into those allegations. .AFRICA was discussed at one meeting only, and there is no rationale listed for the NGPC's decision in the "Approved Resolutions" for the 4 June 2013 meeting. An adequate inquiry into ICANN staff's treatment of DCA's and ZACR's application—even simply asking the Director of gTLD Operations whether there was any merit to DCA's concerns—would have revealed a pattern of discriminatory behavior against DCA and special treatment by both ICANN staff and the ICANN Board in favor of ZACR's application.

38. In all of these acts and omissions, ICANN breached the AGB and its own Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, which require it to act in good faith, avoid discriminating against any one party, and ensure open, accurate and unbiased application of its policies. Furthermore, ICANN breached principles of international law by failing to exercise its authority over the application process in good faith and committing an abuse of right by Redacted

Redacted ZACR to pass.
Finally, the Board's failure to inquire into the actions of its staff, even when on notice of the myriad of discriminatory actions, violates its obligation to comply with its Bylaws with appropriate care and diligence.

81. DCA Trust submits that the NGPC breached ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws by failing to apply ICANN's Procedures in a neutral and objective manner with procedural fairness, when it accepted the GAC Objection Advice against DCA Trust, the NGPC should have investigated questions about the GAC Objection Advice being obtained through consensus, and the NGPC should have consulted with an independent expert about the GAC advice given that the AUC used the GAC to circumvent the AGB's community objection procedures.

82. According to DCA Trust:

44. The decision of the NGPC, acting pursuant to the delegated authority of the ICANN Board, to accept the purported "consensus" GAC Objection Advice, violated ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Article III § 1 of its Bylaws, requiring transparency, consistency and fairness. ICANN ignored the serious issues raised by DCA and others with respect to the rendering and consideration of the GAC Objection Advice, breaching its obligation to operate “to the maximum extent possible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness.” It also breaches ICANN’s obligation under Article 4 of its Articles of Incorporation to abide by principles of international law, including good faith application of rules and regulations and the prohibition on the abuse of rights.

45. The NGPC gave undue deference to the GAC and failed to investigate the serious procedural irregularities and conflicts of interest raised by DCA and others relating to the GAC’s Objection Advice on .AFRICA. ICANN had a duty under principles of international law to exercise good faith and due diligence in evaluating the GAC advice rather than accepting it wholesale and without question, despite having notice of the irregular manner in which the advice was rendered. Importantly, ICANN was well aware that the AUC was using the GAC to effectively reserve .AFRICA for itself, pursuant to ICANN’s own advice that it should use the GAC for that purpose and contrary to the New gTLD Program objective of enhancing competition for TLDs. The AUC’s very presence on the GAC as a member rather than an observer demonstrates the extraordinary lengths ICANN took to ensure that the AUC was able to reserve .AFRICA for its own use notwithstanding the new gTLD application process then underway.

46. The ICANN Board and staff members had actual knowledge of information calling into question the notion that there was a consensus among the GAC members to issue the advice against DCA’s application, prohibiting the application of the rule in the AGB concerning consensus advice (which creates a “strong presumption” for the Board that a particular application “should not proceed” in the gTLD evaluation process).The irregularities leading to the advice against DCA’s application included proposals offered by Alice Munyua, who no longer represented Kenya as a GAC advisor at the time, and the fact that the genuine Kenya GAC advisor expressly refused to endorse the advice. Redacted

Redacted Finally, the ICANN Board knew very well that the AUC might attempt to use the GAC in an anticompetitive manner, since it was ICANN itself that informed the AUC it could use the GAC to achieve that very goal.

47. At a bare minimum, this information put ICANN Board and staff members on notice that further investigation into the rationale and support for the GAC’s decision was necessary. During the very meeting wherein the NGPC accepted the Objection Advice, the NGPC acknowledged that due diligence required a conversation with the GAC, even where the advice was consensus advice. The evidence shows that ICANN simply decided to push through the AUC’s appointed applicant in order to allow the AUC to control .AFRICA, as it had previously requested.

48. Even if the GAC’s Objection Advice could be characterized as “consensus” advice, the NGPC’s failure to consult with an independent expert about the GAC’s Objection Advice was a breach of ICANN’s duty to act to the “maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness.” The AGB specifically provides that when the Board is considering any form of GAC advice, it “may consult with independent experts, such as those designated to hear objections in the New gTLD Dispute Resolution Procedure, in cases where the issues raised in the GAC advice are pertinent to one of the subject matter areas of the objection procedures.”

49. Given the unique circumstances surrounding the applications for .AFRICA—namely that one applicant was the designee of the AUC, which wanted to control .AFRICA without competition— ICANN should not have simply accepted GAC Objection Advice, proposed and pushed through by the AUC. If it was in doubt as to how to handle GAC advice sponsored by DCA’s only competitor for .AFRICA, it could have and should have consulted a third-party expert in order to obtain appropriate guidance. Its failure to do so was, at a minimum, a breach of ICANN’s duty of good faith and the prohibition on abuse of rights under international law. In addition, in light of the multiple warning signs identified by DCA in its Response to the GAC Objection Advice and its multiple complaints to the Board, failure to consult an independent expert was certainly a breach of the Board’s duty to ensure its fair and transparent application of its policies and its duty to promote and protect competition.

83. DCA Trust also submits that the NGPC breached ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws by failing to apply its procedures in a neutral and objective manner, with procedural fairness, when it approved the BGC’s recommendation not to reconsider the NGPC’s acceptance of the GAC Objection Advice against DCA.

84. According to DCA Trust:

50. Not only did the NGPC breach ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and its Bylaws by accepting the GAC’s Objection Advice, but the NGPC also breached ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and its Bylaws by approving the BGC’s recommendation not to reconsider the NGPC’s earlier decision to accept the GAC Objection Advice. Not surprisingly, the NGPC concluded that its earlier decision should not be reconsidered.

51. First, the NGPC’s decision not to review its own acceptance of the GAC Objection Advice lacks procedural fairness, because the NGPC literally reviewed its own decision to accept the Objection Advice. It is a well-established general principle of international law that a party cannot be the judge of its own cause. No independent viewpoint entered into the process. In addition, although Mr. Silber recused himself from the vote on .AFRICA, he remained present for the entire discussion of .AFRICA, and Mr. Disspain apparently concluded that he did not feel conflicted, so both participated in the discussion and Mr. Disspain voted on DCA’s RFR.

52. Second, the participation of the BGC did not provide an independent intervention into the NGPC’s decision-making process, because the BGC is primarily a subset of members of the NGPC. At the time the BGC made its recommendation, the majority of BGC members were also members of the NGPC.

53. Finally, the Board did not exercise due diligence and care in accepting the BGC's recommendation, because the BGC recommendation essentially proffered the NGPC's inadequate diligence in accepting the GAC Objection Advice in the first place, in order to absolve the NGPC of the responsibility to look into any of DCA's grievances in the context of the Request for Review. The basis for the BGC's recommendation to deny was that DCA did not state proper grounds for reconsideration, because failure to follow correct procedure is not a ground for reconsideration, and DCA did not identify the actual information an independent expert would have provided, had the NGPC consulted one. Thus, the BGC essentially found that the NGPC did not fail to take account of material information, because the NGPC did not have before it the material information that would have been provided by an independent expert's viewpoint. The BGC even claimed that if DCA had wanted the NGPC to exercise due diligence and consult an independent expert, DCA should have made such a suggestion in its Response to the GAC Objection Advice. Applicants should not have to remind the Board to comply with its Bylaws in order for the Board to exercise due diligence and care.

54. ICANN's acts and omissions with respect to the BGC's recommendation constitute further breaches of ICANN's Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation, including its duty to carry out its activities in good faith and to refrain from abusing its position as the regulator of the DNS to favor certain applicants over others.

85. Finally, DCA Trust pleads that:

[As] a result of the Board's breaches of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and general principles of international law, ICANN must halt the process of delegating .AFRICA to ZACR and ZACR should not be permitted to retain the rights to .AFRICA it has procured as a result of the Board's violations. Because ICANN's handling of the new gTLD application process for .AFRICA was so flawed and so deeply influenced by ICANN's relationships with various individuals and organizations purporting to represent "the African community," DCA believes that any chance it may have had to compete for .AFRICA has been irremediably lost and that DCA's application could not receive a fair evaluation even if the process were to be re-set from the beginning. Under the circumstances, DCA submits that ICANN should remove ZACR's application from the process altogether and allow DCA's application to proceed under the rules of the New gTLD Program, allowing DCA up to 18 months to negotiate with African governments to obtain the necessary endorsements so as to enable the delegation and management of the .AFRICA string.

ICANN's Position

86. In its Response to DCA's Memorial on the Merits filed on 3 December 2014 ("ICANN Final Memorial"), ICANN submits that:

2. [...] Pursuant to ICANN's New gTLD Applicant Guidebook ("Guidebook"), applications for strings that represent geographic regions—such as "Africa"—require the support of at least 60% of the respective national governments in the relevant region. As DCA has acknowledged on multiple occasions, including in its Memorial, DCA does not have the requisite governmental support; indeed, DCA now asks that ICANN be required to provide it with eighteen more months to try to gather the support that it was supposed to have on the day it submitted its application in 2012.

3. DCA is using this IRP as a means to challenge the right of African countries to support a specific (and competing) application for .AFRICA, and to rewrite the Guidebook. The Guidebook provides that countries may endorse multiple applications for the same geographic string. However, in this instance, the countries of Africa chose to endorse only the application submitted by ZA Central Registry (“ZACR”) because ZACR prevailed in the Request for Proposal (“RFP”) process coordinated by the African Union Commission (“AUC”), a process that DCA chose to boycott. There was nothing untoward about the AUC’s decision to conduct an RFP process and select ZACR, nor was there anything inappropriate about the African countries’ decision to endorse only ZACR’s application.

4. Subsequently, as they had every right to do, GAC representatives from Africa urged the GAC to issue advice to the ICANN Board that DCA’s application for .AFRICA not proceed (the “GAC Advice”). One or more countries from Africa—or, for that matter, from any continent—present at the relevant GAC meeting could have opposed the issuance of this GAC Advice, yet not a single country stated that it did not want the GAC to issue advice to the ICANN Board that DCA’s application should not proceed. As a result, under the GAC’s rules, the GAC Advice was “consensus” advice.

5. GAC consensus advice against an application for a new gTLD creates a “strong presumption” for ICANN’s Board that the application should not proceed. In accordance with the Guidebook’s procedures, the Board’s New gTLD Program Committee (the “NGPC”) considered the GAC Advice, considered DCA’s response to the GAC Advice, and properly decided to accept the GAC Advice that DCA’s application should not proceed. As ZACR’s application for .AFRICA subsequently passed all evaluation steps, ICANN and ZACR entered into a registry agreement for the operation of .AFRICA. Following this Panel’s emergency declaration, ICANN has thus far elected not to proceed with the delegation of the .AFRICA TLD into the Internet root zone.

6. DCA’s papers contain much mudslinging and many accusations, which frankly do not belong in these proceedings. According to DCA, the entire ICANN community conspired to prevent DCA from being the successful applicant for .AFRICA. However, the actions that DCA views as nefarious were, in fact, fully consistent with the Guidebook. They also were not actions taken by the Board or the NGPC that in any way violated ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles, the only issue that this IRP Panel is tasked with assessing.

87. ICANN submits that the Board properly advised the African Union’s member states of the Guidebook Rules regarding geographic strings, the NGPC did not violate the Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation by accepting the GAC Advice, the AUC and the African GAC members properly supported the .AFRICA applicant chosen through the RFP process, the GAC issued consensus advice opposing DCA's application and the NGPC properly accepted the consensus GAC Advice.

88. According to ICANN:

13. DCA's first purported basis for Independent Review is that ICANN improperly responded to a 21 October 2011 communiqué issued by African ministers in charge of Communication and Information Technologies for their respective countries ("Dakar Communiqué"). In the Dakar Communiqué, the ministers, acting pursuant to the Constitutive Act of the African Union, committed to continued and enhanced participation in ICANN and the GAC, and requested that ICANN's Board take numerous steps aimed at increasing Africa's representation in the ICANN community, including that ICANN "include ['Africa'] and its representation in any other language on the Reserved Names List in order [for those strings] to enjoy [] special legislative protection, so [they could be] managed and operated by the structure that is selected and identified by the African Union."

14. As DCA acknowledges, in response to the request in the Dakar Communiqué that .AFRICA (and related strings) be reserved for a operator of the African ministers' own choosing, ICANN advised that .AFRICA and its related strings could not be placed on the Reserved Names List because ICANN was "not able to take actions that would go outside of the community-established and documented guidelines of the program." Instead, ICANN explained that, pursuant to the Guidebook, "protections exist that w[ould] allow the African Union and its member states to play a prominent role in determining the outcome of any application for these top-level domain name strings."

15. It was completely appropriate for ICANN to point the AU member states to the publicly-stated Guidebook protections for geographic names that were put in place to address precisely the circumstance at issue here—where an application for a string referencing a geographic designation did not appear to have the support of the countries represented by the string. DCA argues that ICANN was giving "instructions . . . as to how to bypass ICANN's own rules," but all ICANN was doing was responding to the Dakar Communiqué by explaining the publicly-available rules that ICANN already had in place. This conduct certainly did not violate ICANN's Bylaws or Articles.

16. In particular, ICANN explained that, pursuant to the Guidebook, "Africa" constitutes a geographic name, and therefore any application for .AFRICA would need: (i) documented support from at least 60% of the national governments in the region; and (ii) no more than one written statement of objection . . . from "relevant governments in the region and/or from public authorities associated with the continent and region." Next, ICANN explained that the Guidebook provides an opportunity for the GAC, whose members include the AU member states, to provide "Early Warnings" to ICANN regarding specific gTLD applications. Finally, ICANN explained that there are four formal objection processes that can be initiated by the public, including the Community Objection process, which may be filed where there is "substantial opposition to the gTLD application from a significant portion of the community to which the gTLD string may be explicitly or implicitly targeted. Each of these explanations was factually accurate and based on publicly available information. Notably, ICANN did not mention the possibility of GAC consensus advice against a particular application (and, of course, such advice could not have occurred if even a single country had voiced its disagreement with that advice during the GAC meeting when DCA's application was discussed).

17. DCA's objection to ICANN's response to the Dakar Communiqué reflects nothing more than DCA's dissatisfaction with the fact that African countries, coordinating themselves through the AUC, opposed DCA's application. However, the African countries had every right to voice that opposition, and ICANN's Board acted properly in informing those countries of the avenues the Guidebook provided them to express that opposition.

18. In another attempt to imply that ICANN improperly coordinated with the AUC, DCA insinuates that the AUC joined the GAC at ICANN's suggestion. ICANN's response to the Dakar Communiqué does not even mention this possibility. Further, in response to DCA's document requests, ICANN searched for communications between ICANN and the AUC relating to the AUC becoming a voting member of the GAC, and the search revealed no such communications. This is not surprising given that ICANN has no involvement in, much less control over, whether the GAC grants to any party voting membership status, including the AUC; that decision is within the sole discretion of the GAC. ICANN's Bylaws provide that membership in the GAC shall be open to "multinational governmental organizations and treaty organizations, on the invitation of the [GAC] through its Chair." In any event, whether the AUC was a voting member of the GAC is irrelevant to DCA's claims. As is explained further below, the AUC alone would not have been able to orchestrate consensus GAC Advice opposing DCA's application.

19. DCA's next alleged basis for Independent Review is that ICANN's NGPC improperly accepted advice from the GAC that DCA's application should not proceed. However, nearly all of DCA's Memorial relates to conduct of the AUC, the countries of the African continent, and the GAC. None of these concerns is properly the subject of an Independent Review proceeding because they do not implicate the conduct of the ICANN Board or the NGPC. The only actual decision that the NGPC made was to accept the GAC Advice that DCA's application for .AFRICA should not proceed, and that decision was undoubtedly correct, as explained below.

20. Although the purpose of this proceeding is to test whether ICANN's Board (or, in this instance, the NGPC) acted in conformance with its Bylaws and Articles, ICANN addresses the conduct of third parties in the next few sections because that additional context demonstrates that the NGPC's decision to accept the GAC Advice—the only decision reviewable here—was appropriate in all aspects.

21. After DCA's application was posted for public comment (as are all new gTLD applications), sixteen African countries—Benin, Burkina Faso, Comoros, Cameroon, Democratic Republic of Congo, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Kenya, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, Senegal, South Africa, Tanzania and Uganda—submitted GAC Early Warnings regarding DCA's application.

Early Warnings are intended to “provid[e] [] applicant[s] with an indication that the[ir] application is seen as potentially sensitive or problematic by one or more governments.” These African countries used the Early Warnings to notify DCA that they had requested the AUC to conduct an RFP for .AFRICA, that ZACR had been selected via that RFP, and that they objected to DCA’s application for .AFRICA. They further notified DCA that they did not believe that DCA had the requisite support of 60% of the countries on the African continent.

22. DCA minimizes the import of these Early Warnings by arguing that they did not involve a “permissible reason” for objecting to DCA’s application. But DCA does not explain how any of these reasons was impermissible, and the Guidebook explicitly states that Early Warnings “may be issued for any reason.” DCA demonstrated the same dismissive attitude towards the legitimate concerns of the sixteen governments that issued Early Warnings by arguing to the ICANN Board and the GAC that the objecting governments had been “teleguided (or manipulated).”

23. In response to these Early Warnings, DCA conceded that it did not have the necessary level of support from African governments and asked the Board to “waive th[e] requirement [that applications for geographic names have the support of the relevant countries] because of the confusing role that was played by the African Union.” DCA did not explain how the AUC’s role was “confusing,” and DCA ignored the fact that, pursuant to the Guidebook, the AUC had every right to promote one applicant over another. The AUC’s decision to promote an applicant other than DCA did not convert the AUC’s role from proper to improper or from clear to confusing.

24. Notably, long before the AUC opposed DCA’s application, DCA itself recognized the AUC’s important role in coordinating continent-wide technology initiatives. In 2009, DCA approached the AUC for its endorsement prior to seeking the support of individual African governments. DCA obtained the AUC’s support at that time, including the AUC’s commitment to “assist[] in the coordination of [the] initiative with African Ministers and Governments.”

25. The AUC, however, then had a change of heart (which it was entitled to do, particularly given that the application window for gTLD applications had not yet opened and would not open for almost two more years). On 7 August 2010, African ministers in charge of Communication and Information Technologies for their respective countries signed the Abuja Declaration. In that declaration, the ministers requested that the AUC coordinate various projects aimed at promoting Information and Communication Technologies projects on the African continent. Among those projects was “set[ting] up the structure and modalities for the [i]mplementation of the DotAfrica Project.”

26. Pursuant to that mandate, the AUC launched an open RFP process, seeking applications from private organizations (including DCA) interested in operating the .AFRICA gTLD. Redacted

Redacted

Redacted—hardly an inappropriate decision (and not a decision of ICANN or its Board). DCA then refused to participate in the RFP process, thereby setting up an inevitable clash with whatever entity the AUC selected. When DCA submitted its gTLD application in 2012 and attached its 2009 endorsement letter from the AUC, DCA knew full well (but did not disclose) that the AUC had retracted its support.

27. In sum, the objecting governments' concerns were the result of DCA's own decision to boycott the AUC's selection process, resulting in the selection of a different applicant, ZACR, for .AFRICA. Instead of addressing those governments' concerns, and instead of obtaining the necessary support of 60% of the countries on the African continent, DCA asked ICANN to re-write the Guidebook in DCA's favor by eliminating the most important feature of any gTLD application related to a geographic region—the support of the countries in that region. ICANN, in accordance with its Bylaws, Articles and Guidebook, properly ignored DCA's request to change the rules for DCA's benefit.

28. At its 10 April 2013 meeting in Beijing, the GAC advised ICANN that DCA's application for .AFRICA should not proceed.<sup>40</sup> As noted earlier, the GAC operates on the basis of consensus: if a single GAC member at the 10 April 2013 meeting (from any continent, not just from Africa) had opposed the advice, the advice would not have been considered "consensus."<sup>41</sup> As such, the fact that the GAC issued consensus GAC Advice against DCA's application shows that not a single country opposed that advice. Most importantly, this included Kenya: Michael Katundu, the GAC Representative for Kenya, and Kenya's only official GAC representative, was present at the 10 April 2013 Beijing meeting and did not oppose the issuance of the consensus GAC Advice.

29. DCA attempts to argue that the GAC Advice was not consensus advice and relies solely on the purported email objection of Sammy Buruchara, Kenya's GAC advisor (as opposed to GAC representative). As a preliminary matter (and as DCA now appears to acknowledge), the GAC's Operating Principles require that votes on GAC advice be made in person. Operating Principle 19 provides that:

If a Member's accredited representative, or alternate representative, is not present at a meeting, then it shall be taken that the Member government or organisation is not represented at that meeting. Any decision made by the GAC without the participation of a Member's accredited representative shall stand and nonetheless be valid.

Similarly, Operating Principle 40 provides:

One third of the representatives of the Current Membership with voting rights shall constitute a quorum at any meeting. A quorum shall only be necessary for any meeting at which a decision or decisions must be made. The GAC may conduct its general business face-to-face or online.

25. DCA argues that Mr. Buruchara objected to the GAC Advice via email, but even if objections could be made via email (which they cannot), Mr. Katundu, Kenya's GAC representative who was in Beijing at the GAC meeting, not Mr. Buruchara, Kenya's GAC advisor, was authorized to speak on Kenya's behalf. Accordingly, under the GAC rules, Mr. Buruchara's email exchanges could not have constituted opposition to the GAC Advice.

26. Redacted
Redacted

Redacted And, tellingly, DCA did not to submit a declaration from Mr. Buruchara, which might have provided context or support for DCA's argument.

27. Redacted

28. Notably, immediately prior to becoming Kenya's GAC advisor, Mr. Buruchara had served as the chairman of DCA's Strategic Advisory Board. But despite Mr. Buruchara's close ties with DCA and with Ms. Bekele, the Kenyan government had: (i) endorsed the Abuja Declaration; (ii) supported the AUC's processes for selecting the proposed registry operator; and (iii) issued an Early Warning objecting to DCA's application.

In other words, the Kenyan government was officially on record as supporting ZACR's application and opposing DCA's application, regardless of what Mr. Buruchara was writing in emails.

29. Redacted

Redacted

Redacted

30. Because DCA did not submit a declaration from Mr. Buruchara (and because Ms. Bekele's declaration is, of course, limited to her own interpretation of email correspondence drafted by others), the Panel is left with a record demonstrating that: (i) Mr.

Buruchara was not authorized by the Kenyan government to oppose the GAC Advice; (ii) Redacted Redacted and (iii) the actual GAC representative from Kenya (Mr. Katundu) attended the 10 April 2013 meeting in Beijing and did not oppose the issuance of the consensus GAC Advice that DCA's application for .AFRICA should not proceed.

31. In short, DCA's primary argument in support of this Independent Review proceeding—that the GAC should not have issued consensus advice against DCA's application—is not supported by any evidence and is, instead, fully contradicted by the evidence. And, of course, Independent Review proceedings do not test whether the GAC's conduct was appropriate (even though in this instance there is no doubt that the GAC appropriately issued consensus advice).

32. As noted above, pursuant to the Guidebook, GAC consensus advice that a particular application should not proceed creates a "strong presumption for the ICANN Board that the application should not be approved." The ICANN Board would have been required to develop a reasoned and well-supported rationale for not accepting the consensus GAC Advice; no such reason existed at the time the NGPC resolved to accept that GAC Advice (5 June 2013), and no such reason has since been revealed. The consensus GAC Advice against DCA's application was issued in the ordinary course, it reflected the sentiment of numerous countries on the African continent, and it was never rescinded.

33. DCA's objection to the Board's acceptance of the GAC Advice is twofold. First, DCA argues that the NGPC failed to investigate DCA's allegation that the GAC advice was not consensus advice. Second, DCA argues that the NGPC should have consulted an independent expert prior to accepting the advice. DCA also argued in its IRP Notice that two NGPC members had conflicts of interest when they voted to accept the GAC Advice, but DCA does not pursue that argument in its Memorial (and the facts again demonstrate that DCA's argument is incorrect).

34. As to the first argument, the Guidebook provides that, when the Board receives GAC advice regarding a particular application, it publishes that advice and notifies the applicant. The applicant is given 21 days from the date of the publication of the advice to submit a response to the Board. Those procedures were followed here. Upon receipt of the GAC Advice, ICANN posted the advice and provided DCA with an opportunity to respond. DCA submitted a lengthy response explaining "[w]hy DCA Trust disagree[d]" with the GAC Advice. A primary theme was that its application had been unfairly blocked by the very countries whose support the Guidebook required DCA to obtain, and that the AUC should not have been allowed to endorse an applicant for .AFRICA. DCA argued that it had been unfairly “victimized” and “muzzled into insignificance” by the “collective power of the governments represented at ICANN,” and that “the issue of government support [should] be made irrelevant in the process so that both contending applications for .Africa would be allowed to move forward . . . .” In other words, DCA was arguing that the AUC’s input was inappropriate, and DCA was requesting that ICANN change the Guidebook requirement regarding governmental support for geographic names in order to accommodate DCA. ICANN’s NGPC reviewed and appropriately rejected DCA’s arguments.

35. One of DCA’s three “supplementary arguments,” beginning on page 10 of its response to the GAC Advice, was that there had been no consensus GAC advice, in part allegedly evidenced by Mr. Buruchara’s (incomplete) email addressed above. DCA, however, chose not to address the fact that: (i) DCA lacked the requisite support of the African governments; (ii) Mr. Buruchara was not the Kenyan GAC representative; (iii) Mr. Buruchara was not at the Beijing meeting; (iv) the government of Kenya had withdrawn any support it may have previously had for DCA’s application; and (iv) the actual Kenyan GAC representative (Mr. Katundu) was at the ICANN meeting in Beijing and did not oppose the issuance of the GAC Advice against DCA’s application for .AFRICA. All of these facts were well known to DCA at the time of its response to the GAC Advice.

36. The NGPC’s resolution accepting the GAC Advice states that the NGPC considered DCA’s response prior to accepting the GAC Advice, and DCA presents no evidence to the contrary. DCA’s disagreement with the NGPC’s decision does not, of course, demonstrate that the NGPC failed to exercise due diligence in determining to accept the consensus GAC Advice.

37. As to DCA’s suggestion that the NGPC should have consulted an independent expert, the Guidebook provides that it is within the Board’s discretion to decide whether to consult with an independent expert:

ICANN will consider the GAC Advice on New gTLDs as soon as practicable. The Board may consult with independent experts, such as those designated to hear objections in the New gTLD Dispute Resolution Procedure, in cases where the issues raised in the GAC advice are pertinent to one of the subject matter areas of the objection procedures.

The NGPC clearly did not violate its Bylaws, Articles or Guidebook in deciding that it did not need to consult any independent expert regarding the GAC Advice. Because DCA’s challenge to the GAC Advice was whether one or more countries actually had opposed the advice, there was no reason for the NGPC to retain an “expert” on that subject, and DCA has never stated what useful information an independent expert possibly could have provided.

89. ICANN also submits that the NGPC properly denied DCA’s request for reconsideration, ICANN’s actions following the acceptance of the GAC Advice are not relevant to the IRP, and in any event they were not improper, the ICANN staff directed the ICC to treat the two

90. According to ICANN:

38. DCA argues that the NGPC improperly denied DCA's Reconsideration Request, which sought reconsideration of the NGPC's acceptance of the GAC Advice. Reconsideration is an accountability mechanism available under ICANN's Bylaws and administered by ICANN's Board Governance Committee ("BGC"). DCA's Reconsideration Request asked that the NGPC's acceptance of the GAC Advice be rescinded and that DCA's application be reinstated. Pursuant to the Bylaws, reconsideration of a Board (or in this case NGPC) action is appropriate only where the NGPC took an action "without consideration of material information" or in "reliance on false or inaccurate material information."

39. In its Reconsideration Request, DCA argued (as it does here) that the NGPC failed to consider material information by failing to consult with an independent expert prior to accepting the GAC Advice. The BGC noted that DCA had not identified any material information that the NGPC had not considered, and that DCA had not identified what advice an independent expert could have provided to the NGPC or how such advice might have altered the NGPC's decision to accept the GAC Advice. The BGC further noted that, as discussed above, the Guidebook is clear that the decision to consult an independent expert is at the discretion of the NGPC.

40. DCA does not identify any Bylaws or Articles provision that the NGPC violated in denying the Reconsideration Request. Instead, DCA simply disagrees with the NGPC's determination that DCA had not identified any material information on which the NGPC failed to rely. That disagreement is not a proper basis for a Reconsideration Request or an IRP. DCA also argues (again without citing to the Bylaws or Articles) that, because the NGPC accepted the GAC Advice, the NGPC could not properly consider DCA's Reconsideration Request. In fact, the DCA's Reconsideration Request was handled exactly in the manner prescribed by ICANN's Bylaws: the BGC—a separate Board committee charged with considering Reconsideration Requests—reviewed the material and provided a recommendation to the NGPC. The NGPC then reviewed the BGC's recommendation and voted to accept it. In short, the various Board committees conducted themselves exactly as ICANN's Bylaws require.

41. The NGPC accepted the GAC Advice on 4 June 2013. As a result, DCA's application for .AFRICA did not proceed. In its Memorial, DCA attempts to cast aspersions on ICANN's evaluation of ZACR's application, but that evaluation has no bearing on whether the NGPC acted consistently with its Bylaws and Articles in handling the GAC advice related to DCA's application. Indeed, the evaluation of ZACR's application did not involve any action by ICANN's Board (or NGPC), and is therefore not a proper basis for Independent Review. Although the actions of ICANN's staff are not relevant to this proceeding, ICANN addresses DCA's allegations for the sake of thoroughness and because the record demonstrates that ZACR's application was evaluated fully in conformance with the Guidebook requirements.

42. DCA alleges that “ICANN staff worked with [the ICC] to ensure that ZACR, but not DCA, would be able to pass the GNP evaluation.” DCA’s argument is based on false and unsupported characterizations of the ICC’s evaluation of the two .AFRICA applications.

43. First, DCA claims (without relevant citation) that ICANN determined that

In light of these specific requirements, the Guidebook even includes a sample letter of support.

paints this cooperation as nefarious, but there was absolutely nothing wrong Redacted

Redacted which ICANN would have provided, had the AUC been supporting DCA instead of ZACR.

91. Finally, ICANN submits:

50. ICANN's conduct with respect to DCA's application for .AFRICA was fully consistent with ICANN's Bylaws, its Articles of Incorporation and the Applicant Guidebook. ICANN acted through open and transparent processes, evaluated DCA's application for .AFRICA in accordance with the procedures set forth in the Guidebook, and followed the procedures set forth in its Bylaws in evaluating DCA's Request for Reconsideration. ICANN provided assistance to those who requested, cooperated with governmental authorities, and respected the consensus advice issued by the GAC, which speaks on behalf of the governments of the world.

51. DCA knew, as did all applicants for new gTLDs, that some of the applications would be rejected. There can only be one registry operator for each gTLD string, and in the case of strings that relate to geographic regions, no application can succeed without the significant support of the countries in that region. There is no justification whatsoever for DCA's repeated urging that the support (or lack thereof) of the countries on the African continent be made irrelevant to the process.

52. Ultimately, the majority of the countries in Africa chose to support another application for the .AFRICA gTLD, and decided to oppose DCA's application. At a critical time, no country stood up to defend DCA's application. These countries—and the AUC— had every right to take a stand and to support the applicant of their choice. In this instance, that choice resulted in the GAC issuing consensus advice, which the GAC had every right to do. Nothing in ICANN's Bylaws or Articles, or in the Guidebook, required ICANN to challenge that decision, to ignore that decision, or to change the rules so that the input of the AUC, much less the GAC, would become irrelevant. To the contrary, the AUC's role with respect to the African community is critical, and it was DCA's decision to pursue a path at odds with the AUC that placed its application in jeopardy, not anything that ICANN (or ICANN's Board or the NGPC) did. The NGPC did exactly what it was supposed to do in this circumstance, and ICANN urges this IRP Panel to find as such. Such a finding would allow the countries of Africa to soon provide their citizens with what all parties involved believe to be a very important step for Africa – access to .AFRICA on the internet.

The Panel's Decision

92. The Panel in this IRP, has been asked to determine whether, in the case of the application of DCA Trust for the delegation of the .AFRICA top-level domain name in its 2012 General Top-Level Domains (“gTLD”) Internet Expansion Program (the “New gTLD Program”), the Board acted or failed to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook?
93. After reviewing the documentation filed in this IRP, reading the Parties’ respective written submissions, reading the written statements and listening to the testimony of the three witnesses brought forward, listening to the oral presentations of the Parties’ legal representatives at the hearing in Washington, D.C., reading the transcript of the hearing, and deliberating, the Panel is of the unanimous view that certain actions and inactions of the ICANN Board (as described below) with respect to the application of DCA Trust relating to the .AFRICA gTLD were inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws of ICANN.
94. ICANN is bound by its own Articles of Incorporation to act fairly, neutrally, non-discriminatorily and to enable competition. Article 4 of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation sets this out explicitly:
4. The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets. To this effect, the Corporation shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations.
95. ICANN is also bound by its own Bylaws to act and make decisions “neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.”
96. These obligations and others are explicitly set out in a number of provisions in ICANN’s Bylaws:

ARTICLE I: MISSION AND CORE (Council of Registrars) VALUES

Section 2. CORE (Council of Registrars) VALUES

In performing its mission, the following core values should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers):

1. Preserving and enhancing the operational stability, reliability, security, and global interoperability of the Internet.

7. Employing open and transparent policy development mechanisms that (i) promote well-informed decisions based on expert advice, and (ii) ensure that those entities most affected can assist in the policy development process.

8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.

9. Acting with a speed that is responsive to the needs of the Internet while, as part of the decision-making process, obtaining informed input from those entities most affected.

10. Remaining accountable to the Internet community through mechanisms that enhance ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers)'s effectiveness.

11. While remaining rooted in the private sector, recognizing that governments and public authorities are responsible for public policy and duly taking into account governments' or public authorities' recommendations.

These core values are deliberately expressed in very general terms, so that they may provide useful and relevant guidance in the broadest possible range of circumstances. Because they are not narrowly prescriptive, the specific way in which they apply, individually and collectively, to each new situation will necessarily depend on many factors that cannot be fully anticipated or enumerated; and because they are statements of principle rather than practice, situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible. Any ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers) body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand, and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.

ARTICLE II: POWERS

Section 1. GENERAL POWERS

Except as otherwise provided in the Articles of Incorporation or these Bylaws, the powers of ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers) shall be exercised by, and its property controlled and its business and affairs conducted by or under the direction of, the Board.

Section 3. NON-DISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT

ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers) shall not apply its standards, policies, procedures, or practices inequitably or single out any particular party for disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause, such as the promotion of effective competition.

ARTICLE III: TRANSPARENCY

Section 1. PURPOSE

ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers) and its constituent bodies shall operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness. [Underlining and bold is that of the Panel]

97. As set out in Article IV (Accountability and Review) of ICANN's Bylaws, in carrying out its mission as set out in its Bylaws, ICANN should be accountable to the community for operating in a manner that is consistent with these Bylaws and with due regard for the core values set forth in Article I of the Bylaws.
98. As set out in Section 3 (Independent Review of Board Actions) of Article IV, "any person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws may submit a request for independent review of that decision or action. In order to be materially affected, the person must suffer injury or harm that is directly and casually connected to the Board's alleged violation of the Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation, and not as a result of third parties acting in line with the Board's action."
99. In this IRP, among the allegations advanced by DCA Trust against ICANN, is that the ICANN Board, and its constituent body, the GAC, breached their obligation to act transparently and in conformity with procedures that ensured fairness. In particular, DCA Trust criticizes the ICANN Board here, for allowing itself to be guided by the GAC, a body "with apparently no distinct rules, limited public records, fluid definitions of membership and quorums" and unfair procedures in dealing with the issues before it.
100. According to DCA Trust, ICANN itself asserts that the GAC is a "constituent body." The exchange between the Panel and counsel for ICANN at the in-person hearing in Washington, D.C. is a living proof of that point.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

Are you saying we should only look at what the Board does? The reason I'm asking is that your -- the Bylaws say that ICANN and its constituent bodies shall operate, to the maximum extent feasible, in an open and transparent manner. Does the constituent bodies include, I don't know,

GAC or anything? What is "constituent bodies"?

MR. LEVEE:

Yeah. What I'll talk to you about tomorrow in closing when I lay out what an IRP Panel is supposed to address, the Bylaws are very clear. Independent Review Proceedings are for the purpose of testing conduct or inaction of the ICANN Board. They don't apply to the GAC. They don't apply to supporting organizations. They don't apply to Staff.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

So you think that the situation is a -- we shouldn't be looking at what the constituent -- whatever the constituent bodies are, even though that's part of your Bylaws?

MR. LEVEE:

Well, when I say not -- when you say not looking, part of DCA's claims that the GAC did something wrong and that ICANN knew that.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

So is GAC a constituent body?

MR. LEVEE:

It is a constituent body, to be clear --

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

Yeah.

MR. LEVEE:

-- whether -- I don't think an IRP Panel -- if the only thing that happened here was that the GAC did something wrong --

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

Right.

MR. LEVEE:

-- an IRP Panel would not be -- an Independent Review Proceeding is not supposed to address that, whether the GAC did something wrong.

Now, if ICANN knew -- the Board knew that the GAC did something wrong, and that's how they link it, they say, Look, the GAC did something wrong, and ICANN knew it, the Board -- if the Board actually knew it, then we're dealing with Board conduct.

The Board knew that the GAC did not, in fact, issue consensus advice. That's the allegation. So it's fair to look at the GAC's conduct.

101. The Panel is unanimously of the view that the GAC is a constituent body of ICANN. This is not only clear from the above exchange between the Panel and counsel for ICANN, but also from Article XI (Advisory Committees) of ICANN's Bylaws and the Operating Principles of the GAC. Section 1 (General) of Article XI of ICANN's Bylaws states:

The Board may create one or more Advisory Committees in addition to those set forth in this Article. Advisory Committee membership may consist of Directors only, Directors and non-directors, or non-directors only, and may also include non-voting or alternate members. Advisory Committees shall have no legal authority to act for ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers), but shall report their findings and recommendations to the Board.

Section 2, under the heading, Specific Advisory Committees states:

There shall be at least the following Advisory Committees:

1. Governmental Advisory Committee

a. The Governmental Advisory Committee should consider and provide advice on the activities of ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers) as they relate to concerns of governments, particularly matters where there may be an interaction between ICANN (Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers)'s policies and various laws and international agreements or where they may affect public policy issues. [Underlining is that of the Panel]

Section 6 of the preamble of GAC's Operating Principles is also relevant. That Section reads as follows:

The GAC commits itself to implement efficient procedures in support of ICANN and to provide thorough and timely advice and analysis on relevant matters of concern with regard to government and public interests.

102. According to DCA Trust, based on the above, and in particular, Article III (Transparency), Section 1 of ICANN's Bylaws, therefore, the GAC was bound to the transparency and fairness obligations of that provision to "operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness", but as ICANN's own witness, Ms. Heather Dryden acknowledged during the hearing, the GAC did not act with transparency or in a manner designed to insure fairness.

Mr. ALI:

Q. But what was the purpose of the discussion at the Prague meeting with respect to AUC? If there really is no difference or distinction between voting/nonvoting, observer or whatever might be the opposite of observer, or the proper terminology, what was -- what was the point?

THE WITNESS:

A. I didn't say there was no difference. The issue is that there isn't GAC agreement about what are the -- the rights, if you will, of -- of entities like the AUC. And there might be in some limited circumstances, but it's also an extremely sensitive issue. And so not all countries have a shared view about what those -- those entities, like the AUC, should be able to do.

Q. So not all countries share the same view as to what entities, such as the AUC, should be able to do. Is that what you said? I'm sorry. I didn't --

A. Right, because that would only get clarified if there is a circumstance where that link is forced. In our business, we talk about creative ambiguity. We leave things unclear so we don't have conflict.

103. As explained by ICANN in its Closing Presentation at the hearing, ICANN's witness, Ms. Heather Dryden also asserted that the GAC Advice was meaningless until the Board acted upon it. This last point is also clear from examining Article 1, Principle 2 and 5 of ICANN GAC's Operating Principles. Principle 2 states that "the GAC is not a decision making body" and Principle 5 states that "the GAC shall have no legal authority to act for ICANN".

MR. ALI:

Q. I would like to know what it is that you, as the GAC Chair, understand to be the consequences of the actions that the GAC will take --

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

The GAC will take?

MR. ALI:

Q. -- the GAC will take -- the consequences of the actions taken by the GAC, such as consensus advice?

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

There you go.

THE WITNESS:

That isn't my concern as the Chair. It's really for the Board to interpret the outputs coming from the GAC.

104. Ms. Dryden also stated that the GAC made its decision without providing any rationale and primarily based on politics and not on potential violations of national laws and sensitivities.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

So, basically, you're telling us that the GAC takes a decision to object to an applicant, and no reasons, no rationale, no discussion of the concepts that are in the rules?

THE WITNESS:

I'm telling you the GAC did not provide a rationale. And that was not a requirement for issuing a GAC --

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

But you also want to check to see if the countries are following the right -- following the rules, if there are reasons for rejecting this or it falls within the three things that my colleague's talking about.

THE WITNESS:

The practice among governments is that governments can express their view, whatever it may be. And so there's a deference to that.

That's certainly the case here as well.

105. ICANN was bound by its Bylaws to conduct adequate diligence to ensure that it was applying its procedures fairly. Section 1 of Article III of ICANN's Bylaws, require it and its constituent bodies to "operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness. The Board must also as per Article IV, Section 3, Paragraph 4 exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of it.
106. In this case, on 4 June 2013, the NGPC accepted the GAC Objection Advice to stop processing DCA Trust's application. On 1 August 2013, the BGC recommended to the NGPC that it deny DCA Trust's Request for Reconsideration of the NGPC's 4 June 2013 decision, and on 13 August 2013, the NGPC accepted the BGC's recommendation (i.e., the NGPC declined to reconsider its own decision) without any further consideration.
107. In this case, ICANN through the BGC was bound to conduct a meaningful review of the NGPC's decision. According to ICANN's Bylaws, Article IV, Section 2, the Board has designated the Board Governance Committee to review and consider any such Reconsideration Requests. The [BGC] shall have the authority to, among other things, conduct whatever factual investigation is deemed appropriate, and request additional written submissions from the affected party, or from others.

108. Finally, the NGPC was not bound by – nor was it required to give deference to – the decision of the BGC.

109. The above, combined with the fact that DCA Trust was never given any notice or an opportunity in Beijing or elsewhere to make its position known or defend its own interests before the GAC reached consensus on the GAC Objection Advice, and that the Board of ICANN did not take any steps to address this issue, leads this Panel to conclude that both the actions and inactions of the Board with respect to the application of DCA Trust relating to the .AFRICA gTLD were not procedures designed to insure the fairness required by Article III, Sec. 1 above, and are therefore inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws of ICANN.

110. The following excerpt of exchanges between the Panel and one of ICANN's witnesses, Ms. Heather Dryden, the then Chair of the GAC, provides a useful background for the decisions reached in this IRP:

PRESIDENT BARIN:

But be specific in this case. Is that what happened in the .AFRICA case?

THE WITNESS:

The decision was very quick, and --

PRESIDENT BARIN:

But what about the consultations prior? In other words, were -- were you privy to --

THE WITNESS:

No. If -- if colleagues are talking among themselves, then that's not something that the GAC, as a whole, is -- is tracking or -- or involved in. It's really those interested countries that are.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

Understood. But I assume -- I also heard you say, as the Chair, you never want to be surprised with something that comes up. So you are aware of -- or you were aware of exactly what was happening?

THE WITNESS:

No. No. You do want to have a good sense of where the problems are, what's going to come unresolved back to the full GAC meeting, but that's -- that's the extent of it.

And that's the nature of -- of the political process.

Redacted

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

Okay.

THE WITNESS:

-- that question was addressed via having that meeting.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And what's your understanding of what -- what the consequence of that decision is or was when you took it? So what happens from that moment on?

THE WITNESS:

It's conveyed to the Board, so all the results, the agreed language coming out of GAC is conveyed to the Board, as was the case with the communiqué from the Beijing meeting.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And how is that conveyed to the Board?

THE WITNESS:

Well, it's a written document, and usually Support Staff are forwarding it to Board Staff.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

Could you speak a little bit louder? I don't know whether I am tired, but I --

THE WITNESS:

Okay. So as I was saying, the document is conveyed to the Board once it's concluded.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

When you say "the document", are you referring to the communiqué?

THE WITNESS:

Yes.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

Okay. And there are no other documents?

THE WITNESS:

The communiqué --

PRESIDENT BARIN:

In relation to .AFRICA. I'm not interested in any other.

THE WITNESS:

Yes, it's the communiqué.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And it's prepared by your staff? You look at it?

THE WITNESS:

Right --

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And then it's sent over to --

THE WITNESS:

-- right, it's agreed by the GAC in full, the contents.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And then sent over to the Board?

THE WITNESS:

And then sent, yes.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And what happens to that communiqué? Does the Board receive that and say, Ms. Dryden, we have some questions for you on this, or --

THE WITNESS:

Not really. If they have questions for clarification, they can certainly ask that in a meeting. But it is for them to receive that and then interpret it and -- and prepare the Board for discussion or decision.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

Okay. And in this case, you weren't asked any questions or anything?

THE WITNESS:

I don't believe so. I don't recall.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

Any follow-ups, right?

THE WITNESS:

Right.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

And in the subsequent meeting, I guess the issue was tabled. The Board meeting that it was tabled, were you there?

THE WITNESS:

Yes. I don't particularly recall the meeting, but yes.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

Can I turn your attention to Paragraph 5 of your declaration?

Here, you basically repeat what is in the ICANN Guidebook literature, whatever. These are the exact words, actually, that you use in your declaration in terms of why there could be an objection to an applicant -- to a specific applicant. And you use three criteria: problematic, potentially violating national law, and raise sensitivities.

Now, I'd like you to, for us -- for our benefit, to explain precisely, as concrete as you can be, what those three concepts -- how those three concepts translate in the DCA case. Because this must have been discussed in order to get this very quick decision that you are mentioning. So I'd like to understand, you know, because these are the criteria -- these are the three criteria; is that correct?

THE WITNESS:

That is what the witness statement says, but the link to the GAC and the role that I played in terms of the GAC discussion did not involve me interpreting those three things. In fact, the GAC did not provide rationale for the consensus objection.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

No.

But, I mean, look, the GAC is taking a decision which -- very quickly -- I'm using your words, "very quickly" -- erases years and years and years of work, a lot of effort that have been put by a single applicant. And the way I understand the rules is that the -- the GAC advice -- consensus advice against that applicant are -- is based on those three criteria. Am I wrong in that analysis?

THE WITNESS:

I'm saying that the GAC did not identify a rationale for those governments that put forward a string or an application for consensus objection. They might have identified their reasons, but there was not GAC agreement about those reasons or -- or -- or -- or rationale for that. We had some discussion earlier about Early Warnings. So Early Warnings were issued by individual countries, and they indicated their rationale. But, again, that's not a GAC view.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

So, basically, you're telling us that the GAC takes a decision to object to an applicant, and no reasons, no rationale, no discussion of the concepts that are in the rules?

THE WITNESS:

I'm telling you the GAC did not provide a rationale. And that was not a requirement for issuing a GAC --

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

But you also want to check to see if the countries are following the right -- following the rules, if there are reasons for rejecting this or it falls within the three things that my colleague's talking about.

THE WITNESS:

The practice among governments is that governments can express their view, whatever it may be. And so there's [...] deference to that. That's certainly the case here as well. The -- if a country tells -- tells the GAC or says it has a concern, that's not really something that -- that's evaluated, in the sense you mean, by the other governments. That's not the way governments work with each other.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

So you don't go into the reasons at all with them?

THE WITNESS:

To issue a consensus objection, no.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

Okay. ---

[...]

PRESIDENT BARIN:

I have one question for you. We spent, now, a bit of time or a considerable amount of time talking to you about the process, or the procedure leading to the consensus decision.

Can you tell me what your understanding is of why the GAC consensus objection was made finally?

But in terms of the .AFRICA, the decision -- the issue came up, the agenda -- the issue came up, and you made a decision, correct?

THE WITNESS:

The GAC made a decision.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

Right. When I say "you", I mean the GAC.

Do you know -- are you able to express to us what your understanding of the substance behind that decision was? I mean, in other words, we've spent a bit of time dealing with the process.

Can you tell us why the decision happened?

THE WITNESS:

The sum of the GAC's advice is reflected in its written advice in the communiqué. That is the view to GAC. That's -- that's --

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

I just want to come back to the point that I was making earlier. To your Paragraph 5, you said -- you answered to me saying that is my declaration, but it was not exactly what's going on. Now, we are here to -- at least the way I understand the Panel's mandate, to make sure that the rules have been obeyed by, basically. I'm synthesizing. So I don't understand how, as the Chair of the GAC, you can tell us that, basically, the rules do not matter -- again, I'm rephrasing what you said, but I'd like to give you another opportunity to explain to us why you are mentioning those criteria in your written declaration, but, now, you're telling us this doesn't matter.

If you want to read again what you wrote, or supposedly wrote, it's Paragraph 5.

THE WITNESS:

I don't need to read again my declaration. Thank you. The header for the GAC's discussions throughout was to refer to strings or applications that were controversial or sensitive. That's very broad. And –

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

I'm sorry. You say the rules say problematic, potentially violate national law, raise sensitivities. These are precise concepts.

THE WITNESS:

Problematic, violate national law -- there are a lot of laws -- and sensitivities does strike me as being quite broad.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

Okay. So we are left with what? No rules?

THE WITNESS:

No rationale with the consensus objections.

That's the -- the effect.

ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:

I'm done.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

I'm done.

PRESIDENT BARIN:

So am I.

111. The Panel understands that the GAC provides advice to the ICANN Board on matters of public policy, especially in cases where ICANN activities and policies may interact with national laws or international agreements. The Panel also understands that GAC advice is developed through consensus among member nations. Finally, the Panel understands that although the ICANN Board is required to consider GAC advice and recommendations, it is not obligated to follow those recommendations.

112. Paragraph IV of ICANN’s Beijing, People’s Republic of China 11 April 2013 Communiqué [Exhibit C-43] under the heading “GAC Advice to the ICANN Board” states:

IV. GAC Advice to the ICANN Board

1. New gTLDs

a. GAC Objections to the Specific Applications

i. The GAC Advises the ICANN Board that:

i. The GAC has reached consensus on GAC Objection Advice according to Module 3.1 part I of the Applicant Guidebook on the following applications:

1. The application for .africa (Application number 1-1165-42560)

Footnote 3 to Paragraph IV.1. (a)(i)(i) above in the original text adds, “Module 3.1: The GAC advises ICANN that it is the consensus of the GAC that a particular application should not proceed. This will create a strong presumption for the ICANN Board that the application should not be approved.” A similar statement in this regard can be found in paragraph 5 of Ms. Dryden’s 7 February 2014 witness statement.

113. In light of the clear “Transparency” obligation provisions found in ICANN’s Bylaws, the Panel would have expected the ICANN Board to, at a minimum, investigate the matter further before rejecting DCA Trust’s application.

114. The Panel would have had a similar expectation with respect to the NGPC Response to the GAC Advice regarding .AFRICA which was expressed in ANNEX 1 to NGPC Resolution No. 2013.06.04.NG01 [Exhibit C-45]. In that document, in response to DCA Trust’s application, the NGPC stipulated:

The NGPC accepts this advice. The AGB provides that “if GAC advised ICANN that it is the consensus of the GAC that a particular application should not proceed. This will create a strong presumption for the ICANN Board that the application should not be approved. The NGPC directs staff that pursuant to the GAC advice and Section 3.1 of the Applicant Guidebook, Application number 1-1165-42560 for .africa will not be approved. In accordance with the AGB the applicant may withdraw [...] or seek relief according to ICANN’s accountability mechanisms (see ICANN’s Bylaws, Articles IV and V) subject to the appropriate standing and procedural requirements.

115. Based on the foregoing, after having carefully reviewed the Parties’ written submissions, listened to the testimony of the three witnesses, listened to the oral submissions of the Parties in various telephone conference calls and at the in-person hearing of this IRP in Washington, D.C. on 22 and 23 May 2015, and finally after much deliberation, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (c) of ICANN’s Bylaws, the Panel declares that both the actions and inactions of the Board with respect to the application of DCA Trust relating to the .AFRICA gTLD were inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws of ICANN.

116. As indicated above, there are perhaps a number of other instances, including certain decisions made by ICANN, that did not proceed in the manner and spirit in which they should have under the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws of ICANN.

117. DCA Trust has criticized ICANN for its various actions and decisions throughout this IRP and ICANN has responded to each of these criticisms in detail. However, the Panel, having carefully considered these criticisms and decided that the above is dispositive of this IRP, it does not find it necessary to determine who was right, to what extent and for what reasons in respect to the other criticisms and other alleged shortcomings of the ICANN Board identified by DCA Trust.

2) Can the IRP Panel recommend a course of action for the Board to follow as a consequence of any declaration that the Board acted or failed to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook?

118. In the conclusion of its Memorial on the Merits filed with the Panel on 3 November 2014, DCA Trust submitted that ICANN should remove ZACR’s application from the process altogether and allow DCA’s application to proceed under the rules of the New gTLD Program, allowing DCA up to 18 months to negotiate with African governments to obtain the necessary endorsements so as to enable the delegation and management of the .AFRICA string.

119. In its Final Request for Relief filed with the Panel on 23 May 2015, DCA Trust requested that this Panel recommend to the ICANN Board that it cease all preparations to delegate the .AFRICA gTLD to ZACR and recommend that ICANN permit DCA's application to proceed through the remainder of the new gTLD application process and be granted a period of no less than 18 months to obtain Government support as set out in the AGB and interpreted by the Geographic Names Panel, or accept that the requirement is satisfied as a result of the endorsement of DCA Trust's application by UNECA.

120. DCA Trust also requested that this Panel recommend to ICANN that it compensate DCA Trust for the costs it has incurred as a result of ICANN's violations of its Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws and AGB.

121. In its response to DCA Trust's request for the recommendations set out in DCA Trust's Memorial on the Merits, ICANN submitted that this Panel does not have the authority to grant the affirmative relief that DCA Trust had requested.

122. According to ICANN:

48. DCA's request should be denied in its entirety, including its request for relief. DCA requests that this IRP Panel issue a declaration requiring ICANN to "rescind its contract with ZACR" and to "permit DCA's application to proceed through the remainder of the application process." Acknowledging that it currently lacks the requisite governmental support for its application, DCA also requests that it receive "18 months to negotiate with African governments to obtain the necessary endorsements." In sum, DCA requests not only that this Panel remove DCA's rival for .AFRICA from contention (requiring ICANN to repudiate its contract with ZACR), but also that it rewrite the Guidebook's rules in DCA's favor.

49. IRP Panels do not have authority to award affirmative relief. Rather, an IRP Panel is limited to stating its opinion as to "whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws" and recommending (as this IRP Panel has done previously) that the Board stay any action or decision, or take any interim action until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP Panel. The Board will, of course, give extremely serious consideration to the Panel's recommendations.

123. In its response to DCA Trust's amended request for recommendations filed on 23 May 2015, ICANN argued that because the Panel's authority is limited to declaring whether the Board's conduct was inconsistent with the Articles or the Bylaws, the Panel should limit its declaration to that question and refrain from recommending how the Board should then proceed in light of the Panel's declaration.

124. In response, DCA Trust submitted that according to ICANN's Bylaws, the Independent Review Process is designed to provide a remedy for "any" person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board. Further, "in order to be materially affected, the person must suffer injury or harm that is directly and causally connected to the Board's alleged violation of the Bylaws or the Articles of Incorporation.

125. According to ICANN, "indeed, the ICANN New gTLD Program Committee, operating under the delegated authority of the ICANN Board, itself [suggests] that DCA could seek relief through ICANN's accountability mechanisms or, in other words, the Reconsideration process and the Independent Review Process." Furthermore:

If the IRP mechanism – the mechanism of last resort for gTLD applicants – is intended to provide a remedy for a claimant materially injured or harmed by Board action or inaction, and it serves as the only alternative to litigation, then naturally the IRP Panel may recommend how the ICANN Board might fashion a remedy to redress such injury or harm.

126. After considering the Parties' respective submissions in this regard, the Panel is of the view that it does have the power to recommend a course of action for the Board to follow as a consequence of any declaration that the Board acted or failed to act in a manner inconsistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws or the Applicant Guidebook.

127. Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (d) of ICANN's Bylaws states:

ARTICLE IV: ACCOUNTABILITY AND REVIEW
Section 3. INDEPENDENT REVIEW OF BOARD ACTIONS

11. The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:

d. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP.

128. The Panel finds that both the language and spirit of the above section gives it authority to recommend how the ICANN Board might fashion a remedy to redress injury or harm that is directly related and causally connected to the Board's violation of the Bylaws or the Articles of Incorporation.

129. As DCA Trust correctly points out, with which statement the Panel agrees, "if the IRP mechanism – the mechanism of last resort for gTLD applicants – is intended to provide a remedy for a claimant materially injured or harmed by Board action or inaction, and it serves as the only alternative to litigation, then naturally the IRP Panel may recommend how the ICANN Board might fashion a remedy to redress such injury or harm.”

130. Use of the imperative language in Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (d) of ICANN’s Bylaws, is clearly supportive of this point. That provision clearly states that the IRP Panel has the authority to recommend a course of action until such time as the Board considers the opinion of the IRP and acts upon it.
131. Furthermore, use of the word “opinion”, which means the formal statement by a judicial authority, court, arbitrator or “Panel” of the reasoning and the principles of law used in reaching a decision of a case, is demonstrative of the point that the Panel has the authority to recommend affirmative relief. Otherwise, like in section 7 of the Supplementary Procedures, the last sentence in paragraph 11 would have simply referred to the “declaration of the IRP”. Section 7 under the heading “Interim Measures of Protection” says in part, that an “IRP PANEL may recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the IRP declaration.”
132. The scope of Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (d) of ICANN’s Bylaws is clearly broader than Section 7 of the Supplementary Procedures.
133. Pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (d) of ICANN’s Bylaws, therefore, the Panel recommends that ICANN continue to refrain from delegating the .AFRICA gTLD and permit DCA Trust’s application to proceed through the remainder of the new gTLD application process.

3) Who is the prevailing party in this IRP?

134. In its letter of 1 July 2015, ICANN submits that, “ICANN believes that the Panel should and will determine that ICANN is the prevailing party. Even so, ICANN does not seek in this instance the putative effect that would result if DCA were required to reimburse ICANN for all of the costs that ICANN incurred. This IRP was much longer [than] anticipated (in part due to the passing of one of the panelists last summer), and the Panelists’ fees were far greater than an ordinary IRP, particularly because the Panel elected to conduct a live hearing.”

135.DCA Trust on the other hand, submits that, “should it prevail in this IRP, ICANN should be responsible for all of the costs of this IRP, including the interim measures proceeding.” In particular, DCA Trust writes:

On March 23, 2014, DCA learned via email from a supporter of ZA Central Registry (“ZACR”), DCA’s competitor for .AFRICA, that ZACR would sign a registry agreement with ICANN in three days’ time (March 26) to be the registry operator for .AFRICA. The very same day, we sent a letter on behalf of DCA to ICANN’s counsel asking ICANN to refrain from executing the registry agreement with ZACR in light of the pending IRP proceedings. See DCA’s Request for Emergency Arbitrator and Interim Measures of Protection, Annex I (28 Mar. 2014). Instead, ICANN entered into the registry agreement with ZACR the very next day—two days ahead of schedule. [...] Later that same day, ICANN responded to DCA’s request by treating the execution of the contract as a fait accompli and, for the first time, informed DCA that it would accept the application of Rule 37 of the 2010 [ICDR Rules], which provides for emergency measures of protection, even though ICANN’s Supplementary Procedures for ICANN Independent Review Process expressly provide that Rule 37 does not apply to IRPs. A few days later, on March 28, 2014, DCA filed a Request for Emergency Arbitrator and Interim Measures of Protection with the ICDR. ICANN responded to DCA’s request on April 4, 2014. An emergency arbitrator was appointed by the ICDR; however, the following week, the original panel was fully constituted and the parties’ respective submissions were submitted to the Panel for its review on April 13, 2014. After a teleconference with the parties on April 22 and a telephonic hearing on May 5, the Panel ruled that “ICANN must immediately refrain from any further processing of any application for .AFRICA” during the pendency of the IRP. Decision on Interim Measures of Protection, ¶ 51 (12 May 2014).

136.A review of the various procedural orders, decisions, and declarations in this IRP clearly indicates that DCA Trust prevailed in many of the questions and issues raised.

137.In its letter of 1 July 2015, DCA Trust refers to several instances in which ICANN was not successful in its position before this Panel. According to DCA Trust, the following are some examples, “ICANN’s Request for Partial Reconsideration, ICANN’s request for the Panel to rehear the proceedings, and the evidentiary treatment of ICANN’s written witness testimony in the event it refused to make its witnesses available for questioning during the merits hearing.”

138.The Panel has no doubt, as ICANN writes in its letter of 1 July 2015, that the Parties’ respective positions in this IRP “were asserted in good faith.” According to ICANN, “although those positions were in many instances diametrically opposed, ICANN does not doubt that DCA believed in the credibility of the positions that it took, and

[ICANN believes] that DCA feels the same about the positions ICANN took.”

139. The above said, after reading the Parties’ written submissions concerning the issue of costs and deliberation, the Panel is unanimously of the view that DCA Trust is the prevailing party in this IRP.

4) Who is responsible for bearing the costs of this IRP and the cost of the IRP Provider?

140. DCA Trust submits that ICANN should be responsible for all costs of this IRP, including the interim measures proceeding. Among other arguments, DCA Trust submits:

This is consistent with ICANN’s Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures, which together provide that in ordinary circumstances, the party not prevailing shall be responsible for all costs of the proceeding. Although ICANN’s Supplementary Procedures do not explain what is meant by “all costs of the proceeding,” the ICDR Rules that apply to this IRP provide that “costs” include the following:

- (a) the fees and expenses of the arbitrators;
- (b) the costs of assistance required by the tribunal, including its experts;
- (c) the fees and expenses of the administrator;
- (d) the reasonable costs for legal representation of a successful party; and
- (e) any such costs incurred in connection with an application for interim or emergency relief pursuant to Article 21.

Specifically, these costs include all of the fees and expenses paid and owed to the [ICDR], including the filing fees DCA paid to the ICDR (totaling $4,750), all panelist fees and expenses, including for the emergency arbitrator, incurred between the inception of this IRP and its final resolution, legal costs incurred in the course of the IRP, and all expenses related to conducting the merits hearing (e.g., renting the audiovisual equipment for the hearing, printing hearing materials, shipping hard copies of the exhibits to the members of the Panel).

Although in “extraordinary” circumstances, the Panel may allocate up to half of the costs to the prevailing party, DCA submits that the circumstances of this IRP do not warrant allocating costs to DCA should it prevail. The reasonableness of DCA’s positions, as well as the meaningful contribution this IRP has made to the public dialogue about both ICANN’s accountability mechanisms and the appropriate deference owed by ICANN to its Governmental Advisory Committee, support a full award of costs to

To the best of DCA's knowledge, this IRP was the first to be commenced against ICANN under the new rules, and as a result there was little guidance as to how these proceedings should be conducted. Indeed, at the very outset there was controversy about the applicable version of the Supplemental Rules as well as the form to be filed to initiate a proceeding. From the very outset, ICANN adopted positions on a variety of procedural issues that have increased the costs of these proceedings. In DCA's respectful submission, ICANN's positions throughout these proceedings are inconsistent with ICANN's obligations of transparency and the overall objectives of the IRP process, which is the only independent accountability mechanism available to parties such as DCA.

141. DCA Trust also submits that ICANN's conduct in this IRP increased the duration and expense of this IRP. For example, ICANN failed to appoint a standing panel, it entered into a registry agreement with DCA's competitor for .AFRICA during the pendency of this IRP, thereby forcing DCA Trust to request for interim measures of protection in order to preserve its right to a meaningful remedy, ICANN attempted to appeal declarations of the Panel on procedural matters where no appeal mechanism was provided for under the applicable procedures and rules, and finally, ICANN refused only a couple of months prior to the merits hearing, to make its witnesses available for viva voce questioning at the hearing.

142. ICANN in response submits that, "both the Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures provide that, in the ordinary course, costs shall be allocated to the prevailing party. These costs include the Panel's fees and the ICDR's fees, [they] would also include the costs of the transcript."

143. ICANN explains on the other hand that this case was extraordinary and this Panel should exercise its discretion to have each side bear its own costs as this IRP "was in many senses a first of its kind." According to ICANN, among other things:

This IRP was the first associated with the Board's acceptance of GAC advice that resulted in the blocking of an application for a new gTLD under the new gTLD Program;

This was the first IRP associated with a claim that one or more ICANN Board members had a conflict of interest with a Board vote; and

This was the first (and still only) IRP related to the New gTLD Program that involved a live hearing, with a considerable amount of debate associated with whether to have a hearing.

144. After reading the Parties' written submissions concerning the issue of costs and their allocation, and deliberation, the Panel is unanimous in deciding that DCA Trust is the prevailing party in this IRP and ICANN shall bear, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 18 of the Bylaws, Article 11 of Supplementary Procedures and Article 31 of the ICDR Rules, the totality of the costs of this IRP and the totality of the costs of the IRP Provider.

145. As per the last sentence of Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 18 of the Bylaws, however, DCA Trust and ICANN shall each bear their own expenses, and they shall also each bear their own legal representation fees.

146. For the avoidance of any doubt therefore, the Panel concludes that ICANN shall be responsible for paying the following costs and expenses:

- a) the fees and expenses of the panelists;
- b) the fees and expenses of the administrator, the ICDR;
- c) the fees and expenses of the emergency panelist incurred in connection with the application for interim emergency relief sought pursuant to the Supplementary Procedures and the ICDR Rules; and
- d) the fees and expenses of the reporter associated with the hearing on 22 and 23 May 2015 in Washington, D.C.

147. The above amounts are easily quantifiable and the Parties are invited to cooperate with one another and the ICDR to deal with this part of this Final Declaration.

V. DECLARATION OF THE PANEL

148. Based on the foregoing, after having carefully reviewed the Parties' written submissions, listened to the testimony of the three witness, listened to the oral submissions of the Parties in various telephone conference calls and at the in-person hearing of this IRP in Washington, D.C. on 22 and 23 May 2015, and finally after much deliberation, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (c) of ICANN's Bylaws, the Panel declares that both the actions and inactions of the Board with respect to the application of DCA Trust relating to the .AFRICA gTLD were inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws of ICANN.

149. Furthermore, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 11 (d) of ICANN's Bylaws, the Panel recommends that ICANN continue to refrain from delegating the .AFRICA gTLD and permit DCA Trust's application to proceed through the remainder of the new gTLD application process.

150. The Panel declares DCA Trust to be the prevailing party in this IRP and further declares that ICANN is to bear, pursuant to Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 18 of the Bylaws, Article 11 of Supplementary Procedures and Article 31 of the ICDR Rules, the totality of the costs of this IRP and the totality of the costs of the IRP Provider as follows:

- a) the fees and expenses of the panelists;
- b) the fees and expenses of the administrator, the ICDR;
- c) the fees and expenses of the emergency panelist incurred in connection with the application for interim emergency relief sought pursuant to the Supplementary Procedures and the ICDR Rules; and
- d) the fees and expenses of the reporter associated with the hearing on 22 and 23 May 2015 in Washington, D.C.
- e) As a result of the above, the administrative fees of the ICDR totaling US$4,600 and the Panelists' compensation and expenses totaling US$403,467.08 shall be born entirely by ICANN, therefore, ICANN shall reimburse DCA Trust the sum of US$198,046.04

151. As per the last sentence of Article IV, Section 3, paragraph 18 of the Bylaws, DCA Trust and ICANN shall each bear their own expenses. The Parties shall also each bear their own legal representation fees.

The Panel finally would like to take this opportunity to fondly remember its collaboration with the Hon. Richard C. Neal (Ret. and now Deceased) and to congratulate both Parties' legal teams for their hard work, civility and responsiveness during the entire proceedings. The Panel was extremely impressed with the quality of the written work presented to it and oral advocacy skills of the Parties' legal representatives.

ICM REGISTRY, LLC,

Claimant,

v.

INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES
AND NUMBERS ("ICANN"),

DECLARATION OF THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW PANEL

PART ONE: INTRODUCTION

1. From its beginning in 1965, an exchange over a telephone line between a computer at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a computer in California, to the communications colossus that the Internet has become, the Internet has constituted a transformative technology. Its protocols and domain name system standards and software were invented, perfected, and for some 25 years before the formation of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN), essentially overseen, by a small group of researchers working under contracts financed by agencies of the Government of the United States of America, most notably by the late Professor Jon Postel of the Information Sciences Institute of the University of Southern California and Dr. Vinton Cerf, founder of the Internet Society. Dr. Cerf, later the distinguished leader of ICANN, played a major role in the early development of the Internet and has continued to do so. European research centers also contributed. From the origin of the Internet domain name system in 1980 until the incorporation of ICANN in 1998, a small community of American computer scientists controlled the management of Internet identifiers. However the utility, reach, influence and exponential growth of the Internet quickly became quintessentially international. In 1998, in recognition of that fact, but at the same time determined to keep that management within the private sector rather than to subject it to the ponderous and politicized processes of international governmental control, the U.S. Department of Commerce, which then contracted on behalf of the U.S. Government with the managers of the Internet, transferred operational responsibility over the protocol and domain names system of the Internet to the newly formed Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers ("ICANN").

2. ICANN, according to Article 3 of its Articles of Incorporation of November 21, 1998, is a nonprofit public benefit corporation organized under the California Nonprofit Public Benefit Corporation Law "in recognition of the fact that the Internet is an international network of networks, owned by no single nation, individual or organization..." ICANN is charged with

"promoting the global public interest in the operational stability of the Internet by (i) coordinating the assignment of Internet technical parameters as needed to maintain universal connectivity on the Internet; (ii) performing and overseeing functions related to the coordination of the Internet Protocol ("IP") address space; (iii) performing and overseeing functions related to the coordination of the Internet domain name system ("DNS"), including the development of policies for determining the circumstances under which new top-level domains are added to the DNS root system; (iv) overseeing operation of the authoritative Internet DNS root server system..." (Claimant's Exhibits, hereafter "C", at C-4.)

ICANN was formed as a California corporation apparently because early proposals for it were prepared at the instance of Professor Postel, who lived and worked in Marina del Rey, California, which became the site of ICANN's headquarters.

3. ICANN, Article 4 of its Articles of Incorporation provides,

"shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets. To this effect, the Corporation shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations."

4. ICANN's Bylaws, as amended effective May 29, 2008, in Section 1, define the mission of ICANN as that of coordination of the allocation and assignment

"of the three sets of unique identifiers for the Internet, ...(a) domain names forming a system referred to as "DNS", (b) ...Internet protocol ("IP") addresses and autonomous system ("AS") numbers and (c) Protocol port and parameter numbers". ICANN "coordinates the operation and evolution of the DNS root server system" as well as "policy development reasonably and appropriately related to these technical functions." (C-5.)

5. Section 2 of ICANN's Bylaws provides that, in performing its mission, core values shall apply, among them:

"1. Preserving and enhancing the operational stability, reliability, security, and global interoperability of the Internet.

"2. Respecting the creativity, innovation, and flow of information made possible by the Internet by limiting ICANN's activities to those matters within ICANN's mission requiring or significantly benefiting from global coordination.

"3. To the extent feasible and appropriate, delegating coordination functions to or recognizing the policy role of other responsible entities that reflect the interest of affected parties.

"4. Seeking and supporting broad, informed participation reflecting the functional, geographic, and cultural diversity of the Internet at all levels of policy development and decision-making.

"6. Introducing and promoting competition in the registration of domain names where practicable and beneficial in the public interest.

...

"8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.

"11. While remaining rooted in the private sector, recognizing that governments and public authorities are responsible for public policy and duly taking into account governments' or public authorities' recommendations." (C-5.)

6. The Bylaws provide in Article II that the powers of ICANN shall be exercised and controlled by its Board, whose international composition, representative of various stakeholders, is otherwise detailed in the Bylaws. Article VI, Section 4.1 of the Bylaws provides that "no official of a national government or a multinational entity established by treaty or other agreement between national governments may serve as a Director". They specify that "ICANN shall not apply its standards, policies, procedures, or practices inequitably, or single out any particular party for disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause, such as the promotion of effective competition." ICANN is to operate in an open and transparent manner "and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness" (Article III, Section 1.) In those cases "where the policy action affects public policy concerns," ICANN shall "request the opinion of the Governmental Advisory Committee and take duly into account any advice timely presented by the Governmental Advisory Committee on its own initiative or at the Board's request" (Article III, Section 6).

7. Article IV of the Bylaws, Section 3, provides that: "ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws." Any person materially affected by a decision or action of the Board that he or she asserts "is inconsistent" with those Articles and Bylaws may submit a request for independent review which shall be referred to an Independent Review Panel ("IRP"). That Panel "shall be charged with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws". "The IRP shall be operated by an international arbitration provider appointed from time to time by ICANN...using arbitrators...nominated by that provider." The IRP shall have the authority to "declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or the Bylaws" and "recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP". Section 3 further specifies that declarations of the IRP shall be in writing, based solely on the documentation and arguments of the parties, and shall "specifically designate the prevailing party." The Section concludes by providing that, "Where feasible, the Board shall consider the IRP declaration at the Board's next meeting."

8. The international arbitration provider appointed by ICANN is the International Centre for Dispute Resolution ("ICDR") of the American Arbitration Association. It appointed the members of the instant Independent Review Panel in September 2008. Thereafter exchanges of written pleadings and extensive exhibits took place, followed by five days of oral hearings in Washington, D.C. September 21-25, 2009.

9. Article XI of ICANN's Bylaws provides, inter alia, for a Governmental Advisory Committee ("GAC") to "consider and provide advice on the activities of ICANN as they relate to concerns of governments, particularly matters where there may be an interaction between ICANN's policies and various laws and international agreements or where they may affect public policy issues". It further provides that the Board shall notify the Chair of the GAC in a timely manner of any proposal raising public policy issues. "The advice of the Governmental Advisory Committee on public policy matters shall be duly taken into account, both in the formulation and adoption of policies. In the event that the ICANN Board determines to take an action that is not consistent with the Governmental Advisory Committee advice, it shall so inform the Committee and state the reasons why it decided not to follow that advice. The Governmental Advisory Committee and the ICANN Board will then try, in good faith and in a timely and efficient manner, to find a mutually acceptable solution." If no such solution can be found, the Board will state in its final decision the reasons why the GAC's advice was not followed.

PART TWO: FACTUAL BACKGROUND OF THE DISPUTE

10. The Domain Name System ("DNS"), a hierarchical name system, is at the heart of the Internet. At its summit is the so-called "root", managed by ICANN, although the U.S. Department of Commerce retains the ultimate capacity of implementing decisions of ICANN to insert new top-level domains into the root. The "root zone file" is the list of top-level domains. Top-level domains ("TLDs"), are identified by readable, comprehensible, "user-friendly" addresses, such as ".com", ".org", and ".net". There are "country-code TLDs" (ccTLDs), two letter codes that identify countries, such as .uk (United Kingdom), .jp (Japan), etc. There are generic TLDs ("gTLDs"), which are subdivided into sponsored TLDs ("sTLDs") and unsponsored TLDs ("gTLDs"). An unsponsored TLD operates under policies established by the global Internet community directly through ICANN, while a sponsored TLD is a specialized TLD that has a sponsor representing the narrower community that is most affected by the TLD. The sponsor is delegated, and carries out, policy-formulation responsibilities over matters concerning the TLD. Thus, under the root, top-level domains are divided into gTLDs such as .com, .net, and .info, and sTLDs such as .aero, .coop, and .museum. And there are ccTLDs, such as .fr (France). Second level domains, under the top-level domains, are legion; e.g., Microsoft.com, dassault.fr. While the global network of computers communicate with one another through a decentralized data routing mechanism, the Internet is centralized in its naming and numbering system. This system matches the unique Internet Protocol address of each computer in the world -- a string of numbers -- with a recognizable domain name. Computers around the world can communicate with one another through the Internet because their Internet Protocol addresses uniquely and reliably correlate with domain names.

11. When ICANN was formed in 1998, there were three generic TLDs: .com, .org, and .net. They were complemented by a few limited-use TLDs, .edu, .gov, .mil, and .int. Since its formation, ICANN has endeavored to introduce new TLDs. In 2000, ICANN opened an application process for the introduction of new gTLDs. This initial round was a preliminary effort to test a "proof of concept" in respect of new gTLDs. ICANN received forty-seven applications for both sponsored and unsponsored TLDs.

12. Among them was an application by the Claimant in these proceedings, ICM Registry (then under another ownership), for an unsponsored .XXX TLD, which would responsibly present “adult” entertainment (i.e., pornographic entertainment). ICANN staff recommended that the Board not select .XXX during the “proof of concept” round because “it did not appear to meet unmet needs”, there was “controversy” surrounding the application, and the definition of benefits of .XXX was “poor”. It observed that, “at this early ‘proof of concept’ stage with a limited number of new TLDs contemplated, other proposed TLDs without the controversy of an adult TLD would better serve the goals of this initial introduction of new TLDs.” (C-127, p. 230.) In the event, the ICANN Board authorized ICANN’s President and General Counsel to commence contract negotiations with seven applicants including three sponsored TLDs, .museum, .aero and .coop. Agreements were “subject to further Board approval or ratification.” (Minutes of the Second Annual Meeting of the Board, November 16, 2000, ICANN Exhibit G.)

13. In 2003, the ICANN Board passed resolutions for the introduction of new sponsored TLDs in another Round. The Board resolved that “upon the successful completion of the sTLD selection process, an agreement reflecting the commercial and technical terms shall be negotiated.” (C-78.) It posted a “Request for Proposals” (“RFP”), which included an application form setting out the selection criteria that would be used to evaluate proposals. The RFP’s explanatory notes provided that the sponsorship criteria required “the proposed sTLD [to] address the needs and interest of a ‘clearly defined community’...which can benefit from the establishment of a TLD operating in a policy formulation environment in which the community would participate.” Applicants had to show that the Sponsored TLD Community was (a) “Precisely defined, so it can readily be determined which persons or entities make up that community” and (b) “Comprised of persons that have needs and interests in common but which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community”. (ICANN, New gTLD Program, ICANN Exhibit N.) The sponsorship criteria further required applicants to provide an explanation of the Sponsoring Organization’s policy-formulation procedures. They additionally required the applicant to demonstrate “broad-based support” from the sponsored TLD community. None of the criteria explicitly addressed “morality” issues or the content of websites to be registered in the new sponsored domains.

14. ICANN in 2004 received ten sTLD applications, including that of ICM Registry of March 16, 2004 for a .XXX sTLD. ICM’s application was posted on ICANN’s website. Its application stated that it was to

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] and who are interested in the [REDACTED] [REDACTED] (C-Confidential Exh. B.) The International Foundation for Online Responsibility ("IFFOR"), a Canadian organization whose creation by ICM was in process, was proposed to be ICM's sponsoring organization. The President of ICM Registry, Stuart Lawley, a British entrepreneur, was to explain that the XXX sTLD is a

"significant step towards the goal of protecting children from adult content, and [to] facilitate the efforts of anyone who wishes to identify, filter or avoid adult content. Thus, the presence of ".XXX" in a web address would serve a dual role: both indicating to users that the website contained adult content, thereby allowing users to choose to avoid it, and also indicating to potential adult-entertainment consumers that the websites could be trusted to avoid questionable business practices." (Lawley Witness Statement, para. 15.)

15. ICANN constituted an independent panel of experts (the "Evaluation Panel") to review and recommend those sTLD applications that met the selection criteria. That Panel found that two of the ten applicants met all the selection criteria; that three met some of the criteria; and that four had deficiencies that could not be remedied within the applicant's proposed framework. As for .XXX, the Evaluation Panel found that ICM was among the latter four; it fully met the technical and financial criteria but not some of the sponsorship criteria. The three-member Evaluation Panel, headed by Ms. Elizabeth Williams of Australia, that analyzed sponsorship and community questions did not believe that the .XXX application represented "a clearly defined community"; it found that "the extreme variability of definitions of what constitutes the content which defines this community makes it difficult to establish which content and associated persons or services would be in or out of the community". The Evaluation Panel further found that the lack of cohesion in the community and the planned involvement of child advocates and free expression interest groups would preclude effective formulation of policy for the community; it was unconvinced of sufficient support outside of North America; and "did not agree that the application added new value to the Internet name space". Its critical evaluation of ICM's application concluded that it fell into the category of those "whose deficiencies cannot be remedied with the applicant's proposed framework" (C-110.)

16. Because only two of ten applicants were recommended by the Evaluation Panel, and because the Board remained desirous of expanding the number of sTLDs, the ICANN Board resolved to give the other sTLD applicants further opportunity to address deficiencies found by the Evaluation Panel. ICM Registry responded with an application revised as of December 7, 2004. It noted that the independent teams that evaluated the technical merits and business soundness of ICM's application had unreservedly recommended its approval. It submitted, contrary to the analysis of the Evaluation Panel, that ICM and IFFOR also met the sponsorship criteria. "Nonetheless, the Applicants fully understand that the topic of adult entertainment on the Internet is controversial. The Applicants also understand that the Board might be criticized whether it approves or disapproves the Proposal." (C-127, p. 176.) In accordance with ICANN's practice, ICM's application again was publicly posted on ICANN's website.

17. Following discussion of its application in the Board, ICM was invited to give a presentation to the Board, which it did in April 2005, in Mar del Plata, Argentina. Child protection and free speech advocates were among the representatives of ICM Registry. The Chairman of the Governmental Advisory Committee, Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, was in attendance for part of the meeting as well as other meetings of the Board. ICM offered then and at ICANN meetings in Capetown (December 2004) and Luxembourg (July 2005) to discuss its proposal with the GAC or any of its members, a proposal that was not taken up (C-127, p. 231; C-170, p.2). In a letter of April 3, 2005, the GAC Chairman informed the ICANN President and CEO, Paul Twomey, that: "No GAC members have expressed specific reservations or comments, in the GAC, about applications for sTLDs in the current round." (C-158, p.1.) ICM's Mar del Plata presentation to the ICANN Board included the results of a poll conducted by XBiz in February 2005 of "adult" websites that asked: "What do you think of Internet suffixes (.sex, .xxx) to designate adult sites?" 22% of the responders checked, "A Horrible Idea"; 57% checked, "A Good Idea"; 21% checked, "It's No Big Deal Either Way". ICM, while recognizing that its proposal aroused some opposition in the adult entertainment community, maintained throughout that it fully met the RFP requirement of demonstrating that it had "broad-based support from the community to be represented". (C-45.)

18. The ICANN Board held a special meeting by teleconference on May 3, 2005, the Chairman of the ICANN Board, Dr. Vinton G. Cerf, presiding. The minutes record, in respect of the .XXX sTLD application, that there was broad discussion of whether ICM's application met the RFP criteria, "particularly relating to whether or not there was a 'sponsored community'". It was agreed to "discuss this issue" at the next Board meeting. (C-134.)

19. On June 1, 2005, the Board met by teleconference and after considerable discussion adopted the following resolutions, with a 6-3 vote in favor, 2 abstentions and 4 Board members absent:

“Resolved...the Board authorizes the President and General Counsel to enter into negotiations relating to proposed commercial and technical terms for the .XXX sponsored top-level domain (sTLD) with the applicant.”

“Resolved...if after entering into negotiations with the .XXX sTLD applicant the President and General Counsel are able to negotiate a set of proposed commercial and technical terms for a contractual arrangement, the President shall present such proposed terms to this board, for approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD.” (C-120.)

20. While a few of the other applications that were similarly cleared to enter into negotiations relating to proposed commercial and technical terms, e.g., those of .JOBS, and .MOBI, contained conditions, the foregoing resolutions relating to ICM Registry contained no conditions. The .JOBS resolution, for example, specified that

“the board authorizes the President and General Counsel to enter into negotiations relating to proposed commercial and technical terms for the .JOBS sponsored top-level domain (sTLD) with the applicant. During these negotiations, the board requests that special consideration be taken as to how broad-based policy-making would be created for the sponsored community, and how this sTLD would be differentiated in the name space.”

In contrast, the .XXX resolutions do not refer to further negotiations concerning sponsorship, nor do the resolutions refer to further consideration by the Board of the matter of sponsorship. Upon the successful conclusion of the negotiation, the terms of an agreement with ICM Registry were to be presented to the Board “for approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD”.

21. At the meeting of the Governmental Advisory Committee in Luxembourg July 11-12, 2005, under the chairmanship of Mr. Tarmizi, the foregoing resolutions gave rise to comment. The minutes contain the following summary reports:

"The Netherlands, supported by several members, including Brazil, EC and Egypt, raised the point about what appears to be a change in policy as regards the evaluation for the .xxx TLD.

"On that issue, the Chair stressed that the Board came to a decision after a very difficult and intense debate which has included the moral aspects. He wondered what the GAC could have done in this context.

"Brazil asked clarification about the process to provide GAC advice to the ICANN Board and to consult relevant communities on matter such as the creation of new gTLDs. The general public was likely to assume that GAC had discussed and approved the proposal; otherwise GAC might be perceived as failing to address the matter. This is a public policy issue rather than a moral issue.

"Denmark commented on the fact that the issue of the creation of the .xxx extension should have been presented to the GAC as a public policy issue. EC drew attention to the 2000 Evaluation report on .xxx that had concluded negatively.

"France asked about the methodology to be followed for the evaluation of new gTLDs in future and if an early warning system could be put in place. Egypt wished to clarify whether the issue was the approval by ICANN or the apparent change in policy.

"USA remarked that GAC had several opportunities to raise questions, notably at Working Group level, as the process had been open for several years. In addition there are not currently sufficient resources in the WGI to put sufficient attention to it. We should be working on an adequate methodology for the future. Netherlands commented that the ICANN decision making process was not sufficiently transparent for GAC to know in time when to reach [sic; react] to proposals.

"The Chair thanked the GAC for these comments which will be given to the attention of the ICANN Board." (C-139, p. 3.)

22. There followed a meeting of the GAC with the ICANN Board, at which the following statements are recorded in the summary minutes:

"Netherlands asked about the new criteria to be retained for new TLDs as it seems there was a shift in policy during the evaluation process.

"Mr. Twomey replied that there might be key policy differences due to learning experiences, for example it is now accepted not to put a limit on the number of new TLDs. He also noted that no comments had been received from governments regarding .xxx.

"Dr. Cerf added, taking the example of .xxx that there was a variety of proposals for TLDs before, including for this extension, but this time the way to cope with the selection was different. The proposal this time met the three main criteria, financial, technical and sponsorship. They [sic: There] were doubts expressed about the last criteria [sic] which were discussed extensively and the Board reached a positive decision considering that ICANN should not be involved in content matters.

"France remarked that there might be cases where the TLD string did infer the content matter. Therefore the GAC could be involved if public policies issues are to be raised.

"Dr. Cerf replied that in practice there is no correlation between the TLD string and the content. The TLD system is neutral, although filtering systems could be solutions promoted by governments. However, to the extent the governments do have concerns they relate to the issues across TLDs. Furthermore one could not slip into censorship.

"Chile and Denmark asked about the availability of the evaluation Report for .xxx and wondered if the process was in compliance with the ICANN Bylaws.

"Brazil asserted that content issues are relevant when ICANN is creating a space linked to pornography. He considered the matter as a public policy issue in the Brazilian context and repeated that the outside world would assume that GAC had been fully cognizant of the decision-making process.

"Mr. Twomey referred to the procedure for attention for GAC in the ICANN Bylaws that could be initiated if needed. The bylaws could work both ways: GAC could bring matters to ICANN's attention. Dr. Cerf invited GAC to comment in the context of the ICANN public comments process. Spain suggested that ICANN should formally request GAC advice in such cases.

"The Chair [Dr. Cerf] noted in conclusion that it is not always clear what the public policy issues are and that an early warning mechanism is called for." (C-139, P. 5.)

23. When it came to drafting the GAC Communique, the following further exchanges were summarized:

"Brazil referred to the decision taken for the creation of .xxx and asked if anything could be done at this stage...

"On .xxx, USA thought that it would be very difficult to express some views at this late stage. The process had been public since the beginning, and the matter could have been raised before at Plenary or Working group level...

"Italy would be in favour of inserting the process for the creation of new TLDs in the Communique as GAC failed in some way to examine in good time the current set of proposal [sic] for questions of methodology and lack of resources.

"Malaysia recalled the difficult situation in which governments are faced with the evolution of the DNS system and the ICANN environment. ICANN and GAC should be more responsive to common issues...

"Canada raise [sic] the point of the advisory role of the GAC vis-à-vis ICANN and it would be difficult to go beyond this function for the time being.

"Denmark agreed with Canada but considered that the matter could have been raised before within the framework of the GAC; if necessary issues could be raised directly in Plenary.

"France though [sic] that the matter should be referred to in the Communique. Since ICANN was apparently limiting its consideration to financial, technical and sponsorship aspects, the content aspects should be treated as a problem for the GAC from the point of view of the general public interest."

"The Chair took note of the comments that had been made. He mentioned that the issues of new gTLDs...would be mentioned in the Communique." (C-139, p. 7.)

24. Finally, in respect of "New Top Level Domains"

"...the Chair recalled that members had made comments during the consultation period regarding the .tel and .mobi proposals, but not regarding other sTLD proposals.

"The GAC has requested ICANN to provide the Evaluation Report on the basis of which the application for .xxx was approved. GAC considered that some aspects of content related to top level extensions might give rise of [sic] public policies [sic] issues.

"The Chair confirmed that, having consulted the ICANN Legal Counsel, GAC could still advise ICANN about the .xxx proposal, should it decide to do so. However, no member has yet raised this as an issue for formal comments to be given to ICANN in the Communique." (C-139, p. 13.)

25. The Luxembourg Communique of the GAC as adopted made no express reference to the application of ICM Registry nor to the June 1, 2005 ICANN Board resolutions adopted in response to it. In respect of "New Top Level Domains", the Communique stated:

"The GAC notes from recent experience that the introduction of new TLDs can give rise to significant public policy issues, including content. Accordingly, the GAC welcomes the initiative of ICANN to hold consultations with respect to the implementation of the new Top Level Domains strategy. The GAC looks forward to providing advice to the process." (C-159, p. 1.)

26. Negotiations on commercial and technical terms for a contract between ICANN's General Counsel, John Jeffrey, and the counsel of ICM Registry, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr, in pursuance of the ICANN Board's resolutions of June 1, 2005, progressed smoothly, resulting in the posting in early August 2005 of the First Draft Registry Agreement. It was expected that the Board would vote on the contract at its meeting of August 16, 2005.

27. This expectation was overturned by ICANN's receipt of two letters. On August 11, 2005, Michael D. Gallagher, Assistant Secretary for

Communications and Information of the U.S. Department of Commerce, wrote Dr. Cerf, with a copy to Mr. Twomey, as follows:

"I understand that the Board of Directors of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) is scheduled to consider approval of an agreement with the ICM Registry to operate the .xxx top level domain (TLD) on August 16, 2005. I am writing to urge the Board to ensure that the concerns of all members of the Internet community on this issue have been adequately heard and resolved before the Board takes action on this application.

"Since the ICANN Board voted to negotiate a contract with ICM Registry for the .xxx TLD in June 2005, this issue has garnered widespread public attention and concern outside of the ICANN community. The Department of Commerce has received nearly 6000 letters and emails from individuals expressing concern about the impact of pornography on families and children and opposing the creation of a new top level domain devoted to adult content. We also understand that other countries have significant reservations regarding the creation of a .xxx TLD. I believe that ICANN has also received many of these concerned comments. The volume of correspondence opposed to the creation of a .xxx TLD is unprecedented. Given the extent of the negative reaction, I request that the Board will provide a proper process and adequate additional time for these concerns to be voiced and addressed before any additional action takes place on this issue.

"It is of paramount importance that the Board ensure the best interests of the Internet community as a whole are fully considered as it evaluates the addition to this new top level domain..." (C-162, p. 1.)

28. On August 12, 2005, Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, Chairman, GAC, wrote to the ICANN Board of Directors, in his personal capacity and not on behalf of the GAC, with a copy to the GAC, as follows:

"As you know, the Board is scheduled to consider approval of a contract for a new top level domain intended to be used for adult content...

"You may recall that during the session between the GAC and the Board in Luxembourg that some countries had expressed strong positions to the Board on this issue. In other GAC sessions, a number of other governments also expressed some concern with the potential introduction of this TLD. The views are diverse and wide ranging. Although not necessarily well articulated in Luxembourg, as Chairman, I believe there remains a strong sense of discomfort in the GAC about the TLD, notwithstanding the explanations to date.

“I have been approached by some of these governments and I have advised them that apart from the advice given in relation to the creation of new TLDs in the Luxembourg Communiqué that implicitly refers to the proposed TLD, sovereign governments are also free to write directly to ICANN about their specific concerns.

“In this regard, I would like to bring to the Board’s attention the possibility that several governments will choose to take this course of action. I would like to request that in any further debate that we may have with regard to this TLD that we keep this background in mind.

“Based on the foregoing, I believe that the Board should allow time for additional governmental and public policy concerns to be expressed before reaching a final decision on this TLD.”

29. The volte face in the position of the United States Government evidenced by the letter of Mr. Gallagher appeared to have been stimulated by a cascade of protests by American domestic organizations such as the Family Research Council and Focus on the Family. Thousands of email messages of identical text poured into the Department of Commerce demanding that .XXX be stopped. Copies of messages obtained by ICM under the Freedom of Information Act show that while officials of the Department of Commerce concerned with Internet questions earlier did not oppose and indeed apparently favored ICANN’s approval of the application of ICM, the Department of Commerce was galvanized into opposition by the generated torrent of negative demands, and by representations by leading figures of the so-called “religious right”, such as Jim Dobson, who had influential access to high level officials of the U.S. Administration. There was even indication in the Department of Commerce that, if ICANN were to approve a top level domain for adult material, it would not be entered into the root if the United States Government did not approve (C-165, C-166.) The intervention of the United States came at a singularly delicate juncture, in the run-up to a United Nations sponsored conference on the Internet, the World Summit on the Information Society, which was anticipated to be the forum for concentration of criticism of the continuing influence of the United States over the Internet. The Congressional Quarterly Weekly ran a story entitled, “Web Neutrality vs. Morality” which said: “The flap over .xxx has put ICANN in an almost impossible position. It is facing mounting pressure from within the United States and other countries to reject the domain. But if it goes back on its earlier decision, many countries will see that as evidence of its allegiance to and lack of independence from the U.S. government. 'The politics of this are amazing,' said Cerf. 'We're damned if we do and damned if we don't.' (C-284.)

30. Doubt about the desirability of allocating a top-level domain to ICM Registry, or opposition to so doing, was not confined to the U.S. Department of Commerce, as illustrated by the proceedings at Luxembourg quoted above. A number of other governments also expressed reservations or raised questions about ICM's application on various grounds, including, at a later stage, those of Australia (letter from the Minister for Communications, Information Technology and the Arts of February 28, 2007 expressing Australia's "strong opposition to the creation of a .XXX sTLD"), Canada (comment expressing concern that ICANN may be drawn into becoming a global Internet content regulator, Exhibit DJ) and the United Kingdom (letter of May 4, 2006 stressing the importance of ICM's monitoring all .XXX content from "day one", C-182). The EC expressed the view that consultation with the GAC had been inadequate. The Deputy Director-General of the European Commission on September 16, 2005 wrote Dr. Cerf stating that the June 1, 2005 resolutions were adopted without the benefit of such consultation and added:

"Moreover, while the .xxx TLD raises obvious and predictable public policy issues, the fact that a similar application from the same applicants had been rejected in 2000 (following a negative evaluation) had, not surprisingly, led many GAC representatives to expect that a similar decision would have been reached on this occasion...such a change in approach would benefit from an explanation to the GAC.

"I would therefore ask ICANN to reconsider the decision to proceed with this application until the GAC have had an opportunity to review the evaluation report." (C-172, p. 1.)

31. The State Secretary for Communications and Regional Policy of the Government of Sweden, Jonas Bjelfvenstam, wrote Dr. Twomey a letter carrying the date of November 23, 2005, as follows:

"I have followed recent discussions by the Board of Directors of ...ICANN concerning the proposed top level domain (TLD) .xxx. I appreciate that the Board has deferred further discussions on the subject...taking account of requests from the applicant ICM, as well as the ...GAC Chairman's and the US Department of Commerce's request to allow for additional time for comments by interested parties.

"Sweden strongly supports the ICANN mission and the process making ICANN an organization independent of the US Government. We appreciate the achievements of ICANN in the outstanding technical and innovative development of the Internet, an ICANN exercising open, transparent and multilateral procedures.

"The Swedish line on pornography is that it is not compatible with gender equality goals. The constant exposure of pornography and degrading pictures in our everyday lives normalizes the exploitation of women and children and the pornography industry profits on the documentation.

"A TLD dedicated for pornography might increase the volume of pornography on the Internet at the same time as foreseen advantages with a dedicated TLD might not materialize. These and other comments have been made in the many comments made directly to ICANN through the ICANN web site. There are a considerable number of negative reactions within and outside the Internet community.

"I know that all TLD applications are dealt with in procedures open to everyone for comment. However, in a case like this, where public interests clearly are involved, we feel it could have been appropriate for ICANN to request advice from GAC. Admittedly, GAC could have given advice to ICANN anyway at any point in time in the process and to my knowledge, no GAC members have raised the question before the GAC meeting July 9-12 in Luxembourg. However, we all probably rested assured that ICANN's negative opinion on .xxx, expressed in 2000, would stand.

"From the ICANN decision on June 1, 2005, there was too little time for GAC to have an informed discussion on the subject at its Luxembourg summer meeting. ..

"Therefore we would ask ICANN to postpone conclusive discussions on .xxx until after the upcoming GAC meeting in November 29-30 in Vancouver...In due time before that meeting, it would be helpful if ICANN could present in detail how it means that .xxx fulfils the criteria set in advance..." (C-168, p. 1.)

32. At its meeting by teleconference of September 15, 2005, the Board, "after lengthy discussion involving nearly all of the directors regarding the sponsorship criteria, the application, and additional supplemental materials, and the specific terms of the proposed agreement," adopted a resolution providing that:

"Whereas the ICANN Board has expressed concerns regarding issues relating to the compliance with the proposed .XXX Registry Agreement (including possible proposals for codes of conduct and ongoing obligations regarding potential changes in ownership)...

"Whereas, ICANN has received significant levels of correspondence from the Internet community users over recent weeks, as well as inquiries from a number of governments,

"Resolved...that the ICANN President and General Counsel are directed to discuss possible additional contractual provisions or modifications for inclusion in the XXX Registry Agreement, to ensure that there are effective provisions requiring development and implementation of policies consistent with the principles in the ICM application. Following such additional discussions, the President and General Counsel are requested to return to the board for additional approval, disapproval or advice." (C-119, p. 1.)

33. At the Vancouver meeting of the Board in December 2005, the GAC requested an explanation of the processes that led to the adoption of the Board's resolutions of June 1. Dr. Twomey replied with a lengthy and detailed letter of February 11, 2006. The following extracts are of interest:

"Where an applicant passed all three sets of criteria and there were no other issues associated with the application, the Board was briefed and the application was allowed to move on to the stage of technical and commercial negotiations designed to establish a new sTLD. One application – POST – was in this category. In other cases – where an evaluation team indicated that a set of criteria was not met, or there were other issues to be examined – each applicant was provided an opportunity to submit clarifying or additional documentation before presenting the evaluation panel's recommendation to the Board for a decision on whether the applicant could proceed to the next stage. The other nine applications, including .XXX, were in this category.

"Because of the more subjective nature of the sponsorship/community value issues being reviewed, it was decided to ask the Board to review these issues directly.

"It should be noted that, consistent with Article II, Section 1 of the Bylaws, it is the ICANN Board that has the authority to decide, upon the conclusion of technical and commercial negotiations, whether or not to approve the creation of a new sTLD...Responsibility for resolving issues relating to an applicant's readiness to proceed to technical and commercial negotiations and, subsequently, whether or not to approve delegation of a new sTLD, rests with the Board.

...

"Extensive Review of ICM Application

"On 3 May 2005, the Board held a 'broad discussion...regarding whether or not there was a 'sponsored community' . The Board agreed that it would discuss this issue again at the next Board Meeting.'

"Based on the extensive public comments received, the independent evaluation panel's recommendations, the responses of ICM and the proposed Sponsoring Organization (IFFOR) to those evaluations, ...at its teleconference on June 1, 2005, the Board authorized the President and General Counsel to enter into negotiations relating to proposed commercial and technical terms with ICM. It also requested the President to present any such negotiated agreement to the Board for approval and authorization..." (C-175.)

34. Subsequent draft registry agreements of ICM were produced in response to specific requests of ICANN staff for amendments, to which requests ICM responded positively. In particular, a provision was included stating that all requirements for registration would be "in addition to the obligation to comply with all applicable law[s] and regulation[s]". (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, pp. 128-129.)

35. Just before the Board met in Wellington, New Zealand in March 2006, the GAC convened and, among other matters, discussed the above letter of the

ICANN President of February 11, 2006. Its Communique of March 28 states that the GAC

“does not believe that the February 11 letter provides sufficient detail regarding the rationale for the Board determination that the application [of ICM Registry] had overcome the deficiencies noted in the Evaluation Report. The Board would request a written explanation of the Board decision, particularly with regard to the sponsored community and public interest criteria outlined in the sponsored top level domain selection criteria.

“...ICM promised a range of public interest benefits as part of its bid to operate the .xxx domain. To the GAC’s knowledge, these undertakings have not yet been included as ICM obligations in the proposed .xxx Registry Agreement negotiated with ICANN.”

“The public policy aspects identified by members of the GAC include the degree to which the .xxx application would:

- Take appropriate measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content;

- Support the development of tools and programs to protect vulnerable members of the community;

- Maintain accurate details of registrants and assist law enforcement agencies to identify and contact the owners of particular websites, if need be; and “Without in any way implying an endorsement of the ICM application, the GAC would request confirmation from the Board that any contract currently under negotiation between ICANN and ICM Registry would include enforceable provisions covering all of ICM Registry’s commitments, and such information on the proposed contract being made available to member countries through the GAC.

“Nevertheless without prejudice to the above, several members of the GAC are emphatically opposed from a public policy perspective to the introduction of a .xxx sTLD.”

36. At the Board’s meeting in Wellington of March 31, 2006, a resolution was adopted by which it was:

“Resolved, the President and General Counsel are directed to analyze all publicly received inputs, to continue negotiations with ICM Registry, and to return to the Board with any recommendations regarding amendments to the proposed sTLD registry agreement, particularly to ensure that the TLD sponsor will have in place adequate mechanisms to address any potential registrant violations of the sponsor’s policies.” (C-184, p. 1.)

37. On May 4, 2006, Dr. Twomey sent a further letter to the Chairman and members of the GAC in response to the GAC’s request for information regarding the decision of the ICANN Board to proceed with several sTLD applications, notwithstanding negative reports from one or more evaluation teams. The following extracts are of interest:

“It is important to note that the Board decision as to the .XXX application is still pending. The decision by the ICANN Board during its 1 June 2005 Special Board Meeting reviewed the criteria against the materials supplied and the results of the independent evaluations. ...the board voted to authorize staff to enter into contractual negotiations without prejudicing the Board’s right to evaluate the resulting contract and to decide whether it meets all the criteria before the Board including public policy advice such as might be offered by the GAC. The final conclusion on the Board’s decision to accept or reject the .XXX application has not been made and will not be made until such time as the Board either approves or rejects the registry agreement relating to the .XXX application. In fact, it is important to note that the Board has reviewed previous proposed agreements with ICM for the .XXX registry and has expressed concerns regarding the compliance structures established in those drafts.

In some instances, such as with .XXX, while the additional materials provided sufficient clarification to proceed with contractual discussions, the Board still expressed concerns about whether the applicant met all of the criteria, but took the view that such concerns could possibly be addressed by contractual obligations to be stated in a registry agreement.” (C-188, pp. 1, 2.)

38. On May 10, 2006, the Board held a telephonic special meeting and addressed ICM’s by now Third Draft Registry Agreement. After a roll call, there were 9 votes against accepting the agreement and 5 in favor. Those who voted against (including Board Chairman Cerf and President Twomey), in brief explanations of vote, indicated that they so voted because the undertakings of ICM could not in their view be fulfilled; because the conditions required by the GAC could not be met; because doubts about sponsorship remained and had magnified as a result of opposition from elements of the adult entertainment community; because the agreement's reference to "all applicable law" raised a wide and variable test of compliance and enforcement; and because guaranty of compliance with obligations of the contract was lacking. Those who voted in favor indicated that changing ICANN's position after an extended process weakens ICANN and encourages the exertions of pressure groups; found that there was sufficient support of the sponsoring community, while invariable support was not required; held it unfair to impose on ICM a complete compliance model before it is allowed to start, a requirement imposed on no other applicant; maintained that ICANN is not in the business and should not be in the business of judging content which rather is the province of each country, that ICANN should not be a "choke-point for content limitations of governments"; and contended that ICANN should avoid applying subjective and arbitrary criteria and should concern itself with the technical merits of applications. (C-189.) The vote of May 10, 2006 was not to approve the agreement as proposed "but it did not reject the application" of ICM (C-197.)

39. ICM Registry filed a Request for Reconsideration of Board Action on May 21, 2006, pursuant to Article IV, Section 2 of ICANN's Bylaws providing for reconsideration requests. (C-190.) However, after being informed by ICANN's general counsel that the Board would be prepared to consider still another revised draft agreement, ICM withdrew that request on October 29, 2006. Working as she had throughout in consultation with ICANN's staff, particularly its general counsel, Ms. Burr, on behalf of ICM, engaged in further negotiations with ICANN endeavoring to accommodate its requirements, demonstrate that the concerns raised by the GAC had been met to the extent possible, and provide ICANN with additional support for ICM's commitment to abide by the provisions of the proposed agreement. Among the materials provided, earlier and then, were a list of persons within the child safety community willing to serve on the board of IFFOR, commitments to enter into agreements with rating associations to provide tags for filtering .XXX websites and to monitor compliance with rules for the suppression of child pornography provisions, and data about a "pre-reservation service" for reservations for .XXX from webmasters operating adult sites on other ICANN-recognized top level domains. ICANN claimed to have registered more than 75,000 pre-reservations in the first six months that this service was publicly available. (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, pp. 138-139.) The proposed agreement was revised to include, inter alia, provision for imposing certain requirements on registrants; develop mechanisms for compliance with those requirements; create dispute resolution mechanisms; and engage independent monitors. ICM agreed to enter into a contract with the Family Online Safety Institute. The clause regarding registrants' obligations to comply with "all applicable law" was deleted because, in ICM's view, it had given rise to misunderstanding about whether ICANN would become involved in monitoring content. ICM maintains that, in the course of exchanges about making these revisions and preparing its Fourth Draft Registry Agreement, "ICANN never sought to have ICM attempt to re-define the sponsored community or otherwise demonstrate that it met any of the RFP criteria". (Id., p. 141.)

40. On February 2, 2007, the Chairman and Chairman-Elect of the GAC wrote the Chairman of the ICANN Board, speaking for themselves and not necessarily for the GAC, as follows:

"We note that the Wellington Communique...requested clarification from the ICANN Board regarding its decision of 1 June 2005 authorising staff to enter into contractual negotiations with ICM Registry, despite deficiencies identified by the Sponsorship...Panel...we reiterate the GAC's request for a clear explanation of why the ICANN Board is satisfied that the .xxx application has overcome the deficiencies relating to the proposed sponsorship community.

"In Wellington, the GAC also requested confirmation from the ICANN Board that the proposed .xxx agreement would include enforceable provisions covering all of ICM Registry's commitments...

"...GAC members would urge the Board to defer any final decision on this application until the Lisbon meeting." (C-198.)

41. A special meeting of the ICANN Board on February 12, 2007, was held by teleconference. Consideration of the proposed .XXX Registry Agreement was introduced by Mr. Jeffrey, who asked the Board to consider (a) public comment on the proposed agreement (which had been posted by ICANN on its website) (b) advice proffered by the GAC and (c) "how ICM measures up against the RFP criteria" (C-199, p.1). He noted in relation to community input that since the initial ICM application over 200,000 pertinent emails had been sent to ICANN.

42. Rita Rodin, a new Board member, noted that she had not been on the Board at previous discussions of the ICM application, but based on her review of the papers “she had some concerns about whether the proposal met the criteria set forth in the RFP. For example, she noted that it was not clear to her whether the sponsoring community seeking to run the domain genuinely could be said to represent the adult on-line community. However Rita requested that John Jeffrey and Paul Twomey confirm that this sort of discussion should take place during this meeting. She said that she did not want to reopen issues if they had already been decided by the Board.” (Id., pp. 2-3.)

43. While there was no direct response to the foregoing request of Ms. Rodin, Dr. Cerf noted “that had been the subject of debate by the Board in earlier discussions in 2006...over the last six months, there seem to have been a more negative reaction from members of the online community to the proposal.” Rita Rodin agreed; “there seems to be a ‘splintering of support in the adult on-line community.” She was also concerned “that approval of this domain in these circumstances would cause ICM to become a de facto arbiter of policies for pornography on the Internet...she was not comfortable with ICANN saying to a self-defined group that they could define policy around pornography on the internet. This was not part of ICANN’s technical decision-making remit...” (Id., p. 3) Dr. Twomey said that the Board needed to focus on whether there was a need for further public comment on the new version, the GAC comments, “and whether ICM had demonstrated to the Board’s satisfaction that it had met criteria against the RFP for sTLDs.” Dr. Cerf agreed that “the sponsorship grouping for a new TLD was difficult to define.”

44. Susan Crawford expressed the view that “no group can demonstrate in advance that they will meet the interests and concerns of all members in their community and that this was an unrealistic expectation to place on any applicant...if that test was applied to any sponsor group for a new sTLD, none would ever be approved.”

45. The Acting Chair conducted a “straw poll” of the Board as to whether members held “serious concerns” about the level of support for the creation of the domain from this sponsoring community. A majority indicated that they did, while a minority indicated that “it was an inappropriate burden to place on ICM to ensure that the entire adult online community was supportive of the proposed domain”. (Id.) The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas a majority of the Board has serious concerns about whether the proposed .XXX domain has the support of a clearly-defined sponsored community as per the criteria for sponsored TLDs;

"Whereas a minority of the Board believed that the self-described community of sponsorship made known by the proponent of the .XXX domain, ICM Registry, was sufficient to meet the criteria for an sTLD.

"Resolved that:

- I. The revised version [now the fifth version of the draft agreement] be exposed to a public comment period of no less than 21 days, and
- II. ICANN staff consult with ICM and provide further information to the Board prior to its next meeting, so as to inform a decision by the Board about whether sponsorship criteria is [sic] met for the creation of a new .XXX sTLD." (Id., p. 4.)

46. The Governmental Advisory Committee met in Lisbon on March 28, 2007 and issued "formal advice to the Board". It reaffirmed the Wellington Communique as "a valid and important expression of the GAC's views on .xxx. The GAC does not consider the information provided by the Board to have answered the GAC concerns as to whether the ICM application meets the sponsorship criteria." It called attention to an expression of concern by Canada that, with the revised proposed ICANN-ICM Registry agreement, "the Corporation could be moving towards assuming an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content, which would be inconsistent with its technical mandate." (C-200, pp. 4, 5.) It also adopted "Principles Regarding New TLDs" which contain the following provision in respect of delegation of new gTLDs:

"2.5 The evaluation and selection procedure for new gTLD registries should respect the principles of fairness, transparency and non-discrimination. All applicants for a new gTLD registry should therefore be evaluated against transparent and predictable criteria, fully available to the applicants prior to the initiation of the process. Normally, therefore, no subsequent additional selection criteria should be used in the selection process." (Id., p. 12.)

47. The climactic meeting of the ICANN Board took place in Lisbon, Portugal, on March 30, 2007. A resolution was adopted by a vote of nine to five, with one abstention (that of Dr. Twomey), whose operative paragraphs provide that:

"...the board has determined that

"ICM's application and the revised agreement failed to meet, among other things, the sponsored community criteria of the RFP specification.

"Based on the extensive public comment and from the GAC's communiqués, that this agreement raises public policy issues.

"Approval of the ICM application and revised agreement is not appropriate, as they do not resolve the issues raised in the GAC communiqués, and ICM's response does not address the GAC's concern for offensive content and similarly avoids the GAC's concern for the protection of vulnerable members of the community. The board does not believe these public policy concerns can be credibly resolved with the mechanisms proposed by the applicant.

"The ICM application raises significant law enforcement compliance issues because of countries' varying laws relating to content and practices that define the nature of the application, therefore obligating ICANN to acquire responsibility related to content and conduct.

"The board agrees with the reference in the GAC communiqué from Lisbon that under the revised agreement, there are credible scenarios that lead to circumstances in which ICANN would be forced to assume an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content, which is inconsistent with its technical mandate.

Accordingly, it is resolved...that the proposed agreement with ICM concerning the .xxx sTLD is rejected and the application request for delegation of the .XXX sTLD is hereby denied."

48. Debate in the Board over adoption of the resolution was intense. Dr. Cerf, who was to vote in favor of the resolution (and hence against the ICM application) observed that he had voted in favor of proceeding to negotiate a contract.

"Part of the reason for that was to try to understand more deeply exactly how this proposal would be implemented, and seeing the contractual terms...would put much more meat on the bones of the initial proposal. I have been concerned about the definition of 'responsible'...there's uncertainty in my mind about what behavioral patterns to expect...over time, the two years that we've considered this, there has been a growing disagreement within the adult content community as to the advisability of this proposal. As I looked at the contract...the mechanisms for assuring the behavior of the registrants in this top-level domain seemed, to me, uncertain. And I was persuaded ... that there were very credible scenarios in which the operation of IFFOR and ICM might still lead to ICANN being propelled into responding to complaints that some content on some of the registered .xxx sites didn't somehow meet the expectations of the general public this would propel ICANN and its staff into making decisions or having to examine content to decide whether or not it met the IFFOR criteria ... I would also point out that the GAC has raised public policy concerns about this particular top level domain." (C-201, p. 6.)

49. Rita Rodin said that she did not believe

"that this is an appropriate sponsored community...it's inappropriate to allow an applicant in any sTLD to simply define out ...any people that are not in favor of this TLD..as irresponsible...this will be an enforcement headache...for ICANN..way beyond the technical oversight role of ICANN's mandate...there's porn all over the Internet and...there isn't a mechanism with this TLD to have it all exclusively within one string to actually effect some of the purposes of the TLD...to be responsible with respect to the distribution of pornography, to prevent child pornography on the Internet..." (id., p. 7.)

50. Peter Dengate Thrush, who favored acceptance of the ICM contract, voted against the resolution. On the issue of the sponsored community,

"there is on the evidence a sufficiently identifiable, distinct community which the TLD could serve. It's the adult content providers wanting to differentiate themselves by voluntary adoption of this labeling system. It's not affected ... by the fact that that's a self-selecting community...or impermanence of that community...This is the first time in any of these sTLD applications that we have had active opposition. And we have no metrics...to establish what level of opposition by members of the potential community might have caused us concern...the resolution I am voting against is particularly weak on this issue. On why the board thinks this community is not sufficiently identified. No fact or real rationale are provided in the resolution, and...given the considerable importance that the board has placed on this...and the cost and effort that the applicant has gone to answer the board's concern demonstrating the existence of a sponsored community...this silence is disrespectful to the applicant and does a disservice to the community...I've also been concerned ... about the scale of the obligations accepted by the applicant...some of those have been forced upon them by the process..in the end I am satisfied that the compliance rules raise no new issues in kind from previous contracts. And I say that if ICANN is going to raise this kind of objection, then it better think seriously of getting out of the business of introducing new TLDs ... I do not think that this contract would make ICANN a content regulator..." (Id., pp. 7-8.)

51. Njeri Ronge stated that, in addition to the reasons stated in the resolution, "the ICM proposal will not protect the relevant or interested community from the adult entertainment Web sites by a significant percentage; ... the ICM proposal focuses on content management which is not in ICANN's technical mandate." (Id., p. 8.)

52. Susan Crawford dissented from the resolution, which she found "not only weak but unprincipled".

"I am troubled by the path the board has followed on this issue...ICANN only creates problems for itself when it acts in an ad hoc fashion in response to political pressures. ICANN...should resist efforts by governments to veto what it does...The most fundamental value of the global Internet community is that people who propose to use the Internet protocols and infrastructures for otherwise lawful purposes, without threatening the operational stability or security of the Internet, should be presumed to be entitled to do so. In a nutshell, everything not prohibited is permitted. This understanding...has led directly to the striking success of the Internet around the world. ICANN's role in gTLD policy development is to seek to assess and articulate the broadly shared values of the Internet community. We have very limited authority. I am personally not aware that any global consensus against the creation of a triple X domain exists. In the absence of such a prohibition, and given our mandate to create TLD competition, we have no authority to block the addition of this TLD to the root. It is very clear that we do not have a global shared set of values about content on line, save for the global norm against child pornography. But the global Internet community clearly does share the core value that no centralized authority should set itself up as the arbiter of what people may do together on line, absent a demonstration that most of those affected by the proposed activity agree that it should be banned...the fact is that ICANN evaluated the strength of the sponsorship of triple X, the relationship between the applicant and the community behind the TLD, and...concluded that this criteria [sic] had been met as of June 2005. ICANN then went on to negotiate specific contractual terms with the applicant. Since then, real and AstroTurf comments – that’s an Americanism meaning filed comments claiming to be grass roots opposition that have actually been generated by organized campaigns – have come into ICANN that reflect opposition to this application. I do not find these recent comments sufficient to warrant revisiting the question of the sponsorship strength of this TLD which I personally believe to be closed. No applicant for any sponsored TLD could ever demonstrate unanimous, cheering approval for its application. We have no metric against which to measure this opposition....We will only get in the way of useful innovation if we take the view that every new TLD must prove itself to us before it can be added to the root...what is meant by sponsorship...is that there is enough interest in a particular TLD that it will be viable. We also have the idea that registrants should participate in and be bound by the creation of policies for a particular string. Both of these requirements have been met by this applicant. There is clearly enough interest, including more than 70,000 preregistrations from a thousand or more unique registrants who are member of the adult industry, and the applicant has undertaken to us that it will require adherence to its self-regulatory policies by all of its registrants...Many of my fellow board members are undoubtedly uncomfortable with the subject of adult entertainment material. Discomfort may have been sparked anew by first the letter from individual GAC members...and second the letter from the Australian Government. But the entire point of ICANN's creation was to avoid the operation of chokepoint control over the domain name system by individual or collective governments. The idea was the U.S. would serve as a good steward for other governmental concerns by staying in the background and...not engaging in content-related control. Australia’s letter and concerns expressed...by Brazil and other countries about triple X are explicitly content-based and, thus, inappropriate...If after the creation of a triple X TLD certain governments of the world want to ensure that their citizens do not see triple X content, it is within their prerogative as sovereigns to instruct Internet access providers physically located within their territory to block such content...But content-related censorship should not be ICANN's concern...To the extent there are public policy concerns with this TLD, they can be dealt with through local laws.” (Id., pp. 9-11.)

53. Demi Getschko declared that her vote in favor of the resolution was her own decision "without any kind of pressure". (Id., p. 12.) Alejandro Pisanty denied that "the board has been swayed by political pressure of any kind" and affirmed that, "ICANN has acted carefully and strictly within the rules." He accepted "that there is no universal set of values regarding adult content other than those related to child pornography...the resolution voted is based precisely on that view, not on any view of content itself." (Id.

PART THREE: THE ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES

The Contentions of ICM Registry

54. ICM Registry contends that (a) the Independent Review Process is an arbitration; (b) that Process does not afford the ICANN Board a "deferential standard of review"; (c) the law to be applied by that Process comprises the relevant principles of international law and local law, i.e., California law, and that the particularly relevant principle is good faith; (d) in its treatment and rejection of the application of ICM Registry, ICANN did not act consistently with its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.

The Nature of the Independent Review Process

55. In respect of the nature of the Independent Review Process, ICM, noting that these proceedings are the first such Process brought under ICANN's Bylaws, maintains that they are arbitral and not advisory in character. It observes that the current provisions governing the Independent Review Process were added to the Bylaws in December 2002 partly as a result of international and domestic concern about ICANN's lack of accountability. It recalls that ICANN's then President, Stuart Lynn, announced in a U.S. Senate hearing in 2002 that ICANN planned to "strengthen ... confidence in the fairness of ICANN decision-making through... creating a workable mechanism for speedy independent review of ICANN Board actions by experienced arbitrators..." (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, p. 162). His successor, Dr. Twomey, stated to a committee of the U.S. House of Representatives in 2006 that, "ICANN does have well-established principles and processes for accountability in its decision-making and in its bylaws...there is ability for appeal to...independent arbitration." (Id., p. 163.) Article IV, Section 3, of ICANN's Bylaws provides that: "The IRP shall be operated by an international arbitration provider appointed from time to time by ICANN...using arbitrators...nominated by that provider." Pursuant to that provision, ICANN appointed the International Centre for Dispute Resolution ("ICDR") of the American Arbitration Association as the international arbitration provider

(which in turn appointed the members of the instant Independent Review Panel). The term "arbitration" imports the binding resolution of a dispute. Courts in the United States – including the Supreme Court of California – have held that the term "arbitration" connotes a binding award. (Id., pp. 168-169.) Article 27(1) of the ICDR Rules provides that "[a]wards...shall be final and binding on the parties. The parties undertake to carry out any such award without delay." (C-11.) The Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) Independent Review Process specify that "the ICDR's International Arbitration Rules...will govern the Process in combination with these Supplementary Procedures." They provide that the "Independent Review Panel (IRP) refers to the neutral(s) appointed to decide the issue(s) presented." "The Declaration shall specifically designate the prevailing party." (C-12.) In view of all of the foregoing, ICM maintains that the IRP is an arbitral process designed to produce a decision on the issues that is binding on the parties.

The Standard of Review is Not Deferential

56. ICM also maintains that, contrary to the position now advanced by counsel for ICANN, ICANN's assertion that the Panel must afford the ICANN Board "a deferential standard of review" has no support in the instruments governing this proceeding. The term "independent review" connotes a review that is not deferential. Both Federal law and California law treat provision for an independent review as the equivalent of de novo review. In California law, when an appellate court employs independent, de novo review, it generally gives no special deference to the findings or conclusions of the court from which appeal is taken. (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, with citations, pp. 173-174.) ICANN's reliance on the "business judgment rule" and the related doctrine of "judicial deference" under California law is misplaced, because under California law the business judgment rule is employed to protect directors from personal liability (typically in shareholder suits) when the directors have made good faith business decisions on behalf of the corporation. The IRP is not a court action seeking to impose individual liability on the ICANN board of directors. Rather, this is an Independent Review Process with the specific purpose of declaring "whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws." As California courts have explicitly stated, "the rule of judicial deference to board decision-making can be limited ... by the association's governing documents." The IRP, to quote Dr. Twomey's testimony before Congress, is a process meant to establish a "final method of accountability."

The notion now advanced on behalf of ICANN, that this Panel should afford the Board “a deferential standard of review” and only “question” the Board’s actions upon “a showing of bad faith” is at odds with that purpose as well as with the plain meaning of “independent review”. (Id., pp. 176-177.)

The Applicable Law of this Proceeding

57. Article 4 of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation provides that, “The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with the relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law...” (C-4). The prior version of the draft Articles had provided for ICANN’s “carrying out its activities with due regard for applicable local and international law”. This language was regarded as inadequate, and was revised, as the then Interim Chairman of ICANN explained, “to mak[e] it clear that ICANN will comply with relevant and applicable international and local law”. (Id., p. 180.) As ICANN’s President testified in the U.S. Congress in 2003, the International Review Process was put in place so that disputes could “be referred to an independent review panel operated by an international arbitration provider with an appreciation for and understanding of applicable international laws, as well as California not-for-profit corporation law.” (Id., p. 182.) According to the Expert Report of Professor Jack Goldsmith, on which ICM relies:

“...in an attempt to bring accountability and thus legitimacy to its decisions, ICANN (a) assumed in its Articles of Incorporation an obligation to act in conformity with ‘relevant principles of international law’ and (b) in its Bylaws extended to adversely affected third parties a novel right of independent review in this arbitration proceeding for consistency with ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws. The parties have agreed to international arbitration in this forum to determine consistency with the international law standards set forth in Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation. California law allows a California non-profit corporation to bind itself in this way.” (Id., p. 11.)

In ICM’s view, Article 4 of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation acts as a choice-of-law provision. It notes that Article 28 of the ICDR Arbitration Rules specifically provides that “the Tribunal shall apply the substantive law(s) or rules of law designated by the parties as applicable to this dispute.” (C-11.) It points out that the choice of a concurrent law clause – as in ICANN’s Articles providing for the application of relevant principles of both international and domestic law – is not unusual, especially in transactions involving a public resource.

58. Professor Goldsmith observes that: "... "principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law" refers to three types of law. Local law means the law of California. Applicable international conventions refers to treaties. "The term 'principles of international law' includes general principles of law. Given that the canonical reference to the sources of international law is Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, which lists international conventions, customary international law, and "the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations", the reference to "principles of international law" in ICANN's Articles must refer to customary international law and to the general principles of law. (Expert Report, p. 12.) Professor Goldsmith notes that the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal has interpreted the "principles of commercial and international law" to include the general principles of law. ICSID tribunals similarly have interpreted "the rules of international law" to include general principles of law.

"It is perfectly appropriate to apply general principles in this IRP even though ICANN is technically a non-profit corporation and ICM is a private corporation. ICANN voluntarily subjected itself to these general principles in its Articles of Incorporation, something that both California law permits and that is typical in international arbitrations, especially when public goods are at stake. The 'international' nature of this arbitration – ... is evidenced by the global impact of ICANN's decisions...ICANN is only nominally a private corporation. It exercises extraordinary authority, delegated from the U.S. Government, over one of the globe's most important resources...its control over the Internet naming and numbering system does make sense of its embrace of the 'general principles' standard. While there is no doubt that ICANN can and has bound itself to general principles of law as that phrase is understood in international law... the general principles relevant here complement, amplify and give detail to the requirements of independence, transparency and due process that ICANN has otherwise assumed in its Articles and Bylaws and under California law. General principles thus play their classic supplementary role in this proceeding." (Id., pp. 15-16.)

59. Professor Goldsmith continues: "The general principle of good faith is 'the foundation of all law and all conventions'" (quoting the seminal work of Bin Cheng, General Principles of Law as Applied by International Courts and Tribunals, p. 105). "As the International Court of Justice has noted, 'the principle of good faith is a well established principle of international law'". (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1998, p. 296, with many citations.) Applications of the principle are "the requirement of good faith in complying with legal restrictions" and "the requirement of good faith in the exercise of discretion, also known as the doctrine of non-abuse of rights..." as well as the requirement of good faith in contractual negotiations. (Id., pp. 17-18.) The principle is "equally applicable to relations between individuals and to relations between nations." (Cheng, loc. cit.).

60. Professor Goldsmith maintains that the abuse of right alleged by ICM that is

"most obvious is the clearly fictitious basis ICANN gave for denying ICM's application...the concern about 'law enforcement compliance issues because of countries' varying laws relating to content and practices that define the nature of the application' applies to many top-level domains besides .XXX. The website 'pornography.com' would be no less subject to various differing laws around the world than the website 'pornography.xxx.' ...a website on the .XXX domain is easier for nations to regulate and exclude from computers in their countries because they can block all sites on the .XXX domain with relative ease but have to look at the content, or make guesses based on domain names, to block unwanted pornography on .COM and other top level domains. In short, this reason for ICANN's denial, if genuine, would extend to many top-level domains and would certainly apply to all generic top-level domains (like .COM, .INFO, .NET and .ORG) where pornographic sites can be found. But ICANN has only applied this reason for denial to the .XXX domain. This strongly suggests that the reasons for the denial are pretextual and thus the denial is an abuse of right..."

61. Professor Goldsmith further argues that "similarly pretextual is ICANN's claim that 'there are credible scenarios that leads to circumstances in which ICANN would be forced to assume an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content.'" He contends that the scenario is "unlikely", but, more importantly, "the same logic applies to generic top level domains like .COM. The identical scenario could arise if a national court ordered...the registry operator for .COM...to shut down one of the hundreds of thousands of pornography sites on .COM. But ICANN has only expressed concern about ICM..."

ICANN Did Not Act Consistently with its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws

62. ICM Registry contends that ICANN failed to act consistently with its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws in the following respects.

63. ICANN, ICM maintains, conducted the 2004 Round of applications for top-level domains as a two-step process, in which it was first determined whether or not each applicant met the RFP criteria. If the criteria were met, "upon the successful completion of the sTLD process" (ICANN Board resolution of October 31, 2003, C-78), the applicant then would proceed to negotiate the commercial and technical terms of a registry agreement. (This Declaration, paras. 13-16, supra.) The RFP included detailed description of the criteria to be met to enable the applicant to proceed to contract negotiations, and specified that the selection criteria would be applied "based on principles of objectivity, non-discrimination and transparency". (C-45.) On June 1, 2005, the ICANN Board concluded that ICM had met all of the RFP criteria - financial, technical and sponsorship - and authorized ICANN's President and General Counsel to enter into negotiations over the "commercial and technical terms" of a registry agreement with ICM. "The record evidence in this case demonstrates overwhelmingly that when the Board approved ICM to proceed to contract negotiations on 1 June 2005, the Board concluded that ICM had met all of the RFP criteria - including, specifically, sponsorship." (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission, p. 11.) While ICANN now claims that the sponsorship criterion remained open, and that the Board's resolution of June 1, 2005, authorized negotiations in which whether ICM met sponsorship requirements could be more fully tested, ICM argues that no credible evidence, in particular, no contemporary documentary evidence, supports these contentions. To the contrary, ICM:

- (a) recalls that ICANN's written announcement of applications received provided: "The applications will be reviewed by independent evaluation teams beginning in May 2004. The criteria for evaluation were posted with the RFP. All applicants that are found to satisfy the posted criteria will be eligible to enter into technical and commercial negotiations with ICANN for agreements for the allocation and sponsorship of the requested TLDs." (C-82.)

- (b) emphasizes that ICANN's Chairman of the Board, Dr. Cerf, is recorded in the GAC's Luxembourg minutes as stating, shortly after the adoption of the June 1, 2005, resolution, that the application of .xxx "this time met the three main criteria, financial, technical and sponsorship". Sponsorship was extensively discussed "and the Board reached a positive decision considering that ICANN should not be involved in content matters." (C-139; supra, para. 22.)

- (c) notes that a letter of ICANN's President of February 11, 2006. states that: "...it is the ICANN Board that has the authority to decide, upon the conclusion of technical and commercial negotiations, whether or not to approve the creation of a new sTLD...Responsibility for resolving issues relating to an applicant's readiness to proceed to technical and commercial negotiations...rests with the Board." (Supra, paragraph 33.)

- (d) notes that the GAC's Wellington Communique states, in respect of a letter of February 11, 2006 of ICANN's President, that the GAC "does not believe that the February 11 letter provides sufficient detail regarding the rationale for the Board determination" that ICM's application "had overcome the deficiencies noted in the Evaluation Report". (Supra, paragraph 35.)

- (e) stresses that the ICANN Vice President in charge of the Round, Kurt Pritz, whom ICANN chose not to call as a witness in the hearing, stated in a public forum meeting in April 2005 that: "If it was determined that an application met those three baseline criteria, technical, commercial and sponsorship community, they, then, were informed that they would enter into a phase of commercial and technical negotiation with ICANN, the culmination of those negotiations is and was intended to result in the designation of the new top-level domain. At the conclusion of that, we would sign agreements that would be forwarded to the Board for their approval." (C-88.)

- (f) recalls that Dr. Pritz stated in Luxembourg that ICM was among the "applicants that have been found to satisfy the baseline criteria and they're presently in negotiation for the designation of registries..." (C-140, p. 28).

- (g) observes that the General Counsel of ICANN, Mr. Jeffery, in an exchange with Ms. Burr acting as counsel of ICM, accepted a draft press release in respect of the June 1, 2005 resolution stating that, "ICANN's board of directors today determined that the proposal for a new top level domain submitted by ICM Registry meets the criteria established by ICANN." (C-221.)

- (h) reproduces a Fox News Internet story of June 2, 2005, captioned, "Internet Group OKs New Suffix for Porn Sites," which cites ICANN spokesman Kieran Baker as saying that adult oriented sites, a $12 billion industry, "could begin buying .xxx addresses as early as fall or winter depending on ICM's plans." (C-283.)

- (i) recalls that a member of the Board when the June 1, 2005 resolution was adopted, Joicho Ito, posted on his blog the next day that "the .XXX proposal, in my opinion, has met the criteria set out in the RFP. Our approval of .XXX is a decision based on whether .XXX met the criteria and does not endorse or condone any particular type of content or moral belief." (Burr Exhibit 35.)

ICM argues that ICANN's witnesses had no response to the foregoing evidence, other than to say that they could not remember or had not seen it (testimony of Dr. Cerf, Tr. 615:18-21, 660:9-12, 675:3-16; Testimony of Dr. Twomey, 914: 4-11, 915:2-11).

64. Dr. Cerf testified at the hearing that,

"At the point where the question arose whether we should proceed or could proceed to contract negotiation, in the absence of having decided that the sponsorship criteria had been met, the board consulted with counsel [the General Counsel, Mr. Jeffery] and my recollection of this discussion is that we could leave undetermined and undecided the question of sponsorship and could use the discussions with regard to the contract as a means of exposing and understanding more deeply whether the sponsorship criteria had been or could be adequately met...prior to the board vote on the question, should we proceed to contract, this question was raised, and it was my understanding that we were not deciding the question of sponsorship. We were using the contract negotiations as a means of clarifying whether or not...the sponsorship criteria could be or had been met or would be met..." (Tr. 600:6-18, 601: 1-8).

65. ICM however claims that Dr. Cerf's testimony "is flatly contradicted by the numerous contemporaneous statements of ICANN Board members and officials that ICM had, in fact, met the criteria, including Dr. Cerf's own contemporaneous statement to the GAC in Luxembourg..." (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submissions, p. 14.) ICM maintains that there is no contemporary documentary evidence that sustains Dr. Cerf's recollection. Nor did ICANN present Mr. Jeffery as a witness, despite his presence in the hearing room. No mention of reservations about sponsorship is to be found in the June 1, 2005 resolution; it contains no caveats, unlike the resolutions adopted in respect of the applications for .JOBS and .MOBI adopted by the Board in 2004.

66. ICANN further argues, ICM observes, that the June 1, 2005, resolution provides that the contract would be entered into "if" the parties were able to negotiate "commercial and technical terms"; therefore ICM should have known that all other issues also remained open. But, responds ICM, "Complete silence on an issue -- when other issues are specifically mentioned -- does not create ambiguity on the missing issue. It means that the missing issue is no longer an issue." (Id., pp. 15-16.)

67. Shortly after adoption of the June 1, 2005 resolution, contract negotiations commenced. As predicted by Mr. Jeffrey in a June 13, 2005, email to Ms. Burr, the negotiations were "quick" and "straightforward". (C-150.) Agreement on the terms of a registry contract was reached between them by August 1, 2005. That draft registry agreement was posted on the ICANN website on August 9, 2005. The Board was scheduled to discuss it at a meeting to be held on August 16.

68. But then came the intervention of the U.S. Department of Commerce described supra, paragraphs 27 and 29. ICM argues that it is remarkable that the U.S. Government responded in the way it did to a lobbying campaign largely generated by the website of the Family Research Council. "What is even more remarkable is the extent to which ICANN altered its course of conduct with respect to ICM in response to the U.S. government's intervention." ICM contends that: "The unilateral intervention by the U.S. government was entirely inappropriate and ICANN knew it. But rather than adhere to the principles of its Articles and Bylaws, ICANN quickly bowed to the U.S. intervention, and, at the same time tried to conceal it." (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission, p. 27.) The charge of concealment relates to Dr. Twomey's having "suggested" to the Chairman of the GAC that he write to ICANN requesting delay in considering the draft contract with ICM (supra, paragraph 28). Dr. Twomey acknowledged at the hearing that he so suggested but explained that the letter was nothing more than a confirmation of what Board members had heard weeks before from the GAC in Luxembourg. (Tr. 856:8-19, 859:1-12, 861:10-20, and supra, paragraphs 21-25.)

69. ICM invokes the witness statement provided by the chair of the Sponsorship Evaluation Team, Dr. Williams, who, as a fellow Australian, had a close working relationship with Dr. Twomey. She wrote that:

"The June 2005 vote should have marked the completion of the substantive discussions of the .XXX application, especially in light of the Board resolution that approved the .XXX application with no reservations or caveats. Instead, following the vote, the ICANN Governmental Advisory Committee 'woke up' to the .XXX application, and ICANN began to feel pressure from a number of governments, especially from the United States and Australia...An open dispute with the United States would have been very damaging to ICANN's credibility, and it was therefore very difficult to resist pressure from the United States...Dr. Twomey expressed to me his anxiety about the .XXX registry agreement as a result of this [Gallagher] intervention. This concern went to the heart of ICANN's legitimacy as a quasi-independent technical regulatory organization with the power to establish the process by which new TLDs could be created and put on the root. If the United States Government disagreed with ICANN's process or decision at any point and did not enter a TLD accepted by ICANN to the root, it would call into question ICANN's authority, competence, and entire reason for existence." (Witness Statement of Elizabeth Williams, pp. 26-28.)

70. ICM points out that the Wellington Communique of the GAC (supra, paragraph 35) referred to "the Board determination that the [ICM] application had overcome the deficiencies noted in the Evaluation Report." ICM maintains that, at ICANN's staff prompting, ICM responded to all of the concerns raised in the GAC's Wellington Communique. Thus, the Third Draft Registry Agreement of April 18, 2006, included commitments of ICM to establish policies and procedures to label the sites on the domain, to use automated tools to detect and prevent child pornography, to maintain accurate lists of registrants and assist law enforcement agencies to identify and contact the owners of particular sites, and to ensure the intellectual property and trademark rights, personal names, country names, names of historical, cultural and religious significance and names of geographic identifiers, drawing on domain name registry best practices (C-171).

71. ICM construes a statement of Dr. Cerf at the hearing as indicating that the reason, or a reason, why ICM ultimately did not obtain a registry agreement was that ICM could not provide adequate solutions "to deal with the problem of pornography on the Net". It counters that ICM had never undertaken to "deal with" or solve "the problem of pornography on the Net". "The purpose of .XXX was to create an sTLD where responsible adult content providers would agree, inter alia, to submit to technological tools to help tag and filter their sites; allow their sites to be 'crawled' for indicia of child pornography (real or virtual); and otherwise adhere to best practices for responsible members of the industry (including practices to prevent credit card fraud, spam, misuse of personal data, the sending of unsolicited promotional email, the 'capture' of visitors to their sites, etc.).” (Claimant’s Post-Hearing Submission, p. 42.) However, Dr. Twomey seized on a phrase in the Wellington Communique “in order to impose an impossible burden on ICM.” According to ICM, Dr. Twomey asserted that “the GAC was now insisting that ICM be responsible for ‘enforcing restrictions’ around the world on access to illegal and offensive content.” (Id., pp. 42-43.) But, ICM argues, to the extent that the GAC was requesting ICM to enforce restrictions on illegal and offensive content, ICANN was

“not merely acting outside its mission. It was also imposing a requirement on ICM that had never been imposed on any other registrant for any other top level domain, and that, indeed, no registrant could possibly fulfil. .COM, for example, is unquestionably filled with content that is considered ‘illegal and offensive’ in many countries. Some of its content is considered ‘illegal and offensive’ in all countries. Adult content can be found on numerous other TLDs...Dr. Cerf had told the GAC in Luxembourg in July 2005, when he was explaining the Board’s determination that ICM had met the RFP criteria: ‘to the extent that governments do have concerns they relate to the issues across TLDs.’ ICANN has never suggested that the registries for those other TLDs must ‘enforce’ restrictions on access to illegal or offensive content for sites on their TLDs.” (Id., pp. 43-44.)

72. ICM adds that if “the GAC was in fact asking ICANN to impose such an absurd requirement on ICM, then ICANN should have told the GAC that it could not do so.” The GAC is no more than an advisory body supposed to provide “advice” on a “timely” basis. “ICANN is by no means under any obligation to do whatever the GAC tells it to do.” Indeed, ICANN’s Bylaws specifically contemplate that the Board may decide not to follow the GAC’s advice. (Id., p. 44.)

73. ICM invokes the terms of the Bylaws, Section 2(1)(j), which provide that:

“The advice of the Governmental Advisory Committee on public policy matters shall be duly taken into account, both in the formulation and adoption of policies. In the event that the ICANN Board determines to take an action that is not consistent with the Governmental Advisory Committee advice, it shall so inform the Committee and state the reasons why it decided not to follow that advice. The Governmental Advisory Committee and the ICANN Board will then try, in good faith and in a timely and efficient manner, to find a mutually acceptable solution. If no such solution can be found, the ICANN Board will state in its final decision the reasons why the Governmental Advisory Committee's advice was not followed, and such statement will be without prejudice to the rights or obligations of Governmental Advisory Committee members with regard to public policy issues falling within their responsibilities." (C-5, and supra, paragraph 9.)

74. ICM further argues however that Dr. Twomey's reading of the Wellington Communique was not a reasonable one. The Wellington Communique recalls that "ICM promised a range of public interest benefits as part of its bid to operate the .xxx domain...The public policy aspects identified by members of the GAC include the degree to which .xxx application would: Take appropriate measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content..." (Id. p. 45; C-181). As promised in its application, ICM in fact proposed numerous measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content. But nowhere did the GAC state that ICM should be responsible for "enforcing" the restrictions of countries on access to illegal and offensive content. ICM argues that the very fact that the GAC wanted ICM to "maintain accurate details of registrants and assist law enforcement agencies to identify and contact the owners of particular websites" (C-181, p. 3) demonstrates that the GAC did not expect ICM to enforce various national restrictions on access to illegal and offensive content.

75. The numerous measures that ICM set out in its revised draft registry agreement in consultation with the staff of ICANN did not constitute an agreement or "representation to enforce the laws of the world on pornography" (testimony of Ms. Burr, Tr. 1044: 8-9). Actually the activation of an .XXX TLD would make it far easier for governments to restrict access to content that they deemed illegal or offensive. Indeed, as Dr. Cerf told the GAC in Luxembourg in July 2005 in defending ICANN's agreeing to enter into contract negotiations with ICM, "The TLD system is neutral, although filtering systems could be solutions promoted by governments." (C-139, p. 5.) "In other words," ICM argues, "the appropriate place for restricting access to content deemed illegal or offensive by any particular country is within that particular country. ICM offered far more tools for countries to effectuate such restrictions than have ever existed before. Thus, ICM provided 'appropriate measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content.'" (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission, p. 47.)

76. ICM alleges that, "Nonetheless, on 10 May 2006, the ICANN Board proceeded to reject ICM's registry agreement because, in Dr. Twomey's words, ICM had not demonstrated how it would 'ensure enforcement of these contractual terms' as they relate to various countries' individual laws

'concerning pornographic content' [citing C-189, p.6]. In other words, ICM's draft registry agreement was rejected on the basis of its inability to comply with a contractual undertaking to which it had never agreed in the first place." (Id., p. 48.)

77. At that same meeting of the Board, Dr. Twomey drew attention to a letter of May 4, 2006 from Martin Boyle, UK Representative to the GAC, which read as follows:

"The discussions held by the Governmental Advisory Committee in Wellington in March have highlighted some of the key concerns, and strong opposition by some administrations, to the application for a new top-level domain for pornographic content, dot.xxx. I thought that it would be helpful to follow up those discussions by submitting directly to the ICANN Board the views of the UK Government. In preparing these views, we have consulted a number of stakeholders in the UK, including Internet safety groups...

"Having examined the proposal in detail, and recognizing ICANN's authority to grant such domain names, the UK expresses its firm view that if the dot .xxx domain name is to be authorized, it would be important that ICANN ensures that the benefits and safeguards proposed by the registry, ICM, including the monitoring of all dot.xxx content and rating of content on all servers pointed to by .xxx, are genuinely achieved from day one. Furthermore, it will be important to the integrity of ICANN's position as final approving authority for the dot.xxx domain name, to be seen as able to intervene promptly and effectively if for any reason failure on the part of ICM in any of these fundamental safeguards becomes apparent. It would also in our view be essential that ICM liaise with the relevant bodies in charge of policing illegal Internet content at national level, such as the Internet Watch Foundation (IWF) in the UK, so as to ensure the effectiveness of the solutions it proposes to avoid the further propagation of illegal content. Specifically, ICM should undertake to monitor all dot.xxx content as it proposed and cooperate closely with IWF and equivalent agencies.

"This is an important decision that the ICANN Board has to take and whatever you decide will probably attract criticism from one quarter or another. This makes it all the more important that in making a decision, you reach a clear view on the extent to which the benefits which ICM claim are likely to be sustainable and reliable." (C-182.)

78. Dr. Twomey said this about Mr. Boyle's position:

"...the contractual terms put forward by ICM to meet the sorts of public-policy concerns raised by the Governmental Advisory Committee in my view are very difficult to implement, and I retain concerns about their ability to actually be implemented in an international environment where the important phrase, 'all applicable law', would raise a very wide and variable test for enforcement and compliance. And I can't see how that will actually be achieved under the contract. The letter from the UK is an indication of the expectations of the international governmental community to ensure enforcement of these contractual terms as they individually interpret them against their own law concerning pornographic content. This will put ICANN in an untenable position." (C-189, p. 6.)

79. ICM contends that "it is impossible to reconcile the points made in Mr. Boyle's letter - i.e., that ICANN should ensure that ICM delivered from "day one" on the 'benefits and safeguards' promised in its contract, and that ICM should liase with the IWF - as a requirement 'to ensure enforcement of the contractual terms as they each individually interpret them against their own law concerning pornographic content'. And even if Mr. Boyle had been making such a demand, it would have been entirely outside ICANN's mandate to impose it on ICM, and would have imposed a requirement on ICM that it has never imposed on any other registry." (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission, p. 50.)

80. ICM however acknowledges that other members of the Board shared Dr. Twomey's analysis. It concludes that:

"...the ICANN Board was now imposing a requirement that was outside the mission of ICANN; that had never been imposed on any other registry; and that - had it been included in the RFP - would have kept any applicant from applying for an sTLD dealing with adult content." (Id., p. 51.)

81. ICM observes that, following the ICANN Board's rejection of the ICM registry agreement on May 10, 2006, and then its renewed consideration of it after ICM withdrew its request for reconsideration (supra, paragraph 39), ICM responded to further requests of ICANN staff. It agreed to conclude a contract with what is now known as the Family Online Safety Institute ("FOSI") specifying that FOSI was "to use an automated tool to scan" the .XXX domain and develop other ways to monitor ICM's compliance with its commitments. ICM notes that, throughout the entire negotiation process, the ICANN staff never asked ICM to change the definition of the sponsored community, which remained the same though each of the five renderings of the draft registry agreement.

82. At the Board's meeting of February 12, 2007, the question of the solidity of ICM's sponsorship was re-opened – in ICM's view, inappropriately --- as described above (supra, paragraphs 41-45 and C-199). ICM argues that the data that it responsively submitted to the ICANN Board in March 2007 demonstrated that its application met the RFP standard of "broad-based support from the community". 76,723 adult website names had been pre-reserved in .XXX since June 1, 2005; 1,217 adult webmasters from over 70 countries had registered on the ICM Registry website, saying that they supported .XXX. But, ICM observes, none of the Board members voting against acceptance of ICM's application at the dispositive meeting of March 30, 2007, mentioned the extensive evidence provided by ICM in support of sponsorship.

83. For the reasons set forth above in paragraphs 63-82, ICM contends that the Board's rejection of its application was not consistent with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. As regards the five specific reasons for rejection set forth in the Board's resolution of March 30, 2007 (supra, paragraph 47), ICM makes the following allegations of inconsistency.

84. Reason 1: ICM's application and revised agreement fail to meet the sponsored community criteria of the RFP specification. ICM responds that the Board concluded by its resolution of June 1, 2005, that ICM had met the RFP's sponsorship criteria; and that the Board's abandonment of the two-step process and its reopening of sponsorship at the eleventh hour, and only in respect of ICM's application, violated ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. The manner in which it then "reapplied" the sponsorship criteria to ICM was "incoherent, discriminatory and pretextual". (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission, pp. 61-62.) There was no evidence before the Board that ICM's support in the community was eroding. No other applicant was held to a similar standard of demonstrating community support. ICM produced sufficient evidence of what was required by the RFP: "broad-based support from the community".

85. ICANN also complained that ICM's community definition was self-identifying but that was true of numerous sTLDs; as Dr. Twomey acknowledged in a letter of May 6, 2006, "(m)embers of both .TEL and .MOBI communities are self-identified". Both sTLDs are now in the root.

86. ICANN further complained that the sponsored community as defined by ICM was not sufficiently differentiated from other adult entertainment providers. But, besides the fact that ICM had set forth numerous criteria by which members of its community would differentiate themselves from others providers of the adult community, this too could be said to apply to other TLDs. Thus .TRAVEL, much like .XXX, is designed to provide an sTLD for certain members of the industry that wish to follow the rules of a particular charter.

87. ICANN further complained that .XXX would merely duplicate content found elsewhere on the Internet. But again, the same was true for virtually all of the other sTLDs.

88. In sum "ICANN's reopening of the sponsorship criteria - which it did only for ICM - was unfair, discriminatory and pretextual, and a departure from transparent, fair and well documented policies...not done neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness...[it] singled out ICM for disparate treatment, without substantial and reasonable cause." (Id., p. 65.)

89. Reason 2: based on the extensive comment and from the GAC's Communiques, ICM's agreement raises public policy issues. ICANN never precisely identified the "public policy" issues raised nor does it explain why they warrant rejection of the application. But, ICM argues, Reasons 2-5 all arise from the same flawed interpretation of the Wellington Communique and other governmental comments, namely, that ICM was to be responsible for enforcing the world's various and different laws and standards concerning pornography. That interpretation "was sufficiently absurd as to have been made in bad faith"; in any event it holds ICM to an "impossible standard", and is one never imposed on any other registrant and that no registrant could possibly perform. It led to further flawed conclusions, viz., that if ICM could not meet its responsibility (and no one could) then ICANN would have to take it over, and, if it did so, ICANN would be taking on an oversight role regarding Internet content, which was beyond its technical mandate. ICANN's imposition of this impossible requirement on ICM alone was discriminatory. It rejected ICM's application on grounds that were not applied neutrally and objectively, which were suggestive of a "pretextual basis to 'cover' the real reason for rejecting .XXX, i.e., that the U.S. government and several other powerful governments objected to its proposed content." (Id., pp. 66-67.)

90. Reason 3: the ICM application and revised agreement do not resolve GAC's issues, its concern for offensive content and protection of the vulnerable; the Board finds that these public policy concerns cannot be credibly resolved with the mechanisms proposed by the applicant. ICM responds that this is merely an elaboration of Reason 2. ICM's proposed agreement contained detailed provisions to address child pornography issues and detailed mechanisms that would permit the identification and filtration of content deemed to be illegal or offensive.

91. Reason 4: the ICM application raises significant law enforcement compliance issues because of countries' varying laws relating to content and practices that define the nature of the application, therefore obligating ICANN to acquire a responsibility related to content and conduct. ICM responds that this builds on the fallacy of Reasons 2 and 3: according to the Board's apparent reasoning, the GAC was requiring ICM to enforce local restrictions on access to illegal and offensive content and if proved unable to do so, ICANN would have to do so. ICM responds that ICANN could not properly require ICM to undertake such enforcement obligations, whether or not the GAC actually so requested. Given that it would have been discriminatory and unfeasible to require ICM to enforce varying national laws regarding adult content, ICANN would not have been obligated to take over that responsibility if ICANN were unable to fulfill it.

92. Reason 5: there are credible scenarios in which ICANN would be forced to assume an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content, inconsistent with its technical mandate. ICM responds that this largely restates Reason 4. ICANN interpreted the GAC's advice to require ICM to be responsible for regulating content on the Internet - a task plainly outside ICANN's mandate. ICANN then criticized ICM for taking on that task and complained that it would have to undertake the task if ICM were unable to fulfill it. But ICANN could not properly require ICM to regulate content on the Internet and ICM did not undertake to do so.

93. The above exposition of the contentions of ICM, while long, does not exhaust the full range of its arguments, which were developed at length and in detail in its Memorial and in oral argument. It does not, for example, fully set out its contentions on the effect of international law and the local law on these proceedings. The essence of that argument is that ICANN is bound to act in good faith, an argument that the Panel does not find it necessary to expound since the conclusion is not open to challenge and is not challenged by counsel for ICANN. ICANN does not accept ICM's reliance on principles of international law but it agrees that the principle of good faith is found in the corporate law of California and hence is applicable in the instant dispute.

94. The "Relief Requested" by ICM Registry consists, inter alia, of requesting that the Panel declare that its Declaration is binding upon ICM and ICANN; and that ICANN acted inconsistently with its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws by:

"i. Failing to conduct negotiations in good faith and to conclude an agreement with ICM to serve as registry operator for the .XXX sTLD;

"ii. Rejecting ICM's proposed agreement to serve as registry operator...

"iii. Rejecting ICM's application on 30 March 2007, after having previously concluded that it met the RFP criteria on 1 June 2005;

"iv. Rejecting ICM's application on 30 March 2007 on the basis of the five grounds set forth...none of which were based on criteria set forth in the RFP criteria...

"v. Rejecting ICM's application after ICANN had approved ICM to proceed to contract negotiations..." (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, pp. 265-267.)

The Contentions of ICANN

95. ICANN maintains that (a) the Independent Review Process is advisory, not arbitral; (b) the judgments of the ICANN Board are to be deferentially appraised; (c) the governing law is that of the State of California, not the principles of international law; and (d) in its treatment and disposition of the application of ICM Registry, ICANN acted consistently with its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.

The Nature of the Independent Review Process

96. ICANN invokes the provisions of the Bylaws that govern the IRP process, entitled, "Independent Review of Board Actions". Article IV, Section 3, provides that:

"1. ...ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

"2. Any person materially affected by a decision or action of the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws may submit a request for independent review of that decision or action.

"3. Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Panel ("IRP") which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles and Bylaws.

"4. The IRP shall be operated by an international arbitration provider appointed from time to time by ICANN ("the IRP Provider") using arbitrators ...nominated by that provider.

"5. Subject to the approval of the Board, the IRP Provider shall establish operating rules and procedures, which shall implement and be consistent with this Section 3.

"8. The IRP shall have the authority to:

...

b. declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; and

c. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP.

"12. Declarations of the IRP shall be in writing. The IRP shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties, and in its declaration shall specifically designate the prevailing party. The party not prevailing shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the IRP Provider, but in an extraordinary case the IRP may in its declaration allocate up to half of the costs of the IRP Provider to the prevailing party based upon the circumstances, including a consideration of the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest. Each party to the IRP proceedings shall bear its own expenses.

"13. The IRP operating procedures, and all petitions, claims and declarations, shall be posted on the Website when they become available.

"15. Where feasible, the Board shall consider the IRP declaration at the Board's next meeting." (C-5.)

97. ICANN contends that the foregoing terms make it clear that the IRP's declarations are advisory and not binding. The IRP provisions commit the Board to review and consideration of declarations of the Panel. The Bylaws direct the Board to "consider" the declaration. "The direction to 'consider' the Panel's declaration necessarily means that the Board has discretion whether and how to implement it; if the declaration were binding such as with a court judgment or binding arbitration ruling, there would be nothing to consider, only an order to implement." (ICANN's Response to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, p. 32.) ICANN's Board is specifically directed to "review" the Panel's declarations, not to implement them. Moreover, the Board is "not even required to review or consider the declaration immediately, or at any particular time," but is encouraged to do so at the next Board meeting, where "feasible", reinforcing the fact that the Board's review and consideration of the Panel's declaration does not require its acceptance. The Panel may "recommend", but not require, interim action. If final Panel declarations were binding, it would make no sense for interim remedies to be merely recommended to the Board. (Id., p. 33.)

98. ICANN maintains that the preparatory work of the Bylaws demonstrates that the Independent Review Process was designed to be advisory. The Draft Principles for Independent Review state that the IRP's authority would be persuasive, "rest[ing] on its independence, on the prestige and professional standing of its members, and on the persuasiveness of its reasoned opinions". But "the ICANN Board should retain ultimate authority over ICANN's affairs – after all, it is the Board...that will be chosen by (and is directly accountable to) the membership and supporting organizations". (Id., p. 34.) The primary pertinent document, "ICANN: A Blueprint for Reform," calls for the creation of "a process to require non-binding arbitration by an international arbitration body to review any allegation that the Board has acted in conflict with ICANN's Bylaws". ICM Registry's counsel in its negotiations with ICANN for a top-level domain, Ms. Burr, who as a senior official of the U.S. Department of Commerce was the principal official figure immediately involved in the creation and launching of ICANN, in addressing the independent review process, observed that “decisions will be nonbinding, because the Board will retain final decision-making authority”. (Ibid., p. 36.) In accepting recommendations for an independent review process that expressly disclaimed creation of a “Supreme Court” for ICANN, the Board changed the reference to “decisions” of the IRP to “declarations” precisely to avoid any inference that IRP determinations are binding decisions akin to those of a judicial or arbitral tribunal. (Ibid., p. 38.)

99. ICANN further points out that, while the IRP Provider selected by it is the American Arbitration Association’s International Centre for Dispute Resolution, and while its Rules apply to IRP proceedings, those Rules in their application to IRP were amended to omit provision for the binding effect of an award.

The Standard of Review is Deferential

100. ICANN contends that the actions of the ICANN Board are entitled to substantial deference from this Panel. It maintains that that conclusion follows from the terms of Article 1, Section 2 of the Bylaws that set out the core values of ICANN (supra, paragraph 5). Article 1, Section 2 of the Bylaws provides that, “In performing its mission, the following core values should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN”; and the core values referred to in paragraph 5 of this Declaration are then spelled out. Section 2 concludes:

“These core values are deliberately expressed in very general terms, so that they may provide useful and relevant guidance in the broadest possible range of circumstances. Because they are not narrowly prescriptive, the specific way in which they apply, individually and collectively, to each new situation will necessarily depend on many factors that cannot be fully anticipated or enumerated; and because they are statements of principle rather than practice, situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible. Any ICANN body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.” (C-5.)

101. ICANN argues that since, pursuant to the foregoing provision, the ICANN Board “shall exercise its judgment” in the application of competing core values, and since those core values embrace the neutral, objective and fair decision-making at issue in these proceedings, “the deference expressly accorded to the Board in implementing the core values applies..." ICANN continues:

"Thus, by its terms, the Bylaws' conferral of discretionary authority makes clear that any reasonable decision of the ICANN Board is, ipso facto, not inconsistent with the Bylaws and consequently must be upheld. Indeed, the Bylaws even go so far as to provide that outright departure from a core value is permissible in the judgment of the Board, so long as the Board reasonably 'exercise[s] its judgment' in determining that other relevant principles outweighed that value in the particular circumstances at hand."

While in the instant case, in ICANN's view, there was not even an arguable departure from the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws, "...because such substantial deference is in fact due, there is no basis whatsoever for a declaration in ICM's favor because the Board's decisions in this matter were, at a minimum, clearly justified and within the range of reasonable conduct." (ICANN's Response to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, pp. 45-47.)

102. ICANN further argues that the Bylaws governing the independent review process sustain this conclusion. Article 4, Section 3, "strictly limits the scope of independent review proceedings to the narrow question of whether ICANN acted in a manner 'inconsistent with' the Articles of Incorporation and the Bylaws. In confining the inquiry into whether ICANN's conduct was inconsistent with its governing documents, the presumption is one of consistency so that inconsistency must be established, rather than the reverse...independent review is not to be used as a mechanism to upset arguable or reasonable actions of the Board." (Ibid., p. 48.)

103. ICANN contends, moreover, that,

"Basic principles of corporate law supply an independent basis for the deference due to the reasonable judgments of the ICANN Board in this matter. It is black-letter law that 'there is a presumption that directors of a corporation have acted in good faith and to the best interest of the corporation'...In California...these principles require deference to actions of a corporate board of directors so long as the board acted 'upon reasonable investigation, in good faith and with regard for the best interests' of the corporation and 'exercised discretion within the scope of its authority'". This includes the boards of not-for-profit corporations." (Ibid., pp. 49-50.)

The Applicable Law of This Proceeding

104. ICANN contests ICM's invocation of principles of international law, in particular the principle of good faith, and allied principles, estoppel, legitimate expectations and abuse of right. It notes that ICM's invocation of international law depends upon a two-step argument: first, ICM interprets Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation, providing that ICANN will operate for the benefit of the Internet community "in conformity with relevant principles of international law", as a "choice-of-law" provision; second, ICM infers that "any violation of any principles of international law" constitutes a violation of Article 4 (thus allegedly falling within the Panel's jurisdiction to evaluate the consistency of ICANN's actions with its Articles and Bylaws).

105. ICANN contends that that two-step argument contravenes the plain language of the governing provisions as well as their drafting history. Article 4 of the Articles does not operate as a "choice-of-law" provision for the IRP processes prescribed in the Bylaws. Rather the provisions of the Bylaws and Articles, as construed in the light of the law of California, govern the claims before the Panel. Nor are the particular principles of international law invoked by ICM relevant to the circumstances at issue in these proceedings.

106. Article 4 is quoted in full in paragraph 3 of this Declaration. The specific activities that ICANN must carry out "in conformity with the relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law" are specified in Article 3 (supra, paragraph 2). Thus "relevant" in Article 4 means only principles of international law relevant to the activities specified in Article 3. "ICANN did not adopt principles of international law indiscriminately, but rather to ensure consistency between its policies developed for the world-wide Internet community and well-established substantive international law on matters relevant to various stakeholders in the global Internet community, such as general principles on trademark law and freedom of expression relevant to intellectual property constituencies and governments." (ICANN's Response to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, pp. 59-60.) The principles of international law relied upon by ICM in this proceeding – the requirement of good faith and related doctrines – are principles of general applicability, and are not specially directed to concerns relating to the Internet, such as freedom of expression or trademark law. Therefore, ICANN argues, they are not "relevant". (Ibid.) Article 4 does not operate as a choice-of-law provision requiring ICANN to adapt its conduct to any and all principles of international law. It is not worded as choice-of-law clauses are. As ICANN's expert, Professor David D. Caron notes, it is unlikely that a choice-of-law clause would designate three sources of law on the same level. It is the law of California, the place of ICANN's incorporation, that – by reason of ICANN's incorporation under the law of California -- governs how ICANN runs its business and interacts with another U.S. corporation regarding a contract to be performed within the United States. The IRP provisions of the Bylaws, drafted years after the Articles of Incorporation, and their drafting history, do not even mention Article 4 of the Articles.

107. Moreover, the specification of "relevant" principles of international law in Article 4 "must mean principles of international law that apply to a private entity such as ICANN" (id., p. 66.) As a private party, ICANN is not subject to law governing sovereigns. International legal principles do not apply to a dispute between private entities located in the same nation because the dispute may have global effects.

108. Furthermore, ICM's cited general principles perform no clarifying role in this proceeding. The applicable rules set forth in ICANN's Bylaws and Articles as well as California law render resort to general principles unnecessary. In any event, California law and the Bylaws and Articles themselves provide sufficient guidance for the Panel's analysis.

109. ICANN contends that each of ICM's key factual assertions is wrong. In view of the deference that should be accorded to the judgments of the ICANN Board, the Panel should declare that ICANN's conduct was not inconsistent with its Bylaws and Articles even if ICM's treatment of the facts were largely correct (as it is not). The issues presented to the ICANN Board by ICM's .XXX sTLD application were "difficult", ICANN's Board addressed them with "great care", and devoted "an enormous amount of time trying to determine the right course of action". ICM was fully heard; the Board deliberated openly and transparently. ICANN is unaware of a corporate deliberative process more open and transparent than its own. After this intensive process, the Board twice concluded that ICM's proposal should be rejected, "with no hint whatsoever of the 'bad faith' ICM alleges." (ICANN's Response to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, pp. 79-80.)

110. ICM's claims "begin with the notion that ICANN adopted, and was bound by, an inflexible, two-step procedure for evaluating sTLD applications. First, according to ICM, applications would be reviewed by the Evaluation Panel for the baseline selection criteria. Second, only after applications were finally and irrevocably approved by the ICANN Board would the applications proceed to contract negotiations with ICANN staff with no ability by the Board to address any of the issues that the Board had previously raised in conjunction with the sTLD application.” But the RFP refutes this contention. It does not suggest that the Board’s “allowance for an application to proceed to contract negotiations confirms the close of the evaluation process.” ICANN recalls the public statement of Mr. Pritz in Kuala Lumpur in 2004: “Upon completion of the technical and commercial negotiations, successful applicants will be presented to the ICANN Board with all the associated information, so the Board can independently review the findings along with the information and make their own adjustments. And then final decisions will be made by the Board, and they’ll authorize staff to complete or execute the agreements with the sponsoring organizations...” (Ibid., pp. 81-82.) It observes that Dr. Cerf affirmed that: “ICANN never intended that this would be a formal, ‘two-step’ process, where proceeding to contract negotiations automatically constituted a de facto final and irrevocable approval with respect to the baseline selection criteria, including sponsorship.” (At p. 82, quoting V. Cerf Witness Statement, para. 15.) ICANN maintains that there were “two overlapping phases in the evaluation of the sTLDs” and the Board always retained the right “to vote against a proposed sTLD should the Board find deficiencies in the proposed registry agreement or in the sTLD proposal as a whole”. (P. 83.) There was a two-stage process but the two phases could and often did overlap in time. This is confirmed not only by Dr. Cerf but by Dr. Twomey and the then Vice-Chairman of the Board, Alejandro Pisanty. Each explains that the ICANN Board retained the authority to review and assess the baseline RFP selection criteria even after an applicant was allowed to proceed to contract negotiations. After the June 1, 2005, vote, members supporting ICM’s application did not argue that the Board had already approved the .XXX sTLD. The following exchange with Dr. Cerf took place in the course of the hearing:

“Q. Now, ICM’s position in this proceeding is that if the board voted to proceed to contract negotiations, the board was at that time making a finding that a particular applicant had satisfied the technical, financial and sponsorship criteria and that that issue was closed. Is that consistent with your understanding of how the process worked?”

“A. Not, it’s not. The matter was discussed very explicitly during our consideration of the ICM proposal. We were using the contract negotiations as a means of clarifying whether or not...the sponsorship criteria could be or had been met...this was not a decision that all three of the criteria had been met.” (Tr. 601:4:13.)

111. ICM's evidence is not to the contrary. That evidence shows that there were two major steps in the evaluation process. It does not show that those steps could not be overlapping. The relevant question, not answered by ICM, is whether ICANN's Bylaws required these steps to be non-overlapping. "such that contract negotiations could not commence until the satisfaction of the RFP criteria was finally and irrevocably determined..." (Ibid., p. 84.)

112. ICM's claims are also based on the argument that, by its terms, the Board's resolutions of June 1, 2005 gave "unconditional" approval of the .XXX sTLD application. (The June 1, 2005 resolutions are set out supra, paragraph 19.) But nothing in the resolutions actually says that ICM's application satisfied the RFP criteria, including sponsorship. In fact, nothing in the resolutions expresses approval at all because it provides that "if", after entering negotiations, the applicant is able to negotiate commercial and technical terms for a contractual arrangement, those terms shall be presented to the Board for approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD. "The plain language of the resolutions makes clear that they did not themselves constitute approval of the .XXX sTLD application. The resolutions thus track the RFP, which makes clear that a 'final decision will be made by the Board' only after 'completion of the technical and commercial negotiations'". (Ibid., p. 86.)

113. ICANN maintains that as of June 2005, there remained numerous unanswered questions and concerns regarding ICM's ability to satisfy the baseline sponsorship criteria set forth in the RFP. An important purpose of the June 1 resolutions was to permit ICM to proceed to contract negotiations in an effort to determine whether ICM's sponsorship shortcomings could be resolved in the contract.

114. The ICANN Board also permitted other applicants for sTLDs -- .JOBS and .MOBI – to proceed to contract negotiations despite open questions relating to the initial RFP criteria. However, ICM was unique among the field of sTLD applicants due to "the extremely controversial nature of the proposed sTLD, and concerns as to whether ICM had identified a 'community' that existed and actually supported the proposed sTLD...there was a significant negative response to ICM's proposed .XXX sTLD by many adult entertainment providers, the very individuals and entities who logically would be in ICM's proposed community." (Ibid., p. 87.)

115. ICM's position is further refuted by continued discussion by the Board of sponsorship criteria at meetings subsequent to June 1, 2005. The fact that most Board members expressed concern about sponsorship shortcomings after the June 1, 2005, resolutions negates any notion that the Board had conclusively determined the sponsorship issue.

116. A member of the Board elected after the June 1, 2005, vote, Rita Rodin, expressed "some concerns about whether the [ICM] proposal met the criteria set forth in the RFP..." She said that she did not want to re-open issues if they had already been decided by the Board (supra, paragraphs 42-43). In response to her query, no one stated that the sponsorship issue had already been decided by the Board. (ICANN'S Response to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, p. 90.)

117. ICANN also draws attention to Dr. Twomey's letter of May 4, 2006 (supra, paragraph 37) in which he wrote that the Board's decision of June 1, 2005, was without prejudice to the Board's right to decide whether the contract reached with ICM meets all the criteria before the Board.

118. ICANN recalls that within days of the posting of the June 1, 2005, resolutions, GAC Chairman Tarmizi wrote Dr. Cerf expressing the GAC's "diverse and wide-ranging concerns" with the .XXX sTLD. The ICANN Board was required by the ICANN Bylaws to take account of the views of the GAC. Nor could ICANN have ignored concerns expressed by the U.S. Government and other governments. ICANN recalls the concerns expressed thereafter, in the Wellington Communique and otherwise. It observes that "some countries were concerned that, because the .XXX application would not require all pornography to be located within the .XXX domain, a new .XXX sTLD would simply result in the expansion of the number of domain names that involved pornography." (Ibid., p. 102.)

119. ICANN points out that:

"In revising its proposed registry agreement to address the GAC's concerns...ICM took the position that it would install 'appropriate measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content,' including monitoring such content globally. This was immediately controversial among many ICANN Board members because complaints about ICM's 'monitoring' would inevitably be sent to ICANN, which is neither equipped nor authorized to monitor (much less resolve) 'content-based' objections to Internet sites." (Ibid., pp. 103-104.)

120. ICANN recalls Board concerns that were canvassed at its meetings of May 10, 2006, (supra, paragraph 38) and February 12, 2007, (supra, paragraphs 41-45). Board members increasingly were concluding that the results promised by ICM were unachievable. Whether their conclusions were or were not incorrect is “irrelevant for purposes of determining whether the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles in rejecting ICM’s application.” (Ibid., p. 105.) Board doubts were accentuated by growing opposition to the .XXX sTLD from elements of the online adult entertainment industry (ibid.).

121. The Board’s May 10, 2006 vote (supra, paragraph 38) rejected ICM’s then current draft, but provided ICM “yet another opportunity to attempt to revise the agreement to conform to the RFP specifications. Notably, the Board’s decision to allow ICM to continue to work the problem is directly at odds with ICM’s position that the Board decided ‘for political reasons’ to reject ICM’s application; if so, it would have been much easier for the Board to reject ICM’s application in its entirety in 2006.” (Ibid., p. 106.)

122. At its meeting of February 12, 2007, (supra, paragraphs 41-45), concerns in the Board about whether ICM’s application enjoyed the support of the community it purported to represent were amplified.

123. At the meeting of March 30, 2007 at which ICM’s application and agreement were definitively rejected, the majority was, first, concerned by ICM’s definition of its community to include only those members of the industry who supported the creation of .XXX sTLD and its exclusion from the sponsored community of all online adult entertainment industry members who opposed ICM’s application.

“Such self-selection and extreme subjectivity regarding what constituted the content that defined the .XXX community made it nearly impossible to determine which persons or services would be in or out of the community...without a precisely defined Sponsored TLD Community, the Board could not approve ICM’s sTLD application.” (Ibid., pp. 108-109.)

124. Second, ICM’s proposed community was not adequately differentiated; ICM failed to demonstrate that excluded providers had separate needs or interests from the community it sought to represent. As contract negotiations progressed, it became increasingly evident that ICM was actually proposing an unsponsored TLD for adult entertainment, “a uTLD, disguised as an sTLD, just as ICM had proposed in 2000.” (Ibid., p. 209.)

125. Third, whatever community support ICM may have had at one time, it had “fallen apart by early 2007” (ibid.). During the final public comment period in 2007, “a vast majority of the comments posted to the public forum and sent to ICANN staff opposed ICM’s .XXX sTLD...” (p. 110). “Broad-based support” was lacking. (P. 111.) 75,000 pre-registrations for .XXX... “Out of the over 4.2 million adult content websites in operation" hardly represents broad-based support. (P. 115.)

126. Fourth, ICM could not demonstrate that it was adding new and valuable space to the Internet name space, as required by the RFP. "In fact, the existence of industry opposition to the .XXX sTLD demonstrated that the needs of online adult entertainment industry members were met via existing TLDs without any need for a new TLD." (P. 112.)

127. Fifth and finally, ICM and its supporting organization, IFFOR, proposed to "proactively reach out to governments and international organizations to provide information about IFFOR's activities and solicit input and participation". But such measures "diluted the possibility that their policies would be 'primarily in the interests of the Sponsored TLD Community' as required by the sponsorship selection criteria." (Pp. 112-113.)

128. ICANN concludes that, "despite the good-faith efforts of both ICANN and ICM over a lengthy period of time, the majority of the Board determined that ICM could not satisfy, among other things, the sponsorship requirements of the RFP." Reasonable people might disagree – as did a minority of the Board – "but that disagreement does not even approach a violation of a Bylaw or Article of Incorporation." (P. 113.)

129. The treatment of ICM's application was procedurally fair. It was not the object of discrimination. Applications for .JOBS and .MOBI were also allowed to proceed to contractual negotiations despite open questions relating to selection criteria. ICANN applied documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness. ICM was provided with every opportunity to address the concerns of the Board and the GAC. ICANN did not reject ICM's application only for reasons of public policy (although they were important). ICM's application was rejected because of its inability to show how the sTLD would meet sponsorship criteria. The Board ultimately rejected ICM's application for "many of the same sponsorship concerns noted in the initial recommendation of the Evaluation Panel." (Ibid., p. 124.) It also rejected the application because ICM's proposed registry agreement "would have required ICANN to manage the content of the .XXX sTLD" (p. 126). The Board took into account the views of the GAC in arriving at its independent judgment. "Had the ICANN Board taken the view that the GAC's views must in every case be followed without independent judgment, the Board presumably would have rejected ICM's application in late 2005 or early 2006, rather than waiting another full year for the parties to try to identify a resolution that would have allowed the sTLD to proceed." (Ibid.)

130. As to whether ICM was treated unfairly and was the object of discrimination, ICANN relies on the following statement of Dr. Cerf at the hearing:

“...I am surprised at an assertion that ICM was treated unfairly...the board could have simply accepted the recommendations of the evaluation teams and rejected the proposal at the outset...the board went out of its way to try to work with ICM through the staff to achieve a satisfactory agreement. We spent more time on this particular proposal than any other...We repeatedly defended our continued consideration of this proposal...If...ICM believes that it was treated in a singular way, I would agree that we spent more time and effort on this than any other proposal that came to the board with regard to sponsored TLDs.” (Tr. 654:3-655:7.)

PART FOUR: THE ANALYSIS OF THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW PANEL

The Nature of the Independent Review Panel Process

131. ICM and ICANN differ on the question of whether the Declaration to be issued by the Independent Review Panel is binding upon the parties or advisory. The conflicting considerations advanced by them are summarized above at paragraphs 51 and 91-94. In the light of them, the Panel acknowledges that there is a measure of ambiguity in the pertinent provisions of the Bylaws and in their preparatory work.

132. ICANN's officers testified before committees of the U.S. Congress that ICANN had installed provision for appeal to “independent arbitration” (supra, paragraph 55). Article IV, Section 3 of ICANN's Bylaws specifies that, “The IRP shall be operated by an international arbitration provider appointed from time to time by ICANN...using arbitrators...nominated by that provider”. The provider so chosen is the American Arbitration Association's International Centre for Dispute Resolution (“ICDR”), whose Rules (at C-11) in Article 27 provide for the making of arbitral awards which “shall be final and binding on the parties. The parties undertake to carry out any such award without delay.” The Rules of the ICDR “govern the arbitration” (Article 1). It is unquestioned that the term, “arbitration” imports production of a binding award (in contrast to conciliation and mediation). Federal and California courts have so held. The Supplementary Procedures adopted to supplement the independent review procedures set forth in ICANN's Bylaws provide that the ICDR's “International Arbitration Rules...will govern the process in combination with these Supplementary Procedures”. (C-12.) They specify that the Independent Review Panel refers to the neutrals “appointed to decide the issue(s) presented” and further specify that, “DECLARATION refers to the decisions/opinions of the IRP”. “The DECLARATION shall specifically designate the prevailing party.” All of these elements are suggestive of an arbitral process that produces a binding award.

133. But there are other indicia that cut the other way, and more deeply. The authority of the IRP is “to declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws” – to “declare”, not to “decide” or to “determine”. Section 3(8) of the Bylaws continues that the IRP shall have the authority to “recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP”. The IRP cannot “order” interim measures but do no more than “recommend” them, and this until the Board “reviews” and “acts upon the opinion” of the IRP. A board charged with reviewing an opinion is not charged with implementing a binding decision. Moreover, Section 3(15) provides that, “Where feasible, the Board shall consider the IRP declaration at the Board’s next meeting.” This relaxed temporal proviso to do no more than “consider” the IRP declaration, and to do so at the next meeting of the Board “where feasible”, emphasizes that it is not binding. If the IRP’s Declaration were binding, there would be nothing to consider but rather a determination or decision to implement in a timely manner. The Supplementary Procedures adopted for IRP, in the article on “Form and Effect of an IRP Declaration”, significantly omit the provision of Article 27 of the ICDR Rules specifying that award “shall be final and binding on the parties”. (C-12.) Moreover, the preparatory work of the IRP provisions summarized above in paragraph 93 confirms that the intention of the drafters of the IRP process was to put in place a process that produced declarations that would not be binding and that left ultimate decision-making authority in the hands of the Board.

134. In the light of the foregoing considerations, it is concluded that the Panel’s Declaration is not binding, but rather advisory in effect.

The Standard of Review Applied by the Independent Review Process

135. For the reasons summarized above in paragraph 56, ICM maintains that this is a de novo review in which the decisions of the ICANN Board do not enjoy a deferential standard of review. For the reasons summarized above in paragraphs 100-103, ICANN maintains that the decisions of the Board are entitled to deference by the IRP.

136. The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers is a not-for-profit corporation established under the law of the State of California. That law embodies the “business judgment rule”. Section 309 of the California Corporations Code provides that a director must act “in good faith, in a manner such director believes to be in the best interests of the corporation and its shareholders...” and shields from liability directors who follow its provisions. However ICANN is no ordinary non-profit California corporation. The Government of the United States vested regulatory authority of vast dimension and pervasive global reach in ICANN. In “recognition of the fact that the Internet is an international network of networks, owned by no single nation, individual or organization” – including ICANN -- ICANN is charged with “promoting the global public interest in the operational stability of the Internet...” ICANN “shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law...” Thus, while a California corporation, it is governed particularly by the terms of its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, as the law of California allows. Those Articles and Bylaws, which require ICANN to carry out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law, do not specify or imply that the International Review Process provided for shall (or shall not) accord deference to the decisions of the ICANN Board. The fact that the Board is empowered to exercise its judgment in the application of ICANN’s sometimes competing core values does not necessarily import that that judgment must be treated deferentially by the IRP. In the view of the Panel, the judgments of the ICANN Board are to be reviewed and appraised by the Panel objectively, not deferentially. The business judgment rule of the law of California, applicable to directors of California corporations, profit and non-profit, in the case of ICANN is to be treated as a default rule that might be called upon in the absence of relevant provisions of ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws and of specific representations of ICANN – as in the RFP – that bear on the propriety of its conduct. In the instant case, it is those Articles and Bylaws, and those representations, measured against the facts as the Panel finds them, which are determinative.

The Applicable Law of this Proceeding

137. The contrasting positions of the parties on the applicable law of this proceeding are summarized above at paragraphs 59-62 and 104-109. Both parties agree that the “local law” referred to in the provision of Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation – “The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law” – is the law of California. But they differ on what are “relevant principles of international law” and their applicability to the instant dispute.

138. In the view of ICM Registry, principles of international law are applicable; that straightforwardly follows from their specification in the foregoing phrase of Article 4 of the Articles, and from the reasons given in introducing that specification. (Supra, paragraphs 53-54.) Principles of international law in ICM’s analysis include the general principles of law recognized as a source of international law in Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Those principles are not confined, as ICANN argues, to the few principles that may be relevant to the interests of Internet stakeholders, such as principles relating to trademark law and freedom of expression. Rather they include international legal principles of general applicability, such as the fundamental principle of good faith and allied principles such as estoppel and abuse of right. ICM’s expert, Professor Goldsmith, observes that there is ample precedent in international contracts and in the holdings of international tribunals for the proposition that non-sovereigns may choose to apply principles of international law to the determination of their rights and to the disposition of their disputes.

139. ICANN and its expert, Professor David Caron, maintain that international law essentially governs relations among sovereign States; and that to the extent that such principles are “relevant” in this case, it is those few principles that are applicable to a private non-profit corporation that bear on the activities of ICANN described in Article 3 of its Articles of Incorporation (supra, paragraph 2). General principles of law, such as that of good faith, are not imported by Article 4 of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation; still less are principles derived from treaties that protect legitimate expectations. Nor is Article 4 of the Articles a choice-of-law provision; in fact, no governing law has been specified by the disputing parties in this case. If ICANN, by reason of its functions, is to be treated as analogous to public international organizations established by treaty (which it clearly is not), then a relevant principle to be extracted and applied from the jurisprudence of their administrative tribunals is that of deference to the discretionary authority of executive organs and of bodies whose decisions are subject to review.

140. In the view of the Panel, ICANN, in carrying out its activities “in conformity with the relevant principles of international law,” is charged with acting consistently with relevant principles of international law, including the general principles of law recognized as a source of international law.

That follows from the terms of Article 4 of its Articles of Incorporation and from the intentions that animated their inclusion in the Articles, an intention that the Panel understands to have been to subject ICANN to relevant international legal principles because of its governance of an intrinsically international resource of immense importance to global communications and economies. Those intentions might not be realized were Article 4 interpreted to exclude the applicability of general principles of law.

141. That said, the differences between the parties on the place of principles of international law in these proceedings are not of material moment to the conclusions that the Panel will reach. The paramount principle in play is agreed by both parties to be that of good faith, which is found in international law, in the general principles that are a source of international law, and in the corporate law of California.

The Consistency of the Action of the ICANN Board with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws

142. The principal – and difficult – issue that the Panel must resolve is whether the rejection by the ICANN Board of the proposed agreement with ICM Registry and its denial of the application’s request for delegation of the .XXX sTLD was or was not consistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The conflicting contentions of the parties on this central issue have been set forth above (paragraphs 63-93, 109-131).

143. The Panel will initially consider the primary questions of whether by adopting the resolutions of June 1, 2005, the ICANN Board determined that the application of ICM Registry met the sponsorship criteria, and, if so, whether that determination was definitive and irrevocable.

144. The parties agree that, pursuant to the RFP, applications for sTLDs were to be dealt with in two stages. First, the Evaluation Panel was to review applications and recommend those that met the selection criteria. Second, those applicants that did meet the selection criteria were to proceed to negotiate commercial and technical terms of a contract with ICANN’s President and General Counsel. If and when those terms were agreed upon, the resultant draft contract was to be submitted to the Board for approval. As it turned out, the Board was not content with the fact that the Evaluation Panel positively recommended only a few applications. Accordingly the Board itself undertook to consider and decide whether the other applications met the selection criteria.

145. In the view of the Panel, which has weighed the diverse evidence with care, the Board did decide by adopting its resolutions of June 1, 2005, that the application of ICM Registry for a sTLD met the selection criteria, in particular the sponsorship criteria. ICM contends that that decision was definitive and irrevocable. ICANN contends that, while negotiating commercial and technical terms of the contract, its Board continued to consider whether or not ICM's application met sponsorship criteria, that it was entitled to do so, and that, in the course of that process, further questions about ICM's application arose that were not limited to matters of sponsorship, which the Board also ultimately determined adversely to ICM's application.

146. The considerations that militate in favor of ICM's position are considerable. They are summarized above in paragraphs 63, 65 and 66. ICM argues that these considerations must prevail because they are sustained by contemporary documentary evidence, whereas the contrary arguments of ICANN are not.

147. The Panel accepts the force of the foregoing argument of ICM insofar as it establishes that the June 1, 2005, resolutions accepted that ICM's application met the sponsorship criteria. The points summarized in subparagraphs (a) through (i) of paragraph 63 above are in the view of the Panel not adequately refuted by the recollections of ICANN's witnesses, distinguished as they are and candid as they were. Their current recollection, the sincerity of which the Panel does not doubt, is that it was their understanding in adopting the June 1, 2005 resolution that the Board was entitled to continue to examine whether ICM's application met the sponsorship criteria, even if it had by adopting that resolution found those criteria to have been provisionally met (which they challenge). While that understanding is not supported by factors (a) through (i) of paragraph 63, it nevertheless can muster substantial support on the question of whether any determination that sponsorship criteria had been met was subject to reconsideration.

148. Support on that aspect of the matter consists of the following:

- (a) The resolutions of June 1, 2005 (supra, paragraph 19) make no reference to the satisfaction of sponsorship criteria or to whether that question is definitively resolved.
- (b) Those resolutions however expressly provide that the approval and authorization of the Board is required to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD; that being so, the Board viewed itself to be entitled to review all elements of the agreement before approving and authorizing it, including whether sponsorship criteria were met.

- (c) At the meeting of the GAC in July, 2005, some six weeks after the adoption by the Board of its resolutions of June 1, in the course of preparing the GAC Communique, the GAC Chair "confirmed that, having consulted the ICANN Legal Counsel, GAC could still advise ICANN about the .xxx proposal, should it decide to do so." (Supra, paragraph 24.) Since on the advice of counsel the GAC could still advise ICANN about the .XXX proposal, and since questions had been raised in the GAC about whether ICM's application met sponsorship criteria in the light of the appraisal of the Evaluation Panel, it may seem to follow that that advice could embrace the question of whether sponsorship criteria had been met and whether any such determination was subject to reconsideration. In point of fact, after June 1, 2005, a number of members of the GAC challenged or questioned the desirability of approving the ICM application on a variety of grounds, including sponsorship (supra, paragraphs 21-25, 40).

- (d) At its teleconference of September 15, 2005, there was "lengthy discussion involving nearly all of the directors regarding the sponsorship criteria..." (supra, paragraph 32). That imports that the members of the Board did not regard the question of sponsorship criteria to have been closed by the adoption of the resolutions of June 1, 2005.

- (e) In a letter of May 4, 2006, the President Twomey wrote the Chairman and Members of the GAC noting

"that the Board decision as to the .XXX application is still pending...the Board voted to authorize staff to enter into contractual negotiations without prejudicing the Board's right to evaluate the resulting contract and to decide whether it meets all of the criteria before the Board including public policy advice such as might be offered by the GAC... Due to the subjective nature of the sponsorship related criteria that were reviewed by the Sponsorship Evaluation Team, additional materials were requested from each applicant to be supplied directly for Board review and consideration...In some instances, such as with .XXX, while the additional materials provided sufficient clarification to proceed with contractual discussions, the Board still expressed concerns about whether the applicant met all of the criteria, but took the view that such concerns could possibly be addressed by contractual obligations to be stated in a registry agreement." (C-188, and supra, paragraph 37.)

- (f) At a Board teleconference of February 12, 2007, ICANN's General Counsel asked the Board to consider "how ICM measures up against the RFP criteria," a request that implies that questions about whether such criteria had been met were not foreclosed. (Supra, paragraph 41.)
- (g) ICM provided data to ICANN staff, in the course of the preparation of its successive draft registry agreements, that bore on sponsorship. It has not placed in evidence contemporaneous statements that in its view such data was not relevant to continued consideration of its application on the ground that it had met sponsorship criteria or that the Board's June 1, 2005 resolutions foreclosed further consideration of sponsorship criteria. It is understandable that it did not do so, because it was in the process of endeavoring to respond positively to every request of the ICANN Board and staff that it could meet in the hope of promoting final approval of its application; but nevertheless that ICM took part in a continuing dialogue on sponsorship criteria suggests that it too did not regard, or at any rate, treat, that question as definitively resolved by adopted of the June 1, 2005 resolutions.
- (h) When Rita Rodin, a new member of the Board, raised concerns about ICM's meeting of sponsorship criteria at the Board's teleconference of February 12, 2007, she said that she did "not wish to reopen issues if they have already been decided by the Board" and asked the President and General Counsel to confirm that the question was open for discussion. There was no direct reply but the tenor of the subsequent discussion indicates that the Board did not view the question as closed. (During the Board's debate over adoption of its climactic resolution of March 30, 2007, Susan Crawford said that opposition to ICM's application was not sufficient "to warrant revisiting the question of the sponsorship strength of this TLD which I personally believe to be closed.") (Supra, paragraph 52.)

149. While the Panel has concluded that by adopting its resolutions of June 1, 2005, the Board found that ICM's application met financial, technical and sponsorship criteria, less clear is whether that determination was subject to reconsideration. The record is inconclusive, for the conflicting reasons set forth above in paragraphs 63, 65 and 66 (on behalf of ICM) and paragraph 149 (on behalf of ICANN). The Panel nevertheless is charged with arriving at a conclusion on the question. In appraising whether ICANN on this issue "applied documented policies, neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness" (Bylaws, Section 2(8), the Panel finds instructive the documented policy stated in the Board's Carthage resolution of October 31, 2003 on "Finalization of New sTLD RFP," namely, that an agreement "reflecting the commercial and technical terms shall be negotiated upon the successful completion of the sTLD selection process." (C-78, p. 4.) In the Panel's view, the sTLD process was "successfully completed", as that term is used in the Carthage RFP resolution, in the case of ICM Registry with the adoption of the June 1, 2005, resolutions. ICANN should, pursuant to the Carthage documented policy, then have proceeded to conclude an agreement with ICM on commercial and technical terms, without reopening whether ICM's application met sponsorship criteria. As Dr. Williams, chair of the Evaluation Panel, testified, the RFP process did not contemplate that new criteria could be added after the [original] criteria had been satisfied. (Tr. 374: 1719). It is pertinent to observe that the GAC's proposals for new TLDs generally exclude consideration of new criteria (supra, paragraph 46).

150. In so concluding, the Panel does not question the integrity of the ICANN Board's disposition of the ICM Registry application, still less that of any of the Board's members. It does find that reconsideration of sponsorship criteria, once the Board had found them to have been met, was not in accord with documented policy. If, by way of analogy, there was a construction contract at issue, the party contracting with the builder could not be heard to argue that specifications and criteria defined in invitations to tender can be freely modified once past the qualification stage; the conditions of any such modifications are carefully circumscribed. Admittedly in the instant case the Board was not operating in a context of established business practice. That fact is extenuating, as are other considerations set out above. The majority of the Board appears to have believed that was acting appropriately in reconsidering the question of sponsorship (although a substantial minority vigorously differed). The Board was pressed to do so by the Government of the United States and by quite a number of other influential governments, and ICANN was bound to "duly take into account" the views of those governments. It is not at fault because it did so. It is not possible to estimate just how influential expressions of governmental positions were. They were undoubtedly very influential but it is not clear that they were decisive. If the Board simply had yielded to governmental pressure, it would have disposed of the ICM application much earlier. The Panel does not conclude that the Board, absent the expression of those governmental positions, would necessarily have arrived at a conclusion favorable to ICM. It accepts the affirmation of members of the Board that they did not vote against acceptance of ICM's application because of governmental pressure. Certainly there are those, including Board members, who understandably react negatively to pornography, and, in some cases, their reactions may be more visceral than rational. But they may also have had doubts, as did the Board, that ICM would be able successfully to achieve what it claimed .XXX would achieve.

151. The Board's resolution of March 30, 2007, rejecting ICM's proposed agreement and denying its request for delegation of the .XXX sTLD lists four grounds for so holding in addition to failure to meet sponsored community criteria (supra, paragraph 47). The essence of these grounds appears to be the Board's understanding that the ICM application "raises significant law enforcement compliance issues ... therefore obligating ICANN to acquire responsibility related to content and conduct ... there are credible scenarios that lead to circumstances in which ICANN would be forced to assume an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content, which is inconsistent with its technical mandate." ICM interprets these grounds, and statements of Dr. Twomey and Dr. Cerf, as seeking to impose on ICM responsibility for "enforcing restrictions around the world on access to illegal and offensive content" (supra, paragraph 66-67). ICM avers that it never undertook "to enforce the laws of the world on pornography", an undertaking that it could never discharge. It did undertake, in the event of the approval and activation of .XXX, to install tools that would make it far easier for governments to restrict access to content that they deemed illegal and offensive. ICM argues that its application was rejected in part because of its inability to comply with a contractual undertaking to which it never had agreed in the first place (supra, paragraphs 66-71). To the extent that this is so – and the facts and the conclusions drawn from the facts by the ICANN Board in its resolution of March 30, 2007, in this regard are not fully coherent – the Panel finds ground for questioning the neutral and objective performance of the Board, and the consistency of its so doing with its obligation not to single out ICM Registry for disparate treatment.

PART FIVE: CONCLUSIONS OF THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW PANEL

152. The Panel concludes, for the reasons stated above, that:

First, the holdings of the Independent Review Panel are advisory in nature; they do not constitute a binding arbitral award.

Second, the actions and decisions of the ICANN Board are not entitled to deference whether by application of the "business judgment" rule or otherwise; they are to be appraised not deferentially but objectively.

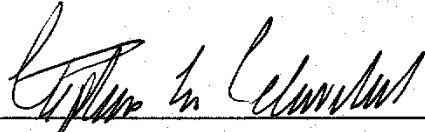

Third, the provision of Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation prescribing that ICANN "shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law," requires ICANN to operate in conformity with relevant general principles of law (such as good faith) as well as relevant principles of international law, applicable international conventions, and the law of the State of California.

Fourth, the Board of ICANN in adopting its resolutions of June 1, 2005, found that the application of ICM Registry for the .XXX sTLD met the required sponsorship criteria.

Fifth, the Board's reconsideration of that finding was not consistent with the application of neutral, objective and fair documented policy.

Sixth, in respect of the first foregoing holding, ICANN prevails; in respect of the second foregoing holding, ICM Registry prevails; in respect of the third foregoing holding, ICM Registry prevails; in respect of the fourth foregoing holding, ICM Registry prevails; and in respect of the fifth foregoing holding, ICM Registry prevails. Accordingly, the prevailing party is ICM Registry. It follows that, in pursuance of Article IV, Section 3(12) of the Bylaws, ICANN shall be responsible for bearing all costs of the IRP Provider. Each party shall bear its own attorneys' fees. Therefore, the administrative fees and expenses of the International Centre for Dispute Resolution, totaling $4,500.00, shall be borne entirely by ICANN, and the compensation and expenses of the Independent Review Panel, totaling $473,744.91, shall be borne entirely by ICANN. ICANN shall accordingly reimburse ICM Registry with the sum of $241,372.46, representing that portion of said fees and expenses in excess of the apportioned costs previously incurred by ICM Registry.

Judge Tevrizian is in agreement with the first foregoing conclusion but not the subsequent conclusions. His opinion follows.

CONCURRING AND DISSENTING OPINION

I concur and expressly join in the Panel's conclusion that the holdings of the Independent Review Panel are advisory in nature and do not constitute a binding arbitral award. I adopt the rationale and the reasons stated by the Panel on this issue only.

However, I must respectfully dissent from my learned colleagues as to the remainder of their findings. I am afraid that the majority opinion will undermine the governance of the internet community by permitting any disgruntled person, organization or governmental entity to second guess the administration of one of the world's most important technological resources.

I

INTRODUCTION

The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (hereinafter "ICANN") is a uniquely created institution: a global, private, not-for-profit organization incorporated under the laws of the State of California (Calif. Corp. Code 5100, et seq.) exercising plenary control over one of the world's most important technological resources: the Internet Domain Name System or "DNS." The DNS is the gateway to the nearly infinite universe of names and numbers that allow the Internet to function.

ICANN is a public benefit, non-profit corporation that was established under the law of the State of California on September 30, 1998. ICANN's Articles of Incorporation were finalized and adopted on November 21, 1998, and its By-Laws were finalized and adopted on the same day as its Articles of Incorporation.

Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation sets forth the standard of conduct under which ICANN is required to carry out its activities and mission to protect the stability, integrity and utility of the Internet Domain Name System on behalf of the global Internet community pursuant to a series of agreements with the United States Department of Commerce. ICANN is headquartered in Marina del Rey, California, U.S.A.

Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation specifically provide:

"The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets. To this effect, the Corporation shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations."

ICANN serves the function as the DNS root zone administrator to ensure and is required by its Articles of Incorporation to be a neutral and open facilitator of Internet coordination. ICANN's function and purpose was never meant to be content driven in any respect.

The Articles of Incorporation provide that ICANN is managed by a Board of Directors ("Board"). The Board consists of 15 voting directors and 6 non-voting liaisons from around the world, "who in the aggregate [are to] display diversity in geography, culture, skills, experience and perspective." (Article VI, § 2). The voting directors are composed of: (1) six representatives of ICANN's Supporting Organizations, which are sub-groups dealing with specific sections of the policies under ICANN's purview; (2) eight independent representatives of the general public interest, currently selected through ICANN's Nominating Committee, in which all the constituencies of ICANN are represented; and (3) the President and CEO, who is appointed by the rest of the Board. Consistent with ICANN's mandate to provide private sector technical leadership in the management of the DNS, "no official of a national government" may serve as a director. (Article VI, § 4). In carrying out its functions, it is obvious that ICANN is expected to solicit and will receive input from a wide variety of Internet stakeholders and participants.

ICANN operates through its Board of Directors, a Staff, An Ombudsman, a Nominating Committee for Directors, three Supporting Organizations, four Advisory Committees and numerous other stakeholders that participate in the unique ICANN process. (By-Laws Articles V through XI).

As was stated earlier, ICANN was formed under the laws of the State of California as a public benefit, non-profit corporation. As such, it would appear that California Corporations Code Section 5100, et seq., together with ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws, control its governance and accountability.

In general, a non-profit director's fiduciary duties include the duty of care, which includes an obligation of due inquiry and the duty of loyalty among others. The term "fiduciary" refers to anyone who holds a position requiring trust, confidence and scrupulous exercise of good faith and candor. It includes anyone who has a duty, created by a particular undertaking, to act primarily for the benefit of others in matters connected with the undertaking. A fiduciary relationship is one in which one person reposes trust and confidence in another person, who "must exercise a corresponding degree of fairness and good faith." (Blacks Law Dictionary). The type of persons who are commonly referred to as fiduciaries include corporate directors. The California Corporation's Code makes no distinction between directors chosen by election and directors chosen by selection or designation in the application of fiduciary duties.

Directors of non-profit corporations in California owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation they serve and to its members, if any. See Raven's Cove Townhomes, Inc. v. Knuppe Dev. Co., (1981) 114 CA3d 783, 799; Burt v. Irvine Co., (1965) 237 CA2d 828, 852. See also, Harvey v. Landing Homeowners Assn., (2008) 162 CA4th 809, 821-822.

The "business judgment rule" is the standard the California courts apply in deciding whether a director, acting without a financial interest in the decision, satisfied the requirements of careful conduct imposed by the California Corporations Code. See Gaillard v. Natomas Co., (1989) 208 CA3d 1250, 1264. The rule remains a creature of common law. Some California courts define it as a standard of reasonable conduct. See Burt v. Irvine Co., (1965) 237 CA2d 828, while others speak of actions taken in good faith. See Marble v. Latchford Glass Co., (1962) 205 CA2d 171. While, still others examine whether the director "rationally believes that the business judgment is in the best interests of the corporation." See Lee v. Interinsurance Exch., (1996) 50 CA4th 694.

The business judgment rule is codified in Section 309 of the California Corporations Code, which provides that a director must act "in good faith, in a manner such director believes to be in the best interests of the corporation and its shareholders and with such care, including reasonable inquiry, as an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would use under similar circumstances." Cal. Corp. Code § 309(a); see also Lee v. Interinsurance Exch., (1996) 50 CA4th 694, 714. Section 309 shields from liability directors who follow its provisions: "A person who performs the duties of a director in accordance with subdivisions (a) and (b) shall have no liability based upon any alleged failure to discharge the person's obligations as a director." Cal. Corp. Code § 309 (c).

II

THE ACTIONS OF THE ICANN BOARD OF DIRECTORS ARE ENTITLED TO SUBSTANTIAL DEFERENCE FROM THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW PANEL

ICANN's By-Laws, specifically Article I, § 2, sets forth 11 core values and concludes as follows:

"These core values are deliberately expressed in very general terms, so that they may provide useful and relevant guidance in the broadest possible range of circumstances. Because they are not narrowly prescriptive, the specific way in which they apply, individually and collectively, to each new situation will necessarily depend on many factors that cannot be fully anticipated or enumerated; and because they are statements of principle rather than practice, situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible. Any ICANN body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand, and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.”

The By-Laws make it clear that the core values must not be construed in a “narrowly prescriptive” manner. To the contrary, Article I, § 2, provides that the ICANN Board is vested with board discretion in implementing its responsibility such as is mentioned in the business judgment rule.

III

PRINCIPLES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW DO NOT APPLY

Article 4 of the ICANN Articles of Incorporation does not preempt the California Corporations Code as a “choice-of-law provision” importing international law into the independent review process. Rather, the substantive provisions of the By-Laws and Articles of Incorporation, as construed in light of the law of California, where ICANN is incorporated as a non-profit entity, should govern the claims before the Independent Review Panel (hereinafter “IRP”).

Professor Caron opined that principles of international law do not apply because, as a private entity, ICANN is not subject to that body of law governing sovereigns. To adopt a more expansive view is tantamount to judicial legislation or mischief.

IV

THE ICANN BOARD OF DIRECTORS DID NOT ACT INCONSISTENTLY WITH ICANN’S ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION AND BY-LAWS IN CONSIDERING AND ULTIMATELY DENYING ICM REGISTRY, LLC’S APPLICATION FOR A SPONSORED TOP LEVEL DOMAIN NAME

On March 30, 2007, the ICANN Board of Directors approved a resolution rejecting the proposed registry agreement and denying the application submitted by ICM Registry, LLC for a sponsored top level domain name. The findings of the Board was that the application was deficient in that the applicant, ICM Registry, LLC, (hereinafter “ICM”), failed to satisfy the Request For Proposal (“hereinafter “RFP”) posted June 24, 2003, in the following manner:

- “1. ICM’s definition of its sponsored TLD community was not capable of precise or clear definition;
2. ICM’s policies were not primarily in the interests of the sponsored TLD community;
3. ICM’s proposed community did not have needs and interests which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community;
4. ICM could not demonstrate that it had the requisite community support; and,
5. ICM was not adding new and valuable space to the Internet name space.”

On December 15, 2003, ICANN posted a final RFP for a new round of sponsored Top Level Domain Names (hereinafter “STLD”). On March 16, 2004, ICM submitted its application for the .XXX STLD name. From the inception, ICM knew that its .XXX application would be controversial. From the time that ICM submitted its applications until the application was finally denied on March 30, 2007, ICM never was able to clearly define what the interests of the .XXX community would be or that ICM had adequate support from the community it sought to represent.

ICM has claimed during these proceedings that the RFP posted by ICANN established a non-overlapping two-step procedure for approving new STLDs, under which applications would first be tested for baseline criteria, and only after the applications were finally and irrevocably approved by the ICANN Board could the applications proceed to technical and commercial contract negotiations with ICANN staff. ICM forcefully argues that on June 1, 2005, the ICANN Board irrevocably approved the ICM .XXX STLD application so as to be granted vested rights to enter into registry agreement negotiations dealing with economic issues only. The evidence introduced at the independent review procedure refutes this contention. Nothing contained in the ICANN RFP permits this interpretation.

Before the ICANN Board could approve a STLD application, applicants had to satisfy the baseline selection criteria set forth in the RFP, including the technical, business, financial and sponsorship criteria, and also negotiate an acceptable registry contract with ICANN staff. A review of the relevant documents and testimony admitted into evidence established that the two phases could overlap in time.

The fact that most ICANN Board members expressed significant concerns about ICM’s sponsorship shortcomings after the June 1, 2005, resolutions negates any notion that the June 1, 2005, resolutions (which do not say that the Board is approving anything and, to the contrary, state clearly that the ICANN Board is not doing so) conclusively determined the sponsorship issue.

The sponsorship issues and shortcomings in ICM's application were also raised by ICANN Board members who joined the ICANN Board after the June 1, 2005, resolutions. Between the June 2005 and February 2007 ICANN Board meetings, there were a total of six new voting Board members (out of a total of fifteen) considering ICM's application.

Both Dr. Cerf and Dr. Pisanty testified during the evidentiary hearing that the ICANN Board's vote on June 1, 2005, made clear that the Board's vote was intended only to permit ICM to proceed with contract negotiations. Under no circumstances was ICANN bound by the vote to award the .XXX STLD to ICM because the resolution that the ICANN Board adopted was not a finding that ICM had satisfied the sponsorship criteria set forth in the Request for Proposal.

By August 9, 2005, ICM's first draft of the proposed .XXX STLD registry agreement was posted on ICANN's website and submitted to the ICANN Board for approval. ICANN's next Board meeting was scheduled for August 16, 2005, at which time the ICANN Board had planned on discussing the proposed agreement.

Within days of ICANN posting the proposed registry agreement, the Government Advisory Committee (hereinafter "GAC") Chairman wrote Dr. Cerf a letter expressing the GAC's diverse and wide ranging" concerns with the .XXX STLD and requesting that the ICANN Board provide additional time for governments to express their public policy concerns before the ICANN Board reached a final decision on the proposed registry agreement.

The GAC's input was significant and proper because the ICANN By-Laws require the ICANN Board to take into account advice from the GAC on public policy matters, both in formulation and adoption of policies. ICANN By-Laws Article XI, § 2.1 (j), provides: "The advice of the Governmental Advisory Committee on public policy matters shall be duly taken into account, both in the formulation and adoption of policies." Where the ICANN Board seeks to take actions that are inconsistent with the GAC's advice, the Board must tell the GAC why. Thus, it was perfectly acceptable, appropriate and fully consistent with the ICANN Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws for the ICANN Board to consider and to address the GAC's concerns.

Further, throughout 2005 and up to the ICANN Board's denial of the ICM .XXX STLD on March 30, 2007, a number of additional continuing concerns and issues appeared beyond those originally voiced by the evaluation panel at the beginning of the review process. Despite the best efforts of many and numerous opportunities, ICM could not satisfy these additional concerns and, most importantly, could not cure the continuing sponsorship defects.

In all respects, ICANN operated in a fair, transparent and reasoned manner in accordance with its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws.

V

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, I would give substantial deference to the actions of the ICANN Board of Directors taken on March 30, 2007, in approving a resolution rejecting the proposed registry agreement and denying the application submitted by ICM Registry, LLC for a sponsored top level domain name. I specifically reject any notion that there was any sinister motive by any ICANN Director, governmental entity or religious organization to undermine ICM Registry, LLC's application. In my opinion, the application was rejected on the merits in an open and transparent forum. On the basis of that, ICM Registry, LLC never satisfied the sponsorship requirements and criteria for a top level domain name.

The rejection of the business judgment rule will open the floodgates to increased collateral attacks on the decisions of the ICANN Board of Directors and undermine its authority to provide a reliable point of reference to exercise plenary control over the Internet Domain Name System. In addition, it will leave the ICANN Board in a very vulnerable position for politicization of its activities.

The business judgment rule establishes a presumption that the directors' and officers' decisions are based on sound business judgment, and it prohibits courts from interfering in business decisions made by the management in good faith and in the absence of a conflict of interest. Katz v. Chevron Corp., 22 Cal.App.4th 1352. In most cases, "the presumption created by the business judgment rule can be rebutted only by affirmative allegations of facts which, if proven, would establish fraud, bad faith, overreaching or an unreasonable failure to investigate material facts." The record in this case does not support such findings. In addition, interference with the discretion of the directors is not warranted in doubtful cases such as is present here. Lee v. Interinsurance Exch., 50 Cal.App.4th 694.

In Marble v. Latchford Glass Co., 205 Cal.App.2nd 171, the court stated that it would "not substitute its judgment for the business judgment of the board of directors made in good faith." Similarly, in Eldridge v. Tymshare, Inc., 186 Cal.App.3rd 767, the court stated that the business judgment rule "sets up a presumption that directors' decisions are based on sound business judgment. This presumption can be rebutted only by a factual showing of fraud, bad faith or gross overreaching." ICM Registry, LLC has not met the standard articulated by established law.

In the present case, regardless of how ICM Registry, LLC stylizes its allegations, the business judgment rule poses a substantial hurdle for ICM's effort which I submit was never met by the evidence presented. The evidence presented at the hearing held in this matter disclosed that at every step the decisions made by the ICANN Board were made in good faith, and for the benefit of the continued operation of ICANN in its role as exercising plenary control over one of the world's most important technological resources: the Internet Domain Name System.

Simply stated, as long as ICANN is incorporated and domiciled within the State of California, U.S.A., it is the undersigned's opinion that the standard of review to be used by the Independent Review Panel in judging the conduct of the ICANN board, is the abuse of discretion standard, based upon the business judgment rule, and not a de novo review of the evidence.

I. Introduction

1. This Final Declaration (“Declaration”) is issued in this Independent Review Process (“IRP”) pursuant to Article IV, §3 of the Bylaws of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“Bylaws”; “ICANN”). In accordance with the Bylaws, the conduct of this IPR is governed by the International Centre for Dispute Resolution’s (“ICDR”) International Dispute Resolution Procedures, amended and effective June 1, 2014 (“ICDR Rules”), as supplemented by the Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers Independent Review Process, dated December 21, 2011 (“Supplementary Procedures”).
2. Claimant, Vistaprint Limited (“Vistaprint”), is a limited company established under the laws of Bermuda. Vistaprint describes itself as “an Intellectual Property holding company of the publicly traded company, Vistaprint NV, a large online supplier of printed and promotional material as well as marketing services to micro businesses and consumers. It offers business and consumer marketing and identity products and services worldwide.”<sup>1</sup>
3. Respondent, ICANN, is a California not-for-profit public benefit corporation. As stated in its Bylaws, ICANN’s mission “is to coordinate, at the overall level, the global Internet’s system of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internet’s unique identifier systems.”<sup>2</sup> In its online Glossary, ICANN describes itself as “an internationally organized, non-profit corporation that has responsibility for Internet Protocol (IP) address space allocation, protocol identifier assignment, generic (gTLD) and country code (ccTLD) Top-Level Domain name system management, and root server system management functions.”<sup>3</sup>
4. As part of this mission, ICANN’s responsibilities include introducing new top-level domains (“TLDs”) to promote consumer choice and competition, while maintaining the stability and security of the domain name system (“DNS”).<sup>4</sup> ICANN has gradually expanded the DNS from the original six generic top-level domains (“gTLDs”)<sup>5</sup> to include 22 gTLDs and over 250 country-code TLDs.<sup>6</sup> However, in June 2008, in a significant step ICANN’s Board of Directors (“Board”) adopted recommendations developed by one of its policy development bodies, the Generic Names Supporting Organization (“GNSO”), for introducing additional new gTLDs.<sup>7</sup> Following further work, ICANN's Board in June 2011 approved the "New gTLD Program" and a corresponding set of guidelines for implementing the Program – the gTLD Applicant Guidebook ("Guidebook").<sup>8</sup> ICANN states that "[t]he New gTLD Program constitutes by far ICANN's most ambitious expansion of the Internet's naming system."<sup>9</sup> The Guidebook is a foundational document providing the terms and conditions for new gTLD applicants, as well as step-by-step instructions and setting out the basis for ICANN's evaluation of these gTLD applications.<sup>10</sup> As described below, it also provides dispute resolution processes for objections relating to new gTLD applications, including the String Confusion Objection procedure ("String Confusion Objection" or "SCO").<sup>11</sup> The window for submitting new gTLD applications opened on January 12, 2012 and closed on May 30, 2012, with ICANN receiving 1930 new gTLD applications.<sup>12</sup> The final version of the Guidebook was made available on June 4, 2012.<sup>13</sup>

5. This dispute concerns alleged conduct by ICANN's Board in relation to Vistaprint's two applications for a new gTLD string, ".WEBS", which were submitted to ICANN under the New gTLD Program. Vistaprint contends that ICANN's Board, through its acts or omissions in relation to Vistaprint's applications, acted in a manner inconsistent with applicable policies, procedures and rules as set out in ICANN's Articles of Incorporation ("Articles") and Bylaws, both of which should be interpreted in light of the Affirmation of Commitments between ICANN and the United States Department of Commerce ("Affirmation of Commitments").<sup>14</sup> Vistaprint also states that because ICANN's Bylaws require ICANN to apply established policies neutrally and fairly, the Panel must consider other ICANN policies relevant to the dispute, in particular, the policies in Module 3 of the Guidebook regarding ICANN's SCO procedures, which Vistaprint claims were violated.<sup>15</sup>
6. Vistaprint requests that the IRP Panel provide the following relief:
  - Find that ICANN breached its Articles, Bylaws, and the Guidebook;
  - Require that ICANN reject the determination of the Third Expert in the String

  - Award Vistaprint its costs in this proceeding; and
  - Award such other relief as the Panel may find appropriate or Vistaprint may request.
7. ICANN, on the other hand, contends that it followed its policies and processes at every turn in regards to Vistaprint’s .WEBS gTLD applications, which is all that it is required to do. ICANN states its conduct with respect to Vistaprint’s applications was fully consistent with ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws, and it also followed the procedures in the Guidebook. ICANN stresses that Vistaprint’s IRP Request should be denied.

II. Factual and Procedural Background

8. This section summarizes basic factual and procedural background in this case, while leaving additional treatment of the facts, arguments and analysis to be addressed in sections III (ICANN’s Articles, Bylaws, and Affirmation of Commitments), IV (Summary of Parties’ Contentions) and V (Analysis and Findings).

A. Vistaprint’s Application for .WEBS and the String Confusion Objection

9. Vistaprint’s submitted two applications for the .WEBS gTLD string, one a standard application and the other a community-based application.<sup>19</sup> Vistaprint states that it applied to operate the .WEBS gTLD with a view to reinforcing the reputation of its website

<sup>19</sup> Request, Annex 1 (Application IDs: 1-1033-22687 and 1-1033-73917). A community-based gTLD is a gTLD that is operated for the benefit of a clearly delineated community. An applicant designating its application as community-based must be prepared to substantiate its status as representative of the community it names in the application. A standard application is one that has not been designated as community-based. Response, ¶ 22 n. 22; see also Glossary of commonly used terms in the Guidebook, at <http://newgtlds.icann.org/en/applicants/glossary> (last accessed on Sept. 13, 2015).

creation tools and hosting services, known under the identifier “Webs”, and to represent the “Webs” community.<sup>20</sup> The .WEBS gTLD would identify Vistaprint as the Registry Operator, and the products and services under the .WEBS gTLD would be offered by and for the Webs community.<sup>21</sup>

10. Seven other applicants applied for the .WEB gTLD string.<sup>22</sup> Solely from the perspective of spelling, Vistaprint’s proposed .WEBS string differs by the addition of the letter “s” from the .WEB string chosen by these other applicants. On March 13, 2013, one of these applicants, Web.com Group, Inc. (the “Objector”), filed two identical String Confusion Objections as permitted under the Guidebook against Vistaprint’s two applications.<sup>23</sup> The Objector was the only .WEB applicant to file a SCO against Vistaprint’s applications. The Objector argued that the .WEBS and .WEB strings were confusingly similar from a visual, aural and conceptual perspective.<sup>24</sup> Vistaprint claims that the Objector’s “sole motive in filing the objection was to prevent a potential competitor from entering the gTLD market.”<sup>25</sup>

11. As noted above, Module 3 of the Guidebook is relevant to this IRP because it provides the objection procedures for new gTLD applications. Module 3 describes “the purpose of the objection and dispute resolution mechanisms, the grounds for lodging a formal objection to a gTLD application, the general procedures for filing or responding to an objection, and the manner in which dispute resolution proceedings are conducted.”<sup>26</sup> The module also discusses the guiding principles, or standards, that each dispute resolution panel will apply in reaching its expert determination. The Module states that

“All applicants should be aware of the possibility that a formal objection may be filed against any application, and of the procedures and options available in the event of such an objection.”<sup>27</sup>

12. Module 3, § 3.2 (Public Objection and Dispute Resolution Process) provides that

In filing an application for a gTLD, the applicant agrees to accept the applicability of this gTLD dispute resolution process. Similarly, an objector accepts the applicability of this gTLD dispute resolution process by filing its objection.

13. A formal objection may be filed on any one of four grounds, of which the SCO procedure is relevant to this case:

String Confusion Objection – The applied-for gTLD string is confusingly similar to an existing TLD

or to another applied-for gTLD string in the same round of applications.<sup>28</sup>

14. According to the Guidebook, the ICDR agreed to serve as the dispute resolution service provider (“DRSP”) to hear String Confusion Objections.<sup>29</sup> On May 6, 2013, the ICDR consolidated the handling of the two SCOs filed by the Objector against Vistaprint’s two .WEBS applications.<sup>30</sup>
15. Section 3.5 (Dispute Resolution Principles) of the Guidebook provides that the “objector bears the burden of proof in each case”<sup>31</sup> and sets out the relevant evaluation criteria to be applied to SCOs:
  - 3.5.1 String Confusion Objection

A DRSP panel hearing a string confusion objection will consider whether the applied-for gTLD string is likely to result in string confusion. String confusion exists where a string so nearly resembles another that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion. For a likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user. Mere association, in the sense that the string brings another string to mind, is insufficient to find a likelihood of confusion.
16. On May 23, 2013, Vistaprint filed its responses to the Objector’s String Confusion Objections.
17. On June 28, 2013, the ICDR appointed Steve Y. Koh as the expert to consider the Objections (the “First Expert”). In this IRP Vistaprint objects that this appointment was untimely.<sup>32</sup>
18. On 19 July 2013, the Objector submitted an unsolicited supplemental filing replying to Vistaprint’s response, to which Vistaprint objected.<sup>33</sup> Vistaprint claims that the supplemental submission should not have been accepted by the First Expert as it did not comply the New gTLD Objections Procedure.<sup>34</sup> The First Expert accepted the Objector’s submission and permitted Vistaprint to submit a sur-reply, which Vistaprint claims was subject to unfair conditions imposed by the First Expert.<sup>35</sup> Vistaprint filed its sur-reply on

<sup>31</sup> Guidebook, § 3.5. This standard is repeated in Article 20 of the Objection Procedure, which provides that “[t]he Objector bears the burden of proving that its Objection should be sustained in accordance with the applicable standards.”

In exceptional cases, the Panel may require a party to provide additional evidence.”

August 29, 2013.

19. On September 18, 2013 the ICDR informed the parties that the expert determination for the SCO case would be issued on or about October 4, 2013.<sup>36</sup> Vistaprint claims that this extension imposed an unjustified delay beyond the 45-day deadline for rendering a determination.<sup>37</sup>
20. On October 1, 2013, the ICDR removed the First Expert due to a conflict that arose. On October 14, 2013, the ICDR appointed Bruce W. Belding as the new expert (the “Second Expert”).<sup>38</sup> Vistaprint claims that the New gTLD Objections Procedure was violated when the First Expert did not maintain his independence and impartiality and the ICDR failed to react to Vistaprint’s concerns in this regard.<sup>39</sup>
21. On October 24, 2013, the Objector challenged the appointment of the Second Expert, to which Vistaprint responded on October 30, 2013. The challenge was based on the fact that the Second Expert had served as the expert in an unrelated prior string confusion objection, which Vistaprint maintained was not a reason for doubting the impartiality or independence of the Second Expert or accepting the challenge his appointment.<sup>40</sup> On November 4, 2013, the ICDR removed the Second Expert in response to the Objector’s challenge.<sup>41</sup> On November 5, 2013, Vistaprint requested that the ICDR reconsider its decision to accept the challenge to the appointment of the Second Expert. On November 8, 2013, the ICDR denied this request.<sup>42</sup> Vistaprint claims that the unfounded acceptance of the challenge to the Second Expert was a violation of the New gTLD Objections Procedure and the ICDR’s rules. The challenge was either unfounded and the ICDR should have rejected it, or it was founded, which would mean that the ICDR appointed the Second Expert knowing that justifiable doubts existed as to the Expert’s impartiality and independence.<sup>43</sup>
22. On November 20, 2013, the ICDR appointed Professor Ilhyung Lee to serve as the expert (the “Third Expert”) to consider the Objector’s string confusion objection. No party objected to the appointment of Professor Lee.<sup>44</sup>

Vistaprint states that the Objector’s challenge was “based solely on the fact that Mr. Belding had served as the Panel in an unrelated string confusion objection” administered by ICDR. Request, ¶ 37. ICDR “was necessarily aware” that Mr. Belding had served as the Panel in the string confusion objection proceedings. “If [ICDR] was of the opinion that the fact that Mr. Belding served as the Panel in previous proceedings could give rise to justifiable doubts as to the impartiality and independence of the Panel, it should never have appointed him in the case between Web.com and Vistaprint.”

23. On 24 January 2014, the Third Expert issued its determination in favor of the Objector, deciding that the String Confusion Objection should be sustained.<sup>45</sup> The Expert concluded that

“the <.webs> string so nearly resembles <.web> – visually, aurally and in meaning – that it is likely to cause confusion. A contrary conclusion, the Panel is simply unable to reach.”<sup>46</sup>

24. Moreover, the Expert found that

“given the similarity of <.webs> and <.web>..., it is probable, and not merely possible, that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user. This is not a case of ‘mere association’.”<sup>47</sup>

25. Vistaprint claims that the Third Expert failed to comply with ICANN’s policies by (i) unjustifiably accepting additional submissions without making an independent assessment, (ii) making an incorrect application of the burden of proof, and (iii) making an incorrect application of the substantive standard set by ICANN for String Confusion Objections.<sup>48</sup> In particular, Vistaprint claims that ICANN has set a high standard for a finding of confusing similarity between two gTLD strings, and the Third Expert’s determination did not apply this standard and was arbitrary and baseless.<sup>49</sup>

26. Vistaprint concludes that “[i]n sum, the cursory nature of the Decision and the arbitrary and selective discussion of the parties’ arguments by the [Third Expert] show a lack of either independence and impartiality or appropriate qualification.”<sup>50</sup> Vistaprint further states that it took 216 days for the Third Expert to render a decision in a procedure that should have taken a maximum of 45 days.<sup>51</sup>

27. The Guidebook § 3.4.6 provides that:

The findings of the panel will be considered an expert determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process.<sup>52</sup>

28. Vistaprint objects that ICANN simply accepted the Third Expert’s ruling on the String Confusion Objection, without performing any analysis as to whether the ICDR and the Third Expert complied with ICANN’s policies and fundamental principles, and without giving any rationale for doing so.<sup>53</sup>

29. Vistaprint contends that ICANN’s Board remains its ultimate decision-making body and that the Board should have intervened and “cannot blindly accept advice by third parties or expert determinations.”<sup>54</sup> In this respect, Vistaprint highlights the Guidebook, which provides in Module 5 (Transition to Delegation) § 1 that:

ICANN’s Board of Directors has ultimate responsibility for the New gTLD Program. The Board reserves the right to individually consider an application for a new gTLD to determine whether approval would be in the best interest of the Internet community. Under exceptional circumstances, the Board may individually consider a gTLD application. For example, the Board might individually consider an application as a result ... the use of an ICANN accountability mechanism.<sup>55</sup>

[Underlining added]

30. As a result of the Third Expert sustaining the Objector’s SCO, Vistaprint’s application was placed in a “Contention Set”. The Guidebook in § 3.2.2.1 explains this result:

In the case where a gTLD applicant successfully asserts string confusion with another applicant, the only possible outcome is for both applicants to be placed in a contention set and to be referred to a contention resolution procedure (refer to Module 4, String Contention Procedures). If an objection by one gTLD applicant to another gTLD application is unsuccessful, the applicants may both move forward in the process without being considered in direct contention with one another.<sup>56</sup>

B. Request for Reconsideration and Cooperative Engagement Process

31. On February 6, 2014 Vistaprint filed a Request for Reconsideration (“Request for Reconsideration” or “RFR”).<sup>57</sup> According to ICANN’s Bylaws, a RFR is an accountability mechanism which involves a review conducted by the Board Governance Committee (“BGC”), a sub-committee designated by ICANN’s Board to review and consider Reconsideration Requests.<sup>58</sup> A RFR can be submitted by a person or entity that has been “adversely affected” by one or more staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policies.<sup>59</sup>
32. Article IV, §2.15 of ICANN’s Bylaws sets forth the BGC’s authority and powers for handling Reconsideration Requests. The BGC, at its own option, may make a final determination on the RFR or it may make a recommendation to ICANN’s Board for

It is expected that most cases of contention will be resolved through voluntary agreement among the involved applicants or by the community priority evaluation mechanism. Conducting an auction is a tie-breaker mechanism of last resort for resolving string contention, if the contention has not been resolved by other means. Guidebook, § 4.3.

consideration and action:

For all Reconsideration Requests brought regarding staff action or inaction, the Board Governance Committee shall be delegated the authority by the Board of Directors to make a final determination and recommendation on the matter. Board consideration of the recommendation is not required. As the Board Governance Committee deems necessary, it may make recommendation to the Board for consideration and action. The Board Governance Committee's determination on staff action or inaction shall be posted on the Website. The Board Governance Committee's determination is final and establishes precedential value.

33. ICANN has determined that the reconsideration process can be invoked for challenges to expert determinations rendered by panels formed by third party dispute resolution service providers, such as the ICDR, where it can be stated that the panel failed to follow the established policies or processes in reaching the expert determination, or that staff failed to follow its policies or processes in accepting that determination.<sup>60</sup>
34. In its RFR, Vistaprint asked ICANN to reject the Third Expert's decision and to instruct a new expert panel to issue a new decision "that applies the standards defined by ICANN."<sup>61</sup> Vistaprint sought reconsideration of the "various actions and inactions of ICANN staff related to the Expert Determination," claiming that "the decision fails to follow ICANN process for determining string confusion in many aspects."<sup>62</sup> In particular, Vistaprint asserted that the ICDR and the Third Expert violated the applicable New gTLD Objection Procedures concerning:
  - (i) the timely appointment of an expert panel;
  - (ii) the acceptance of additional written submissions;
  - (iii) the timely issuance of an expert determination;
  - (iv) an expert's duty to remain impartial and independent;
  - (v) challenges to experts;
  - (vi) the Objector's burden of proof; and
  - (vii) the standards governing the evaluation of a String Confusion Objection.
35. Vistaprint also argued that the decision was unfair, and accepting it creates disparate treatment without justified cause.<sup>63</sup>
36. The Bylaws provide in Article IV, § 2.3, that the BGC "shall have the authority to":
  - a. evaluate requests for review or reconsideration;
  - b. summarily dismiss insufficient requests;
  - c. evaluate requests for urgent consideration;
  - d. conduct whatever factual investigation is deemed appropriate;
  - e. request additional written submissions from the affected party, or from other parties;
  - f. make a final determination on Reconsideration Requests regarding staff action or inaction, without

37. On February 27, 2014 the BGC issued its detailed Recommendation on Reconsideration Request, in which it denied Vistaprint’s reconsideration request finding “no indication that the ICDR or the [Third Expert] violated any policy or process in reaching the Determination.”<sup>64</sup> The BGC concluded that:

With respect to each claim asserted by the Requester concerning the ICDR’s alleged violations of applicable ICDR procedures concerning experts, there is no evidence that the ICDR deviated from the standards set forth in the Applicant Guidebook, the New gTLD Dispute Resolution Procedure, or the ICDR’s Supplementary Procedures for String Confusion Objections (Rules). The Requester has likewise failed to demonstrate that the Panel applied the wrong standard in contravention of established policy or procedure. Therefore, the BGC concludes that Request 14-5 be denied.<sup>65</sup>

38. The BGC explained what it considered to be the scope of its review:

In the context of the New gTLD Program, the reconsideration process does not call for the BGC to perform a substantive review of expert determinations. Accordingly, the BGC is not to evaluate the Panel’s substantive conclusion that the Requester’s applications for .WEBS are confusingly similar to the Requester’s application for .WEB. Rather, the BGC’s review is limited to whether the Panel violated any established policy or process in reaching that Determination.<sup>66</sup>

39. The BGC also stated that its determination on Vistaprint’s RFR was final:

In accordance with Article IV, Section 2.15 of the Bylaws, the BGC’s determination on Request 14-5 shall be final and does not require Board (or NGPC<sup>67</sup>) consideration. The Bylaws provide that the BGC is authorized to make a final determination for all Reconsideration Requests brought regarding staff action or inaction and that the BGC’s determination on such matters is final. (Bylaws, Art. IV, § 2.15.) As discussed above, Request 14-5 seeks reconsideration of a staff action or inaction. After consideration of this Request, the BGC concludes that this determination is final and that no further consideration by the Board is warranted.<sup>68</sup>

40. On March 17, 2014, Vistaprint filed a request for a Cooperative Engagement Process

<sup>68</sup> BGC Determination, p. 19, Request, Annex 26. As noted, the BGC concluded that its determination on Vistaprint’s RFR was final and made no recommendation to ICANN’s Board for consideration and action. Article IV, §2.17 of ICANN’s Bylaws sets out the scope of the Board’s authority for matters in which the BGC decides to make a recommendation to ICANN’s Board:

The Board shall not be bound to follow the recommendations of the Board Governance Committee. The final decision of the Board shall be made public as part of the preliminary report and minutes of the Board meeting at which action is taken. The Board shall issue its decision on the recommendation of the Board Governance Committee within 60 days of receipt of the Reconsideration Request or as soon thereafter as feasible. Any circumstances that delay the Board from acting within this timeframe must be identified and posted on ICANN’s website. The Board’s decision on the recommendation is final.

“CEP”) with ICANN.<sup>69</sup> Vistaprint stated in its letter:

Vistaprint is of the opinion that the Board of Governance Committee’s rejection of Reconsideration Request 14-5 is in violation of various provisions of ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. In particular, Vistaprint considers this is in violation of Articles I, II(3), III and IV of the ICANN Bylaws as well as Article 4 of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation. In addition, Vistaprint considers that ICANN has acted in violation of Articles 3, 7 and 9 of ICANN’s Affirmation of Commitment.<sup>70</sup>

41. The CEP did not lead to a resolution and Vistaprint thereafter commenced this IRP. In this regard, Module 6.6 of the Guidebook provides that an applicant for a new gTLD:

MAY UTILIZE ANY ACCOUNTABILITY MECHANISM SET FORTH IN ICANN’S BYLAWS FOR PURPOSES OF CHALLENGING ANY FINAL DECISION MADE BY ICANN WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION.<sup>71</sup>

C. Procedures in this Case

42. On June 11, 2014, Vistaprint submitted its Request for Independent Review Process (“Request”) in respect of ICANN’s treatment of Vistaprint’s application for the .WEBS gTLD. On July 21, 2014, ICANN submitted its Response to Vistaprint’s Request (“Response”).
43. On January 13, 2015, the ICDR confirmed that there were no objections to the constitution of the present IRP Panel (“IRP Panel” or “Panel”). The Panel convened a telephonic preliminary hearing with the parties on January 26, 2015 to discuss background and organizational matters in the case. Having heard the parties, the Panel issued Procedural Order No. 1 permitting an additional round of submissions from the parties. The Panel received Vistaprint’s additional submission on March 2, 2015 (Vistaprint’s “First Additional Submission”) and ICANN’s response on April 2, 2015 (ICANN’s “First Additional Response”).
44. The Panel then received further email correspondence from the parties. In particular, Vistaprint requested that the case be suspended pending an upcoming meeting of ICANN’s Board of Directors, which Vistaprint contended would be addressing matters informative for this IRP. Vistaprint also requested that it be permitted to respond to arguments and information submitted by ICANN in ICANN’s First Additional Response. In particular, Vistaprint stated that ICANN had referenced the Final Declaration of March 3, 2015 in the IRP case involving Booking.com v. ICANN (the “Booking.com Final Declaration”).<sup>72</sup> The Booking.com Final Declaration was issued one day after Vistaprint had submitted its First Additional Submission in this case. ICANN objected to Vistaprint’s requests, urging that there was no need for additional briefing and no justification for suspending the case.

45. On April 19, 2015, the Panel issued Procedural Order No. 2, which denied Vistaprint's request that the case be suspended and permitted Vistaprint and ICANN to submit another round of supplemental submissions. Procedural Order No. 2 also proposed two dates for a telephonic hearing with the parties on the substantive issues and the date of May 13, 2015 was subsequently selected. The Panel received Vistaprint's second additional submission on April 24, 2015 (Vistaprint's "Second Additional Submission") and ICANN's response to that submission on May 1, 2015 (ICANN's "Second Additional Response").
46. The Panel then received a letter from Vistaprint dated April 30, 2015 and ICANN's reply of the same date. In its letter, Vistaprint referred to two new developments that it stated were relevant for this IRP case: (i) the Third Declaration on the IRP Procedure, issued April 20, 2015, in the IRP involving DotConnectAfrica Trust v. ICANN<sup>73</sup>, and (ii) the ICANN Board of Director's resolution of April 26, 2015 concerning the Booking.com Final Declaration. Vistaprint requested that more time be permitted to consider and respond to these new developments, while ICANN responded that the proceedings should not be delayed.
47. Following further communications with the parties, May 28, 2015 was confirmed as the date for a telephonic hearing to receive the parties' oral submissions on the substantive issues in this case. On that date, counsel for the parties were provided with the opportunity to make extensive oral submissions in connection with all of the facts and issues raised in this case and to answer questions from the Panel.<sup>74</sup>
48. Following the May 28, 2015 hear, the Panel held deliberations to consider the issues in this IRP, with further deliberations taking place on subsequent dates. This Final Declaration was provided to the ICDR in draft form on October 5, 2015 for non-substantive comments on the text; it was returned to the Panel on October 8, 2015.

III. ICANN's Articles, Bylaws, and Affirmation of Commitments

49. Vistaprint states that the applicable law for these IRP proceedings is found in ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. Both Vistaprint and ICANN make numerous references to these instruments. This section sets out a number of the key provisions of the Articles and the Bylaws, as they are relied upon by the parties in this IRP.<sup>75</sup> Vistaprint also references the Affirmation of Commitments – relevant provisions of this document are also provided below.

A. Articles of Incorporation

50. Vistaprint refers to the Articles of Incorporation, highlighting Article IV’s references to “relevant principles of international law” and “open and transparent processes”. Article 4 of the Articles provides in relevant part:

The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets.

[Underlining added]

51. Vistaprint states that general principles of international law – and in particular the obligation of good faith – serve as a prism through which the various obligations imposed on ICANN under its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws must be interpreted.<sup>76</sup> The general principle of good faith is one of the most basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations, and rules involving transparency, fairness and non-discrimination arise from it.<sup>77</sup> Vistaprint also emphasizes that the principle of good faith includes an obligation to ensure procedural fairness by adhering to substantive and procedural rules, avoiding arbitrary action, and recognizing legitimate expectations.<sup>78</sup> The core elements of transparency include clarity of procedures, the publication and notification of guidelines and applicable rules, and the duty to provide reasons for actions taken.<sup>79</sup>

B. Bylaws

a. Directives to ICANN and its Board

52. The Bylaws contain provisions that address the role, core values and accountability of ICANN and its Board.
53. Article IV, § 3.2 specifies the right of “any person materially affected” to seek independent review (through the IRP) of a Board action alleged to be a violation of the

The requirement of procedural fairness has been an established part of the California common law since before the turn of the 19th century.” Request, ¶ 60, n.8.

Articles or Bylaws:

Any person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws may submit a request for independent review of that decision or action. In order to be materially affected, the person must suffer injury or harm that is directly and causally connected to the Board's alleged violation of the Bylaws or the Articles of Incorporation, and not as a result of third parties acting in line with the Board's action.

54. Vistaprint has relied on certain of ICANN's core values set forth in Article I, § 2 (Core Values) of the Bylaws. The sub-sections underlined below are invoked by Vistaprint as they relate to principles of promoting competition and innovation (Article I § 2.2, 2.5 and 2.6); openness and transparency (Article I § 2.7); neutrality, fairness, integrity and non-discrimination (Article I § 2.8); and accountability (Article I § 2.10). Article I § 2 provides in full:

Section 2. Core Values

In performing its mission, the following core values should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN:

1. Preserving and enhancing the operational stability, reliability, security, and global interoperability of the Internet.

2. Respecting the creativity, innovation, and flow of information made possible by the Internet by limiting ICANN's activities to those matters within ICANN's mission requiring or significantly benefiting from global coordination.

3. To the extent feasible and appropriate, delegating coordination functions to or recognizing the policy role of other responsible entities that reflect the interests of affected parties.

4. Seeking and supporting broad, informed participation reflecting the functional, geographic, and cultural diversity of the Internet at all levels of policy development and decision-making.

5. Where feasible and appropriate, depending on market mechanisms to promote and sustain a competitive environment.

6. Introducing and promoting competition in the registration of domain names where practicable and beneficial in the public interest.

7. Employing open and transparent policy development mechanisms that (i) promote well-informed decisions based on expert advice, and (ii) ensure that those entities most affected can assist in the policy development process.

8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.<sup>80</sup>

9. Acting with a speed that is responsive to the needs of the Internet while, as part of the decision-making process, obtaining informed input from those entities most affected.

10. Remaining accountable to the Internet community through mechanisms that enhance ICANN's effectiveness.

<sup>80</sup> Vistaprint states that “[t]his requirement is also found in applicable California law, which requires that decisions be made according to procedures that are ‘fair and applied uniformly’, and not in an ‘arbitrary and capricious manner.’” Request, ¶ 62, n.9.

11. While remaining rooted in the private sector, recognizing that governments and public authorities are responsible for public policy and duly taking into account governments' or public authorities' recommendations.

These core values are deliberately expressed in very general terms, so that they may provide useful and relevant guidance in the broadest possible range of circumstances. Because they are not narrowly prescriptive, the specific way in which they apply, individually and collectively, to each new situation will necessarily depend on many factors that cannot be fully anticipated or enumerated; and because they are statements of principle rather than practice, situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible. Any ICANN body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand, and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.

[Underlining added]

55. Vistaprint refers to Article II, § 3 in support of its arguments that the Board failed to act fairly and without discrimination as it considered Vistaprint's two .WEBS applications and the outcome of the Vistaprint SCO case. Article II, § 3 provides:

Section 3 (Non-Discriminatory Treatment)

ICANN shall not apply its standards, policies, procedures, or practices inequitably or single out any particular party for disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause, such as the promotion of effective competition.

[Underlining added]

56. Vistaprint refers to Article III (Transparency), § 1 of the Bylaws in reference to the principle of transparency:

Section 1. PURPOSE

ICANN and its constituent bodies shall operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness.

[Underlining added]

57. Vistaprint also refers Article IV (Accountability and Review), § 1 as it relates to ICANN's accountability and core values, providing in relevant part:

In carrying out its mission as set out in these Bylaws, ICANN should be accountable to the community for operating in a manner that is consistent with these Bylaws, and with due regard for the core values set forth in Article I of these Bylaws.

[Underlining added]

b. Directives for the IRP Panel

58. ICANN's Bylaws also contain provisions that speak directly to the role and authority of the Panel in this IRP case. In particular, Article IV of the Bylaws creates the IRP as an accountability mechanism, along with two other mechanisms: (i) the RFR process, described above and on which Vistaprint relied, and (ii) an unrelated periodic review of

ICANN's structure and procedures.<sup>81</sup>

59. Article IV, § 1 of the Bylaws emphasizes that the IRP is a mechanism designed to ensure ICANN's accountability:

The provisions of this Article, creating processes for reconsideration and independent review of ICANN actions and periodic review of ICANN's structure and procedures, are intended to reinforce the various accountability mechanisms otherwise set forth in these Bylaws, including the transparency provisions of Article III and the Board and other selection mechanisms set forth throughout these Bylaws.

[Underlining added]

60. In this respect, the IRP Panel provides an independent review and accountability mechanism for ICANN and its Board. Vistaprint urges that IRP is the only method established by ICANN for holding itself accountable through independent third-party review of its decisions.<sup>82</sup> The Bylaws in Article IV, § 3.1 provides:

In addition to the reconsideration process described in Section 2 of this Article, ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

61. ICANN states in its Response that “[t]he IRP Panel is tasked with determining whether the Board’s actions are consistent with ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws.”<sup>83</sup> ICANN also maintains that while the IRP is intended to address challenges to conduct undertaken by ICANN’s Board, it is not available as a mechanism to challenge the actions or inactions of ICANN staff or third parties that may be involved with ICANN’s activities.<sup>84</sup>

62. In line with ICANN’s statement, the Bylaws provide in Article IV, § 3.4, that:

Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Process Panel (“IRP Panel”), which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.<sup>85</sup>

[Underlining added]

63. The Bylaws also include a standard of review in Article IV, § 3.4, providing that the Panel:

<sup>85</sup> Bylaws, Art. IV, § 3.4. The reference to “actions” of ICANN’s Board should be read to refer to both “actions or inactions” of the Board. See Bylaws, Art. IV, § 3.11(c) (“The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:...(c) declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws”); see also Supplementary Procedures, which define “Independent Review” as referring

“to the procedure that takes place upon the filing of a request to review ICANN Board actions or inactions alleged to be inconsistent with ICANN's Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation.

“must apply a defined standard of review to the IRP request, focusing on:

- a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;
- b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
- c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?<sup>86</sup>

64. The Bylaws in Article IV, § 3.11 set out the IRP Panel’s authority in terms of alternative actions that it may take once it has an IRP case before it:

The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:

- a. summarily dismiss requests brought without standing, lacking in substance, or that are frivolous or vexatious;
- b. request additional written submissions from the party seeking review, the Board, the Supporting Organizations, or from other parties;
- c. declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; and
- d. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP;
- e. consolidate requests for independent review if the facts and circumstances are sufficiently similar; and
- f. determine the timing for each proceeding.<sup>87</sup>

65. Further, the Bylaws in Article IV, § 3.18 state that

“[t]he IRP Panel shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties, and in its declaration shall specifically designate the prevailing party.”<sup>88</sup>

[Underlining added]

66. The Bylaws address the steps to be taken after the Panel issues a determination in the IRP. Article IV, § 3.21<sup>89</sup> states that “declarations of the IRP Panel, and the Board’s subsequent action on those declarations, are final and have precedential value”:

Where feasible, the Board shall consider the IRP Panel declaration at the Board’s next meeting. The declarations of the IRP Panel, and the Board’s subsequent action on those declarations, are final and have precedential value.

C. Affirmation of Commitments

67. Vistaprint claims that ICANN violated the ICANN’s Affirmation of Commitments, in particular Articles 3, 7 and 9. This Affirmation of Commitments is instructive, as it explains ICANN’s obligations in light of its role as regulator of the DNS. Article 3, 7 and 9 are set forth below in relevant part:

3. This document affirms key commitments by DOC and ICANN, including commitments to: (a) ensure that decisions made related to the global technical coordination of the DNS are made in the public interest and are accountable and transparent; (b) preserve the security, stability and resiliency of the DNS; (c) promote competition, consumer trust, and consumer choice in the DNS marketplace; and (d) facilitate international participation in DNS technical coordination.

7. ICANN commits to adhere to transparent and accountable budgeting processes, fact-based policy development, cross-community deliberations, and responsive consultation procedures that provide detailed explanations of the basis for decisions, including how comments have influenced the development of policy consideration, and to publish each year an annual report that sets out ICANN's progress against ICANN's bylaws, responsibilities, and strategic and operating plans. In addition, ICANN commits to provide a thorough and reasoned explanation of decisions taken, the rationale thereof and the sources of data and information on which ICANN relied.

9. Recognizing that ICANN will evolve and adapt to fulfill its limited, but important technical mission of coordinating the DNS, ICANN further commits to take the following specific actions together with ongoing commitment reviews specified below:

9.1 Ensuring accountability, transparency and the interests of global Internet users: ICANN commits to maintain and improve robust mechanisms for public input, accountability, and transparency so as to ensure that the outcomes of its decision-making will reflect the public interest and be accountable to all stakeholders by: (a) continually assessing and improving ICANN Board of Directors (Board) governance which shall include an ongoing evaluation of Board performance, the Board selection process, the extent to which Board composition meets ICANN's present and future needs, and the consideration of an appeal mechanism for Board decisions; (b) assessing the role and effectiveness of the GAC and its interaction with the Board and making recommendations for improvement to ensure effective consideration by ICANN of GAC input on the public policy aspects of the technical coordination of the DNS; (c) continually assessing and improving the processes by which ICANN receives public input (including adequate explanation of decisions taken and the rationale thereof); (d) continually assessing the extent to which ICANN's decisions are embraced, supported and accepted by the public and the Internet community; and (e) assessing the policy development process to facilitate enhanced cross community deliberations, and effective and timely policy development. ICANN will organize a review of its execution of the above commitments no less frequently than every three years, ..... Each of the foregoing reviews shall consider the extent to which the assessments and actions undertaken by ICANN have been successful in ensuring that ICANN is acting transparently, is accountable for its decision-making, and acts in the public interest. Integral to the foregoing reviews will be assessments of the extent to which the Board and staff have implemented the recommendations arising out of the other commitment reviews enumerated below.

9.3 Promoting competition, consumer trust, and consumer choice: ICANN will ensure that as it contemplates expanding the top-level domain space, the various issues that are involved (including competition, consumer protection, security, stability and resiliency, malicious abuse issues, sovereignty concerns, and rights protection) will be adequately addressed prior to implementation. If and when new gTLDs (whether in ASCII or other language character sets) have been in operation for one year, ICANN will organize a review that will examine the extent to which the introduction or expansion of gTLDs has promoted competition, consumer trust and consumer choice, as well as effectiveness of (a) the application and evaluation process, and (b) safeguards put in place to mitigate issues involved in the introduction or expansion. ICANN will organize a further review of its execution of the above commitments two years after the first review, and then no less frequently than every four years.... Resulting recommendations of the reviews will be provided to the Board and posted for public comment. The Board will take action within six months of receipt of the recommendations.

IV. Summary of Parties' Contentions

68. This presentation of the parties' contentions is intended to provide a summary to aid in understanding this Final Declaration. It is not an exhaustive recitation of the entirety of the parties' allegations and arguments. Additional references to the parties' assertions are included in sections II (Factual and Procedural Background), III (ICANN's Articles, Bylaws and Affirmation of Commitments) and V (Analysis and Findings).
69. The IRP Panel has organized the parties' contentions into three categories, based on the areas of claim and dispute that have emerged through the exchange of three rounds of submissions between the parties and the Panel. The first section relates to the authority of the Panel, while the second and third sections address the allegations asserted by Vistaprint, which fall into two general areas of claim. In this regard, Vistaprint claims that the ICDR and Third Expert made numerous errors of procedure and substance during the String Confusion Objection proceedings, which resulted in Vistaprint being denied a fair hearing and due process. As a result of the flawed SCO proceedings, Vistaprint alleged that ICANN through its Board (and the BGC), in turn: (i) violated its Articles, Bylaws and the Guidebook (e.g., failed to act in good faith, fairly, non-arbitrarily, with accountability, due diligence, and independent judgment) by accepting the determination in the Vistaprint SCO and failing to redress and remedy the numerous alleged process and substantive errors in the SCO proceedings, and (ii) discriminated against Vistaprint, in violation of its Articles and Bylaws, by delaying Vistaprint's .WEBS gTLD applications and putting them into a Contention Set, while allowing other gTLD applications with equally serious string similarity concerns to proceed to delegation, or permitting still other applications that were subject to an adverse SCO determination to go through a separate additional review mechanism.
70. Thus, the three primary areas of contention between the parties are as follows:
- IRP Panel' Authority: The parties have focused on the authority of the IRP Panel, including the standard of review to be applied by the Panel, whether the Panel's IRP declaration is binding or non-binding on ICANN, and, on a very closely related point, whether the Panel has authority to award any affirmative relief (as compared to issuing only a declaration as to whether or not ICANN has acted in a manner that is consistent or not with its Articles and Bylaws).
  - SCO Proceedings Claim: Vistaprint claims ICANN's failed to comply with the obligations under its Articles and Bylaws by accepting the Third Expert's SCO determination and failing to provide a remedy or redress in response to numerous alleged errors of process and substance in the Vistaprint SCO proceedings. As noted above, Vistaprint claims there were process and substantive violations, which resulted in Vistaprint not being accorded a fair hearing and due process. Vistaprint states that because ICANN's Bylaws require ICANN to apply established policies neutrally and fairly, therefore, the Panel should also consider the policies in Module 3 of the Guidebook concerning the String Confusion Objection procedures. Vistaprint objects to the policies themselves as well as their implementation through the ICDR and the Third Expert. Vistaprint claims that ICANN’s Board, acting through the BGC or otherwise, should have acted to address these deficiencies and its choice not to intervene violated the Articles and Bylaws.

- Disparate Treatment Claim: Vistaprint claims ICANN discriminated against Vistaprint through ICANN’s (and the BGC’s) acceptance of the Third Expert’s allegedly baseless and arbitrary determination in Vistaprint SCO, while allowing other gTLD applications with equally serious string similarity concerns to proceed to delegation, or permitting still other applications that were subject to an adverse SCO determination to go through a separate additional review mechanism.

A. Vistaprint’s Position

a. IRP Panel’s Authority

71. Standard of review: Vistaprint emphasizes that ICANN is accountable to the community for operating in a manner that is consistent with the Article and Bylaws, and with due regard for the core values set forth in Article I of the Bylaws. To achieve this required accountability, the IRP Panel is “charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>90</sup> Vistaprint states that the IRP Panel’s fulfillment of this core obligation is crucial to ICANN’s commitment to accountability. The IRP is the only method established by ICANN for holding itself accountable through third-party review of its decisions.<sup>91</sup>
72. Vistaprint contends that ICANN is wrong in stating (in its Response<sup>92</sup>) that a deferential standard of review applies in this case.<sup>93</sup> No such specification is made in ICANN’s Bylaws or elsewhere, and a restrictive interpretation of the standard of review would be inappropriate. It would fail to ensure accountability on the part of ICANN and would be incompatible with ICANN’s commitment to maintain and improve robust mechanisms for accountability, as required by Article 9.1 of ICANN’s Affirmation of Commitments and ICANN’s core values, which require ICANN to “remain accountable to the Internet community through mechanisms that enhance ICANN’s effectiveness”.<sup>94</sup>
73. Vistaprint states further that the most recent version of ICANN’s Bylaws, amended on

April 11, 2013, require that the IRP Panel focus on whether ICANN's Board was free from conflicts of interest and exercised an appropriate level of due diligence and independent judgment in its decision making.<sup>95</sup> Vistaprint asserts, however, that these issues are mentioned by way of example only. The Bylaws do not restrict the IRP Panel's remit to these issues alone, as the Panel's fundamental task is to determine whether the Board has acted consistently with the Articles and Bylaws<sup>96</sup>

74. IRP declaration binding or non-binding: Vistaprint contends that the outcome of this IRP is binding on ICANN and that any other outcome "would be incompatible with ICANN's obligation to maintain and improve robust mechanisms for accountability."<sup>97</sup>
75. Vistaprint states that since ICANN's amendment of its Bylaws, IRP declarations have precedential value.<sup>98</sup> Vistaprint asserts the precedential value – and binding force – of IRP declarations was confirmed in a recent IRP panel declaration,<sup>99</sup> which itself has precedential value for this case. Vistaprint argues that any other outcome would effectively grant the ICANN Board arbitrary and unfettered discretion, something which was never intended and would be incompatible with ICANN's obligation to maintain and improve robust mechanisms for accountability.<sup>100</sup>
76. Vistaprint contends that the IRP is not a mere "corporate accountability mechanism" aimed at ICANN's internal stakeholders.<sup>101</sup> The IRP is open to any person materially affected by a decision or action of the Board<sup>102</sup> and is specifically available to new gTLD applicants, as stated in the Guidebook, Module 6.4. Vistaprint claims that internally, towards its stakeholders, ICANN might be able to argue that its Board retains ultimate decision-making power, subject to its governing principles. Externally, however, the ICANN Board's discretionary power is limited, and ICANN and its Board must offer redress when its decisions or actions harm third parties.<sup>103</sup>
77. Vistaprint argues further that the IRP has all the characteristics of an international arbitration.<sup>104</sup> The IRP is conducted pursuant to a set of independently developed international arbitration rules: the ICDR Rules, as modified by the Supplementary Procedures. The IRP is administered by the ICDR, which is a provider of international arbitration services. The decision-maker is not ICANN, but a panel of neutral individuals selected by the parties in consultation with the ICDR, and appointed pursuant to the ICDR Rules.

78. Vistaprint provides further detailed argument in its Second Additional Submission that the IRP is binding in view of ICANN's Bylaws, the ICDR Rules and the Supplementary Procedures, and that any ambiguity on this issue should weigh against ICANN as the drafter and architect of the IRP:

31. As mentioned in Vistaprint's Reply, a previous IRP panel ruled that "[v]arious provisions of ICANN's Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures support the conclusion that the [IRP] Panel's decisions, opinions and declarations are binding" and that "[t]here is certainly nothing in the Supplementary Rules that renders the decisions, opinions and declarations of the [IRP] Panel either advisory or non-binding" (RM 32, para 98).<sup>105</sup>

32. Indeed, as per Article IV(3)(8) of the ICANN Bylaws, the ICANN Board has given its approval to the ICDR to establish a set of operating rules and procedures for the conduct of the IRP. The operating rules and procedures established by the ICDR are the ICDR Rules as referred to in the preamble of the Supplementary Procedures (RM 32, para. 101). The Supplementary Procedures supplement the ICDR Rules (Supplementary Procedures, Preamble and Section 2). The preamble of the ICDR Rules provides that "[a] dispute can be submitted to an arbitral tribunal for a final and binding decision". Article 30 of the ICDR Rules specifies that "[a]wards shall be made in writing by the arbitral tribunal and shall be final and binding on the parties". No provision in the Supplementary Procedures deviates from the rule that the Panel's decisions are binding. On the contrary, Section 1 of the Supplementary Procedures defines an IRP Declaration as a decision/opinion of the IRP Panel. Section 10 of the Supplementary Procedures requires that IRP Declarations i) are made in writing, and ii) specifically designate the prevailing party. Where a decision must specifically designate the prevailing party, it is inherently binding. Moreover the binding nature of IRP Declarations is further supported by the language and spirit of Section 6 of the Supplementary Procedures and Article IV(3)(11)(a) of the ICANN Bylaws. Pursuant to these provisions, the IRP Panel has the authority to summarily dismiss requests brought without standing, lacking in substance, or that are frivolous or vexatious. Surely, such a decision, opinion or declaration on the part of the IRP Panel would not be considered advisory (RM 32, para. 107).

33. Finally, even if ICANN's Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures are ambiguous - quod non - on the question of whether or not an IRP Declaration is binding, this ambiguity would weigh against ICANN. The relationship between ICANN and Vistaprint is clearly an adhesive one. In such a situation, the rule of contra proferentem applies. As the drafter and architect of the IRP Procedure, it was possible for ICANN, and clearly within its power, to adopt a procedure that expressly and clearly announced that the decisions, opinions and declarations of IRP Panels were advisory only. ICANN did not adopt such a procedure (RM 32, paras. 108-109).

79. Finally, Vistaprint contends that ICANN conceived of the IRP as an alternative to dispute resolution by the courts. To submit a new gTLD application, Vistaprint had to agree to terms and conditions including a waiver of its right to challenge ICANN's decisions on Vistaprint's applications in a court, provided that as an applicant, Vistaprint could use the accountability mechanisms set forth in ICANN's Bylaws. Vistaprint quotes the DCA Third Declaration on Procedure, in which the IRP panel stated:

assuming that the foregoing waiver of any and all judicial remedies is valid and enforceable, the ultimate 'accountability' remedy for [Vistaprint] is the IRP.<sup>106</sup>

80. Authority to award affirmative relief: Vistaprint makes similar arguments in support of its claim that the IRP Panel has authority to grant affirmative relief. Vistaprint quotes the Interim Declaration on Emergency Request for Interim Measures of Protection in Gulf Cooperation Council v. ICANN (“GCC Interim IRP Declaration”),<sup>107</sup> where that panel stated that the right to an independent review is a significant and meaningful one under the ICANN's Bylaws. This is so particularly in light of the importance of ICANN's global work in overseeing the DNS for the Internet and also the weight attached by ICANN itself to the principles of accountability and review which underpin the IRP process.

81. Accordingly, Vistaprint argues that the IRP Panel's authority is not limited to declare that ICANN breached its obligations under the Articles, Bylaws and the Guidebook. To offer effective redress to gTLD applicants, the Panel may indicate what action ICANN must take to cease violating these obligations. The point is all the stronger here, as ICANN conceived the IRP to be the sole independent dispute resolution mechanism available to new gTLD applicants.<sup>108</sup>

b. SCO Proceedings Claim

82. Vistaprint states that this case relates to ICANN's handling of the determination in the Vistaprint SCO proceedings following String Confusion Objections to Vistaprint's .WEBS applications, but does not relate to the merits of that SCO determination.<sup>109</sup>
83. Vistaprint's basic claim here is that given the errors of process and substance in those proceedings, Vistaprint was not given a fair opportunity to present its case. Vistaprint was deprived of procedural fairness and the opportunity to be heard by an independent panel applying the appropriate rules. Further, Vistaprint was not given any meaningful opportunity for remedy or redress once the decision was made, and in this way ICANN's Board allegedly violated its Articles and Bylaws.<sup>110</sup>

84. Although Vistaprint challenged the SCO decision through ICANN's Request for Reconsideration process, ICANN refused to reconsider the substance of the challenged decision, or to take any action to remedy the lack of due process. In doing so, Vistaprint claims ICANN failed to act in a fair and non-arbitrary manner, with good faith, accountability, due diligence and independent judgment, as required by ICANN's Bylaws and Articles.<sup>111</sup> ICANN's acceptance of the SCO determination and refusal to reverse this decision was an abdication of responsibility and contrary to the evaluation policies ICANN had established in the Guidebook.<sup>112</sup>
85. A number of Vistaprint's contentions regarding the alleged violations of process and substance in SCO proceedings are described in part II.A above addressing Vistaprint's .WEBS applications and the SCO proceedings. Vistaprint's alleges as follows:
- (i) ICDR's appointment of the First Expert was untimely, in violation of Article 13(a) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure<sup>113</sup>;
  - (ii) the First Expert (and Third Expert) improperly accepted and considered unsolicited supplemental filings, violating Articles 17 and 18 of the New gTLD Objections Procedure<sup>114</sup>;
  - (iii) ICDR violated Article 21 of the New gTLD Objections Procedure<sup>115</sup> by failing to ensure the timely issuance of an expert determination in the SCO;
  - (iv) the First Expert failed to maintain independence and impartiality, in violation of Article 13(c) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure<sup>116</sup>;
  - (v) ICDR unjustifiably accepted a challenge to the Second Expert (or created the circumstances for such a challenge), in violation of Article 2 of the ICDR's Supplementary Procedures for String Confusion Objections (Rules);
  - (vi) the Determination of the Third Expert was untimely, in violation of Article 21(a) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure;
  - (vii) the Third Expert incorrectly applied the Objector's burden of proof, in violation of section 3.5 of the Guidebook and Article 20(c) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure, which place the burden of proof on the Objector; and

<sup>114</sup> Request, ¶ 42. Article 17 provides that "[t]he Panel may decide whether the parties shall submit any written statements in addition to the Objection and the Response." Article 18 states that "[i]n order to achieve the goal of resolving disputes over new gTLDs rapidly and at reasonable cost, procedures for the production of documents shall be limited. In exceptional cases, the Panel may require a party to provide additional evidence."

<sup>116</sup> Article 13(c) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure provides that "[a]ll Experts acting under this Procedure shall be impartial and independent of the parties." Section 3.4.4 of the Guidebook provides that the ICDR will "follow its adopted procedures for requiring such independence, including procedures for challenging and replacing an expert for lack of independence."

(viii) the Third Expert incorrectly applied ICANN’s substantive standard for evaluation of String Confusion Objections, as set out in Section 3.5.1 of the Guidebook, in particular the standards governing the evaluation of a string confusion objection.

86. Based on these alleged errors in process and substance, Vistaprint concludes in its Request:

49. In sum, the cursory nature of the Decision and the arbitrary and selective discussion of the parties’ arguments by the Panel show a lack of either independence and impartiality or appropriate qualification on the fact of the Panel. The former is contrary to Article 13 of the Procedure; the latter is contrary to the Applicant Guidebook, Module 3-16, which requires that a panel (ruling on a string confusion or other objection) must consist of “appropriately qualified experts appointed to each proceeding by the designated DRSP”.<sup>117</sup>

87. Vistaprint states that ICANN’s Board disregarded these accumulated infringements and turned a blind eye to the Third Expert’s lack of independence and impartiality. Vistaprint asserts that ICANN is not entitled to blindly accept expert determinations from SCO cases; it must verify whether or not, by accepting the expert determination and advice, it is acting consistent with its obligations under its Articles, Bylaws and Affirmation of Commitments.<sup>118</sup> Vistaprint further claims ICANN would be in violation of these obligations if it were to accept an expert determination or advice in circumstances where the ICDR and/or the expert had failed to comply with the New gTLD Objections Procedure and/or the ICDR Rules for SCOs, or where a panel – even if it had been correctly appointed – had failed to correctly apply the standard set by ICANN.<sup>119</sup>

88. Vistaprint states that following ICANN’s decision to accept the Vistaprint SCO determination, Vistaprint filed its Reconsideration Request detailing how ICANN’s acceptance of the Third Expert’s determination was inconsistent with ICANN’s policy and obligations under its Articles, Bylaws and Affirmation of Commitments. Background on the RFR procedure is provided above in part II.B. Despite this, Vistaprint states that ICANN refused to reverse its decision.

89. The IRP Panel has summarized as follows Vistaprint’s SCO Proceedings Claim concerning ICANN’s alleged breaches of its obligations under the Articles, Bylaws and Affirmation of Commitments:

(1) ICANN failed to comply with its obligation under Article 4 of the Articles and IV § 3.4 of the Bylaws to act in good faith with due diligence and independent judgment by failing to provide due process to Vistaprint’s .WEBS applications.<sup>120</sup> Good faith encompasses the obligation to ensure procedural fairness and due process, including equal and fair treatment of the parties, fair notice, and a fair opportunity to present one’s case. These are more than just formalistic procedural requirements. The opportunity must be meaningful: the party must be given adequate notice of the relevant rules and be given a full and fair opportunity to present its case. And the mechanisms for redress must be both timely and effective.

Vistaprint claims that it was not given a fair opportunity to present its case; was deprived of procedural fairness and the opportunity to be heard by an independent panel applying the appropriate rules; and was not given any meaningful opportunity for remedy or redress once the SCO determination was made, even in the RFR procedure. Thus, ICANN's Board failed to act with due diligence and independent judgment, and to act in good faith as required by ICANN's Bylaws and Articles.

- (2) ICANN failed to comply with its obligation under Article I § 2.8 to neutrally, objectively and fairly apply documented policies as established in the Guidebook and Bylaws.<sup>121</sup> Vistaprint argues that there is no probability of user confusion if both .WEBS and .WEB were delegated as gTLD strings. Vistaprint states expert evidence confirms that there is no risk that Internet users will be confused and the Third Expert could not have reasonably found that the average reasonable Internet user is likely to be confused between the two strings. As confirmed by the Objector,<sup>122</sup> the average reasonable Internet user is used to distinguishing between words (and non-words) that are much more similar than the strings, .WEBS and .WEB. Since these strings cannot be perceived confusingly similar by the average reasonable Internet user, the Vistaprint SCO determination that they are confusingly similar is contradictory to ICANN's policy as established in the Guidebook.
- (3) ICANN failed to comply with its obligation to act fairly and with due diligence and independent judgment as called for under Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation, Articles I § 2.8 and IV § 3.4 of the Bylaws by accepting the SCO determination made by the Third Expert, who was allegedly not independent and impartial.<sup>123</sup> Vistaprint claims that the Third Expert was not independent and impartial and/or is not appropriately qualified. However, Vistaprint claims this did not prevent ICANN from accepting the determination by the Third Expert, without even investigating the dependence and partiality of the Expert when serious concerns were raised to the ICANN Board in the RFR. This is a failure of ICANN to act with due diligence and independent judgment, and to act in good faith as required by ICANN's Bylaws and Articles.
- (4) ICANN failed to comply with its obligations under the Article 4 of the Articles, and Article I §§ 2.7 and 2.8 and Article III § 1 of the Bylaws (and Article 9.1 of the Affirmation of Commitments) to act fairly and transparently by failing to disclose/perform any efforts to optimize the service that the ICDR provides in the New gTLD Program.<sup>124</sup> Vistaprint contends that the BGC's determination on Vistaprint's RFR shows that the BGC made no investigation into Vistaprint's fundamental questions about the Panel's arbitrariness, lack of independence, partiality, inappropriate qualification. In addition, rather than identifying the nature of the conflict that forced the First Expert to step down, the BGC focused on developing hypotheses of reasons that could have led to this expert to stepping down. According to Vistaprint, this shows that the BGC did not exercise due diligence in making its determination and was looking for unsubstantiated reasons to reject Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request rather than making a fair determination.

In addition, as it is ICANN's responsibility to ensure that its policies and fundamental principles are respected by its third party vendors, ICANN had agreed with the ICDR that they were going to "communicate regularly with each other and seek to optimize the service that the ICDR provides as a DRSP in the New gTLD Program" and that ICANN was going to support the ICDR "to perform its duties...in a timely and efficient manner".<sup>125</sup> However, ICANN has failed to show that it sought in any way to optimize the ICDR's service vis-à-vis Vistaprint or that it performed any due diligence in addressing the concerns raised by Vistaprint. Instead, the BGC denied Vistaprint's RFR without conducting any investigation.

- (5) ICANN failed to comply with its obligation to remain accountable under Articles I § 2.10 and IV § 1 of the Bylaws (and Articles 3(a) and 9.1 of the Affirmation of Commitments) by failing to provide any remedy for its mistreatment of Vistaprint's gTLD applications.<sup>126</sup> Vistaprint claims that because of ICANN's unique history, role and responsibilities, its constituent documents require that it operate with complete accountability. In contrast to this obligation, throughout its treatment of Vistaprint's applications for .WEBS, ICANN has acted as if it and the ICDR are entitled to act with impunity. ICANN adopted the Third Expert's determination without examining whether it was made in accordance with ICANN's policy and fundamental principles under its Articles and Bylaws. When confronted with process violations, ICANN sought to escape its responsibilities by relying on unrealistic hypotheses rather than on facts that should have been verified. Additionally, ICANN has not created any general process for challenging the substance of SCO expert determinations, while acknowledging the need for such a process by taking steps to develop a review process mechanism for certain individual cases involving SCO objections.
- (6) ICANN failed to promote competition and innovation under Articles I § 2.2 (and Article 3(c) of the Affirmation of Commitments) by accepting the Third Expert's determination.<sup>127</sup> Vistaprint's argues that the Objector's sole motive in filing the SCO against Vistaprint was to prevent a potential competitor from entering the gTLD market. This motive is contrary to the purpose of ICANN's New gTLD Program. The Board's acceptance of the determination in the Vistaprint SCO, which was filed with an intent contrary to the interests of both competition and consumers, was contrary to ICANN's Bylaws.

c. Disparate Treatment Claim

90. Vistaprint claims that ICANN’s Board discriminated against Vistaprint through the Board’s (and the BGC’s) acceptance of the Third Expert’s allegedly baseless and arbitrary determination in the Vistaprint SCO, while allowing other gTLD applications with equally serious string similarity concerns to proceed to delegation, or permitting still other applications that were subject to an adverse SCO determination to go through a separate additional review mechanism.
91. Vistaprint states that the “IRP Panel’s mandate includes a review as to whether or not ICANN’s Board discriminates in its interventions on SCO expert determinations,” and contends that “[d]iscriminating between applicants in its interventions on SCO expert determinations is exactly what the Board has done with respect to Vistaprint’s applications.”<sup>128</sup>
92. Vistaprint asserts that in contrast to the handling of other RFRs, the BGC did not give the full ICANN Board the opportunity to consider the Vistaprint SCO matter and did not provide detailed minutes of the meeting in which the BGC’s decision was taken.<sup>129</sup> Vistaprint states this is all the more striking as, in other matters related to handling of SCOs with no concerns about the impartiality and independence of the expert or the procedure, the Board considered potential paths forward to address perceived inconsistencies in expert determinations in the SCO process, including implementing a review mechanism. The Board also directed ICANN’s President and CEO, or his designee, to publish this proposed review mechanism for public comment.<sup>130</sup> Vistaprint emphasizes that ICANN’s Board took this decision the day before Vistaprint filed its Reconsideration Request regarding the Vistaprint SCO. However, this did not prevent the BGC from rejecting Vistaprint’s RFR without considering whether such a review mechanism might also be appropriate for dealing with the allegedly unfair and erroneous treatment of the SCO related to Vistaprint’s .WEBS applications.<sup>131</sup>
93. The core of Vistaprint’s discrimination and disparate treatment claims is stated in its First Additional Submission:
7. Other applicants have equally criticized SCO proceedings. In a letter to ICANN’s CEO, United TLD Holdco, Ltd. denounced the process flaws in the SCO proceedings involving the strings .com and .cam. DERCars, LCC filed an RfR, challenging the expert determination in the SCO proceedings relating to the strings .car and .cars. Amazon EU S.a.r.l. filed an RfR, challenging the expert determination in the SCO proceedings relating to the strings .shop and .通販 (which means ‘online shopping’ in Japanese). The ICANN Board took action in each of these matters.
- With respect to the Expert Determination finding .cam confusingly similar to .com, the ICANN Board ordered that an appeals process be developed to address the “perceived inconsistent or otherwise unreasonable SCO Expert Determination”.
  - With regard to the Expert Determination finding .cars confusingly similar to .car, the ICANN Board ordered its staff to propose a review mechanism. DERCars decided to withdraw its application for .cars before the review mechanism was implemented. As a result, it was no longer necessary for the ICANN Board to further consider the proposed review process.

- With regard to the Expert Determination finding 通販 confusingly similar to .shop, the ICANN Board ordered that an appeals process be developed to address the “perceived inconsistent or otherwise unreasonable SCO Expert Determination”.

8. While the ICANN Board took action in the above-mentioned matters, it did not do so with respect to the .webs / .web determination. However, the .webs / .web determination was equally unreasonable, and at least equally serious substantive and procedural errors were made in these SCO proceedings. There is no reason for ICANN to treat the .webs / .web determination differently.

12. When there are clear violations of the process and the outcome is highly objectionable (all as listed in detail in the request for IRP), the ICANN Board must intervene, as it has done with regard to other applications. The ICANN Board cannot justify why it intervenes in certain cases (.cars / .car, .cam / .com and 通販 / .shop), but refuses to do so in another case (.webs / .web). This is a clear violation of its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. The Panel in the current IRP has authority to order that ICANN must comply with its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation and must disregard the expert determination in relation to Vistaprint’s .webs applications.<sup>132</sup>

31. When the ICANN Board individually considers an application, it must make sure that it does not treat applicants inequitably and that it does not discriminate among applicants. Article II, Section 3 of ICANN’s Bylaws provides that “ICANN shall not apply its standards, policies, procedures, or practices inequitably or single out any particular party for disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause, such as the promotion of effective competition”. However, with regard to the SCO proceedings, the ICANN Board has done the exact opposite. It created the opportunity for some aggrieved applicants to participate in an appeals process, while denying others.

32. As explained above, there is no justification for this disparate treatment, and the ICANN Board has not given any substantial and reasonable cause that would justify this discrimination.

94. Vistaprint also contends that ICANN cannot justify the disparate treatment:

22. ICANN’s attempt to justify the disparate treatment of Vistaprint’s applications is without merit. ICANN argues that its Board only intervened with respect to specific expert determinations because there had been several expert determinations regarding the same strings that were seemingly inconsistent (fn. omitted). Vistaprint recognizes that the ICANN Board intervened to address “perceived inconsistent or otherwise unreasonable SCO Expert Determinations” (fn. omitted). However, ICANN fails to explain why the SCO Expert Determination on Vistaprint’s .webs applications was not just as unreasonable as the SCO Expert Determinations involving .cars/.car, .cam/.com and 通販 / .shop. Indeed, the determination concerning Vistaprint’s .webs applications expressly relies on the determination concerning .cars/.car, that was considered inconsistent or otherwise unreasonable by the ICANN Board that rejected the reasoning applied in the two other .cars/.car expert determinations (fn. omitted).

23. Therefore, Vistaprint requests the IRP Panel to exercise its control over the ICANN Board and to declare that ICANN discriminated Vistaprint’s applications.

95. Timing: Vistaprint contends that the objections it raises in this IRP concerning the Third Expert’s SCO determination and the Guidebook and its application are timely.<sup>133</sup> While

ICANN argues that the time for Vistaprint to object to the SCO procedures as established in the Guidebook has long passed,<sup>134</sup> Vistaprint responds that the opportunity to challenge the erroneous application of the Guidebook in violation of ICANN's fundamental principles only arose when the flaws in ICANN's implementation of the Guidebook became apparent. At the time of the adoption of the Guidebook, Vistaprint was effectively barred from challenging it by the fact that it could not – at that time – show any harm. Further, to raise an issue at that time would have required Vistaprint to reveal that it was contemplating making an application for a new gTLD string, which might have encouraged opportunistic applications by others seeking to extract monetary value from Vistaprint. Although the IRP panel in the Booking.com v. ICANN IRP raised similar timing concerns, it did not draw the distinction between the adoption of the general principles and their subsequent implementation.

a. IRP Panel's Authority

96. Standard of review: ICANN describes the IRP as a unique mechanism available under ICANN's Bylaws.<sup>135</sup> The IRP Panel is tasked with determining whether the Board's actions are consistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. ICANN states that its Bylaws specifically identify a deferential standard of review that the IRP Panel must apply when evaluating the actions of the ICANN Board, and the rules are clear that the IRP Panel is neither asked to, nor allowed to, substitute its judgment for that of the Board.<sup>136</sup> In particular, ICANN cites to Article IV, § 3.4 of the Bylaws indicating the IRP Panel is to apply a defined standard of review to the IRP Request, focusing on:
- a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;
  - b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
  - c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?
97. Further, ICANN states that the IRP addresses challenges to conduct undertaken by ICANN's Board of Directors; it is not a mechanism to challenge the actions or inactions of ICANN staff or third parties that may be involved with ICANN's activities.<sup>137</sup> The IRP is also not an appropriate forum to challenge the BGC's ruling on a Reconsideration Request in the absence of some violation by the BGC of ICANN's Articles or Bylaws.<sup>138</sup>
98. IRP Declaration binding or non-binding: ICANN states that the IRP "is conducted pursuant to Article IV, section 3 of ICANN's Bylaws, which creates a non-binding method of evaluating certain actions of ICANN's Board.<sup>139</sup> The Panel has one responsibility – to “declar[e] whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of [ICANN's] Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>140</sup> The IRP is not an arbitration process, but rather a means by which entities that participate in ICANN's processes can seek an independent review of decisions made by ICANN's Board.

99. ICANN states that the language of the IRP provisions set forth in Article IV, section 3 of the Bylaws, as well as the drafting history of the development of the IRP provisions, make clear that IRP panel declarations are not binding on ICANN:<sup>141</sup> ICANN explains as follows in its First Additional Response:

35. First, the Bylaws charge an IRP panel with "comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws." The Board is then obligated to "review[]"<sup>142</sup> and "consider" an IRP panel's declaration at the Board's next meeting "where feasible."<sup>143</sup> The direction to "review" and "consider" an IRP panel's declaration means that the Board has discretion as to whether it should adopt that declaration and whether it should take any action in response to that declaration; if the declaration were binding, there would be nothing to review or consider, only a binding order to implement.

100. ICANN contends that the IRP Panel's declaration is not binding because the Board is not permitted to outsource its decision-making authority.<sup>144</sup> However, the Board will, of course, give serious consideration to the IRP Panel's declaration and, “where feasible,” shall consider the IRP Panel's declaration at the Board's next meeting.<sup>145</sup>

101. As to the drafting process, ICANN provides the following background in its First Additional Response:

36. Second, the lengthy drafting history of ICANN's independent review process confirms that IRP panel declarations are not binding. Specifically, the Draft Principles for Independent Review, drafted in 1999, state that "the ICANN Board should retain ultimate authority over ICANN's affairs – after all, it is the Board...that will be chosen by (and is directly accountable to) the membership and supporting organizations (fn. omitted). And when, in 2001, the Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform (ERC) recommended the creation of an independent review process, it called for the creation of "a process to require non-binding arbitration by an international arbitration body to review any allegation that the Board has acted in conflict with ICANN's Bylaws" (fn. omitted). The individuals who actively participated in the process also agreed that the review process would not be binding. As one participant stated: IRP "decisions will be nonbinding, because the Board will retain final decision-making authority" (fn. omitted).

37. In February 2010, the first IRP panel to issue a final declaration, the ICM IRP Panel, unanimously rejected the assertion that IRP panel declarations are binding<sup>146</sup> and recognized that an IRP panel's declaration "is not binding, but rather advisory in effect." Nothing has occurred since the issuance of the ICM IRP Panel's declaration that changes the fact that IRP panel declarations are not binding. To the contrary, in April 2013, following the ICM IRP, in order to clarify even further that IRPs are not binding, all references in the Bylaws to the term "arbitration" were removed as part of the Bylaws revisions. ICM had argued in the IRP that the use of the word "arbitration" in the portion of the Bylaws related to Independent Review indicated that IRPs were binding, and while the ICM IRP Panel rejected that argument, to avoid any lingering doubt, ICANN removed the word "arbitration" in conjunction with the amendments to the Bylaws.

38. The amendments to the Bylaws, which occurred following a community process on proposed IRP revisions, added, among other things, a sentence stating that "declarations of the IRP Panel, and the Board's subsequent action on those declarations, are final and have precedential value" (fn. omitted). Vistaprint argues that this new language, which does not actually use the word "binding," nevertheless provides that IRP panel declarations are binding, trumping years of drafting history, the sworn testimony of those who participated in the drafting process, and the plain text of the Bylaws. This argument is meritless.

39. First, relying on the use of the terms "final" and "precedential" is unavailing – a declaration clearly can be both non-binding and also final and precedential:....

40. Second, the language Vistaprint references was added to ICANN's Bylaws to meet recommendations made by ICANN's Accountability Structures Expert Panel (ASEP). The ASEP was comprised of three world-renowned experts on issues of corporate governance, accountability, and international dispute resolution, and was charged with evaluating ICANN's accountability mechanisms, including the Independent Review process. The ASEP recommended, among other things, that an IRP should not be permitted to proceed on the same issues as presented in a prior IRP. The ASEP's recommendations in this regard were raised in light of the second IRP constituted under ICANN's Bylaws, where the claimant presented claims that would have required the IRP Panel to reevaluate the declaration of the IRP Panel in the ICM IRP. To prevent claimants from challenging Board action taken in direct response to a prior IRP panel declaration, the ASEP recommended that "[t]he declarations of the IRP, and ICANN's subsequent actions on those declarations, should have precedential value" (fn. omitted).

41. The ASEP's recommendations in this regard did not convert IRP panel declarations into binding decisions (fn. omitted). One of the important considerations underlying the ASEP's work was the fact that ICANN, while it operates internationally, is a California non-profit public benefit corporation subject to the statutory law of California as determined by United States courts. As Graham McDonald, one of the three ASEP experts, explained, because California law requires that the board "retain responsibility for decision-making," the Board has "final word" on "any recommendation that ... arises out of [an IRP]" (fn. omitted). The ASEP's recommendations were therefore premised on the understanding that the declaration of an IRP panel is not "binding" on the Board.

102. Authority to award affirmative relief: ICANN contends that any request that the IRP Panel grant affirmative relief goes beyond the Panel's authority.<sup>147</sup> The Panel does not have the authority to award affirmative relief or to require ICANN to undertake specific conduct. The Panel is limited to declaring whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles or Bylaws, and recommending that the Board stay any action or decision, or take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the Panel.<sup>148</sup> ICANN adds that the IRP panel in ICM Registry Declaration found that

“[t]he IRP cannot ‘order’ interim measures but do no more than ‘recommend’ them, and this until the Board ‘reviews’ and ‘acts upon the opinion’ of the IRP.”<sup>149</sup>

b. SCO Proceedings Claim

103. ICANN states that Vistaprint is using this IRP as a means to challenge the merits of the Third Expert’s determination in the Vistaprint SCO.<sup>150</sup> As ICANN states in its Response:

12. Ultimately, Vistaprint has initiated this IRP because Vistaprint disagrees with the Expert Panel’s Determination and the BGC’s finding on Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request. ICANN understands Vistaprint’s disappointment, but IRPs are not a vehicle by which an Expert Panel’s determination may be challenged because neither the determination, nor ICANN accepting the determination, constitutes an ICANN Board action. Nor is an IRP the appropriate forum to challenge a BGC ruling on a Reconsideration Request in the absence of some violation by the BGC of ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws. Here, ICANN followed its policies and processes at every turn with respect to Vistaprint, which is all it is required to do.

104. ICANN states that the IRP Panel has one chief responsibility – to “determine whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of [ICANN’s] Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>151</sup> With respect to Vistaprint’s claim that ICANN’s Board violated its Articles and Bylaws by “blindly accepting” the Third Expert’s SCO determination without reviewing its analysis or result, ICANN responds that there is no requirement for the Board to conduct such an analysis. “Accepting” or “reviewing” the Expert’s determination is not something the Board was tasked with doing or not doing. Per the Guidebook, the “findings of the panel will be considered an expert determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process.”<sup>152</sup> The Guidebook further provides that “[i]n a case where a gTLD applicant successfully asserts string confusion with another applicant, the only possible outcome is for both applicants to be placed in a contention set and to be referred to a contention resolution procedure (refer to Module 4, String Contention Procedures).”<sup>153</sup> This step is a result not of any ICANN Board action, but a straightforward application of Guidebook provisions for SCO determinations.

105. ICANN states the Board thus took no action with respect to the Third Expert’s determination upon its initial issuance, because the Guidebook does not call for the Board to take any action and it is not required by any Article or Bylaw provision. Accordingly, it cannot be a violation of ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws for the Board to not conduct a substantive review of an expert's SCO determination. And as such, there is no Board action in this regard for the IRP Panel to review.

106. ICANN states that “the sole Board action that Vistaprint has identified in this case is the BGC’s rejection of Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request. However, ICANN maintains that nothing about the BGC’s handling of the RFR violated ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws.”<sup>154</sup>
107. In this regard, ICANN states that the BGC was not required, as Vistaprint contends, to refer Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request to the entire ICANN Board.<sup>155</sup> The Bylaws provide that the BGC has the authority to “make a final determination of Reconsideration Requests regarding staff action or inaction, without reference to the Board of Directors.”<sup>156</sup> Because Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request was a challenge to alleged staff action, the BGC was within its authority, and in compliance with the Bylaws, when it denied Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request without making a referral to the full Board.
108. ICANN states that the BGC did what it was supposed to do in reviewing Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request – it reviewed the Third Expert’s and ICANN staff’s compliance with policies and procedures, rather than the substance of the Third Expert’s SCO determination, and found no policy or process violations.<sup>157</sup> ICANN urges that Vistaprint seeks to use the IRP to challenge the substantive decision of the Third Expert in the Vistaprint SCO. However, this IRP may only be used to challenge ICANN Board actions on the grounds that they do not comply with the Articles or Bylaws, neither of which is present here.
109. ICANN nevertheless responds to Vistaprint’s allegations regarding errors of process and substance in the SCO proceedings, and contends that the BGC properly handled its review of the Vistaprint SCO. ICANN’s specific responses on these points are as follows:
  - (i) As to Vistaprint’s claim that the ICDR’s appointment of the First Expert was untimely, missing the deadline by 5 days, ICANN states that the BGC determined that Vistaprint failed to provide any evidence that it contemporaneously challenged the timeliness of the ICDR’s appointment of the First Expert, and that a Reconsideration Request was not the appropriate mechanism to raise the issue for the first time. In addition, the BGC concluded that Vistaprint had failed to show that it was “materially” and “adversely” affected by the brief delay in appointing the First Expert, rendering reconsideration inappropriate.
  - (ii) Regarding Vistaprint’s claim that the First Expert (and Third Expert) improperly accepted and considered unsolicited supplemental filings, violating Articles 17 and 18 of the New gTLD Objections Procedure, ICANN states that Article 17 provides the expert panel with the discretion to accept such a filing:<sup>158</sup> “The Panel may decide whether the parties shall submit any written statements in addition to the Objection and the Response, and it shall fix time limits for such submissions.”<sup>159</sup> Thus, as the BGC correctly found, it was not the BGC’s place to second-guess the First (or Third) Expert’s exercise of permitted discretion.

- (iii) As to Vistaprint’s claim that the ICDR violated Article 21 of the New gTLD Objections Procedure by failing to ensure the timely issuance of an expert SCO determination, ICANN contends that the BGC properly determined that Vistaprint’s claims in this regard did not support reconsideration for two reasons. First, on October 1, 2013, before the determination was supposed to be issued by the First Expert, the ICDR removed that expert. The BGC therefore could not evaluate whether the First Expert rendered an untimely determination in violation of the Procedure. Second, the BGC correctly noted that 45-day timeline applies to an expert’s submission of the determination “in draft form to the [ICDR’s] scrutiny as to form before it is signed” and the ICDR and the Expert are merely required to exercise “reasonable efforts” to issue a determination within 45 days of the constitution of the Panel.<sup>160</sup>
- (iv) Regarding Vistaprint’s claim that the First Expert failed to maintain independence and impartiality, in violation of Article 13(c) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure, ICANN argues this claim is unsupported.<sup>161</sup> As the BGC noted, Vistaprint provided no evidence demonstrating that the First Expert failed to follow the applicable ICDR procedures for independence and impartiality. Rather, all indications are that the First Expert and the ICDR complied with these rules as to this “new conflict,” which resulted in a removal of the First Expert. Further, Vistaprint presented no evidence of being materially and adversely affected by the First Expert’s removal, which is another justification for the BGC’s denial of the Reconsideration Request.
- (v) Vistaprint claimed that the ICDR unjustifiably accepted a challenge to the Second Expert (or created the circumstances for such a challenge), in violation of Article 2 of the ICDR’s Supplementary Procedures for String Confusion Objections.<sup>162</sup> ICANN contends that the BGC properly determined that this claim did not support reconsideration. The ICDR Rules for SCOs make clear that the ICDR had the “sole discretion” to review and decide challenges to the appointment of expert panelists. While Vistaprint may disagree with the ICDR’s decision to accept the Objector’s challenge, it is not the BGC’s role to second guess the ICDR’s discretion, and it was not a violation of the Articles or Bylaws for the BGC to deny reconsideration on this ground.

- (vi) Vistaprint claimed that the determination of the Third Expert was untimely, in violation of Article 21(a) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure. ICANN claims that the BGC properly held that this claim did not support reconsideration.<sup>163</sup> On November 20, 2013, the ICDR appointed the Third Expert. Vistaprint claimed in its Reconsideration Request that pursuant to Article 21, the determination therefore “should have been rendered by January 4, 2014,” which was forty-five (45) days after the Panel was constituted. Because “it took this Panel until January 24, 2014 to render the Decision,” Vistaprint contended that the determination was untimely because it was twenty days late. ICANN states that, according to the Procedure, the Expert must exercise “reasonable efforts” to ensure that it submits its determination “in draft form to the DRSP’s scrutiny as to form before it is signed” within forty-five (45) days of the Expert Panel being constituted. As the BGC noted, there is no evidence that the Third Expert failed to comply with this Procedure, and reconsideration was therefore unwarranted on this ground.
- (vii) ICANN responded to Vistaprint’s claim that the Third Expert incorrectly applied the Objector’s burden of proof, in violation of section 3.5 of the Guidebook and Article 20(c) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure (which place the burden on the Objector). Vistaprint claimed that the Third Expert contravened ICANN’s process because the Expert did not give an analysis showing that the Objector had met the burden of proof.<sup>164</sup> ICANN states that the BGC found the Expert extensively detailed support for the conclusion that the .WEBS string so nearly resembles .WEB – visually, aurally and in meaning – that it is likely to cause confusion. The BGC noted that the Expert had adhered to the procedures and standards set forth in the Guidebook relevant to determining string confusion and reconsideration was not warranted on this basis.
- (viii) Finally, as to Vistaprint’s claim that the Third Expert incorrectly applied ICANN’s substantive standard for evaluation of String Confusion Objections (as set out in Section 3.5.1 of the Guidebook), ICANN contends the BGC properly found that reconsideration was not appropriate.<sup>165</sup> Vistaprint contended that the Expert failed to apply the appropriate high standard for assessing likelihood of confusion.<sup>166</sup> ICANN states that Section 3.5.1 of the Guidebook provides that

“[f]or the likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user.”

ICANN claims that disagreement as to whether this standard should have resulted in a finding in favor of Vistaprint does not mean that the Third Expert violated any policy or process in reaching his decision. Vistaprint also claimed that the Third

Expert “failed to apply the burden of proof and the standards imposed by ICANN” because the Expert questioned whether the co-existence between Vistaprint’s domain name, <webs.com>, and the Objector’s domain name, <web.com> for many years without evidence of actual confusion is relevant to his determination. ICANN states that, as the BGC noted, the relevant consideration for the Expert is whether the applied-for gTLD string is likely to result in string confusion, not whether there is confusion between second-level domain names. Vistaprint does not cite any provision of the Guidebook, the Procedure, or the Rules that have been contravened in this regard.

110. In sum, ICANN contends that the BGC did its job, which did not include evaluating the merits of Third Expert’s determination, and the BGC followed applicable policies and procedures in considering the RFR.<sup>167</sup>

111. Regarding Vistaprint’s claims of ICANN’s breach of various Articles and Bylaws, ICANN responds as follows in its Response:

71. First, Vistaprint contends that ICANN failed to comply with the general principle of “good faith.” But the only reason Vistaprint asserts ICANN failed to act in good faith is in “refus[ing] to reconsider the substance” of the Determination or to “act with independent judgment” (fn. omitted). The absence of an appeal mechanism by which Vistaprint might challenge the Determination does not form the basis for an IRP because there is nothing in ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation requiring ICANN to provide one.

72. Second, Vistaprint contends that ICANN failed to apply its policies in a neutral manner. Here, Vistaprint complains that other panels let other applications proceed without being placed into a contention set, even though they, in Vistaprint’s opinion, presented “at least equally serious string similarity concerns” as .WEBS/.WEB (fn. omitted). Vistaprint’s claims about ICDR’s treatment of other string similarity disputes cannot be resolved by IRP, as they are even further removed from Board conduct. Different outcomes by different expert panels related to different gTLDs are to be expected. Claiming that other applicants have not suffered adverse determinations does not convert the Expert Panel’s Determination into a “discriminatory ICANN Board act.”

73. Third, Vistaprint contends that the ICANN Board violated its obligation to act transparently for not investigating the “impartiality and independence” of the Expert Panel and thereby “did not seek to communicate with [ICDR] to optimize [its] service” (fn. omitted). Aside from the disconnect between the particular Bylaws provision invoked by Vistaprint requiring ICANN’s transparency, and the complaint that the ICDR did not act transparently, Vistaprint fails to identify any procedural deficiency in the ICDR’s actions regarding the removal of the First Expert, as set forth above. Moreover, Vistaprint cites no obligation in the Articles or Bylaws that the ICANN Board affirmatively investigate the impartiality of an Expert Panel, outside of the requirement that the ICDR follow its policies on conflicts, which the ICDR did.

74. Fourth, Vistaprint contends that ICANN “has not created any general process for challenging the substance of the so-called expert determination,” and thus has “brashly flouted” its obligation to remain accountable (fn. omitted). But again, Vistaprint does not identify any provision of the Articles or Bylaws that requires ICANN to provide such an appeals process.

75. Fifth, Vistaprint “concludes” that the ICANN Board neglected its duty to promote competition and innovation (fn. omitted) when it failed to overturn the Expert Panel’s Determination. Vistaprint claims that the Objector’s “motive in filing the objection was to prevent a potential competitor from entering the gTLD market” and therefore ICANN’s “acceptance” of the objection purportedly contravenes ICANN’s core value of promoting competition. But every objection to a gTLD application by an applicant for the same string seeks to hinder a competitor’s application. By Vistaprint’s logic, ICANN’s commitment to promoting competition requires that no objections ever be sustained and every applicant obtains the gTLD it requests. There is no provision in the Articles or Bylaws that require such an unworkable system.

76. All in all, Vistaprint’s attempt to frame its disappointment with the Expert Panel’s decision as the ICANN Board’s dereliction of duties does not withstand scrutiny.

c. Disparate Treatment Claim

112. ICANN states that Vistaprint objects to the Board’s exercise of its independent judgement in determining not to intervene further (beyond the review of the BGC) with respect to the Third Expert’s determination in the Vistaprint SCO, as the Board did with respect to expert determinations on String Confusion Objections regarding the strings (1) .COM/.CAM, (2) .CAR/.CARS, and (3) .SHOP/.通販 (online shopping in Japanese).<sup>168</sup>
113. ICANN states that the Guidebook provides that in “exceptional circumstances,” such as when accountability mechanisms like RFR or IRP are invoked, “the Board might individually consider an application”<sup>169</sup> and that is precisely what occurred in Vistaprint’s case. Because Vistaprint sought reconsideration, the BGC considered Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request and concluded that the ICDR and Third Expert had not violated any relevant policy or procedure in rendering the Expert’s determination.
114. ICANN states that the ICANN Board only intervened with respect to these other expert determinations because there had been several independent expert determinations regarding the same strings that were seemingly inconsistent with one another. That is not the case with respect to Vistaprint’s applications – no other expert determinations were issued regarding the similarity of .WEB and .WEBS.<sup>170</sup> “Unlike .WEB/.WEBS, the COM/.CAM, .CAR/.CARS, and .SHOP/.通販 strings were all the subject of several, seemingly inconsistent determinations on string confusion objections by different expert panels. So, for example, while one expert upheld a string confusion objection asserting that .CAM was confusingly similar to .COM, another expert overruled a separate string confusion objection asserting precisely the same thing.”<sup>171</sup>
115. Further, ICANN explains that

16. Given what were viewed by some as inconsistent determinations, the BGC requested that ICANN staff draft a report for the ICANN Board’s New gTLD Program Committee (“NGPC”), “setting out

ICANN quotes the Booking.com Final Declaration, where the IRP Panel stated in relation to § 5.1 “the fact that the ICANN Board enjoys such discretion [to individually consider an application for a New gTLD] and may choose to exercise it at any time does not mean that it is bound to exercise it, let alone at the time and in the manner demanded by Booking.com.”

options for dealing...[with] differing outcomes of the String Confusion Objection Dispute Resolution process in similar disputes...."<sup>172</sup> The NGPC subsequently considered potential approaches to addressing perceived inconsistent determinations on string confusion objections, including possibly implementing a new review mechanism.<sup>173</sup> ICANN staff initiated a public comment period regarding framework principles of a potential such review mechanism.<sup>174</sup> Ultimately, having considered the report drafted by ICANN staff, the public comments received, and the string confusion objection process set forth in the Guidebook, the NGPC determined that the inconsistent expert determinations regarding .COM/.CAM and .SHOP/.通販 were "not[] in the best interest of the New gTLD Program and the Internet community" and directed ICANN staff to establish a process whereby the ICDR would appoint a three-member panel to re-evaluate those expert determinations.<sup>175</sup>

116. ICANN contends that Vistaprint has identified no Articles or Bylaws provision violated by the Board in exercising its independent judgment to intervene with respect to inconsistent determinations in certain SCO cases, but not with respect to the single expert SCO determination regarding .WEBS/.WEB. The Board was justified in exercising its discretion to intervene with respect to the inconsistent expert determinations regarding .COM/.CAM, .CAR/.CARS and .SHOP/.通販 - the Board acted to bring certainty to multiple and differing expert determinations on String Confusion Objections regarding the same strings.<sup>176</sup> That justification was not present with respect to the single Vistaprint SCO determination at issue here. Thus, ICANN contends Vistaprint was not treated differently than other similarly-situated gTLD applicants.

117. Timing: Finally, ICANN also states that the time for Vistaprint to challenge the Guidebook and its standards has past. The current version of the Guidebook was published on June 4, 2012 following an extensive review process, including public comment on multiple drafts.<sup>177</sup> Despite having ample opportunity, Vistaprint did not object to the Guidebook at the time it was implemented. If Vistaprint had concerns related to the issues it now raises, it should have pursued them at the time, not years later and only after receiving the determination in the Vistaprint SCO. ICANN quotes the Booking.com Final Declaration, where the IRP stated,

"the time has long since passed for Booking.com or any other interested party to ask an IRP panel to review the actions of the ICANN Board in relation to the establishment of the string similarity review process, including Booking.com's claims that specific elements of the process and the Board decisions to implement those elements are inconsistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. Any such claims, even if they had any merit, are long since time-barred by the 30-day limitation period set out in Article IV, Section 3(3) of the Bylaws."<sup>178</sup>

118. ICANN states that while the Guidebook process at issue in this case is different for the process at issue in the Booking.com IRP – the SCO process rather than the string similarity review process – the Booking.com IRP panel's reasoning applies equally. ICANN argues that because both processes were developed years ago, as part of the development of the Guidebook, challenges to both are time-barred.<sup>179</sup>

V. Analysis and Findings

a. IRP Panel's Authority

119. Standard of Review: The IRP Panel has benefited from the parties' submissions on this issue, noting their agreement as to the Panel's primary task: comparing contested actions (or inactions)<sup>180</sup> of ICANN's Board to its Articles and Bylaws and declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with them. Yet when considering this Panel's comparative task, the parties disagree as to the level of deference to be accorded by the Panel in assessing the Board's actions or inactions.

120. Vistaprint has sought independent review through this IRP, claiming that it has been "harmed" (i.e., its .WEBS application has not been allowed to proceed and has been placed in a Contention Set) by the Board's alleged violation of the Articles and Bylaws. In accordance with Article IV, § 3.2 of the Bylaws:

Any person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws may submit a request for independent review of that decision or action. In order to be materially affected, the person must suffer injury or harm that is directly and causally connected to the Board's alleged violation of the Bylaws or the Articles of Incorporation, and not as a result of third parties acting in line with the Board's action.

121. As noted above, Article IV, § 1 of the Bylaws emphasizes that the IRP is an accountability mechanism:

The provisions of this Article, creating processes for reconsideration and independent review of ICANN actions and periodic review of ICANN's structure and procedures, are intended to reinforce the various accountability mechanisms otherwise set forth in these Bylaws.

122. The Bylaws in Article IV, § 3.4 detail the IRP Panel's charge and issues to be considered in a defined standard of review:

Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Process Panel ("IRP Panel"), which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The IRP Panel must apply a defined standard of review to the IRP request, focusing on:

- a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;*
- b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and*

<sup>180</sup> Bylaws, Art. IV, § 3.11(c) ("The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:...(c) declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws" (underlining added)).

- c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?<sup>181</sup>

[Underlining added]

123. The Bylaws state the IRP Panel is “charged” with “comparing” contested actions of the Board to the Articles and Bylaws and “declaring” whether the Board has acted consistently with them. The Panel is to focus, in particular, on whether the Board acted without conflict of interest, exercised due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of it, and exercised independent judgment in taking a decision believed to be in the best interests of ICANN. In the IRP Panel’s view this more detailed listing of a defined standard cannot be read to remove from the Panel’s remit the fundamental task of comparing actions or inactions of the Board with the Articles and Bylaws and declaring whether the Board has acted consistently or not. Instead, the defined standard provides a list of questions that can be asked, but not to the exclusion of other potential questions that might arise in a particular case as the Panel goes about its comparative work. For example, the particular circumstances may raise questions whether the Board acted in a transparent or non-discriminatory manner. In this regard, the ICANN Board’s discretion is limited by the Articles and Bylaws, and it is against the provisions of these instruments that the Board’s conduct must be measured.
124. The Panel agrees with ICANN’s statement that the Panel is neither asked to, nor allowed to, substitute its judgment for that of the Board. However, this does not fundamentally alter the lens through which the Panel must view its comparative task. As Vistaprint has urged, the IRP is the only accountability mechanism by which ICANN holds itself accountable through independent third-party review of its actions or inactions. Nothing in the Bylaws specifies that the IRP Panel’s review must be founded on a deferential standard, as ICANN has asserted. Such a standard would undermine the Panel’s primary goal of ensuring accountability on the part of ICANN and its Board, and would be incompatible with ICANN’s commitment to maintain and improve robust mechanisms for accountability, as required by ICANN’s Affirmation of Commitments, Bylaws and core values.

<sup>181</sup> The Supplementary Rules provide similarly in section 1 that the IRP is designed “to review ICANN Board actions or inactions alleged to be inconsistent with ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation” with the standard of review set forth in section 8:

8. Standard of Review

The IRP is subject to the following standard of review: (i) did the ICANN Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision; (ii) did the ICANN Board exercise due diligence and care in having sufficient facts in front of them; (iii) did the ICANN Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?

If a requestor demonstrates that the ICANN Board did not make a reasonable inquiry to determine it had sufficient facts available, ICANN Board members had a conflict of interest in participating in the decision, or the decision was not an exercise in independent judgment, believed by the ICANN Board to be in the best interests of the company, after taking account of the Internet community and the global public interest, the requestor will have established proper grounds for review.

125. The IRP Panel is aware that three other IRP panels have considered this issue of standard of review and degree of deference to be accorded, if any, when assessing the conduct of ICANN’s Board. All of them have reached the same conclusion: the Board’s conduct is to be reviewed and appraised by the IRP Panel using an objective and independent standard, without any presumption of correctness.<sup>182</sup> As the IRP Panel reasoned in the ICM Registry Final Declaration:

ICANN is no ordinary non-profit California corporation. The Government of the United States vested regulatory authority of vast dimension and pervasive global reach in ICANN. In “recognition of the fact that the Internet is an international network of networks, owned by no single nation, individual or organization” – including ICANN – ICANN is charged with “promoting the global public interest in the operational stability of the Internet...” ICANN “shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law...” Thus, while a California corporation, it is governed particularly by the terms of its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, as the law of California allows. Those Articles and Bylaws, which require ICANN to carry out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law, do not specify or imply that the International Review Process provided for shall (or shall not) accord deference to the decisions of the ICANN Board. The fact that the Board is empowered to exercise its judgment in the application of ICANN’s sometimes competing core values does not necessarily import that that judgment must be treated deferentially by the IRP. In the view of the Panel, the judgments of the ICANN Board are to be reviewed and appraised by the Panel objectively, not deferentially. The business judgment rule of the law of California, applicable to directors of California corporations, profit and nonprofit, in the case of ICANN is to be treated as a default rule that might be called upon in the absence of relevant provisions of ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws and of specific representations of ICANN...that bear on the propriety of its conduct. In the instant case, it is those Articles and Bylaws, and those representations, measured against the facts as the Panel finds them, which are determinative.<sup>183</sup>

126. The IRP Panel here agrees with this analysis. Moreover, Article IV, §3.21 of the Bylaws provides that “declarations of the IRP Panel, and the Board’s subsequent action on those declarations, are final and have precedential value” (underlining added). The IRP Panel recognizes that there is unanimity on the issue of degree of deference, as found by the three IRP panels that have previously considered it. The declarations of those panels have precedential value. The Panel considers that the question on this issue is now settled. Therefore, in this IRP the ICANN Board’s conduct is to be reviewed and appraised by this Panel objectively and independently, without any presumption of correctness.

127. On a related point as to the scope of the IRP Panel’s review, the Panel agrees with ICANN’s point of emphasis that, because the Panel’s review is limited to addressing challenges to conduct by ICANN’s Board, the Panel is not tasked with reviewing the actions or decisions of ICANN staff or other third parties who may be involved in ICANN activities or provide services to ICANN (such as the ICDR or the experts in the Vistaprint SCO). With this in mind, and with the focus on the Board, the only affirmative action of the Board in relation to Vistaprint's .WEBS gTLD application was through the BGC, which denied Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request.<sup>184</sup> ICANN states that "the sole Board action that Vistaprint has identified in this case is the Board Governance Committee's ('BGC') rejection of Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request, which sought reconsideration of the Expert Determination."<sup>185</sup> It appears that ICANN's focus in this statement is on affirmative action taken by the BGC in rejecting Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request; however, this does not eliminate the IRP Panel's consideration of whether, in the circumstances, inaction (or omission) by the BGC or the full ICANN Board in relation to the issues raised by Vistaprint's application would be considered a potential violation of the Articles or Bylaws.

128. As discussed below, the Panel considers that a significant question in this IRP concerns one of "omission" – the ICANN Board, through the BGC or otherwise, did not provide relief to Vistaprint in the form of an additional review mechanism, as it did to certain other parties who were the subject of an adverse SCO determination.
129. IRP declaration binding or non-binding: As noted above, Vistaprint contends that the outcome of this IRP is binding on ICANN, and that any other result would be incompatible with ICANN's obligation to maintain and improve robust mechanisms for accountability. ICANN, on the other hand, contends that the IRP Panel's declaration is intended to be advisory and non-binding.
130. In analyzing this issue, the IRP Panel has carefully reviewed the three charter instruments that give the Panel its authority to act in this case: the Bylaws, the Supplementary Procedures, and the ICDR Rules. The Panel views that it is important to distinguish between (i) the findings of the Panel on the question of whether the ICANN Board's conduct is consistent (or not) with the Articles and Bylaws, and (ii) any consequent remedial measures to be considered as a result of those findings, at least insofar as those

<sup>184</sup> The BGC is a committee of the Board established pursuant to Article XII, § 1 of the Bylaws. Article IV, § 2.3 of the Bylaws provide for the delegation of the Board's authority to the BGC to consider Requests for Reconsideration and indicate that the BGC shall have the authority to:

- a. evaluate requests for review or reconsideration;
- b. summarily dismiss insufficient requests;
- c. evaluate requests for urgent consideration;
- d. conduct whatever factual investigation is deemed appropriate;
- e. request additional written submissions from the affected party, or from other parties;
- f. make a final determination on Reconsideration Requests regarding staff action or inaction, without reference to the Board of Directors; and
- g. make a recommendation to the Board of Directors on the merits of the request, as necessary.

The BGC has discretion to decide whether to issue a final decision or make a recommendation to ICANN's Board. In this case, the BGC decided to make a final determination on Vistaprint's RFR.

<sup>185</sup> ICANN's First Additional Submission, ¶ 4. By contrast to the IRP Panel's focus on the Board's conduct, the BGC in its decision on Vistaprint's Reconsideration request considered the action or inaction of ICANN staff and third parties providing services to ICANN (i.e., the ICDR and SCO experts).

measures would direct the Board to take or not take any action or decision. The Panel considers that, as to the first point, the findings of the Panel on whether the Board has acted in a manner that is consistent (or not) with the Articles or Bylaws is akin to a finding of breach/liability by a court in a contested legal case. This determination by the Panel is “binding” in the sense that ICANN’s Board cannot overrule the Panel’s declaration on this point or later decide for itself that it disagrees with the Panel and that there was no inconsistency with (or violation of) the Articles and Bylaws. However, when it comes to the question of whether or not the IRP Panel can require that ICANN’s Board implement any form of redress based on a finding of violation, here, the Panel believes that it can only raise remedial measures to be considered by the Board in an advisory, non-binding manner. The Panel concludes that this distinction – between a “binding” declaration on the violation question and a “non-binding” declaration when it comes to recommending that the Board stay or take any action – is most consistent with the terms and spirit of the charter instruments upon which the Panel’s jurisdiction is based, and avoids conflating these two aspects of the Panel’s role.

131. The IRP Panel shares some of Vistaprint’s concerns about the efficacy of the IRP as an accountability mechanism if any affirmative relief that might be considered appropriate by the Panel is considered non-binding on ICANN’s Board (see discussion below); nevertheless, the Panel determines on the basis of the charter instruments, as well as the drafting history of those documents, that its declaration is binding only with respect to the finding of compliance or not with the Articles and Bylaws, and non-binding with respect to any measures that the Panel might recommend the Board take or refrain from taking. The Panel’s Declaration will have “precedential value” and will possibly be made publicly available on ICANN’s website.<sup>186</sup> Thus, the declaration of violation (or not), even without the ability to order binding relief vis-à-vis ICANN’s Board, will carry more weight than would be the case if the IRP was a confidential procedure with decisions that carried no precedential value.

132. To the extent that there is ambiguity on the nature of the IRP Panel’s declaration (which perhaps could have been avoided in the first place), it is because there is ambiguity and an apparent contradiction created by some of the key terms of the three charter instruments – the Bylaws, the Supplementary Procedures, and the ICDR Rules. In terms of a potential interpretive hierarchy for these documents – to the extent that such hierarchy is relevant – the Bylaws can be said to have created the IRP and its terms of reference: the IRP is established as an accountability mechanism pursuant to the Bylaws, Article IV, § 3 (Independent Review of Board Actions). Article IV, § 3.8 of the Bylaws, in turn, delegates to the “IRP Provider” the task of establishing rules and procedures that are supposed to be consistent with Article IV, § 3:

Subject to the approval of the Board, the IRP Provider shall establish operating rules and procedures,

<sup>186</sup> The Panel observes the final declarations in all previous IRPs that have gone to decision, as well as declarations concerning procedure and interim relief, have been posted on ICANN’s website. In this respect, Supplementary Procedures, Rule 10(c) provides that a “Declaration may be made public only with the consent of all parties or as required by law”. However, ICANN has also agreed in Rule 10(c) that subject to the redaction of confidential information or unforeseen circumstances, “ICANN will consent to publication of a Declaration if the other party so requests.”

which shall implement and be consistent with this Section 3.

[Underlining added]

133. Thus, the Supplementary Procedures and ICDR Rules were established pursuant to Article IV, § 3.8 of the Bylaws; however, the requirement of consistency as between the texts was imperfectly implemented, at least with respect to the ICDR Rules, as discussed below. As between the Supplementary Procedures and the ICDR Rules, the Supplementary Procedures will control, as provided in Supplementary Rule 2:

In the event there is any inconsistency between these Supplementary Procedures and the Rules, these Supplementary Procedures will govern.

134. The Bylaws in Article IV, § 3.4 provide that the Panel shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles and Bylaws, and with “declaring” whether the Board has acted consistently with them. The IRP panel in the ICM Registry Final Declaration stressed that the IRP panel’s task is “to ‘declare’, not to ‘decide’ or to ‘determine’.”<sup>187</sup> However, the word “declare”, alone, does not conclusively answer the question of whether the IRP’s declaration (or any part of it) is binding or not. “To declare” means “to announce or express something clearly and publicly, especially officially.”<sup>188</sup> Declarations can and do serve as the predicate for binding or non-binding consequences in different contexts. For example, a declaratory relief action – in which a court resolves legal uncertainty by determining the rights of parties under a contract or statute without ordering anything be done or awarding damages – can have a binding result because it may later preclude a lawsuit by one of the parties to the declaratory lawsuit. Further, in a non-legal context, “declaring” a state of emergency in a particular state or country can have binding consequences. Thus, the word “declare,” in itself, does not answer the issue.

135. Moreover, nothing in the Bylaws, Supplementary Procedures or ICDR Rules suggests that the IRP Panel’s declaration is non-binding with respect to the Panel’s core task of deciding whether the Board did, or did not, comply the Articles or Bylaws. There is no provision that states the ICANN Board can reconsider this independent and important declaration. To the contrary, the ICDR Rules, which apply to the IRP proceedings, can be read to suggest that both the Panel’s finding of compliance (or not) by ICANN’s Board, and the Panel’s possible reference to any remedial measures, are binding on ICANN. As Vistaprint indicates, the preamble of the ICDR Rules provide that “[a] dispute can be submitted to an arbitral tribunal for a final and binding decision,” and Article 30(1) of those Rules specifies that “[a]wards shall be made in writing by the arbitral tribunal and shall be final and binding on the parties” (emphasis added).

136. However, these terms in the ICDR Rules arguably contradict specific provisions of the Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures, at least to the extent that they are read to cover any measures that the IRP Panel would direct the ICANN Board to take or not take. In this way, if there is a contradiction between the texts, the Bylaws and Supplemental rules would govern. However, focusing on the relief that the Panel is authorized to grant provides a decisive clue as to the question of whether the IRP declaration, or any part of it, is binding or non-binding, and produces a faithful and harmonized reading of all the texts. While the Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures say nothing to limit the binding effect of the IRP Panel’s “liability” declaration, they both contain provisions that expressly indicate the Panel may only “recommend” that the Board stay or take any action or decision. In particular, the Bylaws in Article IV, § 3.11 sets out the IRP Panel’s authority in terms of alternative actions that it may take once it has an IRP case before it:

The IRP Panel shall have the authority to:

- a. summarily dismiss requests brought without standing, lacking in substance, or that are frivolous or vexatious;
- b. request additional written submissions from the party seeking review, the Board, the Supporting Organizations, or from other parties;
- c. declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; and
- d. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP;
- e. consolidate requests for independent review if the facts and circumstances are sufficiently similar; and
- f. determine the timing for each proceeding.

137. Article IV, § 3.11(a) provides that the Panel may summarily dismiss an IRP request in certain circumstances. A fair reading of this term is that an IRP panel’s dismissal of a case pursuant to § 3.11(a) would be a binding decision, both for the party who brought the IRP request and for ICANN. In other words, ICANN could not require that the IRP panel take-up the case again once it has been dismissed by the panel.<sup>190</sup> Further, the IRP panel can “request additional written submissions” from the parties (including the Board) or certain third parties. Here again, a fair reading of this term is that it is not subject to any review by ICANN Board before it can be implemented and is therefore binding on those who receive such a request.

138. By comparison, any form of relief whereby the IRP Panel would direct the Board to take, or refrain from taking, any action or decision, as specified in § 3.11(d), must be “recommend[ed]” to the Board, which then “reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP.”<sup>191</sup> The Panel’s authority is thus limited (and in this sense non-binding) when it

An IRP Panel may summarily dismiss any request for Independent Review where the requestor has not demonstrated that it meets the standing requirements for initiating the Independent Review.

Summary dismissal of a request for Independent Review is also appropriate where a prior IRP on the same issue has concluded through Declaration.

An IRP Panel may also dismiss a querulous, frivolous or vexatious request for Independent Review.

<sup>191</sup> Supplementary Rule 7 provides similarly (as regards interim measures of protection) that:

An IRP Panel may recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the IRP declaration. Where the IRP comes to providing ICANN's Board with potential courses of action or inaction in view of Board's non-compliance with the Articles or Bylaws.<sup>192</sup>

139. Several other provisions of the Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures can be fairly read to relate to decisions of the IRP panel that would be considered binding, even as to ICANN's Board. Article IV, § 3.18 provides “[t]he IRP Panel shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties, and in its declaration shall specifically designate the prevailing party.” There is no mechanism for the Board to overrule the IRP panel's designation as to which party is the prevailing party. Article IV, § 3.20 provides “[t]he IRP Panel may, in its discretion, grant a party's request to keep certain information confidential, such as trade secrets.” A fair reading of this provision is that the IRP panel's decision concerning such questions of confidentiality would be binding on all parties (including ICANN) in the IRP procedure. Consolidating IRP requests and determining the timing for each IRP proceeding are also decisions of the panel that are binding and not subject to review. Finally, Supplemental Procedures, Rule 11, directs that “[t]he IRP Panel shall fix costs in its Declaration.” Here too, this decision of the IRP panel can be fairly read to be binding on the parties, including the Board.

140. Thus, the IRP Panel's authority to render binding or non-binding decisions, orders or relief can be considered in relation to four basic areas:

(i) summary dismissals by the IRP Panel (for different reasons as stated in the Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures) are final and binding on the parties. There is no mechanism for appeal of such dismissals and they have precedential value.

(ii) the designation of prevailing party, fixing costs for the IRP, and other orders in support of the IRP proceedings (e.g., timing of proceedings, confidentiality, requests for additional submissions, consolidation of IRP cases) are binding decisions of the IRP Panel, with no review by the Board or any other body.

(iii) the IRP Panel's declaration of whether or not the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of the Articles and Bylaws is final and binding, in the sense that there is no appeal on this point to ICANN's Board or any other body; it is a final determination and has precedential value.

(iv) any form of relief in which the IRP Panel would direct the Board to take, or refrain from taking, any action or decision is only a recommendation to the Board. In this sense,

Panel is not yet comprised, the Chair of the standing panel may provide a recommendation on the stay of any action or decision

such a recommendation is not binding on the Board. The Bylaws and Supplementary Procedures provide specific and detailed guidance in this key area – i.e., relief that would require the Board to take or refraining from taking any action or decision – where the IRP Panel’s decisions would not be binding on the Board, but would serve only as a recommendation to be reviewed and acted upon by the Board.

141. The other decisions of the IRP panel, as outlined above and including the declaration of whether or not the Board violated the Articles and Bylaws, would be binding, consistent with the Bylaws, Supplementary Procedures and ICDR Rule Article 30(1). This approach provides a reading that harmonizes the terms of the three charter instruments. It also provides interpretive context for Article IV, § 3.21 of the Bylaws, providing that “[w]here feasible, the Board shall consider the IRP Panel declaration at the Board’s next meeting.” The IRP panel in the ICM Registry Final Declaration stated that “[t]his relaxed temporal proviso to do no more than ‘consider’ the IRP declaration, and to do so at the next meeting of the Board ‘where feasible’, emphasizes that it is not binding.”<sup>193</sup> However, consistent with the analysis above, the IRP Panel here reads this statement in the ICM Registry Final Declaration to relate only to an IRP panel’s decision to “recommend” that the Board take, or refrain from taking, any action or decision. It does not relate to the other decisions or duties of the IRP panel, as explained above.
142. Vistaprint contends that the second sentence in Article IV, § 3.21 – providing “[t]he declarations of the IRP Panel, and the Board’s subsequent action on those declarations, are final and have precedential value” – which was added in April 2013 after the issuance of ICM Registry Final Declaration, was a change that supports the view that the IRP panel’s outcome, including any references to remedial relief, is binding. However, the Panel agrees with ICANN’s view that “a declaration clearly can be both non-binding and also final and precedential.”<sup>194</sup> Further, the preparatory work and drafting history for the relevant provisions of the Bylaws relating to the IRP procedure indicate the intention for a non-binding procedure with respect to the Panel’s authority to advise the Board to take, or refrain from taking, any action or decision. As summarized in ICANN’s contentions above, ICANN has submitted evidence that those who were initially involved in establishing the IRP considered that it should be an advisory, non-binding procedure in relation to any policies that the Board might be requested to consider and implement by the IRP panel.<sup>195</sup>
143. Thus, the Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures draw a line: when the measures that an IRP panel might consider as a result of its core task require that the Board take or refrain from taking any action or decision, the panel may only “recommend” this course of action. On the other hand, if the IRP panel decides that the Board had violated its Articles or Bylaws, or if the panel decides to dismiss the IRP request, designate a prevailing party, set conditions for confidentiality, consolidate IRP requests, request additional written submissions or fix costs, a fair reading of the Bylaws, Supplementary Procedures and ICDR Rules relevant to these determinations would be that the IRP panel's decisions on these matters are binding on both parties, including ICANN.

144. Finally, in view of Article IV, § 3.21 providing that the declarations of IRP panels are final and have precedential value, the IRP Panel here recognizes that, in addition to the ICM Registry Final Declaration, two other IRP panels have considered the question of the IRP panel's authority. In the Booking.com Final Declaration, the IRP panel focused on the independent and objective standard of review to be applied to the panel's core task of assessing whether the Board's actions were consistent with the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook.<sup>196</sup> However, the IRP panel in Booking.com, as ICANN acknowledges in its Second Additional Response, did not directly address whether an IRP panel may issue a binding declaration (although ICANN contends that the panel implicitly acknowledged that it cannot).<sup>197</sup>
145. In the DCA Final Declaration, the IRP panel addressed directly the question of whether or not the panel's declaration was binding. The panel ruled that its declarations, both as to the procedure and the merits of the case, were binding. The IRP panel in that case raised some of the same concerns that Vistaprint has raised here<sup>198</sup>:

110. ICANN points to the extensive public and expert input that preceded the formulation of the Supplementary Procedures. The Panel would have expected, were a mere advisory decision, opinion or declaration the objective of the IRP, that this intent be clearly articulated somewhere in the Bylaws or the Supplementary Procedures. In the Panel's view, this could have easily been done.

111. The force of the foregoing textual and construction considerations as pointing to the binding effect of the Panel's decisions and declarations are reinforced by two factors: 1) the exclusive nature of the IRP whereby the non-binding argument would be clearly in contradiction with such a factor; and, 2) the special, unique, and publicly important function of ICANN. As explained before, ICANN is not an ordinary private non-profit entity deciding for its own sake who it wishes to conduct business with, and who it does not. ICANN rather, is the steward of a highly valuable and important international resource.

115. Moreover, assuming for the sake of argument that it is acceptable for ICANN to adopt a remedial scheme with no teeth, the Panel is of the opinion that, at a minimum, the IRP should forthrightly explain and acknowledge that the process is merely advisory. This would at least let parties know before embarking on a potentially expensive process that a victory before the IRP panel may be ignored by ICANN. And, a straightforward acknowledgment that the IRP process is intended to be merely advisory might lead to a legislative or executive initiative to create a truly independent compulsory process.

146. The IRP panel in the DCA Final Declaration also emphasized that, according to the terms of the Guidebook, applicants for a new gTLD string waive their right to resort to the courts

15. The IRP is the only independent third party process that allows review of board actions to ensure their consistency with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws. As already explained in this Panel's 14 August 2014 Declaration on the IRP Procedure ("August 2014 Declaration"), the avenues of accountability for applicants that have disputes with ICANN do not include resort to the courts. Applications for gTLD delegations are governed by ICANN's Guidebook, which provides that applicants waive all right to resort to the courts:

"Applicant hereby releases ICANN [...] from any and all claims that arise out of, are based upon, or are in any way related to, any action or failure to act by ICANN [...] in connection with ICANN's review of this application, investigation, or verification, any characterization or description of applicant or the information in this application, any withdrawal of this application or the decision by ICANN to recommend or not to recommend, the approval of applicant's gTLD application. APPLICANT AGREES NOT TO CHALLENGE, IN COURT OR ANY OTHER JUDICIAL FORA, ANY FINAL DECISION MADE BY ICANN WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION, AND IRREVOCABLY WAIVES ANY RIGHT TO SUE OR PROCEED IN COURT OR ANY OTHER JUDICIAL FORA ON THE BASIS OF ANY OTHER LEGAL CLAIM AGAINST ICANN ON THE BASIS OF ANY OTHER LEGAL CLAIM."

Thus, assuming that the foregoing waiver of any and all judicial remedies is valid and enforceable, then the only and ultimate "accountability" remedy for an applicant is the IRP.

147. The IRP Panel in this case considers that the IRP panel in the DCA Final Declaration, and Vistaprint, have made several forceful arguments in favor of why the outcome of the IRP should be considered binding, especially to ensure the efficacy of the IRP as an accountability mechanism. Vistaprint has also urged that the IRP, at least with respect to applicants for new gTLD strings, is not merely a corporate accountability mechanism aimed at internal stakeholders, but operates to assess ICANN's responsibilities in relation to external third parties. And the outcome of the IRP is binding on these third parties, even if it is not binding on ICANN and its Board. In similar circumstances, it would not be uncommon that individuals, companies or even governments, would agree to participate in dispute resolution processes with third parties that are binding, at least inter partes.
148. However, as explained above, the IRP Panel concludes that the distinction between a "binding" declaration on the violation/liability question (and certain other matters as discussed above), on the one hand, and a "non-binding" declaration when it comes to recommending that the Board take or refrain from taking any action or decision, on the other hand, is most faithful to the terms and spirit of the charter instruments upon which the Panel's jurisdiction is based. To the extent that there is any disagreement with this approach, it is for ICANN to consider additional steps to address any ambiguities that might remain concerning the authority of the IRP panel and the legal effect of the IRP declaration.
149. Authority to award affirmative relief: The IRP Panel's analysis on this issue is closely related to, and dependent upon, its analysis of the binding vs. non-binding issue immediately above. To the extent that the IRP Panel renders any form of relief whereby the Panel would direct the Board to take, or refrain from taking, any action or decision, that relief must be “recommend[ed]” to the Board, which then “reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP,” as specified in § 3.11(d) of the Bylaws. Relatedly, Supplementary Rule 7 provides that an “IRP Panel may recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the IRP declaration.” Consequently, the IRP Panel finds that it does not have authority to render affirmative relief requiring ICANN’s Board to take, or refrain from taking, any action or decision.

150. The IRP Panel has carefully reviewed Vistaprint’s arguments concerning ICANN’s alleged violation of its Articles and Bylaws in relation to this SCO Proceedings Claim. However, as stated above, the IRP Panel does not review the actions or inactions of ICANN’s staff or any third parties, such as the ICDR or SCO experts, who provided services to ICANN. Instead, the IRP Panel’s focus is on ICANN’s Board and the BGC, which was delegated responsibility from the full Board to consider Vistaprint’s Request for Reconsideration.<sup>200</sup>
151. The core of Vistaprint SCO Proceedings Claim is that ICANN’s Board improperly disregarded accumulated errors made by the ICDR and the SCO experts (especially the Third Expert) during the Vistaprint SCO proceedings, and in this way ICANN violated Article IV of the Articles of Incorporation and certain provisions of the Bylaws, as well as the Guidebook.
152. Vistaprint contends that ICANN’s Board must verify whether or not, by accepting the SCO expert determination, it is acting consistent with its obligations under its Articles, Bylaws and Affirmation of Commitments,<sup>201</sup> and that ICANN would be in violation of these obligations if it were to blindly accept an expert determination in circumstances where the ICDR and/or the expert had failed to comply with the Guidebook and the New gTLD Objections Procedure and/or the ICDR Rules for SCOs, or where a panel had failed to correctly apply the standard set by ICANN.<sup>202</sup>
153. The IRP Panel disagrees with Vistaprint’s contention on this point. Although the Guidebook provides in § 5.1 that ICANN’s Board of Directors has ultimate responsibility for the New gTLD Program, there is no affirmative duty stated in the Articles, Bylaws or

Board consideration of the recommendation is not required. As the Board Governance Committee deems necessary, it may make recommendation to the Board for consideration and action. Guidebook that the Board must to review the result in each and every SCO case. Instead, the Guidebook § 3.4.6 provides that:

The findings of the [SCO] panel will be considered an expert determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process.<sup>203</sup>

[Underlining added]

154. In the case of an adverse SCO determination, the applicant for a new gTLD string is not left without any recourse. Module 6.6 of the Guidebook provides that an applicant “MAY UTILIZE ANY ACCOUNTABILITY MECHANISM SET FORTH IN ICANN’S BYLAWS FOR PURPOSES OF CHALLENGING ANY FINAL DECISION MADE BY ICANN WITH RESPECT TO THE APPLICATION” (no emphasis added).<sup>204</sup>

155. The Reconsideration Request is an “accountability mechanism” that can be invoked by a gTLD applicant, as it was used by Vistaprint, to challenge the result in SCO proceedings. Article IV, § 2.2 of the Bylaws provides that:

Any person or entity may submit a request for reconsideration or review of an ICANN action or inaction (“Reconsideration Request”) to the extent that he, she, or it have been adversely affected by:

- a. one or more staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policy(ies); or
- b. one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that have been taken or refused to be taken without consideration of material information, except where the party submitting the request could have submitted, but did not submit, the information for the Board’s consideration at the time of action or refusal to act; or
- c. one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that are taken as a result of the Board’s reliance on false or inaccurate material information.

156. In line with Article IV, § 2.2 of the Bylaws, Vistaprint submitted its Reconsideration Request to challenge actions of the ICDR and SCO experts, claiming their conduct contradicted ICANN policies. While Guidebook, § 5.1 permits ICANN’s Board to individually consider new gTLD applications, such as through the RFR mechanism, it does not require that the Board do so in each and every case, sua sponte. The Guidebook, § 5.1, provides in relevant part that:

ICANN’s Board of Directors has ultimate responsibility for the New gTLD Program. The Board reserves the right to individually consider an application for a new gTLD to determine whether approval would be in the best interest of the Internet community. Under exceptional circumstances, the Board may individually consider a gTLD application. For example, the Board might individually consider an application as a result ... the use of an ICANN accountability mechanism.<sup>205</sup> mechanism such as the RFR, the ICANN Board has no affirmative duty to review the result in any particular SCO case.

158. In this case, Vistaprint did submit a Reconsideration Request and the BGC did engage in a detailed review of the alleged errors in process and procedures raised by Vistaprint. The BGC explained what it considered to be the scope of its review, which is consistent with the mandate in Article IV, § 2.2 of the Bylaws for review of “staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policies”:

In the context of the New gTLD Program, the reconsideration process does not call for the BGC to perform a substantive review of expert determinations. Accordingly, the BGC is not to evaluate the Panel’s substantive conclusion that the Requester’s applications for .WEBS are confusingly similar to the Requester’s application for .WEB. Rather, the BGC’s review is limited to whether the Panel violated any established policy or process in reaching that Determination.<sup>206</sup>

159. In contrast to Vistaprint’s claim that the BGC failed to perform its task properly and “turned a blind eye to the appointed Panel’s lack of independence and impartiality”, the IRP Panel finds that the BGC provided in its 19-page decision a detailed analysis of (i) the allegations concerning whether the ICDR violated its processes or procedures governing the SCO proceedings and the appointment of, and challenges to, the experts, and (ii) the questions regarding whether the Third Expert properly applied the burden of proof and the substantive standard for evaluating a String Confusion Objection. On these points, the IRP Panel finds that the BGC’s analysis shows serious consideration of the issues raised by Vistaprint and, to an important degree, reflects the IRP Panel’s own analysis.<sup>207</sup>

160. For example, in relation to Vistaprint’s contention that the First Expert failed to maintain independence and impartiality, in violation of Article 13(c) of the New gTLD Objections Procedure, the BGC reasoned:

The only evidence the [Vistaprint] cites in support of its argument that Mr. Koh failed to maintain his independence during the proceeding is the ICDR’s statement that it had decided to remove Mr. Koh “due to a new conflict.” (Request, Section 10, Pgs. 9-10.) The ICDR did not provide any further information as to the nature of the conflict. Conflicts can take many forms, such as scheduling or personal conflicts unrelated to the proceedings. There is no evidence that the conflict that inflicted

<sup>207</sup> Vistaprint also asserted that based on the Third Expert’s determination in the Vistaprint SCO, the Third Expert lacked impartiality and independence, or alternatively lacked qualification. On a complete review of the entire record in this case, including the SCO proceedings and the Reconsideration Request before the BGC, the IRP Panel has found no foundation for these allegations against the Third Expert, and no violation of ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws in the manner in which the BGC handled these assertions. The BGC found that these assertions were insufficient to merit reconsideration, as stated in its RFR decision, in footnote 10:

[Vistaprint] concludes with the following claim: “The cursory nature of the Decision and the arbitrary and selective discussion of the parties’ arguments by the Panel show the lack of either the Panel’s independence and impartiality or the Panel’s appropriate qualifications.” (Request, Section 10, Pg. 23.) [Vistaprint’s] assertion is not accompanied by any discussion or further explanation for how ICANN processes were purportedly violated. [Vistaprint’s] summary conclusions are without merit and insufficient to warrant reconsideration. Furthermore, [Vistaprint’s] claim that the Determination was “cursory” and only contained “selective discussion of the parties’ arguments” is unsupported. The Determination was eighteen pages long and contained more than six pages of discussion of the parties’ arguments and evidence.

Mr. Koh was related to the instant proceedings or otherwise impacted Mr. Koh's ability to remain impartial and independent.

Furthermore, [Vistaprint] neither claims to have been, nor presents any evidence of being, materially and adversely affected by Mr. Koh's removal. Indeed, had [Vistaprint] successfully challenged Mr. Koh for lack of independence at the time he was removed, the remedy under the applicable ICDR procedures would have been the removal of Mr. Koh, which was the result here.<sup>208</sup>

161. The BGC concluded that Vistaprint provided no evidence of being materially and adversely affected by the First Expert's removal. Moreover, to the extent that there was an impact due to the First Expert stepping down, this conduct was attributable to the First Expert, not to the ICDR. As the BGC states, had there been a concern about the First Expert's lack of independence, the remedy under the applicable ICDR procedures would have been the removal of that expert, which is what actually occurred.

162. Vistaprint also argued that the BGC conducted no investigation as to the nature of the new conflict that confronted the First Expert and instead "developed baseless hypotheses for the other reasons that could have led to this Panel stepping down."<sup>209</sup> In this respect, perhaps the BGC could have sought to develop evidence on this issue by inquiring with the ICDR about the circumstances concerning the First Expert. Article IV, § 2.13 of the Bylaws provides the BGC "may also request information relevant to the request from third parties," but it does not require that the BGC do so. However, it would not have changed the outcome, as noted above. It is also noteworthy that Article IV, § 2.2(b) of the Bylaws provides that a party may submit a Reconsideration Request to the extent that the party has been adversely affected by:

one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that have been taken or refused to be taken without consideration of material information, except where the party submitting the request could have submitted, but did not submit, the information for the Board's consideration at the time of action or refusal to act.

163. Here, there was no showing that Vistaprint attempted to develop information concerning how the removal of the First Expert might have had a material and adverse impact on Vistaprint, or information concerning the reasons for the First Expert stepping down.

164. Vistaprint also alleged that the ICDR unjustifiably accepted a challenge to the Second Expert, or created the circumstances for such a challenge. As the BGC noted, the procedure governing challenges to experts is set forth in Article 2 § 3 of the ICDR's New gTLD Objections Procedure, which provides:

Upon review of the challenge the DRSP in its sole discretion shall make the decision on the challenge and advise the parties of its decision.

165. The BGC reasoned that while Vistaprint may disagree with the ICDR's decision to accept the challenge to the Second Expert, that decision was in the "sole discretion" of the ICDR and it was not the BGC's role to second guess the ICDR's discretion in this regard.<sup>210</sup> The IRP Panel finds that the BGC violated no Article, Bylaw or the Guidebook by taking this view. However, it does appear that the ICDR might have avoided the challenge situation in the first place by appointing someone other than the Second Expert – who had served as the expert panel in previous SCO case administered by the ICDR – given that the basis for the challenge against him, which the ICDR accepted, was his involvement in the previous case.

166. Vistaprint also claimed that the Third Expert incorrectly applied both the burden of proof and the substantive criteria for evaluating the String Confusion Objection. The BGC rejected these contentions and the IRP Panel agrees. The BGC’s decision looked closely at the standard to be applied in String Confusion Objection proceedings, as well as how the Third Expert extensively detailed the support for his conclusion that the .WEBS string so nearly resembles .WEB – visually, aurally and in meaning – that it is likely to cause confusion.<sup>211</sup> In this respect, the BGC did not violate ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws by determining that the Third Expert properly applied the relevant Guidebook policy for String Confusion Objections. As the BGC noted,

The Requester’s disagreement as to whether the standards should have resulted in a finding in favor of Requester’s application does not mean that the panel violated any policy or process in reaching the decision.<sup>212</sup>

167. The Guidebook provides that the following evaluation standard is to be applied in String Confusion Objection proceedings:

3.5.1 String Confusion Objection

A DRSP panel hearing a string confusion objection will consider whether the applied-for gTLD string is likely to result in string confusion. String confusion exists where a string so nearly resembles another that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion. For a likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user. Mere association, in the sense that the string brings another string to mind, is insufficient to find a likelihood of confusion.

168. Vistaprint in its Request emphasized that ICANN has indicated that the SCO test sets a high bar<sup>213</sup>:

22. At various times, ICANN has indicated that the string confusion test sets a high bar:

- “[T]he standard indicates that confusion must be probable, not merely possible, in order for this sort of harm to arise. Consumers also benefit from competition. For new gTLDs, the similarity test is a high bar, as indicated by the wording of the standard.[...] Therefore, while the objection and dispute resolution process is intended to address all types of similarity, the process is not intended to hobble competition or reserve a broad set of string [sic] for a first mover.” (fn. omitted)

- “Policy discussions indicate that the most important reason to disallow similar strings as top-level domain names is to protect Internet users from the increased exposure to fraud and other risks that could ensue from confusion of one string for another. This reasoning must be balanced against unreasonable exclusion of top-level labels and denial of applications where considerable investment has already been made. As the top-level grows in number of registrations, drawing too large a circle of “similarity protection” around each existing string will quickly result in the unnecessary depletion of available names. The unnecessary exclusion of names would also tend to stifle the opportunity of community representation at the top-level and innovation.” (fn. omitted)

23. ICANN’s high standard for dealing with string confusion objections has been explicitly confirmed by the NGPC, which states that in the Applicant Guidebook ‘similar’ means:

“strings so similar that they create a probability of user confusion if more than one of the strings is delegated into the root zone. During the policy development and implementation design phases of the New gTLD Program, aural and conceptual string similarities were considered. These types of similarity were discussed at length, yet ultimately not agreed to be used as a basis for the analysis of the string similarity panels’ consideration because on balance, this could have unanticipated results in limiting the expansion of the DNS as well as the reach and utility of the Internet. [...] The NGPC reflected on existing string similarity in the DNS and considered the positive and negative impacts. The NGPC observed that numerous examples of similar strings, including singulars and plurals exist within the DNS at the second level. Many of these are not registered to or operated by the same registrant. There are thousands of examples [...]” (NGPC Resolution 2014.02.056. NG02).

169. The passages quoted by Vistaprint, referencing ICANN materials and a resolution of the NGPC, arguably provide useful context in applying the test for String Confusion Objections. After citing these passages, however, Vistaprint contends in its Request that

“[a]s a result, two strings should only be placed in a contention set if they are so similar that they would create a probability of user confusion were both to be delegated into the root zone, and the finding of confusing similarity must be balanced against the risk of unreasonable exclusion of top-level labels and the denial of applications” (no underlining added).<sup>214</sup>

170. However, the problem with the test as posited by Vistaprint is that it would add a balancing element that is not in the Guidebook’s standard: according to Vistaprint the finding of confusing similarity must be balanced against the risk of unreasonable exclusion of top-level labels and the denial of applications. This part of the standard (as advanced by Vistaprint) is not in the Guidebook, although the concerns it represents were reflected in the other ICANN materials. The Guidebook standard is as follows:

String confusion exists where a string so nearly resembles another that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion. For a likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user. Mere association, in the sense that the string brings another string to mind, is insufficient to find a likelihood of confusion.

171. There is no reference in this standard to balancing the likelihood of confusion against the needs to promote competition and to guard against the unreasonable exclusion of top-level strings. While it might be advisable to consider whether the standard for String Confusion Objections should be revised to incorporate such a balancing test, these elements were not in the policy that was applied by the Third Expert. Nor was there a violation, by the BGC or the ICANN Board, of any Articles or Bylaws in formulating the SCO standard as it was formulated (based on community input), and in determining that the Third Expert properly applied this policy.

173. Vistaprint has also complained that it was not provided with the opportunity to appeal the Third Expert's decision on the merits, such that the BGC or some other entity would re-evaluate the Expert's string confusion determination. As noted above, the BGC's review focused on whether the ICDR and the Third Expert properly applied the relevant rules and policies, not on whether the BGC, if it had considered the matter de novo, would have found string confusion as between the .WEBS and .WEB strings.
174. The IRP Panel finds that the lack of an appeal mechanism to contest the merits of the Third Expert's SCO determination is not, in itself, a violation of ICANN's Articles or Bylaws. ICANN's commitment through its Articles and Bylaws to act in good faith and with accountability and transparency, and to apply documented policies neutrally, objectively and fairly, does not require that it must have designed the SCO mechanism so that the result of a string confusion determination would be subject to a right of appeal. Other significant dispute resolution systems – such as the international legal regime for commercial arbitration regarding awards as final and binding<sup>215</sup> – do not normally provide for a right of appeal on the merits.
175. In respect of Vistaprint's SCO Proceedings Claim, the IRP Panel denies each of Vistaprint's claims concerning ICANN's alleged breaches of obligations under the Articles, Bylaws and Affirmation of Commitments, as follows:
- (1) Vistaprint claims that ICANN failed to comply with its obligation under Article 4 of the Articles and IV § 3.4 of the Bylaws to act in good faith with due diligence and independent judgment by failing to provide due process to Vistaprint's .WEBS applications.<sup>216</sup> The IRP Panel denies Vistaprint's claim that Vistaprint was not given a fair opportunity to present its case; was deprived of procedural fairness and the opportunity to be heard by an independent panel applying the appropriate rules; and was not given any meaningful opportunity for remedy or redress once the SCO determination was made, even in the RFR procedure.
  - (2) Vistaprint claims ICANN failed to comply with its obligation under Article I § 2.8 to neutrally, objectively and fairly apply documented policies as established in the

Guidebook and Bylaws.<sup>217</sup> As discussed above, the IRP Panel rejects Vistaprint's claim that the Vistaprint SCO determination – finding that the .WEBS and .WEB gTLD strings are confusingly similar – is contradictory to ICANN's policy for String Confusion Objections as established in the Guidebook.

- (3) Vistaprint claims ICANN failed to comply with its obligation to act fairly and with due diligence and independent judgment as called for under Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation, Articles I § 2.8 and IV § 3.4 of the Bylaws by accepting the SCO determination made by the Third Expert, who was allegedly not independent and impartial.<sup>218</sup> As noted above, the IRP Panel finds that there was no failure of the BGC to act with due diligence and independent judgment, and to act in good faith as required by ICANN's Bylaws and Articles, when it determined that Vistaprint's claim – that the Third Expert was not independent and impartial and/or was not appropriately qualified – did not merit reconsideration.
- (4) Vistaprint claims that ICANN failed to comply with its obligations under the Article 4 of the Articles, and Article I §§ 2.7 and 2.8 and Article III § 1 of the Bylaws (and Article 9.1 of the Affirmation of Commitments) to act fairly and transparently by failing to disclose/perform any efforts to optimize the service that the ICDR provides in the New gTLD Program.<sup>219</sup> The IRP Panel rejects Vistaprint's contention that the BGC's Reconsideration determination shows that the BGC made no investigation into Vistaprint's fundamental questions about the Third Expert's arbitrariness, lack of independence, partiality, inappropriate qualification, or that the BGC did not exercise due diligence in making its determination on this issue.
- (5) Vistaprint claims ICANN failed to comply with its obligation to remain accountable under Articles I § 2.10 and IV § 1 of the Bylaws (and Articles 3(a) and 9.1 of the Affirmation of Commitments) by failing to provide any remedy for its mistreatment of Vistaprint's gTLD applications.<sup>220</sup> The IRP Panel disagrees with Vistaprint's claim that ICANN's Board and the BGC adopted the Third Expert's SCO determination without examining whether it was made in accordance with ICANN's policy and fundamental principles under its Articles and Bylaws. In particular, as described above, the IRP Panel rejects Vistaprint's claim that the Vistaprint SCO determination is contradictory to ICANN's policy as established in the Guidebook and agrees with the BGC's analysis on this issue. Regarding Vistaprint's contention that ICANN should have created a review mechanism for challenging the substance of SCO expert determinations, as discussed above, the IRP Panel finds that the lack of such a general appeal mechanism creates no inconsistency with ICANN's Articles or Bylaws.
- (6) Vistaprint claims ICANN failed to promote competition and innovation under Articles I § 2.2 (and Article 3(c) of the Affirmation of Commitments) by accepting the Third

Expert's determination.<sup>221</sup> Finally, the IRP Panel disagrees with Vistaprint's contention that the Board's acceptance of the determination in the Vistaprint SCO was contrary to ICANN's Bylaws because it was contrary to the interests of competition and consumers.

c. Disparate Treatment Claim

176. Vistaprint's final claim is one that raises a close question for this IRP Panel. Vistaprint contends that ICANN's Board discriminated against Vistaprint through the Board's (and the BGC's) acceptance of the Third Expert's determination in the Vistaprint SCO, while allowing other gTLD applications with equally serious string similarity concerns to proceed to delegation<sup>222</sup>, or permitting still other applications that were subject to an adverse SCO determination to go through a separate additional review mechanism.

177. The IRP Panel agrees with Vistaprint's statement that the "IRP Panel's mandate includes a review as to whether or not ICANN's Board discriminates in its interventions on SCO expert determinations."<sup>223</sup> As discussed above, in the Guidebook, § 5.1, ICANN has reserved the right to individually consider an application for a new gTLD to determine whether approval would be in the best interest of the Internet community:

....The Board reserves the right to individually consider an application for a new gTLD to determine whether approval would be in the best interest of the Internet community. Under exceptional circumstances, the Board may individually consider a gTLD application....<sup>224</sup>

178. However, as a counterbalance against this reserved power to individually consider new gTLD applications, the ICANN Board must also comply with Article II, § 3 of ICANN's Bylaws, providing for non-discriminatory treatment:

Section 3 (Non-Discriminatory Treatment)

ICANN shall not apply its standards, policies, procedures, or practices inequitably or single out any particular party for disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause, such as the promotion of effective competition.

179. As Vistaprint maintains in its First Additional Submission, "[w]hen the ICANN Board individually considers an application, it must make sure that it does not treat applicants inequitably and that it does not discriminate among applicants."<sup>225</sup>

180. As discussed above in relation to standard of review, the IRP Panel considers that the Board's actions or omissions in this area of alleged non-discriminatory treatment bear the scrutiny of independent and objective review, without any presumption of correctness. Moreover, ICANN's Bylaws in Article I, § 2 set out its core values that should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN, including the requirement, when balancing among competing core values, to exercise judgment to determine which core values are the most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances at hand. Of particular relevance to Vistaprint's disparate treatment claim are the core values set out in §§ 2.8 and 2.9:

8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.

10. Remaining accountable to the Internet community through mechanisms that enhance ICANN's effectiveness.

These core values are deliberately expressed in very general terms, so that they may provide useful and relevant guidance in the broadest possible range of circumstances. Because they are not narrowly prescriptive, the specific way in which they apply, individually and collectively, to each new situation will necessarily depend on many factors that cannot be fully anticipated or enumerated; and because they are statements of principle rather than practice, situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible. Any ICANN body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand, and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.

181. Vistaprint's disparate treatment claim is based on the following allegations:

- On June 25, 2013, the NGPC, a sub-committee of ICANN's Board, determined in Resolution 2013.06.25.NG07 that no changes were needed to the existing mechanisms in the Guidebook to address potential consumer confusion from allowing singular and plural versions of the same gTLD string. The NGPC had addressed this issue in response to advice from the ICANN's Government Advisory Committee ("GAC") that due to potential consumer confusion, the Board should "reconsider its decision to allow singular and plural version of the same strings."
- On February 5, 2014, the day before Vistaprint submitted its Reconsideration Request to the BGC on February 6, 2014, the NGPC approved Resolution 2014.02.05.NG02, which directed ICANN's President to initiate a public comment period on framework principles of a potential review mechanism to address perceived inconsistent String Confusion Objection expert determinations. The NGPC resolution provides in relevant part:

Whereas, on 10 October 2013 the Board Governance Committee (BGC) requested staff to draft a report for the NGPC on String Confusion Objections "setting out options for dealing with the situation raised within this Request, namely the differing outcomes of the String Confusion Objection Dispute Resolution process in similar disputes involving Amazon's Applied-for String and TLDH's Applied-for String."

Whereas, the NGPC is considering potential paths forward to address the perceived inconsistent Expert Determinations from the New gTLD Program String Confusion Objections process, including implementing a review mechanism. The review will be limited to the String Confusion Objection Expert Determinations for .CAR/.CARS and .CAM/.COM.

Whereas, the proposed review mechanism, if implemented, would constitute a change to the current String Confusion Objection process in the New gTLD Applicant Guidebook.

Whereas, the NGPC is undertaking this action pursuant to the authority granted to it by the Board on 10 April 2012, to exercise the ICANN Board's authority for any and all issues that may arise relating to the New gTLD Program.

Resolved (2014.02.05.NG02), the NGPC directs the President and CEO, or his designee, to publish for public comment the proposed review mechanism for addressing perceived inconsistent Expert Determinations from the New gTLD Program String Confusion Objections process.

[Underlining added]

- Vistaprint emphasizes that ICANN's Board (through the NGPC) took this decision the day before Vistaprint filed its Reconsideration Request; however, this did not prevent the BGC from denying Vistaprint's RFR less than one month later without considering whether such a review mechanism might also be appropriate for dealing with the SCO determination involving .WEBS/.WEB.<sup>226</sup>
- Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request and the BGC's decision on that Request rendered on February 27, 2014 contain no reference to the concerns that had been raised both by the BGC (on October 10, 2013 in a prior RFR determination) and the NGPC in its February 5, 2014 resolution concerning inconsistent expert SCO determinations, some of which involved plural and singular versions of the same gTLD string. Neither Vistaprint nor the BGC raised any discussion of disparate treatment at that time. The BGC's determined that its decision on Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request "shall be final and does not require Board (or NGPC) consideration."<sup>227</sup>
- On October 12, 2014, approximately 8 months after the BGC's decision on Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request, and after Vistaprint had filed its Request in this IRP (in June 2014), the NGPC approved Resolution 2014.10.12.NG02, in which it identified certain SCO expert determinations "as not being in the best interest of the New gTLD Program and the Internet community," and directed ICANN's President to establish processes and procedures to re-evaluate certain previous SCO expert determinations. Resolution 2014.10.12.NG02 also stated in its rationale:

The NGPC also considered whether there was a reasonable basis for certain perceived inconsistent Expert Determinations to exist, and particularly why the identified Expert Determinations should be sent back to the ICDR while other Expert Determinations should not. The NGPC notes that while on their face some of the Expert Determinations may appear inconsistent, including other SCO Expert Determinations, and Expert Determinations of the Limited Public Interest and Community Objection processes, there are reasonable explanations for these seeming discrepancies, both procedurally and substantively.

First, on a procedural level, each expert panel generally rests its Expert Determination on materials presented to it by the parties to that particular objection, and the objector bears the burden of proof. Two panels confronting identical issues could – and if appropriate should – reach different determinations, based on the strength of the materials presented.

Second, on a substantive level, certain Expert Determinations highlighted by the community that purportedly resulted in "inconsistent" or "unreasonable" results, presented nuanced distinctions relevant to the particular objection. These nuances should not be ignored simply because a party to the dispute disagrees with the end result. Further, the standard guiding the expert panels involves some degree of subjectivity, and thus independent expert panels would not be expected to reach the same conclusions on every occasion. However, for the identified Expert Determinations, a reasonable explanation for the seeming discrepancies is not as apparent, even taking into account all of the previous explanations about why reasonably "discrepancies" may exist. To allow these Expert Determinations to stand would not be in the best interests of the Internet community.

The NGPC considered whether it was appropriate, as suggested by some commenters, to expand the scope of the proposed review mechanism to include other Expert Determinations, such as some resulting from Community and Limited Public Objections, as well as other String Confusion Objection Expert Determinations, and possibly singular and plural versions of the same string. The NGPC determined that to promote the goals of predictability and fairness, establishing a review mechanism more broadly may be more appropriate as part of future community discussions about subsequent rounds of the New gTLD Program. Applicants have already taken action in reliance on many of the Expert Determinations, including signing Registry Agreements, transitioning to delegation, withdrawing their applications, and requesting refunds. Allowing these actions to be undone now would not only delay consideration of all applications, but would raise issues of unfairness for those that have already acted in reliance on the Applicant Guidebook.

It should also be noted that in response to advice from the Governmental Advisory Committee (GAC), the NGPC previously considered the question of whether consumer confusion may result from allowing singular and plural versions of the same strings. On 25 June 2013, the NGPC adopted a resolution resolving "that no changes [were] needed to the existing mechanisms in the Applicant Guidebook to address potential consumer confusion resulting from allowing singular and plural versions of the same string" <http://www.icann.org/en/groups/board/documents/resolutions-new-gtld-25jun13-en.htm#2.d>. The NGPC again notes that the topic of singular and plural versions of the same string also may be the subject of further community discussion as it relates to future rounds of the New gTLD Program.

The NGPC considered community correspondence on this issue in addition to comments from the community expressed at the ICANN meetings. The concerns raised in the ICANN meetings and in correspondence have been factored into the deliberations on this matter.

- In view of the NGPC's Resolution 2014.10.12.NG02, Vistaprint describes its disparate treatment claim in its First Additional Submission as follows:

13 .... Since the filing of Vistaprint's request for IRP, the ICANN Board clarified how the string similarity standard must be applied. In its resolutions of 12 October 2014, the ICANN Board identified certain SCO determinations "as not being in the best interest of the New gTLD Program and the Internet community" and set out the rules for a re-evaluation of these SCO determinations (fn. omitted):

- A first SCO determination that needed re-evaluation is the SCO determination in which ICDR's expert accepted Verisign Inc.'s objection to United TLD Holdco Ltd. ('United TLD')'s application for .cam. We refer to this SCO determination as the 'United TLD Determination'. In the United TLD Determination, ICDR's appointed expert found United TLD's application for .cam confusingly similar to Verisign Inc. ('Verisign')'s .com gTLD (RM 23). The ICANN Board decided that (i) the United TLD Determination was not in the best interest of the New gTLD Program and the Internet community and (ii) a new three-member panel must be established to re-evaluate the United TLD Determination (fn. omitted).

Verisign had also raised a SCO on the basis of its .com gTLD against the application for .cam by Dot Agency Limited and the application for .cam by AC Webconnecting Holding B.V. In both cases, the appointed experts determined that no confusing similarity existed between the .cam and .com strings (fn. omitted). We refer to these SCO determinations as the 'Related .cam/.com Determinations'. The ICANN Board decided that the Related .cam/.com Determinations need no re-evaluation. In addition, the ICANN Board recommended that the three-member panel charged with re-evaluating the United TLD Determination must review the Related .cam/.com Determinations as background (fn. omitted).

- Another SCO determination that needed re-evaluation is the determination in which ICDR's appointed expert accepted Commercial Connect LLC's objection to Amazon EU S.à.r.l. ('Amazon')'s application for .通販 (which means .onlineshopping in Japanese) (fn. omitted). We refer to this SCO determination as the 'Onlineshopping Determination'. ICDR's appointed expert found in the Onlineshopping Determination that Amazon's application for .通販 was confusingly similar to Commercial Connect LLC's application for .shop. Commercial Connect LLC also invoked its application for .shop in a SCO against Top Level Domain Holdings Limited's application .购物 (which means 'shop' in Chinese). ICDR's appointed expert rejected the latter SCO (fn. omitted). We refer to this SCO determination as the 'Related shop/.shop Determination'. The ICANN Board decided that a three-member panel needs to re-evaluate the Onlineshopping Determination and that no re-evaluation is needed for the Related shop/.shop Determination. The ICANN Board decided that the Related shop/.shop Determination must be reviewed as background by the three-member panel that is charged with re-evaluating the Onlineshopping Determination (fn. omitted).

14. The ICANN Board's recommendations to the three-member panels charged with the re-evaluation of the United TLD Determination and the Onlineshopping Determination are clear. Related determinations – involving the same gTLD string(s) and finding that there is no confusing similarity – will not be re-evaluated and must be taken into account in the re-evaluations.

15. Upon instigation of the ICANN Board, ICANN had developed the same process for re-evaluating the SCO determination in which ICDR's appointed expert accepted Charleston Road Registry Inc. ('CRR')'s objection to DERCars, LLC's application for .cars. We refer to this SCO determination as the 'DERCars Determination'. In the DERCars Determination, ICDR's appointed expert found DERCars, LLC's application for .cars confusingly similar to CRR's application for .car. CRR had also objected to the applications for .cars by Uniregistry, Corp. and Koko Castle, LLC, claiming confusing similarity with CRR's application for .car. The latter objections by CRR were not successful. ICANN decided that DERCars, LLC should be given the option of having the DERCars Determination reviewed. ICANN was not allowing a review of the other SCO determinations involving .car and .cars (fn. omitted).

16. The above shows that ICANN and its Board have always decided in favor of co-existence of 'similar' strings. The ICANN Board explicitly allowed singular and plural gTLD strings to co-exist (fn. omitted). To support this view, the ICANN Board referred to the existence of thousands of examples of singular and plurals within the DNS at second level, which are not registered to or operated by the same registrant. The ICANN Board inter alia referred to the co-existing car.com and cars.com (fn. omitted).

17. Why did the ICANN Board intervene in the DERCars determination – involving the strings .car and .cars – but refused to intervene in the SCO Determination involving .web and .webs? In view of the small number of SCO Determinations finding confusing similarity between two strings (fn. omitted), it is a true mystery why the ICANN Board intervened in some matters, but refused to do so in the SCO determinations on Vistaprint's applications for .webs.

18. If anything, the .webs/.web string pair is less similar than the .cars/.car string pair. Cars is commonly used as the plural for car. Web, however, commonly refers to the world wide web, and as such, it is not normally a word where the plural form would be used.

182. Vistaprint contends that ICANN cannot justify the disparate treatment described above. While Vistaprint recognizes that ICANN's Board intervened to address perceived inconsistent or otherwise unreasonable SCO expert determinations, ICANN failed to explain why the SCO determination on Vistaprint's .WEBS applications was not just as unreasonable as the SCO expert determinations involving .cars/.car, .cam/.com, and 通販

183. In response to Vistaprint's disparate treatment claim, ICANN contends that ICANN's Board only intervened with respect to certain SCO expert determinations because there had been several independent expert determinations regarding the same strings that were seemingly inconsistent with one another. ICANN states that is not the case with respect to Vistaprint's applications, as no other expert determinations were issued regarding the similarity of .WEB and .WEBS.<sup>228</sup> ICANN further urges that the Board was justified in exercising its discretion to intervene with respect to the inconsistent SCO expert determinations regarding .COM/.CAM, .CAR/.CARS and .SHOP/.通販, because the Board acted to bring certainty to differing SCO expert determinations regarding the same strings.<sup>229</sup> However, this justification was not present with respect to the single Vistaprint SCO.
184. Finally, ICANN stated that "Vistaprint has identified no Articles or Bylaws provision violated by the ICANN Board in exercising its independent judgment to intervene with respect to certain inconsistent expert determinations on string confusion objections unrelated to this matter, but not with respect to the single Expert Determination regarding .WEB/.WEBS" (italics added).<sup>230</sup>
185. The IRP Panel has considered carefully the parties' contentions regarding Vistaprint's disparate treatment claim. The Panel finds that, contrary to what ICANN has stated above, ICANN's Board did not have an opportunity to "exercise its independent judgment" – in particular, in view of its decisions to implement an additional review mechanism for certain other inconsistent SCO expert determinations – to consider specifically whether it should intervene with respect to the adverse SCO expert determination involving Vistaprint's .WEBS applications.
186. It is clear that ICANN's Board, through the BGC and the NGPC, was aware of the concerns involving inconsistent decisions in SCO proceedings when it decided Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request in February 2014. The NGPC, on the day (February 5, 2014) before Vistaprint filed its Reconsideration Request and in response to a request from the BGC, initiated a public comment period on framework principles for a potential review mechanism to address perceived inconsistent SCO expert determinations. However, the BGC's decision on the Reconsideration Request rendered on February 27, 2014 made no mention of these issues.<sup>231</sup> By comparison, there is no evidence that

The reconsideration process is a very narrowly focused instrument, relying solely upon investigating deviations from established and agreed upon process. As such, it can be useful, but it is limited in scope. In particular, it does not address situations where process has in fact been followed, but the results of such process have been regarded, sometimes quite widely, as being contrary to what might be best for significant or all segments of the...community and/or Internet users in general.

Vistaprint was aware of these issues at the time it filed its Reconsideration Request on February 6, 2014. Vistaprint has raised them for the first time in a timely manner during the pendency of this IRP.

188. Here, ICANN is subject to the requirements of Article II, § 3 of its Bylaws regarding non-discriminatory treatment, providing that it shall not apply its “standards, policies, procedures, or practices inequitably or single out any particular party for disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause.” ICANN has provided additional relief to certain gTLD applicants who were subject to adverse decisions in String Confusion Objection cases. In those cases, the differences in the gTLD strings at issue were not too dissimilar from the .WEBS/.WEB gTLD strings. One of the cases in which ICANN agreed to provide an additional mechanism for review involved a string confusion objection for the .CAR/.CARS strings, which involve the singular vs. plural of the same string. Meanwhile, many other singular and plural variations of the same gTLD strings have been permitted to proceed to delegation, including AUTO and .AUTOS; .ACCOUNTANT and ACCOUNTANTS; .FAN and .FANS; .GIFT and .GIFTS; .LOAN and .LOANS; .NEW and .NEWS; and .WORK and .WORKS.
189. This IRP Panel, among its three members, could not agree – in regards to the specific circumstances of Vistaprint’s gTLD applications – whether the reasons offered by ICANN in its Resolution 2014.10.12.NG02 for refusing the “to expand the scope of the proposed review mechanism to include other [SCO] Expert Determinations” would meet the standard of non-discrimination imposed by Article II, § 3 of the Bylaws, as well as the relevant core values in Article 1, § 2 of the Bylaws (e.g., applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness). For instance, one view is that limiting the additional review mechanism to only those SCO cases in which there were inconsistent decisions is a sufficient reason for intervening in these cases, but not in other SCO cases involving similar singular vs. plural gTLD strings where the applicant received an adverse decision. On the other hand, another view is that the real focus should be on the developments involving single vs. plural gTLDs strings, including the inconsistency of decisions and the offering of additional review mechanism in certain cases, and the delegation of so many other single/plural variations of the same gTLD strings, which are, at least in this way, similarly situated to the circumstances of the .WEBS/.WEB strings.<sup>232</sup>

<sup>232</sup> Regarding inconsistent decisions, Vistaprint quoted the statement dated October 8, 2014, of ICANN’s former Chief Strategy Officer and Senior Vice President of Stakeholders Relations, Kurt Pritz, who had apparently been leading the introduction of the New gTLD Program, concerning ICANN’s objection procedure:

190. The IRP Panel is mindful that it should not substitute its judgment for that of ICANN's Board. The Board has not yet considered Vistaprint's claim of disparate treatment, and the arguments that ICANN makes through its counsel in this IRP do not serve as a substitute for the exercise of independent judgment by the Board. Without the exercise of judgment by ICANN's Board on this question of whether there is any inequitable or disparate treatment regarding Vistaprint's .WEBS gTLD applications, the Board would risk violating its Bylaws, including its core values. As the Emergency IRP Panel found in the GCC Interim IRP Declaration:

The ICANN Board does not have an unfettered discretion in making decisions. In bringing its judgment to bear on an issue for decision, it must assess the applicability of different potentially conflicting core values and identify those which are most important, most relevant to the question to be decided. The balancing of the competing values must be seen as "defensible", that is it should be justified and supported by a reasoned analysis. The decision or action should be based on a reasoned judgment of the Board, not on an arbitrary exercise of discretion.

This obligation of the ICANN Board in its decision making is reinforced by the standard of review for the IRP process under Article IV, Section 3.4 of the Bylaws, quoted at paragraph 42 b. above, when the action of the Board is compared to the requirements under the Articles and Bylaws. The standard of review includes a consideration of whether the Board exercised due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts before them and also whether the Board exercised its own independent judgment.<sup>233</sup>

191. Here, the IRP Panel finds that due to the timing and scope of Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request (and this IRP proceeding), and the timing of ICANN's consultation process and subsequent NGPC resolution authorizing an additional review mechanism for certain gTLD applications that were the subject of adverse SCO decisions, the ICANN Board has not had the opportunity to exercise its judgment on the question of whether, in view of ICANN's Bylaw concerning non-discriminatory treatment and based on the particular

There is no doubt that the New gTLD Program objection results are inconsistent, and not predictable. The fact is most easily demonstrated in the 'string confusion,' objections where challenges to exactly the same strings yielded different results. [...] With globally diverse, multiple panelists invoking untried standards and questions of first impression in an industry with which they were not familiar and had little training, the panelists were bound to deliver inconsistent, unpredictable results. ICANN put no mechanism put [sic] into place to rationalize or normalize the answers. [...] It is my opinion that ICANN, having proven in the initial evaluation context that it could do so, should have implemented measures to create as much consistency as possible on the merits in the objection rulings, requiring DRSPs to educate and train their experts as to the specific (and only) standards to employ, and to review and correct aberrant results. The failure to do so resulted in violation of the overarching policy articulated by the GNSO and adopted by the Board at the outset of the new gTLD Program, as well as policies stated in the Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation concerning on discrimination, application of document policies neutrally, objectively and fairly, promotion of competition, and accountability." (fn. omitted).

<sup>233</sup> See GCC Interim IRP Declaration, ¶¶ 76-77 ("Upon completion of the various procedures for evaluation and for objections under the Guidebook, the question of the approval of the applied for domain still went back to the NGPC, representing the ICANN Board, to make the decision to approve, without being bound by recommendation of the GAC, the Independent Objector or even the Expert Determination. Such a decision would appear to be caught by the requirements of Article 1, Section 2 of the Bylaws requiring the Board or the NGPC to consider and apply the competing values to the facts and to arrive at a defensible balance among those values" ¶ 90 (underlining added).

circumstances and developments noted above, such an additional review mechanism is appropriate following the SCO expert determination involving Vistaprint's .WEBS applications.<sup>234</sup> Accordingly, it follows that in response to Vistaprint's contentions of disparate treatment in this IRP, ICANN's Board – and not this Panel – should exercise its independent judgment on this issue, in light of all of the foregoing considerations.

VI. Prevailing Party; Costs

192. Article IV, § 3.18 of ICANN's Bylaws requires that the IRP Panel "specifically designate the prevailing party." This designation is relevant to the allocation of costs, given that the same section of the Bylaws provides that the "party not prevailing shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the IRP Provider."

193. Article IV, § 3.18 of the Bylaws also states that "in an extraordinary case the IRP Panel may in its declaration allocate up to half of the costs of the IRP Provider to the prevailing party based upon the circumstances, including a consideration of the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest. Each party to the IRP proceedings shall bear its own expenses."

194. Similarly, the Supplementary Procedures provide in Rule 11:

The IRP Panel shall fix costs in its Declaration. The party not prevailing in an IRP shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the proceedings, but under extraordinary circumstances the IRP Panel may allocate up to half of the costs to the prevailing party, taking into account the circumstances of the case, including the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest.

In the event the Requestor has not availed itself, in good faith, of the cooperative engagement or conciliation process, and the requestor is not successful in the Independent Review, the IRP Panel must award ICANN all reasonable fees and costs incurred by ICANN in the IRP, including legal fees.

195. Here, Vistaprint engaged in the Cooperative Engagement Process, although the process did not resolve the issues between the parties. The "IRP Provider" is the ICDR, and, in accordance with the ICDR Rules, the costs to be allocated between the parties – what the

<sup>234</sup> The IRP Panel observes that the NGPC, in its Resolution 2014.10.12.NG02, sought to address the issue of why certain SCO expert determinations should be sent back to the ICDR while others should not. In that resolution, the NGPC determined that to promote the goals of predictability and fairness, establishing a review mechanism more broadly may be appropriate as part of future rounds in the New gTLD Program. The NGPC stated that applicants may have already taken action in reliance on SCO expert determinations, including signing Registry Agreements, transitioning to delegation, withdrawing their applications, and requesting refunds. However, in this case Vistaprint does not fall within the category of applicants who have taken such actions in reliance. Instead, it is still asserting its claims in this IRP proceeding. In accordance with the Bylaws, Vistaprint is entitled to an exercise of the Board's independent judgment to determine, based on the facts of the case at hand and in view of ICANN's Bylaws concerning non-discriminatory treatment and core values, whether Vistaprint should be entitled to the additional review mechanism that was made available to certain other gTLD applicants.

Bylaws call the "costs of the IRP Provider", and the Supplementary Procedures call the "costs of the proceedings" – include the fees and expenses of the IRP Panel members and of the ICDR.

196. ICANN is the prevailing party in this IRP. This designation is confirmed by the Panel's decisions concerning Vistaprint's requests for relief in this IRP:

- Vistaprint requests that the Panel find ICANN breached its Articles, Bylaws, and the Guidebook. The Panel declares that ICANN's Board (including the BGC) did not violate the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook.
- Vistaprint requests that the Panel require ICANN to reject the Third Expert's determination in the Vistaprint SCO, disregard the resulting "Contention Set", and allow Vistaprint's applications for .WEBS to proceed on their merits. The Panel determines that it does not have authority to order the relief requested by Vistaprint. In addition, the Panel declares that the Board (through the BGC) did not violate the Articles, Bylaws and Guidebook in regards to the BGC's handling of Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request.
- Vistaprint requests, in the alternative, that the Panel require ICANN to reject the Vistaprint SCO determination and organize a new procedure, in which a three-member panel would re-evaluate the Third Expert's decision taking into account (i) the ICANN Board's resolutions on singular and plural gTLDs, as well as the Board's resolutions on the DERCars SCO Determination, the United TLD Determination, and the Onlineshopping SCO Determination, and (ii) ICANN's decisions to delegate the following gTLDs: .CAR and .CARS; .AUTO and .AUTOS; .ACCOUNTANT and ACCOUNTANTS; .FAN and .FANS; .GIFT and .GIFTS; .LOAN and .LOANS; .NEW and .NEWS; and .WORK and .WORKS. The Panel determines that it does not have authority to order the relief requested by Vistaprint. In addition, the Panel recommends that ICANN's Board exercise its judgment on the question of whether an additional review mechanism is appropriate to re-evaluate the Third Expert's determination in the Vistaprint SCO, in view of ICANN's Bylaws concerning core values and non-discriminatory treatment, and based on the particular circumstances and developments noted in this Declaration, including (i) the Vistaprint SCO determination involving Vistaprint's .WEBS applications, (ii) the Board's (and NGPC's) resolutions on singular and plural gTLDs, and (iii) the Board's decisions to delegate numerous other singular/plural versions of the same gTLD strings.

197. The IRP Panel also recognizes that Vistaprint, through its Request and submissions, raised certain complex and significant issues and contributed to the "public interest" involving the New gTLD Program and the Independent Review Process. It is therefore appropriate and reasonable to divide the IRP costs over the parties in a 60% (Vistaprint) / 40% (ICANN) proportion.

FOR THE FOREGOING REASONS, the IRP Panel hereby:

- (1) Declares that Vistaprint's IRP Request is denied;
- (2) Designates ICANN as the prevailing party;

(3) Recommends that ICANN's Board exercise its judgment on the question of whether an additional review mechanism is appropriate to re-evaluate the Third Expert's determination in the Vistaprint SCO, in view of ICANN's Bylaws concerning core values and non-discriminatory treatment, and based on the particular circumstances and developments noted in this Declaration, including (i) the Vistaprint SCO determination involving Vistaprint's .WEBS applications, (ii) the Board's (and NGPC's) resolutions on singular and plural gTLDs, and (iii) the Board's decisions to delegate numerous other singular/plural versions of the same gTLD strings;

(4) In view of the circumstances, Vistaprint shall bear 60% and ICANN shall bear 40% of the costs of the IRP Provider, including the fees and expenses of the IRP Panel members and the fees and expenses of the ICDR. The administrative fees and expenses of the ICDR, totaling US$4,600.00 as well as the compensation and expenses of the Panelists totaling US$229,167.70 are to be borne US$140,260.62 by Vistaprint Limited and US$93,507.08 by ICANN. Therefore, Vistaprint Limited shall pay to ICANN the amount of US$21,076.76 representing that portion of said fees and expenses in excess of the apportioned costs previously incurred by ICANN upon demonstration that these incurred fees and costs have been paid; and

(5) This Final Declaration may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original, and all of which together shall constitute the Final Declaration of this IRP Panel.

3 Washington, D.C.

4 Friday, May 22, 2015; 9:09 a.m.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Good morning,
7 everyone.

8 Welcome to Washington, D.C. Thank
9 you for joining us this morning.

10 After yesterday's weather, we were 11 this -- especially for you (indicating),
12 there's sunshine outside.

13 What we'll do this morning is we'll
14 start with, I guess, the welcome and the 15 initial presentations of the Members of 16 the Panel.

17 I will start to my left,
18 Professor Kessedjian,
19 Catherine Kessedjian; to my right,
20 Retired Judge William Cahill; and myself,
21 who is President of the Panel,
22 Babak Barin.

23 I will then ask, if you would,
24 counsel for each side, to present your 25 team members and guests that you have in

1 the room for the record.

2 And once we do that, as a roll call,
3 then we will proceed with looking at the 4 agenda just to make sure that there's no
5 issues that we need to deal with on a
6 preliminary basis and then move forward
7 with your presentations.

8 Is that okay?

9 So, Mr. Ali.

10 MR. ALI: Thank you, Mr. President.
11 And good morning.

12 My name is Arif Ali from Weil,
13 Gotshal & Manges on behalf -- appearing
14 on behalf of DCA Trust, the Claimant.

15 I'll start at the other end. We 16 have our client, Ms. Sophia Bekele; then
17 next to her is my colleague
18 Meredith Craven; next to her, colleague
19 Ricardo Ampudia; and to my immediate left
20 is Erin Yates, all from Weil, Gotshal &
21 Manges.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

23 MR. ALI: Thank you.

24 MR. LEVEE: Good morning, Members of
25 the Panel.

1           My name is Jeff LeVee from
2 Jones Day. Next to me is my colleague
3 Rachel Zernik, also from Jones Day.

4           To her right is Amy Stathos. Amy is 5 the deputy general counsel of ICANN, our 6 client.

7           Behind me are witnesses you met this
8 morning: Ms. Heather Dryden, who you met,
9 and Mr. Cherine Chalaby.

10          Mr. Chalaby is a current member of 11 ICANN's Board. Ms. Dryden is the former 12 Chair of the Government Advisory 13 Committee of ICANN and is employed by the 14 Respondent, ICANN.

15          I'm sure they will introduce
16 themselves further given the opportunity
17 this afternoon.

18          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Thank you.

19          So this is the -- for the record,
20 this is the merits hearing of the IRP
21 Panel between DotConnectAfrica Trust and
22 Internet Corporation for Assigned Names
23 and Numbers, ICANN. It's the American
24 Arbitration Association Case Number
25 50 2013 00 1083.

1           So the Panel sent you a Procedural
2           Order Number 8, which essentially laid
3           out, if you will, a proposed timetable
4           for the conduct of this proceeding. We 5           suggest that we stick to that. We've 6           started a few minutes later, but I think
7           we'll catch up in terms of time.

8           Are there any preliminary issues or 9           anything that you want to deal with 10          before we actually go formally into the 11          agenda this morning, either side?

12          MR. ALI: Just one item from us,
13          Mr. President.

14          Yesterday evening, based on
15          communications with -- with ICANN's
16          counsel, we indicated that we would like
17          two new documents added to the record.
18          And we have designated those Hearing
19          Exhibits 1 and 2.

20          There was no objection from ICANN's
21          side, and so we have these documents
22          printed out with sufficient copies.

23          And to the extent that it's
24          acceptable to the Panel, I'll hand them
25          out now, as we'll be referring to these

1 in our opening presentation.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sure.

3 Do you have any problem?

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No. Go on.

5 MR. ALI: Thank you.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: It will just be
7 important to make sure that we have a
8 sequential numbering.

9 MR. ALI: Yes.

10 We call them Hearing Exhibit 1 and 2
11 just so they can be slotted at the back.
12 And when we come to the appropriate --

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

14 MR. ALI: -- slide, we'll refer to 15 those particular documents as 16 Hearing Exhibit 1 and 2.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Perfect.
18 Thank you.

19 MR. ALI: Of course, they could also 20 get sequential numbers in the overall set
21 of Claimant exhibits, as you prefer.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: I think Hearing
23 Exhibit 1 and 2 is fine.

25

1 - - -

2 (Whereupon, Hearing Exhibit Number 1
3 was marked for identification
4 purposes.)

5 - - -

6 - - -

7 (Whereupon, Hearing Exhibit Number 2
8 was marked for identification
9 purposes.)

10 - - -

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Anything
12 else?

13 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Do you have 14 copies?

15 MR. LEVEE: I'm sure they're going
16 to provide them.

17 (Pause.)

18 MR. LEVEE: Thank you.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: Anything else,
20 Mr. LeVee?

21 MR. LEVEE: Nothing from our side.
22 We're ready to go.

23 MR. ALI: Same.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Good.

25 So I guess the first item on this

1 morning's agenda is the opening
2 presentations.

3 And, Mr. Ali, for the Claimant, the 4 floor is yours.

5 We've allocated about an hour, but
6 I'm sure the Panel's flexible to make
7 sure that we give you a bit of leeway.

8 MR. ALI: Well, thank you, because
9 we do have a fair amount to present,
10 which we'll be splitting up between today
11 and tomorrow, and between myself and my 12 colleagues.

14 OPENING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF CLAIMANT

15 DOTCONNECTAFRICA TRUST

16 - - -

17 MR. ALI: So, once again, good
18 morning.

19 First of all, I'd like to thank
20 Jones Day and Mr. LeVee and Ms. Zernik
21 for all of their hospitality and
22 graciousness in providing this facility.
23 It can be quite -- quite a headache in 24 arbitrations or in any type of noncourt
25 process where you have to focus on -- on

1 finding the facilities. And these really
2 are very gracious facilities.

3 It's been a fairly long journey for
4 to us to get here, certainly about a year
5 and a half for all of us to convene here
6 in Washington, but all of -- much longer
7 for Ms. Sophia Bekele.

8 Now, as you've come to see, and
9 hopefully learn, from her witness
10 testimony and will come to appreciate in 11 the course of the next two days,
12 Ms. Bekele is a highly intelligent, very 13 motivated woman with considerable
14 business experience, someone who has 15 great ideas, a great vision and the 16 energy to be able to implement those 17 ideas.

18 Those ideas and her energy were 19 reflected in the efforts that went into 20 the development of the 21 Applicant Guidebook. That is one of the 22 documents at the -- that we will be 23 referring to as a source for the 24 standards that are applicable.

25 Now, of course, there are others,

1 but please do keep in mind that as this
2 idea of .africa was germinating, it was
3 germinating hand-in-hand with the 4 participation of Ms. Bekele in the 5 creation of the very standards that would 6 be applied, someone who believed that as 7 the standards were being developed, that
8 those standards would be applied fairly
9 and equitably and transparently.

10 Now, at bottom, what we have here is 11 the fact that ICANN simply didn't provide
12 DCA Trust a fair shake.

13 DCA Trust followed the rules of the 14 game, rules of the game that were
15 developed with significant involvement
16 from the Internet community, rules of the 17 game that were ultimately developed and 18 approved by the ICANN Board.

19 And with the approval of those rules
20 of the game, ICANN, as a
21 quasiinternational organization -- now,
22 let's not forget that ICANN, while being 23 a California corporation, has a very,
24 very unique role. It is the regulator of 25 the Internet, a global commons, a global

1 resource.

2 And in that respect, ICANN's Bylaws
3 and Articles of Incorporation lay out, in 4 the Articles of Incorporation, a very
5 significant set of principles relating to 6 ICANN being required to conduct itself
7 and its activities in accordance with 8 local law and principles of international
9 law.

10 Now, I'm not here to educate the 11 Panel on what those principles of 12 international law are, but they -- they
13 include good faith; they include
14 transparency; they include fair and
15 equitable treatment, in essence, imposing
16 upon the regulator of the Internet, the 17 party that is going to be administering
18 the rules, to afford a level playing
19 field. And that is all that DCA Trust
20 asked for from the very get-go.

21 Like the other applicants, when it
22 presented its application together with 23 $180,000 fee, all it asked for was Treat my 24 application fairly; be transparent with me;
25 give me a fair shake.

1           And ICANN, as the curator of the
2           process, said, I accept your application,
3           and I am the caretaker of the level playing
4           field.

5           But instead, what did ICANN do? ICANN
6           tilted that playing field in favor of one
7           of the applicants.

8           And just so we understand who that
9           other applicant is, it is the African Union
10          Commission and its agent, UniForum, doing
11          business as ZACR.

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Doing
13          business as what?

14          MR. ALI: As ZACR, Z-A-C-R.

15          So what we'd like to do in this 16          opening presentation is to help you look 17          at the record. And, ultimately, the 18          eloquence of advocates provides no
19          substitute for hard evidence. And that's 20          all we ask the Panel to do, is to look at 21          the evidence. And we believe the 22          evidence makes very clear how that 23          playing field was tilted in favor of the 24          AUC and ZACR to DCA Trust's disadvantage.

25          So in that spirit of wanting to be

1 of assistance to you as you make your
2 decision, what we're going to do in our
3 presentation this morning is to split it
4 up.

5 So I'm just going to address the 6 standard of review, shortly, and then I'm 7 going to hand over to two members of my 8 team, Ms. Yates and Ms. Craven, who have 9 looked at every single piece of paper
10 that's in the record.

11 So who better than my two colleagues
12 to assist you in looking at the record,
13 in understanding the documents and 14 walking you through the language in 15 ICANN's production, as well as our own
16 exhibit.

17 Now, I will say, without wishing to 18 embarrass them, that this is their first
19 opportunity to appear before a panel.
20 And, indeed, they have the great fortune
21 to appear before such a distinguished one
22 in such an important proceeding. And I
23 have absolutely no doubt they will do
24 incredibly well and be of great
25 assistance to you.

1           So with that, let me just turn very
2 briefly to what it is that we claim has 3 taken place.

4           We can go to the slide with the 5 breaches.

6           So, for us, ICANN has violated its 7 articles, i.e., has violated the 8 principles of international law,
9 principles that were articulated all too
10 well in the context of the .xxx case,
11 which Mr. LeVee and I did -- locked horns
12 over. I guess that was a couple of years
13 ago --

14           MR. LEVEE: I think we both had more
15 hair back then.

16           MR. ALI: I was certainly, I hope,
17 slimmer.

18           (Laughter.)

19           MR. ALI: -- but the -- but it is 20 the Articles of Incorporation which set
21 out the principles of international law.

22           And, please, I ask the Panel not to 23 give that language short shrift. That
24 language is there for a purpose. It is a
25 reflection of who ICANN is, and it is a

1 reflection of what ICANN does.

2 And that language is included in the
3 Articles of Incorporation for a reason,
4 and it is language that imposes upon
5 ICANN certain obligations that arise out
6 of international law and which echoes in 7 the Bylaws.

8 When you look at the Bylaws of 9 ICANN, those Bylaws reflect certain
10 principles and requirements, such as the 11 fact that ICANN shall not act
12 discriminatorily towards a party; that 13 ICANN will not abuse its regulatory
14 authority; and that ICANN will act
15 transparently, objectively, fairly and 16 equitably.

17 So not only are obligations imposed
18 as a general proposition in the Articles
19 of Incorporation, including the 20 obligation of good faith, but more
21 specifically in ICANN's Bylaws. And 22 we've indicated which Bylaws are
23 associated with which particular breaches
24 in our Slide Number 8, and they're 25 reflected also in the

1 Applicant Guidebook.

2 So the construct here, insofar as
3 the substantive principles that are
4 applicable, are the Articles of
5 Incorporation; they're the Bylaws and the 6 Applicant Guidebook; and, certainly,
7 obviously, the ICDR rules and the 8 supplemental procedures.

9 Now, let me turn just very shortly
10 to the -- the standard of -- of review.
11 I know that this is a matter of some 12 interest to the Panel, and I know there's 13 some controversy associated with what the 14 standard of review should be.

15 According to ICANN, it's a
16 deferential standard review, and
17 according to the Claimant, it is a
18 standard review that's de novo or,
19 rather, perhaps, using the words of
20 Judge Schwebel in the ICM versus ICANN
21 case, it is an objective standard review.

22 Now, why should it be that? First
23 of all, ICANN says that in light of the 24 ICM case, that there were many changes
25 that were made to the IRP system.

1           I must say I'm glad that we had such 2           an impact in hopefully improving the 3           system, but it doesn't seem that there's 4           greater clarity that has arisen out of 5           those further amendments.

6           I see nowhere in the standard
7           review -- in the language, I see nowhere
8           the word "deferential."

9           Now, if ICANN had intended for 10          there -- for you to be applying a
11          deferential standard review, there's no
12          reason why that word could not have been 13          put in, is there? But they didn't put 14          those words in. They didn't say
15          "deferential standard review."

16          Now, what I think should inform your 17          decision about an objective standard
18          review, or what we might call "a de novo
19          standard review," is the following: This 20          is the only opportunity that a claimant
21          has for independent and impartial review
22          of ICANN's conduct, the only opportunity.
23          And within the context of that only
24          opportunity, that sole opportunity,
25          really, there should be a deferential

1 standard review, deference to the
2 regulator, whose very conduct is being
3 questioned. I think that that's wrong.

4 So not only do we not have any
5 specific language in the revised rules
6 whereby ICANN had previously argued for a
7 deferential standard review, the 8 ICM panel said No. ICANN revised the 9 rules, but they didn't put in the wording
10 "deferential."

11 But within the context of this
12 process -- keeping in mind the litigation
13 waiver, that all applicants are required
14 to sign a very broad, very strict
15 litigation waiver that ICANN constantly
16 invokes and provides it with a protection
17 from the public courts, and within the 18 context of a proceeding that ICANN says
19 has very limited purpose -- we, of 20 course, contest that -- they ask you to 21 apply a deferential standard review.

22 Not only do we, ICANN, develop the 23 rules, we will interpret those rules, and 24 we will tell you whether or not we are 25 going to abide by those rules. We change

1           them when we like, we'll agree to them if 2           we like, and we will apply them as we
3           wish -- the regulator of the Internet, a
4           global commons, a resource that has been
5           put in the hands of ICANN.

6           So we would submit to you that the 7           standard review is not one that is in any
8           way deferential, but one that is de novo
9           and whereby, we, as the Claimants, have 10          to establish our case by preponderance of 11          the evidence.

12          Now, ICANN will turn your attention
13          to the specific elements of Article IV of 14          the -- of the -- of the Bylaws -- I'm 15          sorry -- of the supplemental rules, where 16          it says, The Panel must focus on whether 17          the Board acted without conflict of 18          interest in making its decision, whether 19          the Board exercised due diligence and 20          care in having a reasonable amount of 21          facts in front of them, and whether the 22          Board members exercised independent
23          judgment in taking the decision believed 24          to be in the best interests of the 25          company.

1           And we're not saying you shouldn't
2           focus on those items, but that doesn't
3           mean that those items that are listed in 4           any way detract from, limit, curtail or 5           circumscribe the obligations that are 6           laid out as a result of the Articles of 7           Incorporation, the Bylaws, the Applicant
8           Guidebook.

9           And, again, we ask you to look at 10          the standard of review within the context
11          of what this proceeding is and what ICANN
12          has said about this proceeding. And we 13          ask that you reject their proposition,
14          their submission that the standard review
15          should be one that is deferential.

16          And with that, I will turn matters
17          over to Ms. Craven, and we will start
18          with, again, this perhaps somewhat
19          laborious but, we do think, very helpful
20          exercise of reviewing the evidence.

21          Thank you, Members of the Panel.

22          We should say, please do interrupt
23          any of us if you have any questions about 24          any aspect of what we've said. And if 25          there's a question at this particular

1 point, I'm happy to address it before
2 turning it over to Ms. Craven.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: We had said that
4 we would keep questions, if you will, at 5 the end, but I'm happy to have my
6 Panel Members ask any questions.

7 Do you have any --

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So your
9 authority for the standard review is this 10 other case, right?

11 MR. ALI: Indeed. In -- in -- in 12 part, yes, but given ICANN's position,
13 Judge Cahill, that they modified the 14 standard review in light of that case,
15 our submissions are also that the 16 modification should -- should be looked
17 at. And the fact that there's nothing
18 set regarding the deferential standard
19 review, thereby it's important for the 20 Panel to take guidance from another IRP
21 which did look at the standard review.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Got it.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: Mr. Ali, before
24 you go, are we to understand, Mr. Ali,
25 that what you're submitting to us is that

1 we can actually go beyond, if you will,
2 what is set out in the supplementary
3 rules as well as, I guess, the provisions
4 of Article IV, Section 3 of the Bylaws?

5 Is that what you're saying?

6 MR. ALI: Our position is that the 7 supplemental rules and the ICDR rules
8 provide a procedural framework.

9 In terms of the substantive
10 framework, it's the Articles of 11 Incorporation, the Bylaws and the 12 Applicant Guidebook. And those are the 13 particular standards that we believe
14 apply for purposes of judging ICANN's
15 conduct.

16 Now, the supplemental rules and the 17 ICDR rules that they're intended to 18 modify seem to get, you know, somewhat
19 jumbled, but that doesn't mean that that 20 is not the procedural framework as 21 opposed to the substantive framework.

22 ICDR rules and the supplemental
23 rules provide the procedural framework,
24 and, ultimately, those are the documents
25 that provide the substantive principles

1 and rules that are applicable.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: This is an
3 important point, so allow me to press a
4 little bit further.

5 MR. ALI: Please.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: If the Panel was
7 to look at, by example, one of the items
8 that it would have to -- has to make a
9 decision on, and that's, for example,
10 Section 3, Sub 4a, Did the Board act
11 without conflict of interest in taking 12 its decision --

13 MR. ALI: Yes.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- would you
15 explain to us how the Panel would
16 consider that in light of the standard
17 that you're setting, which is that
18 de novo, if you will, or objective
19 meaning of what transpired? In other
20 words, what should this Panel be looking 21 at in order to do that?

22 MR. ALI: Just so I understand the 23 question, with respect to the substantive
24 standards of conflict?

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

1           In other words, at the end of the 2           day, we have to come up -- you're looking
3           for a decision from us.

4           MR. ALI:   Indeed.   With respect to 5           the issue of a conflict of interest --
6           now, there has been the ICANN ombudsman's
7           review of whether or not there's a
8           conflict of interest or not, applying
9           standards that, frankly, are not entirely
10          clear.

11          I think, as in all international
12          proceedings -- and we can consider this 13          to be an international proceeding --
14          question marks, as you know, arise and 15          have been much -- a source of much
16          academic debate as to what are the 17          standards of conflict that should be 18          applicable.

19          I think that there's a rule of 20          reason that you would need to apply here,
21          and that rule of reason needs to be
22          applied within the context of the process
23          of the specific -- the specific action
24          that those who are -- who were supposedly 25          conflicted were involved in.

1           I don't think that we can look to
2           any particular rules of ethics. I don't
3           think that -- rules of ethics that would
4           apply to counsel or to arbitrators.
5           Those may be informative in a way, but I
6           don't think the specifications apply.

7           I do believe, at the end of the day,
8           you will have to apply rule of reason
9           that is reflective of the particular
10          context of the decisions that were being 11          taken --

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That sounds
13          like the standard that the ombudsman made
14          in his decision. He said Not arbitrator,
15          not judge, that it's a different
16          standard. It sounds like you don't agree
17          with that standard.

18          MR. ALI: I think that's right. I
19          can't disagree, Judge Cahill. I mean, at 20          the end of the day, since there aren't
21          any defined standards -- you know,
22          there's one that the ombudsman applied
23          within the context of his factual
24          investigation. There's one that you will 25          apply within the context of looking at

1           our overall submissions regarding whether
2           or not ICANN has violated the Articles of 3           Incorporation and the Applicant
4           Guidebook --

5                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You want us
6           to make a de novo decision on that? Just 7           look at it fresh?

8                   MR. ALI: Yes, I think there are two 9           things you can do: one is to look at that 10          particular issue of conflict of interest;
11          and then to look at the -- the 12          allegations of the conflict of interest
13          within the overall context of our case,
14          which is that the playing field was 15          tilted very heavily in favor of the 16          African Union Commission.

17                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

18                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

19                   MR. ALI: May I turn the podium over 20          to my colleague?

21                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Sure. We'll
22          probably come back to this again
23          afterwards.

24                   MR. ALI: Of course.

25                   MS. CRAVEN: Good morning,

1 Mr. Chairman and Members of the Panel.
2 My name is Meredith Craven, and I appear
3 before you on behalf of DotConnectAfrica
4 Trust.

5 I plan to take you through, in a
6 little more detail, the chronology which 7 appears here on the tripod and also as
8 reproduced on Slide 7 of your packet --

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Don't pay
10 attention to that man.

11 MS. CRAVEN: I'll do my best. I
12 hope he enjoys the timeline.

13 As you can see from looking at this
14 timeline, which, of course, is a little 15 bit easier to read in your packet, from 16 the very beginning of the New gTLD
17 Program, ICANN has shepherded the African
18 Union Commission towards its desired
19 goal; namely, ownership and operation of 20 the New gTLD .africa.

21 In October 2011, the AUC formally
22 requested in a document titled The Dakar
23 Communiqué that ICANN reserve .africa and 24 its French and Arabic equivalents for the 25 exclusive use of the AUC.

1           Despite the fact that the
2           application window opened in January 2012
3           and despite the fact that DCA Trust
4           submitted a letter in December 2011
5           requesting that ICANN respond to the 6           AUC's petition and inform applicants of 7           the status of .africa, ICANN failed to 8           respond to the AUC's petition and inform 9           applicants of that status until 10          March 8th, 2012, three months into the 11          application window for new gTLDs, during 12          which DCA submitted its application for
13          .africa.

14           In its March 2013 response, ICANN
15          informed the AUC they could not reserve
16          .africa as this would violate the 17          Applicant Guidebook. However, ICANN
18          advised the AUC that it could use
19          mechanisms, like ICANN's Governmental
20          Advisory Committee, or GAC, to play a
21          prominent role in determining the outcome
22          of any application to these top-level
23          domain name strings, .africa and its 24          French and Arabic equivalents.

25           ICANN advised the AUC that by

1 joining the GAC, the AUC could inform
2 ICANN that there are concerns with an
3 application via the GAC Early Warning
4 notice and provide direct advice to the 5 ICANN Board on any particular
6 application.

7 ICANN's advice to the AUC that it
8 could join the GAC is troubling in that 9 it was not a foregone conclusion that the 10 AUC could become a GAC member and have 11 this status required to issue Early
12 Warnings or participate in GAC advice.

13 According to the ICANN Bylaws,
14 membership on the GAC is open to national 15 governments, and the AUC is not a
16 national government.

17 The Bylaws go on, as you can see
18 from the highlighting, to indicate that 19 distinct economies, as recognized in 20 international fora, multinational
21 government organizations and treaty
22 organizations may also join the GAC but 23 only upon the invitation of the GAC
24 through its Chair.

25 Moreover, the GAC operating

1 principles clarify that multinational
2 governmental organizations and treaty
3 organizations who are invited to
4 participate in the GAC by its Chair do so
5 as observers only.

6 Now, what this means is that they do
7 not have voting rights; they do not issue
8 Early Warnings; and they do not
9 participate in GAC advice.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's
11 observers, right?

12 MS. CRAVEN: As observers, they do
13 not participate in GAC advice.

14 Indeed, looking at the list of GAC
15 voting members that are not national 16 governments, as compared to the 17 organizations that are observers on the 18 GAC, it really does appear that the AUC
19 received special treatment in this case.

20 Organizations that are analogous to 21 the AUC, like the Council of Europe, the 22 Organization of American States or the 23 Pacific Islands Forum, are observers.
24 They do not have voting rights, and they
25 do not participate in GAC advice.

1           In fact, the sum total of
2           nongovernment voting members of the GAC
3           is the European Commission and the 4           African Union Commission. However, the 5           European Commission and the African Union
6           Commission are treated very differently
7           outside of the ICANN world.

8           While the AU and the EU are both
9           very important in the relevant regions,
10          their powers are different. Their 11          enforcement capabilities with regard to 12          their members are different. Their 13          status on the global stage is very 14          different.

15          For example, the EU actually has the 16          authority to regulate and legislate over
17          the sovereign governments which form part
18          of the European Union. In addition, the 19          EU creates EU law and has the ability to 20          enforce this law upon its members.

21          The EU has the authority to sign
22          international agreements as the EU, and,
23          perhaps most importantly for our
24          purposes, the EU has expanded observer
25          status in the United Nations. This means

1           that the EU, exclusively of all other
2           international organizations, has the
3           authority to speak at the UN General
4           Assembly meetings. It has the sole --
5           and it is the sole nonstate party to 6           numerous United Nations agreements.

7           The African Union does not have this 8           status. The African Union is an
9           important political organization with a
10          mission to promote peace, stability and 11          security in the African continent, but it
12          has no regulatory authority over African 13          states. There is no such thing as AU
14          law, and there is no mechanism to enforce 15          AU law.

16          Finally, the African Union is a UN
17          observer, not an expanded observer, an 18          observer alongside organizations like the 19          Council of Europe, the Organization of 20          American States, and the Pacific Islands
21          Forum, all of which have observer and 22          nonmember status on the GAC.

23          Now, ICANN has argued that the AUC's
24          membership as a voting member on the GAC
25          was a decision purely within the ambit of

1 the GAC. They have said that it was at 2 the sole discretion of the GAC for the
3 AUC to join as a voting member.

4 ICANN has argued that its Board had
5 absolutely nothing to do with the 6 decision to give the AUC voting rights;
7 however, two weeks prior to sending its
8 March 2013 response to the AUC, advising
9 the AUC that it could use the GAC to 10 achieve its ends, ICANN shared the draft
11 of that letter with the GAC Chair,
12 Ms. Heather Dryden, requesting that she 13 review and comment upon the draft, which 14 indicated the AUC could have voting power
15 as a GAC member, and used that to have a 16 prominent impact on the outcome of
17 .africa.

18 And, in fact, after receiving this
19 advice in the March 8th, 2013 letter, the 20 AUC did take steps and became a GAC
21 member by the Toronto GAC meeting in
22 June 2013. And in November 2013, the GAC
23 orchestrated the GAC Early Warnings
24 against DCA's application containing
25 exactly the anticompetitive purpose --

1 anticompetitive purpose expressed in The 2 Dakar Communiqué.

3 As you can see from Slide 16, a GAC
4 Early Warning is intended to allow a
5 government to indicate to an applicant
6 that their gTLD application is seen as
7 potentially sensitive or problematic. It
8 is merely a notice; it does not result in 9 any adverse effect upon the application.

10 A GAC Early Warning is essentially
11 an invitation to the applicant to work
12 with the affected government so that
13 problems with the application don't arise
14 later on in the process.

15 According to the Application
16 Guidebook, an Early Warning typically
17 results from a notice to the GAC by one
18 or more governments that an application
19 might be problematic because it violates
20 national law or raises sensitivities.

21 However, the AU's Early Warning did
22 not relate to policy issues or
23 sensitivities; instead, the AU's Early
24 Warning contained three rationales.

25 First, the AU claimed that DCA's

1 application had a lack of geographic
2 support. This is not a ground for an
3 Early Warning. This is not a policy
4 issue. This is actually a matter for the 5 Geographic Names Panel, which is the 6 independent body that ICANN specifically
7 hired and delegated to determine whether 8 or not geographic applications have the 9 requisite support to satisfy the
10 Applicant Guidebook.

11 Second, the AUC complained that
12 DCA's application was an unwarranted
13 intrusion on the AUC's self-awarded
14 mandate to establish .africa.
15 Essentially, the AU said it wanted the 16 string, and it did not want DCA to have
17 it.

18 Finally, the AUC alleged a string
19 similarity problem. A "string similarity
20 problem" essentially means that two
21 applied-for strings are so similar that 22 it would confuse the DNS system to have 23 them both in existence.

24 DCA's application, therefore, was 25 too similar, because it applied for

1 .africa, to the AUC's application for
2 .africa; and, therefore, DCA's
3 application should not go forward.

4 This is not a real string similarity
5 issue; this is, again, an anticompetitive
6 aim.

7 Again, however, ICANN employs an
8 independent panel to evaluate string
9 similarity. So regardless of the purpose
10 of this string similarity claim, the GAC
11 Early Warning need not address it.

12 Furthermore, the Early Warning did
13 not contain any concerns whatsoever about
14 the policy behind DCA's application. It
15 didn't touch upon the viability of the 16 application, the manner in which DCA
17 proposed to operate .africa in its 18 application or the impact upon the 19 African continent if DCA were to be the 20 custodian of the string .africa.

21 This GAC Early Warning is not a
22 matter of public policy, which is the 23 proper ambit of the GAC; instead, it is 24 merely an anticompetitive document.

25 The anticompetitive Early Warning,

1           however, then translated into the
2           anticompetitive GAC advice on April 2013.
3           Again, the purpose of GAC advice, like a
4           GAC Early Warning, is to address
5           applications that potentially violate
6           national law or raise sensitivities. The 7           purpose is not to simply object to a
8           competitor.

9           And it's important to understand
10          that we're looking at a unique situation
11          here. In no other instance, that we are 12          aware of, was there an applicant for a
13          gTLD that was also a member of the GAC.
14          In no other instance do we have an 15          applicant who is also a judge.

16          Now, ICANN has maintained that the 17          GAC advice in DCA's application was 18          consensus advice; and, therefore, it was 19          proper for the Board to accept that
20          advice.

21          As you can see from the slide, the 22          Applicant Guidebook provides three types
23          of GAC advice: first, consensus advice;
24          second, advice that some members on the 25          GAC may have concerns about an

1 application; and third, advice that
2 certain amendments should be made to the 3 application before it should proceed.

4 Consensus advice creates a strong
5 presumption that the ICANN Board should 6 not approve the application; however,
7 this is a strong presumption. It is not
8 a mandatory requirement that the Board
9 accept the GAC's decision. And the 10 factors here that the Claimant maintains
11 render this advice not consensus advice
12 should have, at a minimum, prompted the 13 ICANN Board to conduct due diligence into 14 the validity of the anticompetitive GAC
15 advice.

16 First among these factors, the 17 advisor from Kenya, Mr. Sammy Buruchara,
18 specifically informed the GAC Chair and
19 the ICANN CEO, in advance of the GAC
20 meeting in Beijing in April 2013, the 21 meeting which produced the GAC advice at 22 issue here, that Kenya did not wish to 23 issue the advice on DCA's application.

24 Two days prior to the GAC meeting
25 from where the advice issued,

1 Mr. Buruchara wrote directly to the
2 GAC Chair, Ms. Dryden, and to ICANN's
3 CEO, Fadi Chehadé, informing them that he 4 could not attend the GAC meeting in
5 Beijing but that he had concerns about
6 certain irregularities that had arisen in 7 the meetings leading up to the GAC
8 meeting.

9 He informed Ms. Dryden and
10 Mr. Chehadé that should anyone raise an 11 objection against DCA's application
12 through the GAC advice, Kenya objected to 13 the GAC advice.

Now, how that turned into advice on

DCA's application, we don't know.

10

Somehow, the GAC issued advice based

11 upon the -- the version of text -- or a 12 version of text that included an 13 objection to DCA's application. We have 14 no indication of how this occurred

15 because the GAC meeting was confidential.

16

Apparently, no minutes were taken.

17

No one seems to have a recollection of 18

what happened. Ms. Dryden didn't provide 19 any enlightening information in her

20 statement on what actually happened

21 during that critical meeting from which 22

the GAC advice issued.

23

Nonetheless, all the GAC members

24 through the GAC LISTSERV, the GAC's

25 chairperson and ICANN's CEO were all

1           aware that the Government of Kenya
2           objected to anticompetitive advice issued
3           through the GAC.

4           In light of the fact that the advice
5           was anticompetitive and inconsistent with 6           the role of the GAC and the purpose of 7           the GAC advice, in light of the fact that
8           the Board had notice that Kenya disagreed
9           with anticompetitive use of the GAC
10          advice, and in light of the fact that the 11          GAC Chair, a liaison to the ICANN Board,
12          had notice that Kenya objected to the 13          anticompetitive use of the GAC advice,
14          the NGPC should have at a minimum --
15          should have considered that this was not 16          proper consensus advice but, at a
17          minimum, should have investigated into 18          the procedural irregularities raised,
19          particularly because DCA pointed out in 20          its response, which it was entitled to 21          send to the NGPC -- in its response to 22          the GAC advice, submitted on May 8th,
23          2013, that there were all of these 24          procedural irregularities and that the 25          AUC was motivated by political

1           machinations, by an anticompetitive
2           purpose to acquire this TLD for its own
3           use, operation and profit.

4           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I saw in
5           one of their briefs -- one of ICANN's
6           briefs that this person from Kenya was -- 7           who was sending e-mails was not the 8           proper person to vote on or was not in 9           the right position, and the person who
10          was in the right position was in Beijing.
11          And we don't know what happened. We 12          don't even know if he was in the room.

13          When you say about, you know, Kenya
14          objecting to -- through someone who has 15          not the power to do it, I think that's 16          their point.

17          MS. CRAVEN: You're absolutely right
18          that Mr. Buruchara was the GAC advisor,
19          and ICANN maintains that the GAC
20          representative is the proper person to --
21          to represent a government.

22          Now, whether or not -- some
23          countries seem to have advisors only.
24          Some countries seem to have
25          representatives only.

1                   I would certainly appreciate some
2                   enlightening on how the system is 3                   supposed to work, because the reality of 4                   who represents governments and the GAC
5                   operating principles doesn't line up
6                   precisely.

7                   Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

1           The other thing that I would point
2           out is -- and we're not here to debate
3           ICANN's procedures; we're here to --
4           we're here to address the fact that ICANN
5           has not followed its procedures.

6           But it does seem somewhat strange
7           that in a meeting where governments are 8           supposed to be authorizing their 9           sovereign authority through their 10          representatives, no one has a record of 11          what happened, no one seems to know where 12          Mr. Katundu was, no one seems to know
13          when this vote was occurring.

14          I mean, hypothetically, a
15          representative could be in the room,
16          leave to take a phone call, and a vote
17          could occur without them knowing. We 18          don't even know if there is a distinct
19          agenda for these meetings.

20          So the prominent point is that 21          Mr. Katundu was, in fact, onboard with 22          this -- with this objection to the GAC --
23          the GAC advice and to the use of the GAC
24          in this manner; but, in addition, his 25          whereabouts are somewhat -- it's somewhat

1           questionable as to where he was, why he
2           wasn't in the room. And the only people
3           who can enlighten us on that have not.

4           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The only
5           evidence I saw was a declaration that 6           said they couldn't remember whether he
7           was in the room or not when that
8           happened.

9           Okay.

10          MS. CRAVEN: That's what we've seen
11          as well, and we don't have additional 12          information on that.

13          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.
14          Thank you.

15          MS. CRAVEN: Absolutely.

16          Indeed, the NGPC consideration of 17          .africa, as we discussed, didn't consider 18          any of those procedural errors or
19          the -- the questionable use of the AUC
20          for what was not -- excuse me -- of the 21          GAC for what was not a public policy
22          purpose.

23          In fact, the NGPC's consideration,
24          as reflected in the Board
25          meeting minutes, is actually just a

1 one-liner. The Board says, The committee
2 discussed accepting the GAC Advisory
3 Committee advice regarding the
4 application for .africa.

5 And that's really it. The rest of 6 the paragraph discusses the process by
7 which the NGPC will accept the GAC advice
8 and remove DCA's application from 9 contention.

10 There's no actionable diligence
11 performed in that meeting, as far as we 12 can tell from the minutes and as far as 13 we can tell from the public records
14 surrounding those meeting minutes.

15 In addition, the NGPC scorecard
16 reveals no additional diligence either.
17 It simply repeats the fact that the NGPC
18 directed its staff to accept the GAC
19 advice and that .africa would not be 20 approved and would, therefore, be
21 withdrawn from the process.

22 Meanwhile, the NGPC actually did
23 have the authority to undertake a
24 detailed investigation, including, if 25 necessary, the NGPC had the authority to

1           consult an independent expert on these
2           complex political machinations that were
3           in play.

4           In cases where the issues resulting
5           from GAC advice are pertinent to a formal
6           objection process, the NGPC may consult
7           an independent expert.

8           The GAC warning and GAC advice
9           essentially argue that a substantial
10          portion of the African continent is 11          opposed to DCA's application, as 12          represented by the African Union
13          Commission.

14          The African Union Commission argues
15          that this Africa community is targeted by 16          DCA's application for .africa and that 17          the support is lacking.

18          These claims are pertinent to a
19          community objection under the ICANN
20          Applicant Guidebook. Moreover, in light
21          of the concerns that we have highlighted 22          surrounding the advice, the NGPC should 23          have consulted the independent expert
24          that it had, under the AGB, the authority
25          to consult.

1           If the -- if the NGPC was uncertain
2           as to what independent expert to consult,
3           it could have, at a minimum, referred to 4           the Geographic Names Panel, which had
5           been working on the issue for months.

6           The Geographic Names Panel is the 7           independent expert that ICANN itself
8           hired specifically to examine, evaluate 9           and rule upon exactly the governmental 10          support concerns that are raised by the 11          AUC in the Early Warning which led to the 12          GAC advice.

13          And I would like to turn over to my 14          colleague Erin Yates to explain a little 15          bit more about the -- the Geographic
16          Names Panel itself and ICANN's
17          relationship with the Geographic Names
18          Panel throughout this process.

19          However, if the Panel has any 20          questions, I'm happy to address them
21          before I do so.

22                 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: None for me.
23          Thank you.

24                 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

25                 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No. Talked

1 all we can.

2 MS. CRAVEN: Thank you very much.

3 MS. YATES: Good morning,

4 Mr. President and Members of the Panel.

5 My name is Erin Yates, and I'm also

6 here on behalf of the Claimant,

7 DotConnectAfrica Trust.

8 This morning, I'll take you through

9 the Geographic Names Panel review that

10 InterConnect Communications performed in

11 coordination with ICANN and demonstrate

12 how ICANN's interference in that process

13 influenced the outcome of the application

14 process for .africa to the benefit of

15 DotConnectAfrica Trust's direct

16 competitor.

17 As you know, the Geographic Names

18 Panel review is part of ICANN's initial

19 evaluation process for applications for

20 geographic strengths. ICANN's gTLD

21 Applicant Guidebook requires applicants

22 for geographic strengths to demonstrate

23 support from at least 60 percent of 24 national governments in their respective

25 region.

1           As shown on the slide in front of
2           you, ICANN's Applicant Guidebook provides
3           that the Geographic Names Panel will
4           determine which governments are relevant
5           based on the inputs of the applicants,
6           the governments and its own research and 7           analysis. Nowhere is there mention of 8           reference to ICANN Staff, the Board or 9           other resources.

10           The Geographic Names Panel reviews
11           the documentation of support or 12           nonobjection provided by applicants and 13           accesses its relevance and verifies its 14           authenticity.

15           The Applicant Guidebook contemplates
16           that the Geographic Names Panel may 17           communicate with the entities that sign
18           letters of support in order to understand
19           the terms on which the support was 20           provided.

21           With this in mind and consistent
22           with ICANN's gTLD Applicant Guidebook,
23           DotConnectAfrica Trust consulted with the 24           relevant governments and public
25           authorities in Africa to enlist their

1 support prior to submitting its
2 application.

3 As Mr. Ali explained earlier, the
4 fact that ZACR, DCA's direct competitor,
5 claimed to have the support of the AU
6 Commissioner for Infrastructure and
7 Energy did not mean the DotConnectAfrica
8 Trust could not pass the Geographic Names
9 review.

10 The Applicant Guidebook expressly
11 provides that where there was more than 12 one application for a geographic string
13 with requisite government approvals, that 14 applicants, themselves, must resolve the 15 contention.

16 Where an applicant has not produced
17 all of the documentation of support, the 18 Guidebook provides that the Geographic
19 Names Panel will contact the applicant
20 and give the applicant no fewer than 21 90 days to provide such documentation.

22 That is how the process should have 23 worked. Instead, ICANN controls every 24 step of the process. And while this
25 chronology is a bit busy, we'll walk

1 through these documents together and show
2 the communications that took place
3 between ICANN and InterConnect
4 Communications, because even at the very
5 early stages of the process, ICANN
6 directed the Geographic Names Panel on 7 how to treat support for the .africa
8 applications.

9 As you can see on Slide 34, an
10 excerpt of Claimant's Exhibit 110, on 11 July 10th, 2012, ICANN circulated to the 12 Geographic Names Panel its preliminary
13 responses to what appear to be questions
14 about how to resolve certain issues with 15 respect to geographic strings.

16 As you can see on Slide 35, one of 17 those questions was whether letters of 18 support from the African Union or the
19 United Nations Economic Commission for
20 Africa count towards the 60 percent rule.

21 ICANN determined in its preliminary
22 guidance that such letters would not, and 23 the letters of support must be obtained
24 from individual countries.

25 Somewhat strangely, ICANN directed

1 InterConnect to send a clarification
2 question to the African Union only to
3 state that its letter was meaningful but 4 did not count.

5 In the following months, ICANN and
6 InterConnect engaged in much discussion
7 and debate over this point.

8 As you can see in the excerpt of 9 Claimant's Exhibit 69 on Slide 36,
10 InterConnect recognized that -- the 11 politically sensitive nature of these
12 applications within ICANN but also didn't
13 believe that ICANN should second-guess
14 its independent panels.

15 InterConnect also expressed concern
16 to ICANN about the acres of time it was 17 spending on the .africa applications, in 18 their words, "way out of proportion to 19 any other geographic name," and repeated
20 its recommendation that ICANN meet with 21 InterConnect to discuss how to handle
22 these applications.

23 At the time InterConnect completed
24 its geographic review of the .africa
25 applications in October 2012, discussions

1           about how to handle the .africa
2           applications were even taking place at 3           the executive level within ICANN.

4           At the same time, ICANN was aware
5           that there were significant problems with 6           the letters of support submitted by ZACR,
7           and the many ZACR purported letters of 8           support would result in what ICANN calls
9           "clarifying questions."

10          Many of the letters of support ZACR
11          submitted were based on a template that 12          InterConnect determined did not satisfy
13          the criteria in the Guidebook.

14          InterConnect also put ICANN on 15          notice that if ICANN did not count the 16          support of the AU, DotConnectAfrica would 17          not have a chance of passing the 18          Geographic Names review with no mention
19          of DotConnectAfrica support from the 20          United Nations Economic Commission for
21          Africa.

22          After this e-mail, ICANN and
23          InterConnect communicated from time to 24          time about whether ICANN had made a 25          decision on how to treat support for the

1 .africa applications.

2 InterConnect apparently issued
3 clarifying questions for every other
4 geographic name but not for .africa.

5 Several months passed, and while
6 InterConnect's position did not change,
7 no clarifying questions were issued for 8 the .africa applications.

9 And moving ahead to early
10 March 2013, an ICANN consultant reached
11 out to InterConnect Communications to ask
12 for information for an ICANN steering
13 committee. What committee that is, we're 14 not sure, but it does not seem proper
15 that at the ICANN executive level,
16 conversations were happening about the 17 work of an independent panel.

18 On March 15th, 2013, as you can see
19 from the document before you,
20 InterConnect e-mails ICANN to reiterate
21 its recommendation that the Geographic
22 Names Panel issue the clarifying
23 questions to each of the applicants, just 24 as InterConnect did for every other
25 geographic string, to clarify the

1 position on the African Union.

2 As Ms. Craven explained, the
3 following month, on April 11, 2013, the 4 GAC issued its purported consensus
5 objection advice against
6 DotConnectAfrica's application.
7 Only days later, ICANN contacted
8 InterConnect to see whether InterConnect
9 had begun preparing clarifying questions
10 for .africa.

11 Although these e-mails before you
12 show that InterConnect had some informal
13 discussions before the Beijing meeting,
14 the meeting at which the GAC advice was 15 issued against DCA's application, about
16 how to proceed on these applications,
17 InterConnect requested, again, formal
18 instructions from ICANN on how it should 19 conduct its work.

20 Only at this point, after the 21 purported consensus objection advice had
22 been issued against DotConnectAfrica's
23 application, did ICANN instruct
24 InterConnect to proceed with preparing
25 clarifying questions on the .africa

1 applications.

2 As InterConnect began its work, it,
3 once again, asked ICANN whether to 4 contact the African Union directly to 5 resolve the questions about
6 the African Union support. ICANN again
7 denied InterConnect's request.

8 ICANN also questioned why
9 InterConnect would recommend issuing a
10 clarifying question for the United 11 Nations Economic Commission for Africa.

12 After months and months of delay, on 13 May 7th, ICANN begins pushing
14 InterConnect to issue clarifying
15 questions for ZACR's application.

16 At this point, InterConnect explains
17 to ICANN that ICANN has rejected its
18 proposed approach, the proposed approach
19 of the independent panel tasked with 20 verifying and authenticating the letters
21 of support, and, instead, recommended
22 issue clarifying questions to every
23 country and relevant authority.

24 On the same day, in the face of 25 deadlines to complete the clarifying

1 questions on ZACR's application,
2 InterConnect reminded ICANN that it had
3 advised ICANN all the way back in October
4 of 2012 of the problems that would be
5 associated with the .africa applications,
6 and ICANN waited over seven months to 7 respond.

8 And as you can see in the following
9 slides, a similar vein of communications
10 was exchanged between ICANN and 11 InterConnect on these issues, with 12 InterConnect remaining steadfast in its 13 opinion that the African Union is a
14 relevant authority and that InterConnect
15 should be able to contact its
16 representatives.

17 Interconnect stressed to ICANN that 18 its approach was in conformance with the 19 Guidebook, deals fairly and reasonably
20 between the applicants without the risk
21 of prejudice to one of the -- one or the 22 other, and is likely to avoid many months
23 of delay or potential confusion.

24 On May 15th, ICANN again rejected
25 the approach recommended by its

1 independent panel --

2 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Could I
3 interrupt you here? Because you went
4 very fast on this new exhibit. That is
5 the first time the Panel is seeing it.

6 MS. YATES: Yes.

7 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Perhaps you
8 want to tell us more --

9 MS. YATES: If you could take it
10 back to the --

11 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: -- so it's
12 your Slide 46. It's here in Exhibit 2.

13 And so why are we seeing this for 14 the first time? And what is important in 15 this exhibit?

16 MS. YATES: Yes. We thought this 17 helped complete the picture of the 18 communications that were taking place
19 between InterConnect and ICANN during 20 this time. And it is also helpful to 21 show that ICANN -- or that InterConnect
22 remained steadfast into its view that
23 the African Union was a relevant
24 authority and would, in fact, qualify
25 under the 60 percent rule.

1           And we also thought it was helpful
2           in that it showed that ICANN had a strong
3           preference that its independent panel not
4           engage directly with the African Union
5           and, instead, preferred -- prepared these
6           clarifying questions for other countries
7           that gave letters of support, despite the 8           fact that the Guidebook provided that the 9           independent panel could reach out and 10          verify and authenticate these letters of 11          support directly.

12           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   Who's Emily
13          Taylor?

14           MS. YATES:   Pardon me?

15           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   Who is 16          Emily Taylor?

17           MS. YATES:   She is an InterConnect
18          employee.   And I believe, if you're 19          looking at that slide, that she seems to 20          send an e-mail from a personal e-mail
21          address where you see the .eu.   But she's 22          an InterConnect employee.

23           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   Okay.   I
24          was just wondering who she was.

25           Okay.

1 MS. YATES: And as you can see on
2 Slide 49, conversations continue to take
3 place between ICANN and InterConnect on 4 these issues.

5 In InterConnect's May 30th, 2013
6 letter to ICANN, InterConnect explains
7 that the AU declarations submitted by
8 ZACR, the ones that Ms. Craven spoke 9 about, are not, in fact, letters of 10 support and, therefore, would not get
11 qualifying -- or clarifying questions.

12 However, InterConnect restated its
13 believe that the UN Economic Commission
14 for Africa should get a clarifying
15 question, as it is an intergovernmental
16 organization for the region and,
17 therefore, qualifies as a relevant public
18 authority.

19 And before any such clarifying
20 questions were issued, however, the NGPC
21 accepted the GAC objection advice against
22 DotConnectAfrica's application.

23 The very same day the NGPC's
24 decision was announced, Friday, June 7th,
25 ICANN directed InterConnect to cease work

1 on DotConnectAfrica Trust's application
2 and directed InterConnect to issue
3 clarifying questions for ZACR by the
4 following Tuesday in only four days' time
5 after months and months and months of 6 delay.

7 Without DotConnectAfrica Trust in
8 contention for .africa, ICANN Staff took 9 the remarkable step of actually drafting
10 an endorsement letter for the 11 African Union so they would have the 12 required documentation to pass the 13 Geographic Names review.

14 And as you can see in the following
15 slide, the AUC made only minor
16 modifications to the letter, copied it
17 onto its letterhead and submitted it to 18 ICANN's CEO, Fadi Chehadé, days later.

19 Now, ICANN's contention is that the 20 AUC did not follow the template
21 precisely, and it only used it as a guide
22 and would have done the same thing for 23 DotConnectAfrica Trust had it asked.
24 However, as you can see in Slide 54, the 25 critical portions of the letter were

1           drafted by ICANN.

2                     With DotConnectAfrica Trust's
3 application out of the way, ICANN now
4 rushed to pass ZACR's application. And,
5 unsurprisingly, InterConnect found that
6 the letter satisfied the Guidebook
7 criteria.

8                     Finally, ZACR passed the Geographic 9 Names review on July 9th and an initial 10 evaluation on July 12th in time to 11 announce their ICANN 44, Durban,
12 South Africa.

13                    And unless you have questions for 14 me, I will pass it back over to Mr. Ali,
15 who will address the Board's failure to 16 make an inquiry into all of these serious
17 issues.

18                    Thank you.

19                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Sorry. No
20 questions.

21                    MR. ALI: As I was listening to my 22 two colleagues, I was reminded of the 23 definition of "success." Success is when 24 you work with the best and replace
25 yourself. And I certainly feel that my

1 time for being replaced at the head of
2 the -- of the legal teams that I run is 3 soon coming.

4 So thank you both very much. And
5 congratulations on excellent
6 presentations.

7 What I would just like you to do for 8 a brief moment is to focus on the 9 language that we looked at in the 10 presentation that was made regarding
11 ICANN's advice with the input of the GAC
12 to the African Union Commission about the 13 prominent role that the African Union
14 could play through the GAC in impacting
15 the outcome of what is supposed to be a
16 fair and transparent process, where the 17 rules of the game should apply equally to 18 both -- to all applicants, but, here,
19 we're talking about two applicants.

20 Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

1 Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

2 So just to quickly recap everything
3 that we've looked at, October 2011, the 4 AUC writes to ICANN saying we would like
5 to have this gTLD for Africa, Afrique,
6 Afrikia, whatever may be the different
7 sort of languages, reserved for us.

8 ICANN says, No, we can't do that; but 9 ICANN says, You can use your position in 10 the GAC.

11 Why did it take five months from the 12 time of the letter that was sent in 13 October 2011 by the AUC for ICANN to 14 respond? What happened in those 15 five months?

16 We don't know for sure because we 17 have not -- everything was produced to 18 us, but we do know that at least one
19 thing happened, based on the evidence
20 that's before you, that there was at 21 least one, possibly more, consultations
22 between the ICANN Board and ICANN Staff
23 and the GAC.

24 What else could they have been
25 discussing other than the AUC's request?

1           Why should the ICANN Board consult
2           with the GAC when the GAC is supposed to 3           make an independent determination about
4           the position that the AUC will occupy
5           within the GAC?

6           But as we've seen, based on
7           unconverted evidence, that the GAC,
8           Ms. Dryden, gives the AUC special status,
9           which it otherwise is not entitled to 10          under the rules of the GAC.

11          Why was the AUC granted this special
12          consideration and given this special
13          status?

14          There are only two organizations
15          that have the special status in the GAC:
16          the European Commission and the AUC.

17          But you would expect that the 18          Governmental Advisory Committee would at 19          least do the due diligence that we have 20          in order to ascertain the difference
21          between the European Commission and the 22          AUC, and understand what the role is of 23          the AUC in respect of the nonvoting
24          members and have put them in that 25          category. But they were not.

1 All I can do is rely on the
2 evidence. I can't rely on supposition.

3 Now, 28th June 2012, the AUC joins
4 the GAC. And around this time,
5 June 2012, ZACR puts its application in.

6 July 2012, ICANN distributes the 7 Geographic Names Panel guidelines to 8 InterConnect Communications, which, as 9 you've heard, is the organization that 10 was the independent organization that is 11 to evaluate whether or not the criteria
12 are satisfied, the criteria that are in 13 the Applicant Guidebook.

14 These guidelines instruct
15 InterConnect not to apply the 16 endorsements of regional organizations
17 towards the 60 percent geographic
18 requirement that is in the Applicant
19 Guidebook.

20 So we're in -- right at the 21 beginning of the process. We're in
22 July 2012, and ICANN Staff tell
23 InterConnect that, No, you shouldn't
24 apply the -- the -- the endorsement of an 25 international organization as a proxy or

1 substitute for the 60 percent
2 requirement.

3 Please keep that in mind when you
4 think about the complete about-face that
5 is done following the so-called consensus
6 GAC advice and the approval by the NGPC
7 of the -- of the -- of the ZACR
8 application that led to the ICANN Staff
9 then writing the letter for the AUC.

10 Suddenly, this criterion doesn't
11 apply anymore. These rules of the game
12 don't apply anymore, the rules of the 13 game that the independent Geographic
14 Names Panel is saying should be applied
15 equally.

16 Let's just take a quick look back
17 again at what it is that on May 10th,
18 2013, the Geographic Names Panel writes
19 to ICANN and tells them. And, here, I'm 20 looking at Slide Number 47.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:

22 Forty-seven?

23 MR. ALI: Yes, sir.

24 Given that both applicants rely on
25 AU support, and the Guidebook foresees

1           that it is possible for a single country
2           or public authority -- that a single -- a
3           single country or authority may support
4           more than one application for the same
5           string, we strongly recommend, in the 6           interests of both applicants and of the 7           gTLD process, that the next step should 8           be to approach the AU and signal to the 9           applicants that depending on the outcome,
10          we may also seek CQs from the remaining
11          countries and authorities and attached
12          their respective applications.

13                 I hope that you will give advice
14                 your careful consideration. It is in 15                 conformance with the Guidebook, deals
16                 fairly and reasonably between the 17                 applicants without the risk of prejudice
18                 to one or the other, and is likely to 19                 avoid many months of delay and potential
20                 confusion.

21                 And what happens? Time and time
22                 again, ICANN says, No, do not do that.

23                 ICANN even questions the support
24                 that is granted or given by UNECA to 25                 DCA Trust. There is -- there is a

1 communication from ICANN to the
2 independent panel, Geographic Names
3 Panel, saying, Oh, why do you think that
4 UNECA is relevant?

5 Well, the Geographic Names Panel
6 thinks that UNECA is relevant, and they
7 say so time and time again. But time and 8 time again, they are told by ICANN, No.

9 So we have the situation now which
10 continues from June 2012 till June 2013
11 where ZACR's application does not have 12 the support -- and if you'd like us to 13 get more into what supports ZACR's
14 application, the application that -- that 15 the AUC has supported and that ICANN has 16 facilitated has -- we would be happy to 17 get into it, because ZACR's application
18 to date does not have the support that 19 was set forth in the Guidebook and the 20 criteria that ICANN was applying back in 21 July of 2012.

22 Had that criteria, the same criteria
23 that has been applied to ZACR's
24 application, been applied to DCA's
25 application, they would be on parity. They

1 would be in direct discussions.

2 But the way the game was played, the 3 way the referee allowed the game to be
4 played, the referee facilitated a tilting
5 of the playing field.

6 So other questions that we'd like you
7 to keep in mind as you listen to 8 Mr. LeVee's presentation, What happens at 9 this executive level meeting? They had an
10 executive level meeting -- by now, when you
11 look at all the correspondence -- and by 12 the way, we apologize for how small this is 13 in terms of its print.

14 But all of these documents are in the 15 binder that we've given you. So you can
16 follow those along, I think, much more
17 easily in terms of the printout.

18 So we have a -- we have a -- we have 19 documentation which clearly states that 20 there's a hot political debate going on 21 within ICANN, within the Geographic Names
22 Panel. It says -- it says very clearly
23 that there is a political struggle that's 24 going on, that these are politically
25 complicated applications. The

1 documentation says that.

2 So what happens?

3 On the 25th of October, there's an
4 executive level meeting at ICANN to discuss
5 .africa.

6 Do we know anything about what
7 happened at that executive level meeting?

8 No, because they haven't produced any
9 documentation to us, and they have no
10 witnesses to talk about what happened at 11 that executive level meeting.

12 But there is a meeting --

13 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: What's the 14 date again?

15 MR. ALI: It's 25th October 2012.

16 -- what they have at that executive
17 level meeting, what we know is that they
18 have input from the Geographic Names
19 Panel. And we have a subsequent set of 20 communications whereby all sorts of 21 questions are being raised as a result of 22 this executive level meeting with 23 reference to DCA's application, but the 24 same questions aren't being raised with 25 respect to -- to -- to -- to the AUC's

1 application.

2 Well, what happens a month later?

3 Well, you've seen that on 20th of 4 November 2012, the AUC, using its
5 position on the GAC, the special position
6 that's been given to it on the GAC with 7 the facilitation of ICANN, it use its
8 Early Warning notices.

9 Now --

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: AUC does?

11 MR. ALI: The AUC --

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

13 MR. ALI: -- issues its Early
14 Warning notice --

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

16 MR. ALI: -- and some other
17 governments or part of it issue these 18 Early Warning notices all pretty much in 19 the same language.

20 -- now, would it be that difficult
21 to conclude, again, in the absence of 22 documentation from the other side, that
23 if ICANN had guided the AUC as to how it
24 could participate in the process through
25 the GAC -- and appreciating that the AUC,

1 so far, has not been a participant in the
2 fairly complicated world of ICANN
3 governments -- that the AUC might, in 4 fact, have sought ICANN's help in
5 crafting the Early Warning advice.

6 Is that so difficult? They
7 ultimately helped them draft the letter
8 that they needed to get the approval,
9 which they shoehorned, bulldozed.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I think it
11 was a form that was created by ICANN, but 12 people just started using it.

13 MR. ALI: The form is there. The 14 contents -- the contents of the Early
15 Warning are something that was created.
16 The contents are -- the form, maybe. The 17 contents are very much specific to the 18 DCA application, applicant and judge.
19 That's one in the same time --

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

21 MR. ALI: -- that is just wrong.

22 Anyway. So now we have the 23 executive meeting. A month later, we
24 have the -- we have these Early Warning
25 notices, which, as we've seen, do not fit

1 the criteria of Early Warning notice,
2 but, nonetheless, they are provided.

3 What we'd also like you to
4 appreciate is that starting in March
5 of -- starting in July of 2012 and going
6 through to March or April of 2013, there
7 is this dialogue that was very
8 interesting and which Ms. Craven --
9 Ms. Yates took you through, but we would 10 invite you to look at the documentation
11 in some detail, where the GNP is saying,
12 Let us do our job. Please let us apply
13 the Applicant Guidebook. Let us do what
14 we need to do. And ICANN is saying, No.

15 The GNP says, We need to go to the 16 AU and ask. ICANN says, No. Why? What 17 is it that is worrying ICANN so much if
18 the GNP is to contact the AU or UNECA?

19 They even questioned UNECA. No, no,
20 you don't need to go back to them.

21 One wonders.

25

But, obviously, we don't know --

1           they haven't provided us with the
2           information that we requested.  And,
3           obviously, here, again, as we will make 4           our submissions tomorrow, there is a very
5           well-established principle in 6           international procedure of the drawing of 7           adverse inferences.  And we believe that 8           the absence of testimonial evidence or 9           documentary evidence on the part of ICANN
10          with respect to these points, adverse
11          inferences are entirely appropriate.

12                 So I'm also troubled by the fact
13          that within the context of what were 14          clearly two red flag applications, two 15          applications that were -- that were 16          consuming a lot of resources of the GNP,
17          as the documentation says, and two 18          applications that clearly were the 19          subject of significant internal 20          discussion, the NGPC simply accepts the 21          GAC advice.

22                 Perhaps the right course for the 23          NGPC would have been to let an
24          independent third-party decision-maker
25          decide whether or not the criteria

1 satisfied -- they clearly didn't want to
2 let the GNP, the Geographic Names Panel,
3 do that.

4 They could have asked -- they could
5 have retained an independent expert if
6 they didn't think the GNP was qualified,
7 for some reason, to do this. But they 8 didn't do that.

9 They might even have dug in further
10 themselves, but there's no evidence that 11 they did that.

12 They summarily accepted the GAC
13 advice, and they summarily rejected all
14 the points that were made by DCA Trust as 15 to why the GAC advice should not have 16 been accepted.

17 At the end of the day, what ends up
18 happening following the -- the GAC advice
19 and the reconsideration requests and what
20 have you -- by the way, just going back
21 to this point of deference, we'd like you
22 to take a look at one of our slides
23 whereby -- which shows you what happens
24 within the ICANN process.

25 GAC advice, it's accepted by the

1 NGPC. The NGPC, you then have a request
2 for reconsideration to the Board
3 Governance Committee. The Board
4 Governance Committee accepts what the
5 NGPC has -- has decided, and it goes back
6 to the NGPC from the Board so that the 7 NGPC can accept the recommendation of the 8 BGC with respect to its original
9 decision.

10 It seems somewhat incestuous,
11 particularly when you compare who the 12 individuals are that are on the NGPC and 13 the BGC.

14 I implore you, within a system of 15 control in governance that is reflected 16 up on the screen, the review cannot be
17 deferential, particularly in a forum
18 which is the only forum that is 19 independent and impartial that an
20 applicant has to protect its rights. It
21 cannot be deferential.

22 Anyway. So the last question I'd 23 leave you with is the following: What is 24 it that justifies the complete about-face
25 that takes place in June of 2013

1 following the so-called consensus GAC
2 advice that warrants the application of
3 criteria that, only 12 months earlier,
4 ICANN has said, This does not satisfy the
5 requirement of the Applicant Guidebook?

6 If you look at what they say in June
7 of 2012 and you track through the 8 correspondence that took place with the 9 Geographic Names Panel and you arrive at 10 June 7th, 2013, when ICANN Staff, at the 11 direction of the Board, tells the GNP,
12 You can stop work, and the GNP, of 13 course, finally folds its arms and says,
14 Well, what are we to do? We tried
15 everything. We tried to be independent.
16 We tried to apply the Applicant
17 Guidebook. We tried to give you our 18 objections. We told you what would be 19 fair and equitable. We told you what 20 would be transparent. We told you a lot
21 of things.

22 And at the end of the day, they fold
23 their arms and say, Okay, we're doing
24 what you want us to do. We're going to 25 approve this letter that you, ICANN,

1           drafted for the AUC.

2                   And there is language in these
3 e-mails where Mark McFadden throws up his 4 arms and says, Well, if Sophia wants to 5 go to an IRP, good luck to her.

6                   And that's why we're here.

7                   We think that the documentation is
8 clear. We think the evidence supports
9 every one of the points that we have 10 made. We think that it speaks for 11 itself.

12                   It is clear to us that from the very 13 get-go, ICANN wanted to help the AUC to 14 achieve an outcome that they couldn't
15 otherwise, using a process that was not 16 designed to give the AUC what it was --
17 what it wanted.

18                   So AUC wanted to use one process.
19 ICANN says, You can't use that process.
20 The AUC is put into another process.
21 ICANN, hand in glove with the AUC, ensure
22 that DCA doesn't have a fair shot.

23                   This, we submit, based on the 24 evidence, is an absolute violation of 25 ICANN's Articles, Bylaws and the

1 Applicant Guidebook.

2 I'm happy to answer any questions.

3 We've presented a lot to you. We do
4 hope you look at the documentation as you
5 think about tomorrow. But I can answer
6 questions now or answer them tomorrow in 7 the course of our closing.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You didn't
9 mention anything about the conflict --
10 the alleged conflict of the Board members
11 of ICANN.

12 Is that something that's not
13 important now?

14 MR. ALI: Well, we believe it is 15 important, Judge Cahill. Within the 16 context of the time we had, which I know
17 we've exceeded already, we had to make 18 certain choices of what we thought was 19 going to be the most significant.

20 But that's not to say that we don't
21 think -- again, if one looks at -- passes
22 through all the individuals who are
23 involved, when you look at the AUC
24 players who were involved and the players
25 who were involved with ZACR, clearly,

1 conflicts of interest.

2 When you look at who is on the NGPC
3 and the Board Governance Committee,
4 clearly a conflict.

5 If you look at the fact that one of 6 the individuals who had conflict of 7 interest -- who's charged with having a
8 conflict of interest is actually the 9 person who, at the NGPC meeting, is the 10 individual who directs the discussion
11 associated with .africa or DCA's
12 application, and that individual has 13 financial or business or advisory
14 interests in support of another
15 applicant, more reason that just doesn't
16 seem right to me.

17 A prudent person within the context
18 of such highly politicized -- or such a
19 highly politicized debate with two 20 applicants, who are so legitimate in 21 their rights within the forum in which 22 they're playing, prudence would counsel
23 that you recuse yourself. That didn't
24 happen.

25 So we hate that -- again, there's so

1 many different ways you can find in our
2 favor --

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: One other
4 thing -- I hate to take all this time,
5 but are there 16 voting members on the 6 ICANN Board, and two of these are the 7 ones that you're -- that you're concerned
8 about?

9 MR. ALI: I believe so.

10 Is that correct?

11 (Off-the-record conference with 12 colleagues.)

13 MR. ALI: Yes.

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

15 Thanks.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Any questions?

17 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: No.

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Sorry.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: That's all right.

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm very 21 curious.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

23 MR. ALI: Thank you.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: You have,
25 according to my -- we'll give you the

1 same amount of time, Mr. LeVee.

2 MR. LEVEE: I won't need as much.

3 So what I would suggest is we take a
4 five-minute break. That way we can swap
5 out the laptop, whichever is operating
6 the monitors. And when we come back,
7 I'll get going.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: I just have a
9 question for you in terms of the 10 witnesses that you have.

11 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: We had understood
13 that there was some time constraint in 14 terms of their availability. If that's 15 no longer an issue, then --

16 MR. LEVEE: We had asked for 17 Mr. Chalaby to testify first, because he 18 does need to leave earlier. But he'll 19 have ample time after lunch to do his 20 testimony.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Could we
22 have an idea of when he needs to leave?

23 MR. LEVEE: Let me consult with him,
24 and I will let you know.

25 You had estimated 90 minutes. And

1 even if it goes two hours -- which,
2 candidly, particularly since the Claimant
3 didn't even raise the issue in the 4 opening, Mr. Chalaby will answer your 5 questions -- I'd be stunned if we even
6 took the 90 minutes --

7 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Don't bet on
8 anything.

9 MR. LEVEE: Yes, a good point.

10 But in any case, he will not have a
11 difficulty. His schedule was a little
12 bit more complicated than Ms. Dryden's.
13 That's why we asked Ms. Dryden to go
14 second.

15 Please don't be concerned. He'll be
16 here as long as you need him.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: That's fine.
18 Thank you.

19 MR. LEVEE: Why don't we adjourn for 20 a -- why don't we take 10 minutes?

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Fifteen.

22 MR. LEVEE: Going once.

23 MR. ALI: Thank you.

24 - - -

25 (Whereupon, a brief recess was taken

1 from 10:46 a.m. to 11:02 a.m.)

2 - - -

3 - - -

4 OPENING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT
5 INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES AND NUMBERS

6 - - -

7 MR. LEVEE: Members of the Panel,
8 thank you this morning. And on behalf of 9 ICANN, let me share in the welcome
10 officially this morning to these 11 Independent Review Proceedings.

12 We're very much looking forward to 13 today and tomorrow and pleased that we
14 have reached the merits of this claim
15 after what has definitely been a longer
16 road than I think most of us would have 17 anticipated.

18 Before I begin, let me pause very 19 briefly to discuss ICANN's participation
20 in today's hearing.

21 As you know, ICANN argued to the 22 three of you that the Bylaws prohibit
23 live testimony during the final argument
24 in an IRP hearing. This Panel ruled
25 otherwise. And so ICANN has brought its

1 two Declarants here today so that they
2 may answer questions from the Panel and
3 from the parties.

4 Most importantly, ICANN never wanted
5 to leave the impression that we were
6 concerned that our witnesses would not
7 back up their statements in spades, as
8 they will do this afternoon.

9 So we are confident that at the 10 close of this proceeding, the Panel will 11 determine that ICANN's Board acted fully
12 consistent with its Bylaws, its Articles
13 and the Applicant Guidebook in 14 conjunction with DCA's application for
15 .africa.

16 Let me turn now to the merits.

17 ICANN was incorporated in 1998 as a
18 not-for-profit benefit -- public benefit
19 corporation in California. Its focus on 20 the -- in the early years was on 21 literally achieving legitimacy and in 22 taking some small steps to creating
23 competition within the domain name
24 system.

25 In terms of competition, the first

1           thing that ICANN did was to increase the
2           number of Internet registrars. These are
3           the companies that actually sell domain
4           names subscriptions to you and me. And 5           ICANN was incredibly successful in this
6           regard, accrediting over -- literally
7           over hundreds of new registrars in the 8           course of just a few years.

9           The introduction of that competition
10          caused the price of domain name
11          registrations to plummet from $35 for a
12          name for a year back in 1998 to $10 or 13          even less -- sometimes you can get a name
14          now for free -- saving consumers
15          literally hundreds of millions of 16          dollars.

17          ICANN decided to proceed much more
18          slowly with respect to top-level
19          domains -- new top-level domains, such as 20          the program that brings us here today,
21          because of concerns that new TLDs could 22          affect the security or the stability of 23          the Internet.

24          And so ICANN approved seven new TLDs
25          in the year 2000, including .info and

1 .name, TLDs that are not all that widely
2 used, candidly, and then a few more in
3 the year 2004. But these were basically
4 test cases to make sure that a broader
5 expansion would not cause any problems.

6 Now, ICANN has a number of
7 supporting organizations that develop
8 policy for ICANN. One of them is known
9 as the Generic Names Supporting
10 Organization, or GNSO. And the GNSO is 11 responsible for formulating policy for 12 the expansion of the name space, the 13 registry space.

14 In 2007, after years of study and
15 public comment, the GNSO recommended that 16 ICANN permit a substantial expansion in 17 the number of TLDs, so long as there were 18 carefully crafted rules that accompanied 19 that expansion.

20 And in 2011, ICANN's Board approved
21 what we refer to as the "New gTLD
22 Program" and that, pursuant to which,
23 ICANN agreed to accept an unlimited
24 number of applications.

25 Now, concurrently, beginning in

1           2008, ICANN was developing what you've
2           heard referred to frequently as the
3           "Guidebook," or the "New gTLD Application 4           Guidebook." And several drafts of the 5           Guidebook were published for public
6           comment, and ICANN received thousands and 7           thousands of comments.

8           The Guidebook was crafted consistent
9           with ICANN's Bylaws, and I want to point
10          out that DotConnectAfrica has never 11          alleged otherwise.

12          Ultimately, ICANN announced that it
13          would accept applications for new gTLDs
14          beginning in January of 2012.

15          Now, I know that you have seen the 16          Guidebook in an electronic form, but I
17          don't know if you've actually seen it
18          printed out. Maybe you have. Maybe
19          you've printed it yourself --

20                 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No.

21                 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Yes.

22                 MR. LEVEE: It's a big thing. I
23          brought it today just to give you a
24          sense --

25                 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: And the

1 language is terrible, Mr. LeVee.

2 MR. LEVEE: Yes, it is.

3 I carry it with me. I have it on
4 every laptop I've ever used, and download
5 it on every computer. And it is thick.

6 But it is the result of literally
7 tens of thousands of hours not only of 8 ICANN, but of members of the community.
9 And we heard this morning Ms. Bekele was 10 involved in some fashion in the drafting.
11 I don't know that, but I don't question
12 it.

13 Many, many hundreds of people were 14 involved, and it became, literally, the 15 Bible of the New gTLD Program. And in 16 it, ICANN tried to anticipate as many
17 scenarios as possible.

18 The Guidebook is divided into six
19 modules, as you probably notice,
20 addressing the application process, how 21 the applications would be evaluated from 22 various perspectives, technical,
23 financial and otherwise, methods of 24 objecting to applications and a number of 25 other features.

1           Now, various industry insiders
2 predicted that ICANN would receive maybe
3 a few hundred, maybe even several hundred
4 applications for new gTLDs. I can tell
5 you confidently that no one I know
6 predicted that ICANN would receive 1,930
7 applications, which was, in fact, the 8 final tally.

9           Those applications involved
10 approximately 1,400 separate gTLD
11 strings. And as of May 1, the most 12 recent date I could capture, over 900 new 13 gTLD registry agreements had been signed,
14 and most of those gTLDs are now live on
15 the Internet.

16           So you can go get an .xyz domain or 17 a dot -- you know,
18 you-can-pick-your-name-practically
19 domain, to the extent they are not closed
20 or that you're not a member of the 21 community that they represent.

22           So I wanted to be clear, ICANN has 23 already achieved the goal of increasing
24 competition.

25           We heard a little bit in the opening

1 statement about anticompetitive conduct.
2 I don't know that the core values refer
3 to anticompetitive conduct within a
4 particular gTLD string.

5 The mission of ICANN was to increase
6 competition in the registry space. And 7 it has undoubtedly accomplished that.

8 Now, ICANN anticipated that certain
9 types of gTLD applications would require 10 special treatment for various sorts of 11 reasons. I'll give you two examples.

12 ICANN anticipated that it would
13 receive applications for strings that, in 14 some fashion, related to trademarked
15 names. The trademark community was very
16 concerned about that, so ICANN
17 established a number of features in the 18 Guidebook to allow persons and entities
19 all over the world to attempt to protect
20 their intellectual property, including a
21 trademark clearinghouse.

22 Similarly, ICANN anticipated that
23 certain types of communities that are not
24 geographic communities but, instead,
25 communities of persons who might want to

1 operate gTLD strings would come together.
2 So ICANN has already approved two
3 communities off the top of my head. One
4 is .radio and one is .osaka for citizens
5 in Japan.

6 And ICANN created a process whereby
7 an applicant could seek community
8 treatment for its application, and a
9 third-party vendor would evaluate whether 10 that applicant should, in fact, be 11 permitted to operate a string on 12 behalf -- for the benefit of that
13 community.

14 Obviously, we have a specific
15 feature that's relevant here, which is 16 that the Guidebook contemplated that 17 applicants might apply for strings that 18 represented the specific geographic -- a
19 specific geographic community, such as 20 the name of a continent. And the 21 Guidebook contains a number of provisions
22 addressing those strings, all located in 23 Module 2.

24 The most important of those
25 provisions for this proceeding is

1 Section 2.2.1.4.2 -- sorry that it's so
2 long -- and that section, in and of
3 itself, covers several pages.

4 So what I've put in the slide is the 5 portion that I wanted to focus your 6 attention to.

7 It says, In the case of an
8 application for a string appearing on 9 either of the lists above -- and that 10 includes .africa -- documentation of 11 support will be required from at least 12 60 percent of the respective national
13 governments in the region -- and then
14 this is also important, and no one's
15 really focused on this in the briefs --
16 there may be no more than one written
17 statement of objection to the application
18 from relevant governments in the region
19 and/or public authorities associated with 20 the continent or the region.

21 Importantly, the applicant was
22 supposed to demonstrate that requisite
23 support in the application itself. And 24 we'll talk about that in a minute.

25 Now, there was great logic in

1           adopting this provision. If an entity
2           was going to operate a gTLD string not
3           only for the benefit of a particular
4           community, but it actually took the name
5           of that community, it obviously was 6           critically important that the applicant
7           have support from the community.

8           So ICANN decided that the support
9           would have to be measured as 60 percent
10          of the countries in that region in order
11          to use the name of that region as the 12          string.

13          Now, let me pause to note what the 14          Guidebook does not address. The 15          Guidebook does not say that governments
16          or other governmental authorities in a
17          particular region cannot organize to 18          apply for a TLD using that region's name.

19          Quite to the contrary, the Guidebook
20          permits any entity or any government to 21          apply to operate a gTLD string that uses 22          the name of a specific region of the 23          world or to select a company to operate
24          that string on its behalf.

25          So it is very important to

1 understand that the Guidebook did not
2 prevent the countries of Africa, much
3 less the AUC, from determining that they
4 wanted to operate a TLD and that they
5 wanted to select a particular registry to
6 do so.

7 The Guidebook encourages this
8 result, because such an application would 9 demonstrate that the countries of the 10 region truly support the applicant. And 11 that would be in the public interest.

12 This is critically important
13 throughout this whole proceeding, because
14 one of the primary objections that DCA
15 has asserted to the entire process dating
16 back to 2012 is that the very decision by 17 the African Union Commission to select
18 ZACR and to sponsor ZACR's application
19 for .africa not only was inappropriate,
20 but should have disqualified the AUC from 21 being part of the process at all.

22 Indeed -- and we'll look at a
23 document in a moment -- DCA asked
24 ICANN -- or argued that the AUC's role in 25 conjunction with ZACR's application

1           should have caused ICANN to eliminate the
2           requirement in the Guidebook that an
3           applicant have the support of 60 percent
4           of the governments in the region. But 5           DCA's contentions were exactly the 6           opposite of what ICANN had developed in
7           the Guidebook.

8                     ICANN welcomed the support of 9           governments and governmental
10          organizations because the Guidebook
11          required that support.

12                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: One of the 13          issues is there's no definition of 14          African community.

15                    MR. LEVEE: And we'll come to that,
16          definitely.

17                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: All right.

18                    MR. LEVEE: Now, it's also important
19          to note that the Guidebook did not 20          restrict the ability of a country to 21          support more than one application. It
22          certainly could have happened that two 23          competing applications each had the 24          support of the nations in that region.
25          It's not what happened here, but it could

1 have happened.

2 And, finally, the Guidebook
3 specifically permitted -- I've quoted in 4 the slide -- specifically permitted a
5 government to endorse an applicant and
6 then change its mind and either support
7 no applicant or support a different
8 applicant. And that is what happened
9 here.

10 DCA --

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What does
12 "nonobjection" mean in this?

13 MR. LEVEE: What does?

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You can
15 change your mind if the operator's
16 deviated from conditions or nonobjection.

17 What does that mean? The last word.

18 Never mind. It's not that
19 important.

20 MR. LEVEE: Nonobjection might 21 simply be a statement that they don't
22 object, as opposed to a statement that 23 they specifically endorse. That's how I
24 interpret it.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. Your

1 point is you can change your mind?

2 MR. LEVEE: Correct.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

4 MR. LEVEE: Now, the Panel has also,
5 obviously, heard a lot about the GAC.
6 And I won't give all of the background,
7 but the Governmental Advisory Committee
8 is the committee where governments across
9 the world are permitted and able to 10 participate in the ICANN process. And
11 both the Guidebook and the Bylaws address
12 the GAC's participation in some detail.

13 So starting with the Guidebook,
14 Section 3.1 of the Guidebook permits GAC
15 members to raise concerns about any
16 application to the GAC. And the GAC, as 17 a whole, would consider concerns raised
18 by GAC members and agree on GAC advice to 19 forward to the ICANN Board of Directors.

20 Mr. Ali put up a slide showing the 21 various types of advice, but there's only
22 one type that is at issue here, which is 23 the first, that the GAC advises ICANN
24 that it is the consensus of the GAC that 25 a particular application should not

1 proceed.

2 And this next sentence is very
3 important, not mentioned in the opening
4 of the DCA: This will create a strong
5 presumption for the ICANN Board that the 6 application should not be approved.

7 In addition, Guidebook Section 3.1
8 says, ICANN will consider the GAC advice
9 on new gTLDs as soon as practicable. The 10 Board may -- and I've highlighted "may,"
11 and we'll come back to that in a
12 minute -- consult with independent
13 experts, such as those designated to hear
14 objections, in cases where the issues
15 raised in the GAC advice are pertinent to 16 one of the subject matter areas of the 17 objection procedures.

18 Now, all of this work in the 19 Guidebook relating to the GAC is actually 20 derived from -- directly out of the 21 Bylaws. What I've quoted here on Slide 8
22 is Article XI, Section 2, Paragraph 1(j),
23 which says, The advice of the 24 Governmental Advisory Committee on public
25 policy matters shall be duly taken into

1 account, both in the formulation and
2 adoption of policies.

3 And the rest of the quote goes on to
4 say what happens if the Board decides not
5 to act consistent with the GAC advice,
6 although that's not what happened here.

7 So I wanted to provide my own view
8 of the background in mind, so let me turn
9 now to DCA's claims.

10 Let me emphasize that the entire
11 focus of my presentation today and the 12 entire focus of my closing tomorrow will
13 be to explain to you that ICANN's conduct
14 and the conduct in particular of the 15 ICANN Board was entirely consistent with 16 the Articles and the Bylaws.

17 We'll discuss during closing
18 tomorrow exactly what the Panel's mandate
19 is. And I will respond tomorrow to this 20 issue of the standard of review. But I
21 think it's important to remember,
22 irrespective of the standard of review,
23 is that the purpose, and only purpose, of 24 an independent review proceeding is to 25 test whether the conduct of the Board was

1 consistent with the Articles and the
2 Bylaws. We believe it was.

3 And I'll put all sorts of slides up
4 tomorrow talking about the mandate of the 5 Panel. And I will also, tomorrow, put
6 before you each and every one of DCA's
7 allegations from both of its briefs as to 8 how DCA alleges that the Board violated
9 its Articles and Bylaws. And we'll go
10 through those one by one, and I'll 11 explain how the evidence is to the 12 contrary.

13 I thought I would focus my opening
14 actually on the facts --

15 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Can I
16 interrupt you?

17 MR. LEVEE: Of course.

18 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Could you
19 explain to the Panel what is exactly the 20 role of ICANN? And if we -- if we 21 take -- I think it was alluded to in the 22 opening of -- of DCA, if we take the 23 example of the UN, let's imagine that
24 ICANN is for the Internet what the UN is 25 for peace and security, just for the sake

1 of discussion.

2 MR. LEVEE: Fine.

3 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Is ICANN the
4 general assembly, the security council or
5 the Secretary General of the UN?

6 MR. LEVEE: ICANN is none of those.
7 And, actually, the parallel to the
8 United Nations is not apt in ICANN's
9 mind. And let me flesh that out.

10 Mr. Ali referred to ICANN as a
11 "regulator." Regulators actually have 12 specific authority granted to them. A
13 government or people can get together and 14 designate people as a regulator.

15 ICANN is not a regulator. It
16 doesn't have laws. It doesn't even have
17 rules. It has Bylaws --

18 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: It does have 19 a Bible.

20 MR. LEVEE: It does have a Bible,
21 but ICANN is based -- I view ICANN as an
22 administrator. Its relationships are 23 governed by contract.

24 This, interestingly enough, is
25 simply a contract. The applicant

1 promises to pay money and to conduct
2 itself in a certain way and to submit
3 certain materials. And in response,
4 ICANN promises to evaluate the
5 application pursuant to the Bible and 6 then to give an answer. ICANN has 7 reserved rights; the applicant has 8 reserved rights.

9 The way that ICANN is structured is 10 very much different from the United 11 Nations. ICANN is what they like to 12 refer to as a "bottoms-up organization."
13 The genesis of policy that ICANN
14 ultimately adopts is supposed to bubble
15 up from all of its supporting
16 organizations.

17 We have the GNSO, which we already
18 referred to; there's the address
19 supporting organization; there are 20 various other supporting organizations
21 that deal with the names and the numbers,
22 and they formulate policy.

23 The policy then gurgles up, and
24 ICANN has a staff. It has a general
25 counsel's office, it has people who are

1 involved in processing the applications.
2 Even before the GNSO program -- or the
3 gTLD program, ICANN had people who
4 contracted with the registrars that I
5 referred to before, people who
6 investigated when the registrars might
7 not be compliant with their contracts.
8 ICANN has -- and then, of course, ICANN
9 has the Governmental Advisory Committee,
10 which are representatives of government
11 that meet separately with the GAC.

12 ICANN does not control the GAC.

13 Ms. Dryden, who you will hear from 14 later this afternoon, was eager to 15 clarify a lot of the statements that you
16 heard in the opening about what the GAC
17 actually does and the nature of their 18 meetings and so forth. You'll hear from 19 her and have a chance to evaluate her
20 testimony.

21 But ICANN is different than any
22 other organization I'm aware of, and 23 it -- it specifically did not want to 24 organize akin to the United Nations. It
25 certainly did not want to be controlled

1 by governments.

2 So that's why ICANN's relationship
3 with the Governmental Advisory
4 Committee --

5 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: That is
6 clear.

7 MR. LEVEE: -- is a little bit of a
8 give-and-take relationship.

9 Have I helped?

10 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Not
11 entirely, but if -- we'll come back
12 tomorrow. But I think it's important
13 that we do understand, because there is a
14 claim, if I understand correctly, from 15 the DCA that ICANN should have remained
16 neutral.

17 So in order to assess that argument,
18 I, for one -- we have not discussed that 19 in the Panel, but I, for one, need to 20 understand what is -- where does that
21 claim of neutrality come and, you know,
22 how it plays out in the ICANN's
23 responsibilities, if you will.

24 MR. LEVEE: I think Mr. Ali would 25 tell you that the Bylaws require ICANN to

1 be procedurally open, to be transparent.
2 And perhaps he is reading into the Bylaws
3 the claim of neutrality.

4 As I develop the facts, I'm going to 5 try to make it pretty clear that ICANN
6 was neutral in this matter consistent
7 with the Guidebook. ICANN had no
8 obligation to ignore the provisions of 9 the Guidebook as applied to what happened
10 here.

11 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: So you don't
12 contest that ICANN must be neutral
13 according to the Guidebook?

14 MR. LEVEE: I think that -- to 15 answer the question, I think that ICANN
16 tries to be neutral. I don't know that 17 ICANN has some legal obligation to be
18 neutral.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Her analogy
20 with the United Nations -- my colleague's
21 analogy, Secretary Generals, I'm not as 22 familiar as she is with it, but everybody
23 is supposed to treat everybody the same
24 way --

25 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- now,
2 you're telling me ICANN -- and maybe you
3 are -- that the Bylaws do not require
4 ICANN to treat all applicants the same
5 way?

6 MR. LEVEE: I'm telling you that
7 ICANN did do everything it could to treat
8 applicants fairly and neutrally in the 9 same way, however --

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That wasn't
11 my question.

12 MR. LEVEE: Okay. You're using the 13 word "neutral." The only problem I have 14 with the word is that the Guidebook
15 creates procedures that might alter the 16 neutrality.

17 So, for example, if an applicant has 18 support of the representatives of a
19 continent for a particular name and
20 another applicant does not have support,
21 ICANN isn't going to treat those the
22 same. ICANN is going to --

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's
24 fine. Yeah.

25 MR. LEVEE: Okay. But in terms of

1 proceeding on a day-to-day basis,
2 absolutely, ICANN does everything it can
3 to be neutral.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: Just one follow-up
5 from me.

6 MR. LEVEE: Sure.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: I would admit that
8 it is perhaps a loaded question.

9 If ICANN is an administrator, as 10 you're saying it is, who does ICANN
11 answer to?

12 MR. LEVEE: Well, it's a complicated
13 question.

14 As of this moment, on certain
15 matters relating to what is referred to 16 as the IANA function, which involves 17 certain types of registrations, the 18 United States Government has a
19 supervisory role vis-a-vis ICANN.

20 There is, literally as we speak, a
21 proposal from the Obama administration to 22 have the U.S. Government relinquish that 23 role, and it has become politicized
24 within the United States and elsewhere.

25 I don't know what the outcome will

1 be. It's not relevant here, but -- so,
2 in some senses, ICANN has a relationship
3 with the United States Government.

4 Otherwise, ICANN's obligation is to the 5 members of the Internet community, and
6 its Board is selected from among those
7 members.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: If you were to 9 assume for a moment that -- on a
10 contractual basis, from a political
11 perspective, that's fine, but from a
12 contractual perspective, if, in fact, the 13 relationship of ICANN is with its 14 constituents, as you've said, on a
15 contractual basis --

16 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- if there is an 18 issue with ICANN, then who addresses that
19 issue? In other words, who is ICANN
20 answering to when an issue comes up?

21 MR. LEVEE: It really depends on the 22 nature of the issue.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: Well, the courts
24 are, I guess, from what I understood, no
25 longer there, because the applicants are

1           asked to waive that right.

2                     If that's the case, then where do
3           constituents go to?

4                     MR. LEVEE:  So if you are an 5           applicant, you have signed the 6           Applicant Guidebook and, yes, you have
7           waived your right to sue ICANN.  And you
8           have agreed that your redress is through 9           the ICANN accountability measures, which 10          include reconsideration and independent
11          review.

12                    So, thus, we are here --

13                    PRESIDENT BARIN:  So here.

14                    MR. LEVEE:  -- if you are not an 15          applicant, you have not signed away your 16          right to sue ICANN.  And I -- I can tell
17          you that I represented ICANN in many U.S.
18          Court proceedings.

19                    So ICANN is subject to suit on 20          many -- in many areas, and it just 21          depends who you are.

22                    If you are a member of the ICANN
23          community and you have an issue, you can 24          submit a public comment; you can send 25          letters; you can attend meetings.  There

1 are multiple ways of being involved in
2 the ICANN process.

3 For those who are actively involved,
4 it is extraordinarily time-consuming.
5 The Board's meetings, which are three
6 times a year, take place over a two-week
7 period. It's not just a day. They 8 literally -- the meetings, themselves,
9 last two weeks.

10 So there's a number of different
11 opportunities for people to be heard.

12 If you're asking about the actual 13 ability to initiate a legal process, if 14 you're an applicant, you can't sue; but 15 if you're not an applicant, you can.

16 If you are a registry or a
17 registrar, you have signed a contract
18 that provides for an arbitration clause.

19 So it really depends on the nature
20 of your participation.

21 Is that helpful?

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah.

23 MR. LEVEE: Okay.

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I mean -- I
25 forgot what I really wanted to ask here.

1           Other than on the merits, right,
2           because the example you gave me is maybe
3           one application doesn't meet the 4           60 percent or something like that --

5           MR. LEVEE: Yeah.

6           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- other
7           than on the merits, is ICANN's
8           responsibility to start off treating
9           everyone the same in a neutral way?

10          MR. LEVEE: Yes, yes.

11          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Then it
12          looks at each application on its merits?

13          MR. LEVEE: Correct.

14          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So what --
15          okay. All right.

16          MR. LEVEE: Yeah. If I didn't
17          clarify that previously, I apologize.

18          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No. No.
19          Maybe I just didn't hear you right --

20          MR. LEVEE: Yeah.

21          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- but it
22          starts off equal, and then, in the whole
23          process, it treats everybody equally
24          until sometime on the merits, one of the 25          applications becomes better or worse than

1 the other?

2 MR. LEVEE: Pursuant to the terms of
3 the Guidebook --

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

5 MR. LEVEE: -- yes.

6 Okay. Now, what I have done to
7 address DCA's claims is to lay out what I
8 believe are the five fundamental 9 assumptions that DCA has made. And when 10 you look at each of those assumptions and 11 conclude that they are wrong factually,
12 which I will demonstrate, then you can
13 conclude that all of DCA's claims fail.

14 So the first assumption we've
15 already addressed a bit. That is that
16 the AUC's involvement in an application
17 for .africa should have either
18 disqualified that application or at least
19 caused ICANN to eliminate the Guidebook
20 requirement that each application for a
21 geographic name have the support of 22 60 percent of the countries in that
23 region.

24 And one of the things I wanted to 25 point out -- these are based on the

1 exact -- on the specific exhibits. So in
2 your binders, I gave you the slides that
3 I'm using. And behind those slides are 4 the actual exhibits that are referenced
5 in the slides.

6 And so, for example, if you look at
7 Exhibit C-35, this is the response by DCA
8 to the Early Warning advice -- by the 9 way, that advice was issued by 17
10 different organizations or countries.
11 The AUC issued one, but 16 other
12 countries issued that advice.

13 And if you look at -- I highlighted
14 on Page 5 -- DCA's position is that the 15 endorsement issue should no longer be
16 considered as relevant in the evaluation
17 of the .africa gTLD as a geographic
18 string. We urge the ICANN Board to waive
19 this requirement because of the confusing
20 role that was played by the 21 African Union.

22 She goes on, It's created huge
23 problems of legitimacy. And it
24 concludes, It is our view that the final
25 decision by ICANN regarding the

1           delegation of the .africa string should
2           now only be based on the evaluated
3           technical, operational and financial 4           criteria, and not on the issue of 5           endorsement, which has been entirely
6           politicized.

7           The point here is that DCA has been
8           arguing throughout that the Guidebook
9           should be changed for its benefit, not 10          enforced for the benefit of all. They 11          were the ones that wanted to be treated
12          differently.

13          In addition, we heard this
14          morning -- well, actually, why don't we 15          do it this way: Again, nothing in the 16          Guidebook prohibited the AUC, or country
17          or any group of countries) from applying
18          for, or sponsoring, a gTLD application
19          for .africa.

20          The AUC's role was not improper and 21          certainly was not a basis for ICANN to 22          eliminate the Guidebook requirement.

23          Inasmuch as no applicant could
24          prevail without the 60 percent approval,
25          the AUC's support for an application was

1 extremely valuable (as DCA knew) because 2 AUC was representative of the entire
3 continent of the Africa.

4 Also, I mentioned this before --

5 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Could you
6 tell us and point out for us to any other
7 example where an applicant or somebody
8 interest -- directly interested in 9 becoming an applicant, directly or 10 indirectly, is, at the same time, part of 11 the body, part of the -- of the 12 institution that is going to advise the 13 Board? Because that's the position of 14 the AUC.

15 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

16 So I can give you an example --

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Another one?

18 MR. LEVEE: -- the facts are very 19 different because it relates to the only
20 other intergovernmental authority that
21 Mr. Ali references, which is the .ec.
22 And there is a .eu. It's -- it was done
23 outside of the Applicant Guidebook --

24 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Yeah, that
25 has nothing to do --

1           MR. LEVEE:  -- it was done earlier.
2           But they -- they were the sponsoring
3           authority --

4           PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN:  No, no.  In 5           the current --

6           MR. LEVEE:  -- under this Guidebook,
7           there is no other situation -- is there?

8           (Off-the-record conference with
9           colleagues.)

10          MR. LEVEE:  During the break, I'll 11          get it.

12          There are -- I'm not aware of any
13          other continents, and that's what I'm
14          thinking of.  There are examples, I
15          believe, with cities in particular, but 16          also regions.

17          And my point was there was nothing
18          in the Guidebook that said that anyone
19          couldn't apply for that.

20          PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN:  It's a
21          different problem that I have.

22          MR. LEVEE:  Okay.

23          PRESIDENT BARIN:  I have one more
24          question.

25          MR. LEVEE:  Sure.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: I'd rather ask now
2 because it follows up on
3 Professor Kessedjian's question.

4           If you go to your Slides 4 and 5,
5 which you referred to earlier.

6           In Slide 4, you refer to
7 Section 2.2.1.4.2, where you set out
8 explicitly the requirements of the 9 Guidebook for the applications.

10          MR. LEVEE: Yes.

11          PRESIDENT BARIN: On Page 5, your 12 first point is that there are no
13 restrictions on the ability of 14 governments or other entities to apply
15 for a geographic name.

16          MR. LEVEE: Correct.

17          PRESIDENT BARIN: How was that
18 communicated to the parties?

19          MR. LEVEE: It's just not in the 20 Guidebook. That was my point.

21          PRESIDENT BARIN: Was there any
22 communication? Was there anything sent
23 to people just so that they would know
24 that that, in fact, is a possibility?

25          MR. LEVEE: Not that I'm aware of,

1 no.

2 And there are -- so many different
3 types of organizations have applied for 4 TLDs over the years. And, of course,
5 governments across the world do operate
6 what are referred to as "ccTLDs." I
7 think maybe some of them operate one.
8 And those are typically operated by 9 governments, or the government is the 10 sponsor and there's a specific entity
11 that operates it on behalf of the 12 government.

13 So it's not uncommon. It's very --
14 it's actually common.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: But is it fair to 16 say that this was, I guess, ICANN's
17 interpretation of --

18 MR. LEVEE: Well, you could say
19 that, but unless there's a prohibition, I
20 don't know why it would be -- I'm not 21 trying to spin it. There's nothing in
22 the Guidebook that says that you can't do
23 it --

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: That you can't do
25 it.

1           MR. LEVEE: -- and there are so
2 many -- it's the practice within ICANN
3 that there are lots of governments, 250
4 or so, that do operate their own
5 top-level domains, including the 6 United States. Nobody uses .us. It's 7 operated by the Postal Service, but
8 it's -- it's -- it would be common.

9           So there wouldn't really have been a
10 need to spell out who could apply.
11 Anyone could apply as long as you were an 12 entity.

13           The only restriction in the 14 Guidebook on who could apply is an
15 individual was not eligible to apply.
16 Any other entity, corporation structure
17 of any kind, LLP, they're all permitted
18 to apply.

19           PRESIDENT BARIN: But to follow on
20 Professor Kessedjian's questions, there
21 were no other examples that one could
22 inspire, at least up-front? In other
23 words, there were no other examples
24 previously that you could say there was a
25 support from another?

1           MR. LEVEE: Well, again, just the
2           .eu example, it's a different -- it was 3           not done in conjunction with the 4           Guidebook. It was a heavily politicized
5           event, but it was the EU that selected a
6           registry operator and then ultimately got 7           approval from ICANN to operate the 8           string.

9           Now, it -- and so that -- that was a
10          precedent, but it's not -- it's not
11          really -- it's not under the Guidebook.

12          PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: It's a
13          previous process?

14          MR. LEVEE: Correct.

15          Okay.

16          PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

17          MR. LEVEE: So at the bottom of 18          Slide 10, the point that I was making is 19          had any two governments in Africa
20          objected in writing to ZACR's
21          application, that application could not
22          have proceeded either.

23          So we have the situation where 24          there's some dispute as to which 25          governments are supporting which

1 applications, but if DCA had had strong
2 support from two governments, those two
3 governments could actually have sent a
4 writing to ICANN objecting to ZACR's
5 application, and that application would
6 have failed on that basis.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And this is 8 different from the consensus vote in --
9 in Beijing?

10 MR. LEVEE: Correct. It's outside
11 of any GAC advice.

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

13 MR. LEVEE: Now, if you look at 14 Exhibit C-24, there was a lot of 15 discussion of it during Mr. Ali's opening
16 statement and his colleagues'.

17 This is Dr. Crocker's letter. It's
18 dated March of 2012. It is nine pages
19 long, and it was written in response to a
20 communiqué that the AUC issued in October
21 of 2012.

22 The AUC had made 12 requests of --
23 of ICANN, and Dr. Crocker, pretty
24 methodically in this nine-page letter,
25 responds to each of them.

1           I'm not going to take you through
2           the whole letter, but in the first
3           request, the AUC stated it wanted ICANN
4           to add to ICANN's list of reserve names
5           the string .africa.

6           Now, ICANN did have a list of 7           reserve names. In particular, the 8           Olympics and the Red Cross had asked
9           ICANN, Don't let anybody take these 10          names, and ICANN had agreed. So the 11          Applicant Guidebook reserved those names.

12          The AUC requested similar treatment
13          for .africa, and Dr. Crocker said, No,
14          you can't do that.

15          He then went on to explain -- and 16          we've highlighted on Pages 2 and a little 17          bit of 3 -- what the Guidebook actually 18          says about the participation of 19          governments. He explained that the 20          Guidebook had protections that would
21          allow the African Union and its member
22          states to play a prominent role in 23          determining the outcome of those strings.

24          By the way, that statement is 25          100 percent accurate, as were the several

1 next paragraphs that refer to the 2 protections available for geographic
3 names, the fact that Africa is a
4 geographic name, the fact that it would
5 require support from at least 60 percent
6 of the national governments.

7 The letter then very briefly goes on
8 to discuss the GAC, discuss the concept
9 of Early Warnings and other objection
10 processes.

11 The letter does not tell the AUC to 12 go join the GAC. And that's something
13 that's very separate --

14 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: That is my
15 question.

16 At that time when the letter is 17 written, 8 March 2012, is AUC a member of 18 the GAC?

19 MR. LEVEE: No.

20 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

21 MR. LEVEE: And Ms. Dryden is here.
22 She will tell you -- this was not in her
23 declaration because it didn't really come
24 up in the very first briefing that was 25 submitted -- she will be more than happy

1 to answer questions to you about that
2 process.

3 But if you ask her the question, Was 4 ICANN involved or somehow directed the
5 GAC to accept the AUC as a voting
6 member --

7 PROFESSOR KESSEDJIAN: You are
8 making the question and the answer?

9 MR. LEVEE: -- I'm telling you now,
10 she's going to say, No, ICANN was not
11 involved.

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: We'll see
13 what happens.

14 MR. LEVEE: We'll see what happens.

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Leading.

16 MR. LEVEE: The most important thing
17 is that DCA tells you that this letter is 18 some -- is the genesis of a conspiracy
19 that is -- it tells the AUC, No worries,
20 we've got this wired on your behalf.

21 I've read the letter too many times.
22 You can read the letter. The letter is 23 fact-based. It tells the AUC nothing
24 more than, in particularly on the first
25 page, of what you could read in the

1 Guidebook.

2 There was absolutely nothing
3 untoward about the letter. It was in 4 every way appropriate for the Chairman of 5 the Board of ICANN to send this letter.

6 Now, DCA's second assumption relates
7 to the GAC. First, we heard extensively
8 this morning that the Early Warning
9 notices were improperly issued. And then
10 we also heard extensively this morning
11 that the GAC advice that was issued was 12 not consensus advice, and that the ICANN
13 Board should have known this and rejected
14 it.

15 First, this is Section 1.1.2.4 of 16 the Guidebook. I'll confess, I didn't
17 have an opportunity to compare the slides
18 that you were given this morning to the 19 slides that I have done. But at the 20 bottom of this paragraph in a sentence
21 that I think was omitted from DCA's
22 presentation is the sentence, A GAC Early
23 Warning may be issued for any reason.

24 It's not a formal objection. It
25 doesn't lead to a process that can cause

1           disqualification of the application.

2           What it does is it says to the applicant,
3           You have an issue, and we need to deal
4           with it. And if we can deal with it, so
5           be it. And if we can't deal with it, you
6           are at risk of the GAC issuing advice.

7                     But it can be issued for any reason.

8                     So there was absolutely nothing
9           improper about the 17 Early Warning
10          notices. Further, each of the issuing
11          countries was entitled to issue a warning
12          notice, and there were 17 of them.

13                    I also want to emphasize -- and 14          we'll discuss it in a minute -- the 15          Government of Kenya issued an Early
16          Warning notice. So even though there's a
17          lot of discussion that DCA had the 18          support of the Government of Kenya, it
19          signed and issued an Early Warning
20          notice. And we'll talk about the effect
21          of that later.

22                    Now, DCA was permitted to respond to 23          those notices, and it did. I've already 24          mentioned to you that part of its 25          response was to say, Ah, I don't think

1 the support of the continent should even
2 be relevant to the outcome.

3 But the point is that the process of 4 Early Warning notices worked exactly as 5 it was supposed to work under the
6 Guidebook. There was nothing untoward
7 about it. Those notices told the DCA
8 that it had an issue, and that -- and
9 that was the full legal effect of them.
10 There's nothing more.

11 Now, let's talk about the GAC. As
12 we've heard, the GAC issues consensus
13 advice where no duly authorized
14 representative of a country dissents from 15 the proposed advice at the meeting where 16 the advice is considered.

17 At the meeting, GAC advice was 18 proposed against DCA's application.

19 Ms. Dryden will talk to you this 20 afternoon about that.

21 No country dissented.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Is there
23 any record of that?

24 MR. LEVEE: Pardon?

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Is there

1 any record --

2 MR. LEVEE: Ms. Dryden can explain
3 exactly the details. And she'll also
4 explain the effect of the e-mail
5 exchanges that come forward.

6 Now, remember, at the time
7 Ms. Dryden did her declaration, there
8 were two things that were true: one was 9 that she didn't even want to release the 10 GAC e-mail --

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

12 MR. LEVEE: -- because they were 13 confidential. And so neither side had 14 them.

15 And I have no way of knowing what
16 was in them. She can explain -- and I
17 don't want to testify for her. I'm 18 giving comments that I'm doing bad on 19 that -- she can explain what was 20 happening in the e-mail and then what
21 happens at the GAC meeting where a
22 country says, I propose advice against a
23 particular application --

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Sure --

25 MR. LEVEE: -- she'll connect those

1 dots for you --

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- but
3 there's no sign-in sheet saying who was
4 there, and there's no minutes that say
5 that this is what happened?

6 MR. LEVEE: There are sometimes, but
7 not always. And, again, she can explain
8 that.

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

10 MR. LEVEE: Yeah.

11 So we know for sure, because
12 Ms. Dryden has already said so in her
13 declaration, no country dissented. What 14 she couldn't remember was whether
15 Mr. Katundu was actually in the room.

16 There were a lot of people in the 17 room, Members of the Panel. It's a big 18 room. There's a lot of members. There
19 are advisors, there's representatives,
20 there's observers. And it's not
21 surprising that Ms. Dryden cannot
22 100 percent be certain whether one
23 particular individual was in the room or 24 not.

25 She does know for sure that

1 Mr. Buruchara was not, but we already
2 know that he said he wasn't there.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah, he
4 was out of town.

5 MR. LEVEE: The last point I want to 6 emphasize -- and, again, this is very
7 important -- if any country from inside
8 or outside of Africa had opposed the 9 advice at the meeting, it would not have 10 been consensus advice.

11 So at the meeting, if Switzerland
12 had said, You know what, I don't know if 13 this is right; or if the Government of 14 China or the Government of Mexico or any 15 government in Africa had opposed the 16 advice, it would not have been issued.
17 That's not what happened.

18 So as we know, the official
19 representative for Mr. Katundu did not 20 oppose it.

21 One thing that's important,
22 Mr. Buruchara, who, I want to remind you,
23 when we talk about conflicts, he was the 24 former Chairman of DCA's Strategic
25 Advisory Board, so not exactly a neutral

1 party here. But more importantly, he was
2 not the official GAC representative.

3 That's the phrase that is included
4 in Paragraph 33 of DCA's amended notice
5 to this Panel. But he was never the 6 official GAC representative; he was
7 always only an advisor.

8 But irrespective of his title, the 9 bottom line is he did not attend the 10 meeting, and, thus, he could not prevent 11 the issuance of GAC advice even if he had 12 wanted to do so, even if he had been 13 authorized to do so.

14 The other thing is that 15 Mr. Buruchara knew that the Government of 16 Kenya had issued an Early Warning -- I
17 gave that to you in your binder as 18 Exhibit C-34 -- so he's on thin ground in 19 all events, even having the e-mail debate
20 that he had.

21 The complete e-mail thread, which 22 Mr. Ali took you through -- and I've also 23 got copies of some of those exhibits in 24 our binder -- confirms to me that he did
25 not oppose the issuance of GAC advice, in

1 any event.

2 Now, importantly, DCA initially
3 presented the Panel with only a very
4 small snippet of the e-mail thread. I
5 don't know how much DCA had at the 6 time -- we'll ask Ms. Bekele when she is 7 testifying -- but once we got the 8 complete thread, it demonstrates that
9 Mr. Buruchara withdrew his opposition to 10 the issuance of GAC advice because he 11 specifically says that he supports the 12 AUC and that they are acting as one.

13 Exhibit C-87 shows that what he 14 wanted to do was to keep the GAC as 15 issuing advice and keep ICANN as the 16 ultimate decision-maker. And that is 17 what happens: The GAC issues advice;
18 ICANN is the decision-maker.

19 There would have been no advice for 20 the GAC to issue that it supports one
21 application. That apparently is the spin
22 of what DCA is arguing to the Panel now,
23 that the advice was just simply, We
24 support the -- the ZACR application.
25 That would've said nothing to ICANN.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right. But
2 the only competing one they said couldn't
3 go forward.

4 MR. LEVEE: Well, that is the GAC
5 advice that was issued, but I'm saying
6 that the -- what -- what DCA's arguing to 7 the Panel this morning is that somehow,
8 the GAC was supposed to issue advice, We 9 like ZACR's application, period.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's not
11 what happened, but --

12 MR. LEVEE: It wouldn't have been
13 GAC advice. The GAC is giving advice
14 against an application. It doesn't say,
15 We like this one, but we're not going to 16 comment on the other. It wouldn't have 17 had an effect.

18 The purpose of the GAC in this role
19 is to say when they have a problem with 20 an application, and that's the advice
21 that was given.

22 So the summary that I want to leave
23 you with is two-fold: We have testimony
24 from Ms. Dryden already in the record.
25 In Paragraph 11, she's says, By the end

1 of this e-mail exchange, I could not
2 reasonably conclude that Mr. Buruchara,
3 on behalf of Kenya, continued to hold a
4 divergent view from the AUC or its member
5 states which supported the issuance of
6 GAC advice in conjunction with DCA's
7 application for .africa.

8 That paragraph is and was
9 100 percent accurate. And you'll have 10 the opportunity to test that this evening
11 when Ms. Dryden testifies.

12 She's the one that received these
13 e-mails. She's the one to interpret
14 them. And then she will tell you what
15 happens when she gets all these e-mails
16 and their relevance to what actually
17 happens in the room when the GAC meets.

18 Finally, we don't have a sworn
19 statement from Mr. Buruchara. We know
20 that DCA could have gotten one, but we 21 don't have his statement. So that is the 22 missing evidence that perhaps might have 23 given you an additional piece of evidence
24 to support DCA's claim.

25 If he actually thought that via

1 e-mail, he could have blocked or did, in
2 fact, block, he could have put that in a
3 declaration and told you that, and then
4 he could have been here today. He
5 didn't, and he's not here.

6 So the bottom line -- I'm going to
7 run through this quickly. I know I'm 8 running out of time -- DCA did not have 9 the support of a single country on the 10 Africa continent, and numerous countries
11 opposed.

12 DCA knew that the AUC support was 13 critical -- and by the way, DCA went and 14 got that support. The problem was it got 15 it in 2009. It then submitted to ICANN a 16 copy of the support letter that it had 17 received in 2009.

18 We heard a lot today at the end,
19 very end of DCA's opening statement about 20 the struggle that ICANN had with whether 21 the AUC support was valid, and the 22 Geo Names and all that.

23 That entire discussion, by the way,
24 takes a page and a half of DCA's brief.
25 It took a half an hour this morning.

1           But the reason there was so much
2           confusion was that DCA had submitted with 3           its application the letter from
4           the African Union. And then DCA said,
5           Well, we're not really sure of the status
6           of -- of whether this letter actually has
7           support.

8           I'll tell you what DCA knew. DCA
9           knew that it had voluntarily refused to 10          participate in the request for proposal
11          process and that, as a result, the AUC
12          had withdrawn its endorsement. And
13          that's in Exhibit C-R-10 in your book --

14          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: C-R-10?

15          MR. LEVEE: -- in fact, in 16          Exhibit C-26, DCA begs the AUC, Please
17          reinstate our endorsement to enable us to 18          go ahead with our application to ICANN.
19          But the AUC did not do so.

20          So DCA knew how critical the
21          endorsement of the African Union
22          Commission was, and it had gotten that 23          endorsement. And then the AUC, which was 24          entitled to withdraw it and change its 25          mind, did so.

1           In any event, there is no basis for
2           any request to change the rules in DCA's
3           favor by modifying the Guidebook to 4           eliminate the support requirement, much
5           less, by the way, in the final brief that 6           DCA submitted, asking the Panel to then
7           give it 18 more months.

8           That's not how the Guidebook was set
9           up. That change would be inconsistent
10          with the Guidebook and the Bylaws, and it
11          would give DCA an unfair advantage.

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You said
13          that the AUC withdrew its support because 14          .africa refused to participate in the 15          RFP.

16          Is that just because of the -- of 17          the dates, or is there something that
18          says --

19          MR. LEVEE: No. I think what 20          happened was -- and it's in the letter in 21          the exhibit -- the AUC decided to hold a
22          request for proposal --

23          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

24          MR. LEVEE: -- now, we know that DCA
25          didn't like the terms; they didn't think

1           it was fair; they thought it was wired.
2           The bottom line is they didn't
3           participate.

4                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   Right.

5                   MR. LEVEE:   But the AUC decided it
6           would sponsor a registry to apply for 7           .africa.  It had a right to do that, and 8           it decided it wanted to.

9                   Previously, it had supported
10          Ms. Bekele's approach that -- it was 11          three years before the applications were 12          due, but they had -- she had gotten the 13          support, which she knew was very
14          important.

15                   And then the AUC changes its mind
16          and says, You know what, we want to be 17          more influential.  We want to have an 18          RFP.  The winner of the RFP is going to 19          have our endorsement, so we withdraw the 20          previous endorsement given to you.

21                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   That's
22          fair.  Okay.

23                   MR. LEVEE:   Okay.

24                   The bottom line is no applicant for 25          .africa can (or should) succeed without

1 the support of the countries of Africa.

2 DCA didn't have that support in
3 2012. It does not have that support
4 today.

5 So, really, what this is all about
6 is trying to change the Guidebook so that 7 DCA can proceed in the face of the lack 8 of support that it did not have.

9 But does that amount to -- ICANN's
10 refusal to change the Guidebook, that
11 obviously doesn't amount to a violation
12 of its Articles, Bylaws or Guidebook.
13 We're following the Guidebook, not
14 modifying it.

15 The next assumption relates to the 16 conflicts of interests, and Judge Cahill
17 noted that it was not discussed in the 18 opening statement of DCA. I'm going to 19 cover it very briefly.

20 DCA sent letters to the ombudsman,
21 sent letters to ICANN's CEO saying these 22 two Board members shouldn't vote. The 23 ombudsman rejected it. Messrs. Disspain
24 and Silber twice confirmed that -- that
25 they did not believe they had a conflict.

1           And then we have ICANN has a
2           conflicts of interest policy, and it has
3           a Subcommittee on Ethics and Conflicts.
4           And the Chairman of that Subcommittee is
5           here to testify today, and he will tell
6           you that they followed their process,
7           what they did. And the Subcommittee
8           concluded that no conflicts existed.

9           So the mere assertion of a conflict
10          doesn't mean that a conflict actually 11          exists. You actually have to go look at
12          it.

13          The Board conducted itself
14          consistent with the Bylaws to proceed
15          when someone has asserted a conflict.

16          And DCA not once, in any of its
17          papers, ever told the Panel, using a rule
18          of reason or any other criteria, why the 19          Board's decision was objectively or even 20          subjectively wrong.

21          All they've ever told the Panel was 22          that they made a complaint. They don't 23          think these two Board members should have 24          voted.

25          DCA has never explained to you why

1 the Board's internal investigation, which
2 ultimately concluded that there was no
3 conflict, was -- how that somehow
4 violated its Articles or Bylaws.

5 But my last point is, really, the 6 most important point, I suppose. This
7 could come in the category of no harm, no
8 foul. The vote of the committee of the 9 Board, the NGPC, the New gTLD Program
10 Committee -- you asked, Judge Cahill, how 11 many members are on the Board. There's 12 16.

13 But the Board created a subset of 14 itself. All Board members who did not 15 have a conflict relating to the 16 program -- in other words, there were a
17 couple of Board members whose companies
18 were applying for new gTLDs. Those Board
19 members stepped back when it related to 20 the gTLD program.

21 And so the Board created the
22 New gTLD Program Committee, the NGPC, to 23 rule on all matters relating to the New 24 gTLD Program. Those Board members were 25 not conflicted.

1           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  Were those
2           two people that were objected to on that
3           Board?

4           MR. LEVEE:  They were, they were.

5           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  Okay.

6           MR. LEVEE:  But if you take those 7           two people off --

8           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  How many
9           people are on the committee?  Sorry.

10          MR. LEVEE:  Well, it changed.
11          Roughly 14-ish; there were 11 at that
12          time.  It changed -- as Board members'
13          conflicts were resolved, like, they 14          withdrew their application, then the 15          Board -- that Board member would re-join
16          the committee --

17          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  That's
18          fair, yeah.

19          MR. LEVEE:  -- at the time of the 20          vote, there were 11.

21          If you take the two people away --
22          nine people attended the meeting.  If you
23          take those two people away, you've got
24          seven people voting.  To vote, all you
25          need is a quorum.  They had a quorum.

1           They had nine out of 14 -- nine out of
2           11. I'm sorry. They had a quorum.

3                   And once you have a quorum, it's
4           majority rules.

5                   In this instance, if you take the 6           two disputed Board members out of the 7           equation, you have a 7-0 vote.

8                   So it -- it truly just did not
9           matter whether those Board members voted 10          or not.

11                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I was going
12          to ask that question before, but I
13          thought the answer was they're not -- so 14          the vote -- if they didn't vote, it still 15          would have passed. But I was 16          anticipating them saying, but these two 17          people were there, so they were going to 18          influence the other seven people. I
19          think that's what --

20                   MR. LEVEE: I didn't hear that --

21                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I didn't 22          hear that either, but I may well ask the
23          question --

24                   MR. LEVEE: It may be on --

25                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- yeah,

1 that's usually what the --

2 MR. LEVEE: -- yeah.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: There's
4 no minutes of this or anything?

5 MR. LEVEE: There are minutes.
6 We're going to come to that.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Oh, sorry.

8 MR. LEVEE: The next -- the minutes
9 are actually in your binder, and I'm
10 about to get to them.

11 The fourth of five assumptions is
12 very brief, that ICANN inappropriately
13 rejected DCA's reconsideration request
14 for various reasons, including by not
15 retaining an independent expert.

16 I'm not going to read the whole
17 Bylaws provision here -- whoops, there I
18 just took away -- this is the section --
19 Article IV, Section 2.2 of the Bylaws
20 tells you what the grounds for 21 reconsideration could be.

22 And then I gave you Exhibit 47,
23 which is the Board Governance Committee
24 recommendation to deny the request. What
25 it says is that DCA has not demonstrated

1           that the acceptance of the GAC advice
2           was, quote, without consideration of 3           material information, except where the 4           party submitting the request could have 5           submitted, but did not submit, the 6           information for the Board's consideration
7           at the time of the action.

8           The second bullet says that DCA has 9           not demonstrated that one or more actions
10          or -- of the Board were taken as a result
11          of the Board's reliance on false or 12          inaccurate information.

13          What we know, instead, DCA, in its 14          paper, say, We have no idea if the NGPC
15          even saw our response to the GAC advice.
16          We had a lengthy response to the GAC
17          advice to tell the Board why they should 18          ignore it.

19          But if you look at Exhibits R-1 and 20          Exhibit C-17 [verbatim], those are 21          the minutes. I think Exhibit R-1 is the 22          best. And we've highlighted on Page 5
23          the question at the top. What materials
24          did the Board review. As part of its 25          deliberations, the new GPC reviewed the

1 following materials and documents.

2 It reviewed, obviously, the GAC
3 communiqué, and then it reviewed the
4 applicant responses, and then it reviewed
5 the Guidebook.

6 That's all that needed to be
7 reviewed. And it confirms that the Board
8 did, in fact, review DCA's objections and 9 voted to accept the GAC advice,
10 nevertheless.

11 DCA also says, Well, you know, you
12 should have hired an expert.

13 The first thing of course, as we've 14 already seen, there's no requirement to 15 hire an expert. The Guidebook in 16 Section 3.1 says that the Board may 17 consult with experts.

18 At the time that DCA said, You
19 should hire an expert, there was no
20 indication of what that expert might have 21 said. The Board didn't need an expert to 22 evaluate whether the GAC advice said what 23 it said. They didn't need an expert to 24 evaluate whether the GAC's advice was
25 consensus advice.

1           Ms. Dryden had issued, on behalf of
2           the GAC, a communiqué which said what it
3           said. Nothing that an expert would have 4           said would have changed anything.

5           So we pointed out in the briefs,
6           Hey, you know, you never said anything
7           about what the expert might have said.
8           And in DCA's second brief to the Panel,
9           again, DCA says nothing. They don't tell
10          you anything about what an expert might 11          have said.

12          This morning, we hear that you could 13          have gotten an expert to deal with Geo
14          Names and whether the African Union
15          Commission was or was not authorized to 16          sponsor a different application.

17          That actually had nothing to do with 18          the GAC advice. The GAC advice was 19          specific to DCA's application. And so
20          there truly was nothing that any,
21          quote/unquote, expert could have done to 22          tell the Board what it -- how it should 23          be voting. The Board was perfectly
24          capable of understanding the GAC advice.

25          More importantly, the decision

1           whether to retain an expert is
2           100 percent discretionary. DCA argued in 3           its reconsideration request that it was 4           not discretionary, that it was mandatory;
5           but, in fact, it's very clear that it was 6           discretionary.

7           Assumption Number 5 -- and I'm
8           almost done -- is that ICANN's other
9           conduct in relation to the AUC and ZACR
10          was inappropriate.

11          And we heard almost half of the 12          opening statement this morning where it
13          talked about the dialogue that occurred
14          between the -- the supporting
15          organizations and ICANN and within ICANN
16          as to whether the AUC was or was not --
17          whether the letter was or was not 18          supportive and sufficient under the
19          Guidebook.

20          And I'm going to address that to 21          some degree. I'll be candid. It was two 22          pages of the brief, so I had allocated a
23          similar amount of time in my overall
24          presentation.

25          I'll spend more time on it tomorrow

1 in my closing.

2 But the main point I want to
3 emphasize is the oddity. DCA is saying
4 that although the African Union
5 Commission signed a letter of support for 6 ZACR's application, ICANN was struggling
7 with whether that letter was sufficient
8 under the terms of the Guidebook.

9 If the process was wired in favor of
10 the AUC's application with ZACR, ICANN
11 should have immediately said, Yeah, the 12 letter looks good to us, you can use it.

13 Instead, the Staff at ICANN kept
14 questioning, We want to make sure that 15 the AUC's letter is sufficient.

16 Ultimately, the Staff agreed that a
17 letter from the AUC would be sufficient,
18 and at that point, someone says, Well,
19 maybe you could write a letter. ICANN --
20 the Guidebook actually has a draft letter
21 of support. It's not unusual for the 22 Staff to recommend a draft.

23 So I don't see anything untoward
24 about the drafting of a letter for the 25 AUC to meet the terms of the Guidebook.

1 ICANN would have done the same thing for
2 DCA if DCA had been the winning
3 applicant. It wasn't.

4 So the fact that ICANN worked with 5 the AUC to get the letter right, really,
6 is that the violation of the Guidebook?
7 Is that the violation of the Bylaws?

8 DCA's application had already been
9 the subject of GAC advice, and so at that 10 point, the question was, Was any
11 application for .africa going to proceed?

12 There is a string of correspondence
13 that you saw this morning. None of it is 14 untoward. None of it is conspiratorial.

15 If the Staff of ICANN or the Board
16 of ICANN was trying to favor ZACR's
17 application, it did a really bad job
18 because it kept being very unsure as to 19 whether the AUC's original letter of 20 support was sufficient, there was no
21 preference here.

22 ICANN's Staff did what it was
23 supposed to do under the Guidebook. It
24 made sure that the AUC was, in fact,
25 representative and said so in a properly

1 drafted letter.

2 Finally, as you will also hear from
3 Ms. Dryden, the AUC did not permit --
4 ICANN did not permit the AUC to join the 5 GAC. The GAC regulates its own
6 membership, and ICANN had no role
7 whatsoever.

8 ICANN's ultimate decision, based on
9 the recommendation of InterConnect
10 Communications, which was its vendor, to 11 acknowledge the AUC's enforcement of 12 ZACR, was appropriate and, candidly,
13 irrelevant to this proceeding. It occurs
14 after DCA's application has already been 15 blocked.

16 As I already said, the drafting of 17 an endorsement letter was both
18 appropriate -- appropriate and, likewise,
19 irrelevant. And the Guidebook even has a
20 sample letter of support.

21 There's no ill-will or
22 inappropriateness about helping somebody
23 draft a letter. We didn't hear anything
24 about it this morning, so I -- sorry,
25 now, I include -- I included what --

1           one bullet -- a lot of the papers refer
2           to problems that DCA had with ICANN's
3           independent objector, but at the end of 4           the day, the independent objector, who
5           was -- whose purpose was to file
6           objections in certain situations when no
7           one else did -- well, he didn't file an 8           objection. So I wasn't sure why that was 9           in DCA's papers, and I didn't know if it
10          would come up this morning.

11                 But all of these things, which are 12                 sort of miscellaneous, none of the 13                 conduct involves a possible violation of 14                 the Articles, the Bylaws or the 15                 Guidebook. I don't think there's even 16                 Board conduct of talking about Staff of 17                 ICANN assisting in a letter communicating
18                 with various authorities. These aren't 19                 decisions that are made by the 20                 ICANN Board.

21                 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Are you
22                 saying we should only look at what the 23                 Board does?

24                 The reason I'm asking is that your 25                 the Bylaws say that ICANN and its

1 constituent bodies shall operate, to the 2 maximum extent feasible, in an open and
3 transparent manner.

4 Does the constituent bodies include,
5 I don't know, GAC or anything? What is
6 "constituent bodies"?

7 MR. LEVEE: Yeah. What I'll talk to 8 you about tomorrow in closing when I lay
9 out what an IRP Panel is supposed to 10 address, the Bylaws are very clear.
11 Independent Review Proceedings are for 12 the purpose of testing conduct or
13 inaction of the ICANN Board. They don't 14 apply to the GAC. They don't apply to 15 supporting organizations. They don't
16 apply to Staff.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So you
18 think that the situation is a -- we 19 shouldn't be looking at what the 20 constituent -- whatever the constituent
21 bodies are, even though that's part of 22 your Bylaws?

23 MR. LEVEE: Well, when I say not --
24 when you say not looking, part of DCA's
25 claims that the GAC did something wrong

1 and that ICANN knew that.

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So is GAC a
3 constituent body?

4 MR. LEVEE: It is a constituent
5 body, to be clear --

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.

7 MR. LEVEE: -- whether -- I don't
8 think an IRP Panel -- if the only thing
9 that happened here was that the GAC did
10 something wrong --

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

12 MR. LEVEE: -- an IRP Panel would
13 not be -- an Independent Review
14 Proceeding is not supposed to address
15 that, whether the GAC did something
16 wrong.

17 Now, if ICANN knew -- the Board knew
18 that the GAC did something wrong, and 19 that's how they link it, they say, Look,
20 the GAC did something wrong, and ICANN
21 knew it, the Board -- if the Board
22 actually knew it, then we're dealing with 23 Board conduct.

24 The Board knew that the GAC did not,
25 in fact, issue consensus advice. That's

1 the allegation. So it's fair to look at 2 the GAC's conduct.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

4 You think that GACs have actual
5 notice, but if they should have known,
6 then they would have constructive notice?

7 Is that -- what do you do with that?

8 MR. LEVEE: I think that possibly
9 would fall into a Board inaction --

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

11 MR. LEVEE: -- yeah.

12 I don't want to suggest that -- that
13 it's so narrow you're only supposed to --

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: All you're
15 doing is just answering the question.

16 MR. LEVEE: Okay.

17 But, certainly, Independent Review
18 Proceedings, which -- I mean, these are 19 ICANN's rules. We're here today to --
20 pursuant to those rules. And we're
21 really testing the conduct of the Board.
22 Okay?

23 So let me close.

24 I gave you five assumptions that DCA
25 made. We believe each of those is false.

1           We believe that the Board conducted
2           itself consistent with the Articles, the
3           Bylaws and the Guidebook.

4           Nothing in the Guidebook even hints
5           at the notion that the AUC's support
6           created a conflict of interest or
7           required the Guidebook to be ignored.

8           The Board didn't violate the 9           Articles or Bylaws by accepting the 10          consensus advice or by allowing the two 11          challenged members to vote. Indeed, the 12          process for evaluating contested
13          applications for gTLD using the name of a
14          geographic region worked exactly as it
15          was supposed to work.

16          And I know that, ultimately, the 17          argument of counsel to my left is that 18          the process was unfair. I get that. But 19          the process also required DCA to have 20          support of 60 percent of the countries of 21          the Africa continent. And at the time it
22          submitted its application, it did not
23          have the support of any single country,
24          certainly not 60 percent.

25          And so, fair is following the

1 Guidebook. There are winners and losers
2 in the gTLD process. It's designed to
3 work that way. It doesn't mean that the 4 process was unfair or that the Board
5 violated its Bylaws.

6 Thank you.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Any questions?

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No. I
10 talked myself out of questions.

11 MR. LEVEE: I think we're right on 12 your timeline.

13 So should we take one hour?

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: It's 12:15, so,
15 yeah, we could take an hour.

16 MR. LEVEE: Come back at 1:20?

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah.

18 MR. LEVEE: We'll get started with 19 Mr. Chalaby at 1:20.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: That's fine.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: How is this
22 going to go? Are we going to ask him
23 questions, or is he going to tell us
24 something?

25 MR. LEVEE: I will play almost no

1           role.

2                   I think we already determined the 3           Panel will ask its questions first,
4           followed by counsel, if they have
5           questions.

6                   PRESIDENT BARIN: I -- I -- we're
7           advised that the first witness is going
8           to be Mr. Chalaby --

9                   MR. LEVEE: Correct.

10                  PRESIDENT BARIN: -- right after 11           lunch?

12                  MR. LEVEE: Yes. Then Ms. Dryden to 13           follow, and then Ms. Bekele to follow.

14                  PRESIDENT BARIN: Good. So if we 15           break now and come back by 1:20 --

16                  MR. LEVEE: Fine.

17                  PRESIDENT BARIN: -- that gives us
18           enough time. And then we'll start.

19                  MR. LEVEE: We should be fine.
20           Thank you.

21                  PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you very 22           much.

23                                   (Whereupon, at 12:21 p.m., a
24                                   luncheon recess was taken.)

25

1           It's 1:25. Perfectly on time after
2           the lunch break.

3           The next part of the Hearing, we'll
4           deal with the presentation of witnesses
5           and questions by the Panel.

6           The first witness who is up for 7           questions by the Panel, and then,
8           subsequently, questions by counsel for 9           the parties, is Mr. Cherine Chalaby, if I
10          pronounced that correctly.

11          THE WITNESS: Perfect.

12          MR. LEVEE: Good afternoon,
13          Mr. Chalaby.

14          THE WITNESS: Good afternoon.

15          MR. LEVEE: First thing we should do
16          is make sure that you're sworn in.

17                           - - -

18          C H E R I N E   C H A L A B Y,
19          after having been first duly sworn by
20          President Barin, was examined and
21          testified as follows:

22                           - - -

23          PRESIDENT BARIN: The witness is 24          sworn.

25          Thank you for making yourself

1 available, Mr. Chalaby.

2 What we will do is we'll start with
3 some questions from me, as Chair, but my
4 colleagues will also come in and ask you
5 questions.

6 I ask you to be as -- as forthright
7 as you can be. And if you obviously
8 don't know the answer to my question,
9 simply say you don't know.

10 - - -

11 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

12 BY PRESIDENT BARIN

13 - - -

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: I read in your 15 statement that you've been a member of 16 the Board of Directors of ICANN since
17 2010?

18 THE WITNESS: Correct.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: And you're
20 currently still a member of that Board?

21 THE WITNESS: Correct.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Can I ask you what
23 your professional qualifications are?

24 It's -- it wasn't clear from the 25 statement to what -- what you do.

1 THE WITNESS: Sure.

2 Well, first of all, I -- I have a --
3 I graduate -- I went to school -- Jesuit
4 schools in Egypt where I was born. And
5 then I have a -- a undergraduate degree
6 in electronic engineering from Cairo
7 University --

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Can you
9 speak a little bit louder? This room --

10 THE WITNESS: Sure. Okay.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Where was
12 the graduate degree again?

13 THE WITNESS: So I was born in 14 Egypt --

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Got that.

16 THE WITNESS: -- I went to the 17 Jesuit school, the French Jesuits; and 18 then I went to Cairo University, where I
19 took a degree in electrical engineering.

20 Then I took a Master's degree in 21 computing sciences from Imperial College
22 in London. Then I joined what is known
23 today as Accenture. In those days, it
24 was known as Arthur Andersen Consulting
25 Division and, thereafter,

1 Andersen Consulting. I stayed with them
2 28 years, 18 of which I was a partner.

3 I had various positions within
4 Accenture. One of them was global
5 managing partner for the capital markets
6 business. I was also the managing
7 partner for the venture capital business
8 that Accenture set up for Middle East,
9 Africa and Europe. And I was on the 10 executive global committee.

11 In around 2005, I left Accenture
12 after a career of about 28 years, I'd 13 say, and I joined an investment bank in 14 the Middle East as a chairman of that 15 investment bank.

16 Subsequently, I became chairman of 17 the supervisory board of the bank, which
18 was formed after I arrived. And the bank
19 also acquired a -- a brokerage house in 20 Egypt, and I became chairman of that 21 brokerage house.

22 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Which bank?

23 THE WITNESS: It's called -- it's an 24 investment bank called Rasmala,
25 R-A-S-M-A-L-A.

1           Before joining Rasmala, I was on the
2           Board of four companies that Accenture
3           had invested money in.

4           And then I joined ICANN in 2010 on
5           the Board.

6           And since joining, I became head of 7           the New gTLD Committee that was referred 8           to this morning. I'm also head of the 9           Finance Committee, and I'm a member of 10          the Board Governance Committee, and also 11          member of the Subcommittee of that 12          Governance Committee for Ethics and 13          Conflicts.

14          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Of which
15          you're the Chair now?

16          THE WITNESS: There is no official
17          elected Chair; but, by default, it came 18          to me. It's only a group of three 19          people, and I've been elected Chair among 20          that group.

21          PRESIDENT BARIN: As an ad hoc, if 22          you will, Chair to the Subcommittee, if I
23          can put it that way --

24          THE WITNESS: I beg your pardon?

25          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- is that

1 correct?

2 As an ad hoc Chair to the
3 Subcommittee --

4 THE WITNESS: Yes.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- is this what it
6 is?

7 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. How many
9 members are there for the -- Board
10 members are there on the Governance
11 Committee?

12 THE WITNESS: The Board Governance
13 Committee?

14 Six -- six members -- five or 15 four -- I'm not 100 percent sure.

16 Are you talking about the 17 Subcommittee or --

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: No; the Governance
19 Committee, not the Subcommittee. Because
20 the Subcommittee, if I -- if I have it
21 right, there's a Governance Committee
22 and, under the Governance Committee,
23 there's -- there is a Subcommittee on 24 Ethics and Conflicts?

25 THE WITNESS: Correct.

1 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

2 There's three members on the Ethics
3 and Conflicts Subcommittee --

4 THE WITNESS: (No audible response.)

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- but there are
6 six members, according to you?

7 THE WITNESS: Correct.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And are you
9 able to give us just a quick description
10 of what the backgrounds of those other
11 six members of the Governance Committee
12 are?

13 THE WITNESS: Well, they are
14 directors of the Board. The head of the 15 Board Governance Committee is the 16 Vice Chair, and the other members are 17 the -- they're diverse from different
18 parts.

19 Mr. -- two of the members that are 20 discussed this morning are a member of 21 the Board Governance Committee.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Two of the members
23 that were discussed this morning? By the 24 two members, you're talking about
25 Chris Disspain and Mike Silber?

1 THE WITNESS: Yes.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: So Chris Disspain
3 and Mike Silber are two other members of 4 the six-member Board Governance
5 Committee?

6 THE WITNESS: Yes, indeed.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And are you
8 able to tell me -- or tell us a little
9 bit more about their backgrounds? I
10 mean, are they businesspeople like you
11 or -- in terms of experience and 12 background.

13 And -- and if you don't know, that's
14 fine.

15 THE WITNESS: No. I can -- I can
16 only say what I know, that most of them
17 are a member of a community called the 18 ccTLD community.

19 Mr. Disspain is the CEO of an 20 organization in Australia, which is 21 called auDA, AU Domain Registry [sic].
22 And Mr. Silber is a director of an
23 organization in -- in South Africa called
24 ZADNA, which is .za Domain Name
25 Authority.

1           That's all I can say.

2           PRESIDENT BARIN: And are you able
3 to give us an idea of how many times the 4 Committee meets?

5           THE WITNESS: Which committee?

6           PRESIDENT BARIN: The Governance
7 Committee.

8           And so, for your purposes, if I say
9 "Subcommittee," I'm talking about the 10 Ethics Subcommittee. If I talk about the 11 "Committee," it's with respect to the 12 Governance Committee.

13          THE WITNESS: Well, we have -- we
14 have -- ICANN has three public Board
15 meetings a year. During those public
16 Board meetings, all committees meet. So,
17 at minimum, the Board Governance
18 Committee meet three times.

19          But in addition to that, outside the 20 Committee, we have a Board workshop. And 21 we have, I think, about four of those a
22 year. And also, at each one of those,
23 every committee meets again. So the BGC
24 meets again.

25          Outside of that, Board Governance

1           Committee meets whenever there's a
2           requirement to look at reconsideration
3           requests or any other matters that it's 4           required to look into.

5           So it's active and it does what it
6           has to do when it needs to do it.

7           PRESIDENT BARIN: And does
8           the -- the Board Committee also
9           keep minutes or records of its meetings
10          and take minutes?

11          THE WITNESS: Indeed, it does.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes.

13          Okay. And are they taken by someone 14          that sort of consistently takes those 15          notes and keeps them?

16          THE WITNESS: Yes. I believe
17          there's a scribe, and there are notes
18          being taken and minutes published.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me just, if 20          you will, take you to a document that I
21          would like you to take a look at, and 22          that would be the conflicts of interest
23          policy --

24          MR. LEVEE: If you can give us the 25          exhibit number, I can put it on

1 everybody's monitor.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: It's Exhibit C-52,
3 if I'm correct.

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It's
5 coming.

6 MR. LEVEE: You have to let us know
7 which page you want.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: I see. That's
9 fine.

10 MR. LEVEE: Can you see it,
11 Mr. Chalaby?

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It's too
13 small to read?

14 THE WITNESS: I can see it, but I
15 can barely read it.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Do you want us to 17 give you a printed copy?

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: They can
19 blow up the copy.

20 THE WITNESS: It's okay. I can see
21 it.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Well, I may have
23 to go back and forth, so --

24 THE WITNESS: I can see what's 25 there, and then we'll see if --

1           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That's the
2 policy -- if I'm not mistaken, that's the
3 policy of 6 May 2012 that is quoted in 4 your declaration?

5           THE WITNESS: It is.

6           MR. LEVEE: It is.

7           PRESIDENT BARIN: It's, in fact,
8 quoted in Paragraph 3.

9           THE WITNESS: Correct.

10          PRESIDENT BARIN: And then just by 11 way of background, were you -- were you
12 involved in any way in the drafting or 13 the preparation of this policy?

14          THE WITNESS: No. No, I was not.

15          PRESIDENT BARIN: It was prepared
16 before you --

17          THE WITNESS: It was prepared and --
18 yes, I was not involved in the drafting 19 of this.

20          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Is this a
21 policy that you would say that you're 22 very familiar with in terms of how it's
23 applied and used in the, I would say,
24 Governance and particularly the 25 Subcommittee on Ethics and Conflicts

1 meetings?

2 THE WITNESS: I would say so.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And do you
4 regularly use this policy in terms of the 5 work that either the Committee or the 6 Subcommittee does?

7 THE WITNESS: Yeah, definitely was
8 the Subcommittee, and all -- all
9 directors have to, every year, confirm
10 that they've read it and understood it
11 and apply it.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: And I assume, like
13 most boards, they -- all directors read
14 it and sign a document that's then filed
15 with the Board that says they --

16 THE WITNESS: Yes, it's part of the 17 annual statement they read.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Was this
19 policy looked at, Mr. Chalaby, when I
20 would say the issues in relation to 21 Chris Disspain and Mike Silber were being 22 considered by, I would say, first, the 23 Committee and then the Subcommittee?

24 THE WITNESS: We applied this
25 policy. I don't know if we had the

1 document open in front of us and read
2 page by page. I don't remember that.
3 But we certainly applied the policy.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: And I guess -- by
5 my question, I don't mean to say that you
6 sort of applied it on -- on a -- on a
7 verbatim basis, but was it -- was it
8 something that the -- I would say, first,
9 the Board, as well as the Subcommittee
10 members looked at in order to arrive at 11 the decisions that they did?

12 THE WITNESS: Absolutely.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: During that
14 meeting, I guess, there was -- can you --
15 can you explain how the -- the process
16 worked in that -- I assume the question
17 must have gone to the Board first and 18 then -- in terms of --

19 THE WITNESS: Which particular
20 meeting are you referring to, please?

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: To the meeting
22 where you are looking as a Subcommittee,
23 if you will --

24 THE WITNESS: Yes.

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- as to what is

1 to happen to Chris Disspain and
2 Mike Silber with respect to their
3 conflict of interest question.

4 THE WITNESS: Yes.

5 So what typically happens is the 6 Board Governance Committee requests the 7 Subcommittee to investigate the matter --

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

9 THE WITNESS: -- right?

10 So the Board Governance Committee
11 requests us. So we met, the three 12 members, of which Disspain or Silber are 13 not members of the Subcommittee --

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: All right.

15 THE WITNESS: -- okay?

16 At that time when we met, the first
17 thing we do, we -- we look at all the 18 information available to us, and we call
19 people who are -- have an issue. We 20 explain to them the process.

21 The first thing we explain is the 22 definition of "conflict," all right? And 23 we say that conflict is not just actual;
24 it's also potential and perceived, and
25 it's very important.

1           And we -- we apply this very much in
2           everything we do in the discussion. Then
3           we -- we discuss among ourself, we
4           interview people, and then we make a
5           decision at the end, a finding.

6           We then pass the findings to the 7           BGC, and the BGC sends it to the Board
8           for edification and . . .

9           PRESIDENT BARIN: In this particular
10          case, though, I believe it -- it must 11          have started with, I would say, the 12          Committee first, because that's where the 13          issue is laid before --

14          THE WITNESS: Um-hum.

15          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- of which
16          Mr. Disspain and Mr. Silber are members,
17          correct?

18          THE WITNESS: Correct.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: The issue of the 20          conflict of interest would first be put
21          to the Board --

22          THE WITNESS: Right.

23          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- to the 24          Committee -- to the Governance Committee?

25          THE WITNESS: Correct.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: Then from the
2           Governance Committee, it would then go to
3           the Subcommittee?

4           THE WITNESS: Correct.

5           PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

6           And in -- in terms of the -- the 7           process that was followed with the 8           Governance Committee, of which
9           Mr. Disspain and Mr. Silber are members,
10          they were not part of the -- the 11          decision-making or discussions --

12          THE WITNESS: No, they were not.

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- that were 14          following, I guess, their questions of 15          the conflict, correct?

16          THE WITNESS: Correct, no, they were 17          not.

18          PRESIDENT BARIN: And, subsequently,
19          when the issue was decided or considered
20          by the Subcommittee, what information was 21          before you when you made your decision as 22          a Subcommittee?

23          THE WITNESS: I don't recall
24          everything that was put forward to us,
25          but we start with the -- in that

1 particular instance, we started with, of
2 course, the declaration of the two
3 directors.

4 But what triggered that meeting is
5 an event took place in Durban, when ICANN
6 met, where, at the opening speech, a
7 member on the outside had thanked a
8 couple of Board members, and then another
9 Board member came after that, concerned
10 about hearing that a couple of members
11 were thanked, and informed me and 12 informed counsel.

13 As a result of that, we -- we said
14 we will look into this again. So the 15 Committee met again to look into this.
16 The Committee advised the Board
17 Governance Committee, and the Board
18 Governance Committee advised the 19 Subcommittee to do the investigation.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me get this
21 right, because there are two references
22 in your statement --

23 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- to an issue of
25 conflict being raised against Mr. --

1 Mr. Disspain and Silber. One is in
2 Paragraphs -- one is in Paragraphs 4 and
3 5, if you will, particularly 5, where, in
4 October 2012, DCA notifies ICANN's
5 ombudsman that DCA believes that two of 6 the members had a conflict of interest.

7 Then there's a second incident, if
8 I'm correct, or a second time this was 9 raised in Paragraph 7, Some weeks after 10 June 4th, 2013, the issue comes up.

11 THE WITNESS: Yes.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And when
13 you were talking earlier --

14 THE WITNESS: I was talking about
15 the second one.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- you were
17 talking about the second one?

18 THE WITNESS: Indeed.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: I'd like to take 20 you back to the first one, if you would.

21 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: So when the issue
23 was raised in -- in December, in October
24 of 2012, do you recall how it came to
25 you?

1           THE WITNESS: In relation to the 2           ombudsman statement in Paragraph 5, is
3           that what you mean?

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes.

5           THE WITNESS: Okay.

6           It didn't come to us at all. So
7           what typically happened before the 8           composition of the New gTLD, the 9           Subcommittee was formed. And we looked 10          at all of the statements made by 11          individual Board members to see who was 12          going to be in the Committee, who's not 13          going to be in the Committee. And we 14          applied those three objective criteria,
15          actual, potential, and perceived, to all
16          the Board members -- the voting Board
17          members.

18          And out of the 16, we decided that 19          five were conflicted in relation to the 20          New gTLD, all right, and those that were 21          not conflicted became part of the New 22          gTLD.

23          Out of the five that were excluded
24          from the New gTLD was the Chairman of the 25          Board and the Vice Chairman of the Board,

1           because we took that definition very
2           strictly and wanted to make sure that the 3           New gTLD had members that were not
4           conflicted at all.

5           After that, usually, we -- we --
6           only when issues come up to the New gTLD
7           Committee that we discuss it. The issue
8           about .africa and the issue had not come
9           to the New gTLD Committee at all or not 10          even discussed when the letters and the 11          ombudsman produced his report.

12          And, in fact, in his report, he
13          said, as quoted here, I consider no
14          disqualifying conflict.

15          And, in fact, it was sort of 16          premature, because no issue came to the 17          New gTLD Committee to discuss in relation
18          to these two gentlemen.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: All right.

20          So if -- if I understand the 21          summary, what you're saying is that in 22          the first instance, the -- the Committee
23          didn't really have to deal with that 24          issue?

25          THE WITNESS: The New gTLD

1 Committee.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: The New gTLD
3 Committee?

4 THE WITNESS: Yes.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. But once
6 the -- once the report of the ombudsman
7 was issued -- and that's the report that
8 you'll find in C-29?

9 THE WITNESS: Right.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: I don't know if
11 you want to put up a copy.

12 MR. LEVEE: Do you want that up?

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes.

14 MR. LEVEE: Of course.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: I think he's going
16 to have a tough time reading that.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Can you
18 highlight or expand?

19 MR. LEVEE: Can you just tell us
20 what to highlight?

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Just the
22 first half there -- I don't know. I'm
23 not asking the questions. Excuse me.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Well, I guess I'll
25 start with some general questions.

1 THE WITNESS: Okay.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: You've obviously
3 seen this report?

4 THE WITNESS: I had to refamiliarize
5 myself with it as part of this
6 proceedings, but I don't remember at the 7 time when and where I have seen it.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: So was this never 9 really looked at, if you will, by the 10 Committee or the Subcommittee subsequent 11 to it being issued?

12 THE WITNESS: No --

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

14 THE WITNESS: -- not that I
15 remember, to be honest.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And is 17 there a reason why that, perhaps, either
18 the Committee or the Subcommittee may not 19 be, as being ethics or, if you will,
20 conflicts committees, interested in the 21 report of the ombudsman?

22 THE WITNESS: There is no action to 23 be taken as a result of this.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

25 If you look at the report -- and I

1 appreciate that you've looked at it
2 subsequently -- you will see that it
3 talks about, as you've said yourself, a
4 situation of actual -- an actual conflict
5 of interest existing, which the ombudsman
6 comes to the conclusion that there
7 wasn't, according to him at the time.

8 What is not clear from the report,
9 if you will, is whether or not the 10 ombudsman looked at that second part of 11 what you were saying that the Board
12 Subcommittee deals with, which is not 13 only just the conflict of interest or the 14 appearance of a conflict of interest.

15 Was that an issue for you, perhaps,
16 that required --

17 THE WITNESS: Well, we had
18 previously, if I -- as I mentioned,
19 earlier in the year, we had looked at all
20 of the statements made by the Board
21 members, including Mr. Silber and
22 Mr. Disspain, and concluded there wasn't
23 actual, potential, or perceived conflicts
24 of interest.

25 And until that time, from earlier in

1 the year, I think it was in 2000, until 2 that time, that matter had not come to
3 the New gTLD for any discussion. There
4 was no reason to look into it.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

6 What about subsequently, then, in --
7 in what you refer to in your statement as 8 June 4, 2013, because this is the second
9 time now that the issue is coming up?
10 Did you do anything different when the 11 issue came up the second time?

12 THE WITNESS: Before the second
13 time, remember that the -- both -- all
14 members have resubmitted again an annual 15 statement. And both Mr. Disspain and 16 Mr. Silber had disclosed all of their 17 professional relationships, and there was 18 no -- no change in their status --

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

20 THE WITNESS: -- and, therefore, not
21 conflicted.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: I appreciate that
23 Board members would always file, if you
24 will, with all Board members on an annual 25 basis the statement that says, At the

1 time we're signing it, there's no issue.

2 But if and when something does come
3 up and -- a new issue does come up, would 4 the Board then not take it upon itself to 5 examine and perhaps go further into the 6 issue?

7 THE WITNESS: But it did. So when
8 it came up, and this is why when -- when 9 the NGBC [sic] then afterwards had 10 requested from the BGC to look into the 11 matter again, just to be extra cautious.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And what --
13 what exactly -- and this will take me to 14 Paragraph 7 of your statement -- what
15 exactly did the Subcommittee do?

16 At the end of your statement on
17 Paragraph 7, you say, After investigating
18 the matters, the Subcommittee concluded
19 that Chris Disspain and Mike Silber did
20 not have conflict of interest with 21 respect to DCA's application for .africa.

22 THE WITNESS: Um-hum.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: I take it from 24 your statement that you're referring to 25 both actual as well as an appearance of

1 conflict of interest?

2 THE WITNESS: Actual, potential and
3 perception.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And so what
5 did the Committee -- what did the 6 Subcommittee exactly do to arrive at its
7 conclusion?

8 THE WITNESS: Well, the Subcommittee
9 went back and reviewed facts, what's 10 available in front of them in terms of 11 information.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Can you give us an 13 idea what those would be, what was 14 available in front of you?

15 THE WITNESS: Well, for example, the 16 relationship disclosed, the -- I suppose,
17 if I remember, the allegations made
18 against them. And we looked at the 19 relationship between both of them and 20 the .africa application, and we found no
21 reason to -- to conclude that there is,
22 you know, any real or potential or
23 perceived conflict.

24 In the case of Mr. Disspain, as 25 mentioned in my statement, any -- any

1 relationship that happened between one of
2 the affiliates of auDA -- and which I
3 think is called AusRegistry -- and
4 UniForum SA happened so far in the past,
5 even before the applications were made,
6 that the situation was so attenuated, in 7 terms of the nature, in terms of 8 contents, in terms of financial interests
9 or anything, that there was no way we --
10 we -- we could find that Mr. Disspain,
11 for example, had any potential or -- or 12 actual or perceived conflict.

13 In the case of Mr. Silber, we looked 14 at the relationship he had on -- as 15 member -- nonexecutive member of the 16 Board of ZADNA, who has an arm's-length
17 relationship with this organization
18 called UniForum SA. They -- they provide 19 services -- that kind of services for 20 other -- other organization; ZADNA
21 happened to be one of them. And the fact
22 that they apply for .africa doesn't
23 benefit in any way or form or shape,
24 financially or any way, Mr. Silber.

25 And, therefore, we concluded that

1           during those times when you were with
2           bank, when you were with the former
3           entity not called Accenture at the time?

4                     Did you have any experience during 5           those past jobs with conflict of 6           interests?

7                     THE WITNESS:   On the Board that I
8           served on, there was always, you know,
9           conflicts issue and conflicts interest.
10          And we all had to conform to make sure
11          that we were -- that we applied conflict
12          of interest policies, sure.

13                    ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:   So you have 14          been participating in analysis of 15          conflict of interest and investigations,
16          perhaps, and decisions over potential
17          conflict of interest, or was, in other 18          words, your work at ICANN kind of new to 19          you?

20                    THE WITNESS:   I would not say it's 21          new, but I cannot recall individual
22          instances to answer your question very
23          specifically.  I'm sorry.  It's so far
24          back.

25                    ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:   Okay.

1           In your statement -- and I come back
2           to one of the questions that the Chair
3           asked you. When I read Paragraph 7 and 4           when I read the word "investigating," to 5           me -- of course, I'm not an English
6           speaker -- but, to me, "investigation" is 7           quite a strong word.

8           So it means, to me, a proactive
9           activity. So you go out and you find for 10          yourself.

11          So if I am correct, you answered the 12          Chair that you didn't ask either
13          Mr. Disspain nor Mr. Silber to appear
14          before the Committee?

15          THE WITNESS: I don't recall.

16          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You don't
17          recall?

18          THE WITNESS: I don't recall.

19          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Well, if you
20          had called them in, you would recall, no?

21          THE WITNESS: I don't recall.

22          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: When was 23          that? When was the investigation taking 24          place?

25          THE WITNESS: In 2012.

1           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Three
2 years ago. That far away.

3           Do you do a lot of conflicts in the 4 Subcommittee?

5           THE WITNESS: Whenever -- I mean,
6 what typically happens if -- if a
7 director of the Board feels that they
8 have a conflict of interest or disclosed
9 something, they -- the process is they
10 disclose it to general counsel, general
11 counsel then informs the Board Governance
12 Committee, and the Board Governance
13 Committee asks us to investigate.

14           So that's -- that's the process.

15           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So,
16 in other words, the only way in which the 17 Subcommittee would start an investigation
18 would be if the person who is supposed to 19 have a conflict says it is a potential
20 conflict? So if somebody does not 21 disclose anything, then nobody does
22 anything?

23           THE WITNESS: Well, in that case, we 24 did, because somebody other than the two
25 has raised the issue, another Board

1 member. So we took it very seriously and
2 reinvestigated the issue.

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Um-hum.

4 THE WITNESS: So if any of the Board
5 members do not declare, then there's no
6 reason to go and investigate. But if
7 there's somebody from -- from the Board,
8 in that case, or there's any issue that
9 was brought to us, we would investigate.
10 And in that case, we have.

11 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: But what did
12 you do exactly?

13 I'm not entirely satisfied with the 14 way you described your, quote/unquote,
15 investigation. Again, investigating
16 something means really having proactive
17 activity, which I didn't hear from you
18 very clearly.

19 THE WITNESS: What we -- what we 20 normally do is we -- I explained the 21 process, and I said --

22 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: But I would
23 prefer -- I would really prefer you to be 24 specific on this particular case, because 25 the general rules we understand. There's

1 the policy, there's the Subcommittee
2 saying something. Let's be precise on 3 this particular case.

4 THE WITNESS: Normally, we would
5 have interviewed them. I can't remember.
6 That's all. I mean, I'm just really --
7 really not trying to not answer the
8 question.

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. And 10 you didn't ask Ms. Bekele to come in and 11 discuss with you?

12 THE WITNESS: No; but we did ask the 13 Board member who was concerned, who 14 expressed concern to come, and we 15 interviewed him. That I remember very
16 well.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Who was
18 that?

19 THE WITNESS: One of our Board
20 members. I mentioned earlier that when
21 we were in Durban, in the opening speech,
22 a member of .za thanked a couple of 23 members of the Board for their help.

24 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Was it
25 Disspain and Silber in those thanks?

1 THE WITNESS: No; it was Disspain
2 and another Board member who has nothing
3 to do with the issue with .africa.

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So Disspain
5 was thanked by --

6 THE WITNESS: Indeed, yes --

7 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

8 THE WITNESS: -- he was thanked.

9 All right?

10 So that Board member said he
11 remembered the ombudsman report and not 12 finding conflicted.

13 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And Durban
14 was when?

15 THE WITNESS: Durban was July 15th,
16 2013.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

18 So that's after what you did -- now,
19 I'm lost in the dates. Because here, in 20 your declaration, we only have two dates.
21 It's October 2012 and 4 June 2013.

22 So Durban is after all of that, but 23 you don't have any declaration about
24 that.

25 MR. LEVEE: I'm sorry. It's the

1 next --

2 THE WITNESS: Sorry.

3 Yes, Durban happened after June the 4 4th.

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess, in your
7 statement, Mr. Chalaby, it's Paragraph 7,
8 was that when you say, Some weeks after 9 June 4th? Is that -- is that the 10 reference?

11 THE WITNESS: Yes. Some weeks after
12 June 4th, NGPC vote accepting GAC
13 advice the claim of Mike Silber and 14 Chris Disspain potential conflict of 15 interest was raised. So this is --

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: That's the second
17 incident that you were talking about?

18 THE WITNESS: Yes.

19 -- so that was raised in -- in 20 Durban by a member of the Board who was 21 concerned that he heard in the opening
22 speech -- that he originally thought that 23 in the opening speech -- that person had 24 thanked both Mike Silber and
25 Chris Disspain and --

1           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Now, the two
2 of them were mentioned?

3           THE WITNESS: But he was wrong,
4 because we went to the script, and he
5 accepted afterwards that Mike Silber was
6 not mentioned. So he wasn't -- indeed,
7 it was -- the transcript of the speech
8 showed that he didn't mention
9 Mike Silber, okay?

10          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

11          THE WITNESS: So -- so what happened
12 then is, because of that, we decided,
13 okay, to do two things: one is to ask
14 members of the NGPC to reconfirm and
15 reaffirm that when they voted on the 4th
16 of June, they had -- they were not
17 conflicted. Everybody said -- said this,
18 including Mr. Silber and including
19 Mr. Disspain.

20                 And in addition to that, we were not 21 satisfied with the NGPC. We asked our 22 Governance Committee to go back and
23 investigate again and look into the facts
24 again.

25                 The Board Governance Committee

1 investigated and asked the question, Were
2 they there in the meeting? I do not
3 remember, but I do remember that we did
4 ask the Board member who was concerned to 5 come in, and we discussed with him and
6 interviewed him and asked him about, you
7 know, what is his concern.

8 And then we continued our
9 investigation based on facts available to
10 us, and we concluded that there was no
11 new evidence and no new facts for both
12 Mr. Silber and Mr. Disspain to be either
13 conflicted or potential or perceived.

14 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So
15 you can't be more precise than what you
16 are now, I guess.

17 Okay. So Mr. Silber, what was his 18 exact position at the time?

19 And you answered one question by the 20 Chair by saying that they did exactly the 21 same declarations again, so nothing was 22 changed.

23 But in between the declarations, the 24 .africa controversy, if I may take that
25 word, was blowing up. So, in fact, there

1           were some factual changes between the
2           different iterations of the Board
3           members.

4           So perhaps they didn't declare any
5           different facts on their personal life,
6           but the .africa -- I'll repeat --
7           controversy was actually very different
8           from one declaration to the other.

9           Could that have triggered a
10          different analysis for their own
11          position?

12          THE WITNESS: Well, let's look back
13          on the timing, so make sure we're talking
14          about exactly the same time.

15          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Yeah.

16          THE WITNESS: So the March 12th,
17          2012, this is when the first summary of 18          the statement of interest of the Board
19          was put on the ICANN Web site. And this 20          is where we've seen the -- anything that 21          was disclosed by Mr. Disspain and 22          Mr. Silber, right?

23          After that -- when was it? I'm
24          looking at some time frames here.

25          In July of that year, right, the

1 letters from Sophia Bekele came, as well
2 as in October. At that time, the NGPC
3 had not looked at or had not been
4 contemplating any discussion on .africa.

5 The ombudsman took the matter, and
6 the ombudsman concluded there was no
7 conflict.

8 After the ombudsman concluded that,
9 there was a second summary of statement,
10 which had more details in it than the 11 previous one. And that summary was there
12 and, frankly, all the details were there,
13 but none of them showed any difference.
14 It's just a bit more detail on the 15 existing one just to -- there was nothing
16 more than just more detailed explanation
17 of their position and relationship.

18 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. That
19 I think I understood, and you said it
20 already --

21 THE WITNESS: Okay.

22 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- and I'm
23 fine with that --

24 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

25 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- what I'm

1 saying is that when you analyze a
2 conflict of interest, you don't analyze
3 the conflict of interest only with what
4 is declared by the person who is supposed
5 to be in conflict or who is -- for whom
6 we are asking whether there is conflict;
7 you analyze this on the background of
8 facts.

9 And the facts of the situation with 10 .africa -- because -- am I correct to 11 think that the only reason why there was 12 a question whether some conflict of 13 interest existed is because there was --
14 there may have been a link with the 15 .africa discussion?

16 That's the only reason; is that
17 correct?

18 THE WITNESS: Possibly, yeah --

19 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Yeah.

20 THE WITNESS: -- you talk about 21 facts. What I'm not -- what has not been 22 performed --

23 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: The
24 circumstances --

25 THE WITNESS: -- but there are no

1 facts. There are no new facts or
2 additional facts.

3 So I'd like to know what facts has
4 been brought to the table that both
5 Silber and Disspain had not disclosed.

6 What are these facts?

7 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: What I'm
8 saying to you is that the conflict of 9 interest must be analyzed on the 10 background -- I don't know how to say
11 that. Should I speak French? -- it's on 12 the background of the situation at the 13 certain moment.

14 So you -- you have exactly the 15 same -- you know, I'm
16 Catherine Kessedjian. I'm a professor at 17 the University, plus an arbitrator, plus,
18 plus, plus. This never changes. This is 19 always the facts concerning me.

20 But my conflict of interest on Day 1
21 may be completely different with
22 Day 10, because between Day 1 and Day 10,
23 there is a string of events that have 24 occurred. And, therefore, exactly the 25 same circumstances which are mine, and in

1           that particular case, it's Disspain and
2           Silber, looked at through the lens of the 3           change of circumstances may indeed
4           trigger a different analysis.

5                     Am I more clear?

6                     THE WITNESS: You are clear.

7                     But in that instance, it did not --
8           it did not trigger a -- different facts.
9           But I understand your point.

10                    And as a result, because of the 11           circumstances, when we had an NGPC
12           meeting after the 4th of June, we brought 13           the issue to the NGPC and went through 14           and explained the circumstances, and 15           asked each Board member to talk again
16           about their position and whether they are 17           conflicted and whether they feel, given 18           the circumstances that you have 19           mentioned, they are conflicted. But they 20           were not.

21                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Can I
22           interrupt a little bit here?

23                    ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Yes, please.

24                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Excuse me,
25           please.

1           There is a new fact. The ombudsman
2           says it is clearly apparent from the
3           records examined that the two Board
4           members have not participated in any
5           decision-making about .africa. Indeed,
6           there's been little discussion; is my
7           view, it's premature, et cetera.

8           Well, the new fact is, now, these 9           two Board members are participating in 10          .africa discussions, decisions, right?

11          THE WITNESS: Correct.

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So I'm
13          wondering why we didn't go back to the 14          ombudsman.

15          But there is something -- there is 16          something new that may change the 17          analysis, isn't there?

18          THE WITNESS: If they had --

19          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: If the 20          ombudsman -- now, they're participating
21          in the decision.

22          THE WITNESS: They are
23          participating. But as far as the -- the 24          Subcommittee had determined before -- and 25          I'll go back to the point that they

1 didn't have any potential or perceived
2 conflict. The fact that --

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The
4 Subcommittee or the ombudsman?

5 THE WITNESS: The Board Governance
6 Committee --

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

8 THE WITNESS: -- had determined
9 before that they had no conflict.

10 So -- and especially in their second
11 set of statement after all the letters
12 that came from Sophia, and the ombudsman
13 looked at that.

14 So what happened is when the time of 15 the discussion came for the NGPC, we 16 looked at the GAC advice; we looked at 17 the response that DCA has made; we looked 18 at the module. And I agree with you, we 19 did not -- in the 4th of June meeting, we 20 did not discuss or ask anybody to confirm 21 whether they're conflicted or not.

22 But subsequent to that, in another
23 meeting just a few weeks later, we had a
24 meeting, the NGPC, and the issue was 25 raised. And we said, The circumstances

1 are that there is the following
2 happening. Could you please go back and
3 reexamine the situation and please
4 confirm whether you are conflicted or
5 not?

6 So everybody confirmed they were not
7 conflicted, particularly the two
8 gentlemen. This was not sufficient.

9 We then -- the NGPC asked the Board
10 Governance Committee and, through it, the 11 Subcommittee on Ethics to look into the 12 situation one more time. They looked at 13 the situation one more time, and there
14 was nothing -- there were no new facts
15 other than they were --

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Now,
17 they're doing something.

18 THE WITNESS: -- no new facts in 19 terms of their conflict. There was a
20 fact that they were there when there was 21 a vote, but given that they're not
22 conflicted --

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. I
24 understand.

25 Excuse me.

1 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: No, no.

2 Thank you, Bill. That's very useful.

3 Am I correct that the Governance
4 Committee has records and minutes and
5 everything is published, I guess, on the 6 Internet, on ICANN Internet? Is that
7 your answer to the Chair's question
8 earlier?

9 THE WITNESS: I believe the minutes
10 of the --

11 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: The
12 Governance Committee?

13 THE WITNESS: Yeah, yeah.

14 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Now, I'm 15 asking you for the Subcommittee on 16 Ethics.

17 Are there records, minutes? Are 18 they public?

19 THE WITNESS: There are records, but
20 I don't believe they are public.

21 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So ICANN
22 says in its policy of 2012 -- and I'm 23 just quoting from memory, because I've 24 read that several times -- that it is its 25 objective to actually obey by the highest

1 standards of ethics.

2 But the work of the Subcommittee on
3 Ethics, which is basically the only
4 committee dealing with those issues, are
5 not public; is that correct?

6 THE WITNESS: Well, I need to -- I
7 mean, all the discussion --

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: In your --

9 THE WITNESS: -- no, no -- the
10 reason is all the discussion happens
11 under client-attorney privilege with 12 lawyers. So I don't know if I can answer
13 that question in a satisfactory way for 14 you.

15 I need to ask --

16 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Who's client
17 attorney --

18 THE WITNESS: We had general counsel
19 in the meeting as the discussions are 20 held --

21 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You mean of
22 the Subcommittee?

23 THE WITNESS: Of the Subcommittee,
24 yeah.

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess --

1           MR. LEVEE:  If I could just
2           explain -- I'm not going to answer
3           anything for the witness -- I had told
4           the witness when an issue came up
5           relating to privilege that he should
6           identify it.

7           As he just testified, the general
8           counsel is in these meetings, and that's 9           the reason that the meeting minutes are 10          privileged.  So I can't just publish them
11          because they would otherwise be waiving
12          --

13          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:  Let's go
14          back to you, Mr. Chalaby, please.

15          You said there are three members in 16          the Subcommittee on Ethics.  So it's 17          you -- who are the two others?

18          THE WITNESS:  They're not
19          Chris Disspain or Mike Silber.

20          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:  I love
21          you're aware of certain questions.

22          THE WITNESS:  Would you like me --

23          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:  Could you be 24          positive?  Tell us the names.

25          Who are the other members, or at

1 that time?

2 THE WITNESS: Ray Plzak and
3 Bill Graham.

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And they
5 were the same two at the time that we are 6 discussing here, 2012 to 2013?

7 THE WITNESS: I believe so.

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Now,
9 we just learned from the counsel of ICANN
10 that the general counsel of ICANN attend
11 your meetings.

12 What's his function there?

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess the
14 question is he attends -- the general
15 counsel attends both the Governance
16 Committee meetings, correct --

17 THE WITNESS: I'm talking about the 18 Ethics Committee meeting.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- as well as the
20 Subcommittee --

21 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That was my
22 question, the Subcommittee.

23 THE WITNESS: Yes.

24 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: But what was
25 his function? Why does he attend?

1 THE WITNESS: Well, he brings the
2 facts to us. So . . .

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I don't
4 understand.

5 THE WITNESS: So when there is an
6 issue of conflict, right --

7 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So you're
8 not doing anything yourself. All the 9 members of the Subcommittee are just 10 expecting other people to bring things to 11 you. You're not proactive?

12 THE WITNESS: No. They put the data
13 in front of us, and then we are proactive
14 in terms of discussing, analyzing,
15 investigating -- in many cases, we 16 question people.

17 In that instance, we questioned one
18 of the Board members. We looked at the 19 cross records. We do.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess the
21 question is in terms of the -- the work
22 that the Subcommittee does, it does this
23 work in the presence of the general
24 counsel, correct?

25 THE WITNESS: Yes.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: Is it always the
2 general counsel?

3           THE WITNESS: Yes.

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

5           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: A person?

6           THE WITNESS: Yes.

7           PRESIDENT BARIN: So I believe what
8 you also said is that the general counsel
9 comes to you, which is the Subcommittee
10 members, with the facts, correct?

11          THE WITNESS: Right.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN: You look at those 13 facts and you reach your decisions?

14          THE WITNESS: But in addition -- and 15 I was not able to answer that question in 16 that particular instance -- we interview
17 the Board members when there's a conflict
18 issue.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: But if I
20 understand correctly, you didn't
21 interview either Mr. Disspain or 22 Mr. Silber in this case.

23                 That's what you told me?

24          THE WITNESS: I said I cannot
25 recall.

1 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Go ahead.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Does the general
3 counsel also get involved in the 4 discussions that you have in respect to
5 whether or not there is a conflict?

6 THE WITNESS: No.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: Does he express
8 any opinions with respect to --

9 THE WITNESS: No. No.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: And the facts that 11 are put before you, do you verify those 12 facts in any way, other than what is put 13 before you by the general counsel?

14 THE WITNESS: Well, the only way we
15 verify them is by asking further
16 questions of -- of the -- of the 17 directors who are subject to a conflict.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

19 I have one other question for you in 20 terms of the policy that you use.
21 Section -- would you show this section to
22 Mr. Chalaby --

23 MR. LEVEE: Back on conflict policy?

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah, conflict
25 policy, Section 1.3.

1 MR. LEVEE: Okay.

2 MS. ZERNIK: Can you give me the
3 exhibit number --

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: Pardon me?

5 MS. ZERNIK: -- I don't have it.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: It's C-52 --

7 MS. ZERNIK: Yeah.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- and it's
9 Section 1.3.

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Could you
11 enlarge it a little bit?

12 MR. LEVEE: Yeah, we'll make it
13 larger.

14 Here you go.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Have you seen this
16 provision before, Mr. Chalaby?

17 THE WITNESS: Yes.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Has it ever been 19 part of any discussions you've had as 20 part of the -- either the Committee or
21 the Subcommittee?

22 THE WITNESS: I don't remember. I
23 can't answer that question.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Do you understand
25 what it says?

1 THE WITNESS: More or less, yes.

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: "More or
3 less." Good question -- good answer.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess what I
5 wanted to just sort of get a sense from 6 you is the section seems to say that the 7 conflict of interest policy is intended
8 to supplement but not to replace -- and 9 now emphasis on "any applicable laws
10 governing conflict of interest applicable
11 to ICANN."

12 Do you know what that would be?

13 THE WITNESS: It means what it says,
14 no?

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes, but --

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's also 17 true.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- admittedly, we 19 have a problem with it, so . . .

20 THE WITNESS: Go ahead.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: It's a simple
22 question. If you don't, you don't. I
23 just wanted to know whether you had been 24 told or explained what that means; in 25 other words, the standard against which

1           you are making your decisions?

2           THE WITNESS: Well, the standard
3           which we're making decisions, as I
4           mentioned, is possibly the highest 5           standard, which is actual, potential and 6           perceived conflict.

7           PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

8           THE WITNESS: I mean, is there a
9           higher standard than that?

10          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I don't
11          know.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN: I'm not sure I'm 13          going to get into a debate with you as to 14          whether or not that is a standard.

15          But I guess the question is, Is that 16          something that had come up in discussions
17          with the general counsel? And I
18          assume --

19          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Don't waive
20          the privilege.

21          THE WITNESS: What I do understand
22          is those three definitions of conflict
23          are consistent with local laws. I'm not
24          an expert in local laws, but I understand
25          that that is the case.

1 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Did you say
3 "global law" or "local law"?

4 THE WITNESS: Local law.

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Local law?

6 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: As part of the
8 discussions you had as Subcommittee
9 members, was there ever an issue or an
10 item that came up that you required, I
11 guess, advice from the general counsel?

12 THE WITNESS: As part of the 13 discussion in the meeting, general
14 counsel is silent, does not interfere
15 with the discussion.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: No. I guess my 17 question was: Assume for a moment you're 18 having a meeting and some facts are 19 presented to you. You look at those 20 facts, and then a question comes up that
21 you, as Subcommittee members, do not know
22 the answer or do not know how to
23 approach. Perhaps it's a legal question.
24 Perhaps it has legal issues involved in
25 it.

1           Would you then ask the general
2           counsel to -- to advise you on those
3           questions?

4           THE WITNESS: I don't know if I can
5           answer that question.

6           MR. LEVEE: Yes, you can.

7           THE WITNESS: The answer is that I'm 8           trying to remember if there's -- because 9           the material presented to us is detailed
10          enough. And then we ask -- we interview
11          the -- the Board of Directors and we find 12          out more and more, and we dig and dig and 13          find out more facts.

14          If there's a question for 15          clarification rather than opinion,
16          whether this person's conflicted or not,
17          we probably would ask. But we will not 18          ask general counsel his opinion whether 19          that person's conflicted or not, just 20          clarification on that particular
21          relationship or this information, is this 22          correct, is this not correct.

23          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL
BY HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: They've asked all my questions except for a couple.

I'm looking at the ombudsman's reasoning, and he says, There's, of course, an important distinction between actual bias and apparent bias; but underlying this is a need for some action by the members.

Okay. This goes to my other question that there is now action by the members.

What was done to -- from what I read from your declaration, what you've said is that you determined there were no actual conflicts of interest.

What did you do to see if there was any apparent conflicts of interest?

That's always the harder part where I come from.

And so what analysis was done?

1 THE WITNESS: When the Committee
2 went back, analyzed the relationship that
3 Mr. Silber and Mr. Disspain had, in terms
4 of the work and the professional
5 relationship, and evaluated whether there
6 is a potential to it .

7 So as I explained, for example, with
8 Mr. Silber, he's the CEO of auDA. AuDA
9 has a relationship with AusRegistry in 10 terms of they license them to run their 11 operation.

12 They did the consulting work for 13 UniForum SA in the past, way before the 14 applications were -- were announced or 15 applied for. And we investigated the 16 story and identified that it was so
17 attenuated that they couldn't possibly
18 constitute an apparent or a potential --

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It was a
20 long -- I -- I -- me reading the 21 briefs --

22 THE WITNESS: I believe so -- sorry?

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- me
24 reading the briefs, I understand that the 25 company that Mr. Silber is treasurer of,

1           their conduct [verbatim] was administered
2           by UniForum.

3                     Does that make sense to you?

4                     THE WITNESS:  Yes.

5                     HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  Yeah.  If
6           it's still happening at the time of the 7           conflict, then if UniForum is
8           administering the contract, is it
9           possible that Mr. -- Mike Silber could 10          have some impact if he votes against 11          UniForum?

12                    THE WITNESS:  Not in that instance.
13                    And I'll explain why.

14                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  Okay.

15                    THE WITNESS:  He's a nonexecutive
16          member of the Board of ZADNA.  Like many 17          what is called "country code
18          administrators," they don't have the 19          facility themself to run the computers
20          and the administer thing, so they 21          outsource this to other organizations.

22                    There are other organizations that 23          specialize in that and provide that
24          service to many others.

25                    So ZADNA has licensed, or given

1 arm's-length contract, to UniForum SA to
2 do this administration. It just happened
3 that -- and first of all, it just 4 happened that the UniForum SA applied for
5 .africa.

6 That application in no way would
7 benefit Mr. Disspain at all. And we felt
8 that because of the arm's-length
9 relationship, right, that -- that there
10 was no perception of conflict or a
11 potential one.

12 So that's our analysis. We went 13 into this -- a lot of depth and -- and 14 understood that because of this 15 arm's-length relationship and because
16 there's no financial interest at all,
17 there was no real link between Mr. Silber
18 and the .africa application.

19 So we reached that conclusion
20 ourselves.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. And
22 on the -- on -- in your declaration, you
23 say, Some weeks after June 4, 2013, you
24 learned about another potential
25 conflict -- or complaint of potential

1 conflict of interest.

2 What did you understand that
3 complaint to be? Was it or specific or 4 was it general?

5 THE WITNESS: Excuse me. Which
6 paragraph?

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm looking
8 at Paragraph 7 --

9 THE WITNESS: Yes, Paragraph 7.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- and the 11 first sentence, Potential conflict of 12 interest was again raised.

13 Maybe you answered it before, but I
14 wasn't sure.

15 What -- what was the exact conflict
16 of interest that was raised?

17 THE WITNESS: I did mention that
18 while -- when we were -- and ICANN had a 19 meeting in Durban, South Africa. In the 20 opening speech, a member -- because we
21 were hosted by the African community, a
22 man thanked two members of the Board.
23 And those two members, one of them was 24 Mr. Disspain, and the other one was 25 another Board member, George Sadowsky.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

2 THE WITNESS: That Board member
3 thought that he also mentioned
4 Mike Silber, but he did not mention
5 Mike Silber.

6 All right?

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Got that.

8 THE WITNESS: So that Board member
9 came to me and went to general counsel
10 and said, Look, I heard -- everybody
11 heard it in the opening speech. I am
12 concerned that maybe we ought to look
13 into this again. And the thing we did is 14 we looked into this again.

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. The 16 first time you got the ombudsman
17 involved.

18 What was the reason you didn't get
19 the ombudsman involved in the second
20 conflict?

21 THE WITNESS: Because there were no
22 suspected -- no new -- other than the 23 voting, no new data relating to those two 24 individuals. But we wanted to make sure
25 to go back and check this.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Now, we
2 have two different individuals, though,
3 you're checking on. You're not checking
4 on Mr. Silber anymore, because he wasn't
5 mentioned in the speech --

6 THE WITNESS: No, but we -- we took 7 extra caution, and we checked him as 8 well. We checked the two that were 9 mentioned in the opening speech as well
10 as Mr. Silber again.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

12 That's all I have right now.

13 (Pause.)

14 - - -

15 EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD
16 BY ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN

17 - - -

18 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I don't
19 understand why you have a written
20 statement -- and perhaps Mr. LeVeé is 21 going to tell me that I'm wrong -- but 22 why in your recent -- in your written
23 statement you don't mention the date when
24 you reopened the issue after Durban?

25 I don't see anything in your written

1 statement about that.

2 So you are telling us now orally
3 that you reopened the issue, but -- I
4 don't know. To me, it's very unclear.
5 So if you want to clarify anything, I
6 would be grateful.

7 THE WITNESS: Yes, I'm happy to 8 clarify.

9 I don't know why the date is not 10 there. I'm sorry. The date perhaps
11 should have been there.

12 But the dates are as follows: It's
13 4th of June, the NGPC met for the advice,
14 right; then July the 17th -- sorry --
15 July the 15th in Durban, the Board met --

16 MR. ALI: Excuse me. If I may 17 interrupt. I'm sorry, Mr. Chalaby.

18 Mr. President, just for our 19 information, Mr. Chalaby is looking at 20 some notes, and he seems to have a
21 document there. If we can --

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: I was going to ask
23 --

24 THE WITNESS: No problem. It's just
25 a timeline, the same as you showed this

1 morning, but in my own work. If you want
2 it, you can put it as an exhibit --

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: We don't
4 need it right now. You can see it at a
5 break.

6 MR. ALI: I will take a copy later.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Just make
8 it available to him at a break.

9 THE WITNESS: Definitely. I was
10 just going -- I've reconstructed this
11 from all the documentation here
12 (indicating), basically, that --

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

14 THE WITNESS: -- that's all.

15 So if -- let me read from it, and
16 then you can -- so June the 4th, the NGPC
17 meeting met and accepted the GAC advice;
18 June the 14th, the letter from
19 Sophia Bekele came regarding the NGPC
20 decision; June the 19th, DCA submits a
21 reconsideration request; July 15th, in
22 Durban, the Board member in Durban raised
23 questions re: the opening remark, which I
24 mentioned to you; July 15th to July the 25 17th, the NGPC meeting met, we discussed

1           what happened then, and we asked every
2           Board member to confirm again, which they
3           did, the conflict of interest; then in 4           September 25, the Ethics and Conflicts
5           Subcommittee met regarding
6           reinvestigating what was said in -- in --
7           in Durban.

8                     And not only we investigated that 9           Mr. Disspain was thanked, but we also 10          investigated Mike Silber, who was not
11          thanked in the opening speech.

12                    And then the Subcommittee made a
13          recommendation to the Board Governance
14          Committee, and the Board Governance
15          Committee so asked the NGPC on behalf of 16          the Board to ratify it.

17                    My apology that it was not in 18          the -- I -- I did it in the last couple
19          days, frankly.

20                    PRESIDENT BARIN: Is that the only 21          document that you have that you've been 22          referring to?

23                    THE WITNESS: Yeah. I've been 24          referring to my declaration. And I've 25          not referred to, although I have it here,

1 is the ICANN Response to DCA Memorial on
2 the Merits. I have no other documents.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: That's the only
4 other document?

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's the
6 only new document. We'll get it at a
7 break. That's fine.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: So no more
9 questions at this stage from the Panel.

10 Thank you, Mr. Chalaby.

11 I would suggest, but I'm open to 12 whichever way you wish to proceed, that
13 Mr. Ali start, and then you can finish
14 up. It perhaps makes more sense.

15 So, Mr. Ali, I would ask you to --
16 if you would, to ensure that we remain
17 within the confines of what you had 18 agreed to as counsel and also the 19 procedural orders that you ask questions
20 that came out as a result of the 21 questions that the Panel asks.

22 MR. ALI: Without the benefit of a
23 LiveNote, I will strain my memory as best
24 I can to ensure that I stay --

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: If I see that

1           maybe it's going to a place where it
2           shouldn't, then I will -- I will let you
3           know.

4           MR. ALI:    Okay.

5           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  I'm sure
6           counsel --

7           MR. ALI:  Give me some elasticity.
8           Your memory is -- there's a number of 9           interesting issues that have been raised
10          by Mr. Chalaby.  And I just think that we 11          ought to get a little bit more in depth
12          with them.

13                                   - - -

14                   EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF CLAIMANT

15                                   DOTCONNECTAFRICA TRUST

16                                   - - -

17          BY MR. ALI:

18           Q.       If you would just excuse me just a
19          second, Mr. Chalaby.  I know this is -- it's rude
20          for us to look over a computer screen.  So if you
21          don't mind, let me put this over here.

22           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:  Could you
23          put it on the floor?  Because then, I
24          cannot see him --

25           MR. ALI:  There may be some

1 documents --

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That's fine,
3 then. That's fine. It's more important
4 that you see him than I see him.

5 MR. ALI: I thought it would be a
6 little bit rude if --

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: I suggest that you
8 put it down. Just put it down. And 9 then, if there's any documents that
10 Mr. Chalaby needs to see, we can show it
11 to him.

12 BY MR. ALI:

13 Q. Mr. Chalaby, as I understand it from 14 one of your responses to a question that was just 15 put to you, you have looked at various documents
16 in preparing for your testimony which led you to 17 create that timeline, correct?

18 A. Yes.

19 Q. Okay. And just within the context of 20 looking at all of those documents, nothing came up
21 that would have jogged your memory as to whether 22 or not you did interview Mr. Disspain and Silber?

23 A. As I mentioned, I don't recall that.

24 Q. Okay. Could you just take a look at 25 Paragraph 7 of your statement?

1 A. Yeah.

2 Q. So here in your statement, it says, In 3 addition, the NGPC asked the BGC to look into the 4 issue further.

5 Do you see that?

6 A. Yes.

7 Q. Now, you've been with ICANN since
8 2010; is that correct?

9 A. Correct.

10 Q. And you've been the head of the 11 New gTLD Program Committee, NGPC, since then; is 12 that right?

13 A. Yes.

14 Q. That's correct?

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Okay. And you've been head of the 17 Board Governance Committee since 2010 as well; is 18 that correct?

19 A. No, I'm not head of the Board
20 Governance Committee.

21 Q. I see.

22 So you're just on the Board Governance
23 Committee?

24 A. Uh-huh.

25 Q. But you are also on the Ethics

1 Subcommittee?

2 A. Indeed.

3 Q. Okay.

4 Now, when you say, here, The NGPC
5 asked the BGC, so that means the NGPC,
6 effectively meaning you, that is -- or it's some 7 sort of written communication from the NGPC to 8 the BGC to look into what you describe as the 9 issue further; namely, this question of conflict
10 that had been raised?

11 So the NGPC -- how does that happen?

12 A. Well, it happens -- I, on behalf of 13 the NGPC, would -- would call the Chair of the BGC
14 and tell him about it --

15 Q. Okay.

16 A. -- and -- yeah, go ahead.

17 Q. And who is that?

18 A. The Vice Chairman of ICANN,
19 Bruce Tonkin.

20 Q. So on this particular occasion, you
21 would have -- in your capacity as Chair of the -- 22 head of the NGPC, have contacted Mr. Tonkin by 23 phone and have told him that there was an issue
24 regarding a conflict of interest; is that correct?

25 A. We were all, I think, in -- in Durban

1 at the time when the discussion happened then
2 while -- or it was by phone.

3 Q. So you went to him and said, I think
4 there is an issue of conflict of interest?

5 A. I think, also, general counsel
6 probably brought it up to him as well.

7 Q. Okay. And there was nothing put in 8 writing by you or the general counsel, to the best
9 of your knowledge?

10 A. In this instance, I believe there was 11 nothing put in writing.

12 Q. And so you indicated that once the 13 matter goes from the BGC, it goes to a
14 subcommittee?

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. And that subcommittee met in Durban?

17 A. No.

18 Q. When did that subcommittee meet?

19 A. It met in September.

20 Q. So the Subcommittee -- so the issue of 21 the conflict of interest is raised, as you put it,
22 some weeks after the NGPC's vote accepting the GAC
23 advice?

24 A. Correct.

25 Q. And then, some weeks after that, the

1 Subcommittee on Conflicts meets? Just so we have
2 the timeline straight here.

3 A. Would you like a copy of this?

4 Q. Why don't you just tell me?

5 A. Well, I did say it, and I'll repeat it
6 again.

7 So the -- June the 4th, there was the 8 NGPC meeting, which is the first line, Some weeks
9 after. So some weeks after that, the NGPC -- two 10 things happened: one is the NGPC met in Durban,
11 right, and in Durban, we asked all the Board
12 members to reaffirm and reconfirm that they have 13 no conflict of interest --

14 Q. And this was because of that -- sorry
15 to interrupt, but just to be clear, this was 16 because of that event where somebody thanked 17 somebody?

18 A. Yes, and because a Board member
19 brought it up and because it's a serious -- when a 20 Board member brings it up, it's serious. We have 21 to take -- so we asked the NGPC members to 22 reconfirm their vote.

23 And then the NGPC --

24 Q. Sorry. To reconfirm their vote? I
25 thought you had said earlier to reconfirm that

1 they have no conflict.

2 A. Sorry. You're right, to reconfirm
3 they had no conflict at the time they voted.

4 Okay?

5 Q. Okay.

6 A. And then the NGPC, which is
7 well-documented, asked the BGC to look into it,
8 the Board Governance Committee. And the Board
9 Governance Committee asked the Subcommittee to 10 please take a look into it. The Subcommittee
11 looked into it on September the 25th.

12 Q. Okay. Thank you. That's very 13 helpful.

14 So September 25th, as I understand it,
15 the Subcommittee, which includes you --

16 A. Um-hum.

17 Q. -- receives information from the 18 general counsel, John Jeffrey?

19 A. Right.

20 Q. And as you put it, upon reviewing that 21 information, you dig and dig and dig.

22 So that's what you did on this
23 occasion as well?

24 A. Yes.

25 Q. Okay. But notwithstanding the fact

1 that you dag and dag and dag, you don't recall
2 whether or not you interviewed Mr. Silber and
3 Mr. Disspain?

4 A. No, I don't recall that. I mentioned
5 this several times.

6 Q. I just want to be clear. Perhaps 7 something somebody said might have jogged your 8 memory.

9 A. No.

10 Q. Okay.

11 So you've also testified to the effect
12 that you believe that the highest standard is 13 being applied by ICANN, and, to your mind, that 14 standard is actual, potential, or perceived
15 conflict.

16 Correct?

17 A. Yes.

18 Q. So could you give me an example of 19 what would constitute a conflict?

20 A. In those three terms?

21 Q. For each one.

22 Actual?

23 A. If I have a financial interest -- a
24 personal financial interest or gain in a -- in a
25 company that is applying for a new gTLD.

1 Q. So if you have an actual financial
2 interest.

3 What is a potential conflict of
4 interest?

5 A. If I know that I will become possibly
6 involved with one of these companies in the future
7 and I will have a financial interest.

8 Q. Okay. What is a perceived conflict?

9 A. If a perceived conflict of interest
10 is -- is not actual or potential, but other people
11 may perceive me as conflicted.

12 Q. Okay. And so these are the standards
13 that you are telling us were applied in the 14 context of the discussion that is taking place in 15 September 17th in the BGC Ethics Subcommittee,
16 right?

17 A. Yes.

18 Q. Applying those standards, if you had 19 concluded that there was a conflict of interest,
20 what effect would that have had on the NGPC vote
21 to approve the GAC advice?

22 A. It would have no effect.

23 Q. Sorry. Did you say "no effect"?

24 A. Let me explain.

25 Q. Uh-huh.

1           A.     In the NGPC meeting on the 4th of
2 June, there were nine voting members present. We 3 only needed seven to form a quorum and only five
4 to have a major -- a majority decision.

5                     So if even Mr. Disspain and Mr. Silber
6 were not voting, we will still have a majority
7 decision, and we still have a quorum.

8           Q.     I see.

9                     So, in effect -- I don't think you
10 answered my question, but we'll come back to that 11 in a second.

12                    But as I understand it -- let me ask
13 the question that is troubling me.

14                    Can you please answer my question,
15 What would have been the effect, if you had 16 determined there was a conflict of interest, on 17 the decision that had been taken on -- on 18 June 4th with respect to the GAC advice?

19           A.     Can you be more specific?

20           Q.     Well, I think I have been.

21                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I think he 22 answered it.

23                    MR. ALI: I think he did, too. I
24 just wanted to be sure we got -- that his 25 answer was the same.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I think you
2 said there were seven people there, you
3 disqualified two, there was still --
4 there was 11 there -- nine --

5 THE WITNESS: No, the nine --

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- and then
7 seven --

8 THE WITNESS: -- and then seven.
9 And we only needed five for a majority.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So 7-0. I
11 think that's what you said.

12 BY MR. ALI:

13 Q. Effectively, what you're telling us is 14 that this whole digging and digging, and this 15 discussion that took place with Mr. Tonkin and the 16 subsequent Subcommittee meeting that took place
17 several weeks later was essentially irrelevant;
18 isn't that correct?

19 A. You are saying that -- in my view,
20 it's not irrelevant to apply the Bylaws, and it's 21 not irrelevant if a member is conflicted to be 22 removed from the New gTLD Committee.

23 Q. So that was the purpose? You were 24 conducting these additional inquiries to make the 25 determination as to whether or not Mr. Disspain,

1 Mr. Silber or whomever else should be removed from
2 the Committee?

3 A. Indeed, if they are conflicted, they
4 should not be on the Committee.

5 Q. Okay. But that was the purpose of the 6 further inquiry because, otherwise, it didn't
7 really matter, which is what you just told us,
8 because of the nine and seven and five members who
9 would have been available in the quorum, correct?

10 A. At the time we had the discussion, it
11 was all about applying the conflict of interest
12 policy and whether they were conflicted or not.

13 Q. But it wouldn't have made any 14 difference with respect to the vote, correct?

15 A. Now that we look at the arithmetics,
16 yes; but at the time, it didn't matter. We had to 17 do the right thing. And if they were conflicted,
18 they would be removed. And if that had 19 consequences on the vote, then it had consequences
20 on the vote.

21 Q. And what would be those consequences?

22 A. As we look at it now, there would not 23 be. But we did not think -- that did not come in 24 our thinking at the time.

25 The most important thing was to apply

1 the conflict of interest policy and to make sure
2 they were not conflicted. And if they were, then
3 we would ask them not to be in the New gTLD
4 Committee, as we asked the Chairman and
5 Vice Chairman before. And we would not shy away
6 from doing that.

7 Q. But it would not have mattered with 8 respect to the vote that had already been taken,
9 correct?

10 A. I think we've gone through this
11 several times.

12 Q. Would you please answer my question?

13 A. Now that we're doing the math, the 14 answer is no.

15 Q. I see.

16 At the time, you didn't -- the math
17 didn't really matter to you?

18 A. The primary objective of that 19 discussion was to be sure that the conflict of 20 interest policy is applied, right, which would 21 lead to those people, full stop.

22 Q. I understand.

23 Let's move on to a different set of
24 questions.

25 Let's talk a little bit about

1 Mr. Silber, who -- Silber, who you discuss in 2 Paragraph 8 of your testimony.

3 So you say that Mr. Silber is a
4 nonexecutive director of the .za domain name
5 authority.

6 .za or .zed-a is the country code for
7 South Africa; is that correct?

8 A. Yes.

9 Q. And what does the .za domain name
10 authority do?

11 A. They administer the .za.

12 Q. They administer the .za.

13 And what does UniForum SA do with 14 respect to .za?

15 A. They have a contractual relationship 16 to actually run it, you know, with computers and 17 with processes, everything that they do.

18 Q. Okay. And do you know if what --
19 where is UniForum SA based?

20 A. I don't know. I'm not sure I can 21 answer this question.

22 Q. Because you don't know the nationality
23 of the company or the nationality of any of the 24 principals of UniForum SA?

25 A. No.

1 Q. Okay. That's fair enough.

2 So .za Domain Name Authority you
3 referred to as ZADNA; is that correct?

4 A. Yes.

5 Q. And in the context of your digging
6 with respect to the conflict of interest that 7 Mr. Silber and Mr. Disspain might have had, which 8 you ultimately determined they didn't have, did
9 you -- did you ascertain whether or not ZADNA had 10 endorsed the UniForum application for .africa?

11 A. No.

12 Q. Okay. Now, I'm going to -- it's 13 difficult now that we don't have the screen up
14 there --

15 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: We can put
16 it back if you want.

17 MR. ALI: I just want to look at 18 C-71. If we could pull that up, please.

19 There may be a couple of others.

20 (Pause.)

21 BY MR. ALI:

22 Q. So can you see C-71, sir?

23 A. Yeah.

24 Q. Okay. The top -- the top line, this 25 is a document -- this is an e-mail from -- I

1 believe that's Larika Gurnick to Mark McFadden --
2 sorry -- Larisa Gurnick. And it says, at the top
3 of the e-mail, Mark, I just learned from Ann that 4 there is a meeting taking place today at the 5 executive level to discuss .africa.

6 MS. ZERNIK: Is this C-71?

7 MR. ALI: This is C-71.

8 MR. LEVEE: On the first page?

9 MR. ALI: On the first page of C-71.

10 MR. LEVEE: Not the one we have.

11 MR. ALI: Maybe it's the second
12 page. I apologize.

13 I'll give you the Bates number.

14 It's 447.

15 MR. LEVEE: It's the second page.

16 MR. ALI: It's the second page.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: It's the second
18 page of C-71.

19 BY MR. ALI:

20 Q. It's the second page.

21 But the question really goes to -- to
22 what I've just read.

23 Do you know what she's referring to 24 when they say, "at the executive level to discuss 25 .africa"?

1 A. No.

2 MR. LEVEE: Mr. Chair, this would be
3 a good opportunity to say that this is 4 well beyond the scope of the questions.
5 And, of course, the witness is not copied
6 or addressed on the e-mail.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: I think that's a
8 fair comment.

9 MR. ALI: Okay. If I can just lay a
10 foundation.

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sure.

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Foundation
13 doesn't go beyond the scope.

14 MR. ALI: Well, he testified to the 15 fact that he's been with ICANN for 16 five years. He's been in the ICANN
17 leadership for five years.

18 I'm just asking him, as a point of 19 information within the context of his 20 role within ICANN, if he knows what they 21 mean by "an executive level" -- what is 22 the executive level meeting that takes
23 place. Would that have involved
24 Mr. Chalaby?

25 And I believe I should be entitled

1 to ask whether or not he was involved
2 in -- you know, what meetings he was
3 involved in.

4 MR. LEVEE: Still beyond the scope.

5 MR. ALI: He said he doesn't know,
6 so I'll leave it at that. But perhaps
7 the Panel may wish to explore that 8 further.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: It's a question,
10 Mr. LeVee, that, again, the Panel can
11 come back and ask also. I mean --

12 MR. LEVEE: I have no objection if 13 the Panel asks.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah.

15 So, Mr. Ali, you can ask your 16 question, but let's try and keep it --

17 MR. ALI: I'll move on.

18 If I may get some clarification from 19 the President, together with any guidance
20 that my friend Mr. LeVee would care to 21 provide.

22 Would it be permissible for me to
23 ask questions regarding the June 4th
24 meeting of the NGPC, which is referred to 25 in his statement?

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: You know, I'm
2           inclined to say yes, because I don't know
3           what question you're going to ask --

4           MR. ALI: Fair point.

5           PRESIDENT BARIN: -- so I will say
6           yes. And if something comes up, then
7           we'll deal with it.

8           MR. LEVEE: That's where I was 9           headed.

10          MR. ALI: Sure. Fair enough.

11          BY MR. ALI:

12           Q. Mr. Chalaby, there was -- there's a
13          meeting on June 4th of the NGPC at which the GAC
14          advice was unanimously accepted by the NGPC,
15          right?

16           A. There was a consensus advice by the 17          GAC, and the NGPC unanimously voted to accept the 18          GAC advice, yes.

19           Q. Okay. I believe it's disputed whether 20          it was consensus or not, but --

21           A. It was consensus advice, sir.

22           Q. Okay. That's your view.

23           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Well,
24          that's his testimony. So go on.

25          MR. ALI: Right.

1 BY MR. ALI:

2 Q. So did that meeting take place in
3 person or was it a telephonic meeting?

4 A. The 4th of June? I don't recall.

5 Q. And if there's a telephonic meeting,
6 is there a recording kept of that?

7 A. There is a scribe, definitely. There
8 is minutes -- minutes of the meeting.

9 Q. But there's a real-time transcript,
10 such as the one that's being taken now; is that
11 correct?

12 A. I suppose so. I'm not sure. But I
13 know there are minutes, and minutes are published.

14 Q. All right. And would those minutes
15 reflect who was present at that meeting?

16 A. It would, yeah.

17 Q. Do you recall if Heather Dryden
18 participated in that meeting?

19 A. Can we put the minutes and see who was
20 there?

21 You have to remember that we've had,
22 since the inception of the NGPC, over 70
23 meetings. I can't recall which individual.

24 But if we bring the minutes up as an
25 exhibit, then we will know immediately.

1 Q. I'm happy to oblige.

2 MR. ALI: I believe the one that you
3 need to pull up is C-114.

4 (Pause.)

5 BY MR. ALI:

6 Q. Could you just scroll through that and 7 see --

8 A. Can you go back?

9 (Whereupon, the witness mumbles under
10 breath reviewing the material
11 provided.)

12 BY MR. ALI:

13 Q. Let me just help you out so we can 14 save some time.

15 What we'll do is --

16 A. Heather Dryden was in attendance as an 17 observer of the Committee.

18 Q. And that's the role that the Chair of 19 the GAC plays, correct?

20 A. Yes.

21 Q. Okay. And at this meeting, there was 22 a discussion, obviously, regarding -- of some sort
23 regarding the consensus advice, as you put it,
24 from -- from the GAC, correct?

25 A. Go on.

1 Q. I asked you a question.

2 A. Can you repeat again?

3 Q. My question was, Do you recall whether 4 there was a discussion in advance of the vote on 5 whether or not to accept the GAC's consensus
6 advice?

7 A. Yes.

8 Q. And was this the only meeting at which 9 the .africa TLD application by DCA Trust was 10 discussed?

11 A. I don't remember. I know it was 12 discussed at that meeting, because there was the 13 GAC advice.

14 As I mentioned, we had over 70
15 meetings. I can't remember.

16 Q. Okay. Well, I'll just submit to you
17 that there was another meeting that took place on 18 the 8th of May -- and I'm happy to show you a
19 document confirming that -- at which you -- over 20 which you presided. And Ms. Dryden was also in 21 attendance as the GAC liaison at that meeting.

22 So there are two separate meetings
23 during which the DCA application was discussed:
24 one on 8th of May and the other one on 4th June.

25 Now, do you recall whether, at any

1 time, Ms. Dryden said anything about the DCA
2 application?

3 A. No, I don't recall.

4 Q. Do you recall whether anyone on
5 either -- at either meeting raised any questions
6 or issues about the fact that the AUC was using 7 the GAC or participating in the GAC in a manner
8 that would be detrimental to the interests of --
9 of DCA?

10 A. I don't recall.

11 Q. So you don't recall, but you don't
12 know whether anybody said anything or not?

13 A. I don't recall.

14 Q. That's good enough for me.

15 But it's certainly not in the minutes,
16 to the best of your recollection? You can look
17 at them both, if you like.

18 To the best of your recollection,
19 they're not -- nothing's said in the minutes?

20 A. Right. If they are in the minutes,
21 point them out to me.

22 Q. I'm putting to you there's nothing in 23 the minutes --

24 A. Okay.

25 Q. -- to that effect, so probably nobody

1 raised anything.

2 A. I don't remember.

3 Q. Just going back, one thing that is
4 sort of puzzling me a little bit -- you talked
5 about the different standards: actual, potential,
6 perceived.

7 So if -- if -- and you also told us
8 that you've held a number of different senior
9 positions: global executive committee member,
10 chairman of supervisory board, the board of 11 various companies.

12 If one of your companies or one of the 13 companies you were involved in, in an executive 14 position or even a managerial position, was 15 applying for a contract, responding to an RFP,
16 and you learned that the chairman of one of your 17 competitors or a senior executive of one of your 18 competitors was part of the review committee, how 19 would you react?

20 A. Actually, you lost my concentration
21 while you were speaking.

22 Can you repeat?

23 Q. I accept that. I think my question
24 wasn't very precise.

25 Let's assume for a second that --

1           A.     Can we talk about the case rather than 2     hypotheticals, please?

3           Q.     I think we can talk about a
4     hypothetical.

5                     I'm simply asking you on the basis of 6     your experience as a senior executive with -- as 7     a former partner of Accenture and someone who is 8     clearly a very sophisticated businessman if a
9     company in which you were involved was applying
10    for an RFP --

11          A.     A company I was involved? How is my 12    involvement --

13          Q.     Any involvement.

14          A.     -- what's the involvement? Explain.

15          Q.     You're the executive chairman of that 16    company. You are a partner of Accenture, and you
17    are applying for -- you're responding to an RFP.

18                     You've done that many times, correct?

19          A.     I'm responding to an RFP, okay.
20                     Correct.

21          Q.     You've done that many times?

22          A.     Keep going. Yes.

23          Q.     Okay. And in responding to that RFP, 24    you learn that a competitor has been awarded the 25    RFP --

1 A. Um-hum.

2 Q. -- but that a senior executive of that
3 competitor was on the Board -- the Review Board
4 for the RFP.

5 What action would you take?

6 A. So that senior executive of that
7 company was part of the decision to award the 8 RFP --

9 Q. I don't think it's a very complicated
10 question, sir. You can just simply answer it.

11 A. So I would think there's a conflict of 12 interest.

13 Q. Okay. I think we agree.

14 MR. ALI: I have no further
15 questions.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you,
17 Mr. Ali.

18 MR. LEVEE: I'm going to stand
19 because I can barely see.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: Before you do --
21 would you like to take a little break
22 before you do that?

23 THE WITNESS: I'm okay. Thanks.

24 MR. LEVEE: I have four questions.

25 THE WITNESS: Okay.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

2 - - -

3 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT
4 INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES AND NUMBERS

5 - - -

6 BY MR. LEVEE:

7 Q. I know you cannot remember whether you
8 interviewed Mr. Disspain or Mr. Silber in 9 conjunction with the Ethics Subcommittee.

10 Was it and has it been the practice of 11 the Ethics Subcommittee to interview the Board
12 members who were under discussion?

13 A. Yes.

14 Q. Okay. You have seen, in the course of 15 preparing for your testimony, that 16 DotConnectAfrica sent letters to Mr. Chehadé in 17 the summer of 2012 expressing concern about a
18 conflict of interest relating to those two 19 members, correct?

20 A. Yes.

21 Q. Okay. After the NGPC voted or at any 22 time in the course of 2011, did DCA bring to the 23 Board's attention any new facts relating to either
24 Mr. Disspain or Mr. Silber that had not been 25 included in the previous letters that had been

1 sent to ICANN?

2 A. No.

3 MR. LEVEE: Okay. That's all I
4 have. Thank you.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: On
6 the -- where am I?

7 MR. ALI: Just as a point of record,
8 Judge Cahill -- sorry -- I don't believe
9 I asked any questions during my 10 cross-examination with respect to any
11 letters sent by DCA.

12 So just as a point of information,
13 if there are rules that apply to me, they 14 also apply to Mr. LeVee. Thank you.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Understood.

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm sorry.
17 You're fine.

18 - - -

19 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

20 BY HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL

21 - - -

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Well, I'm
23 looking at your declaration, Paragraph 5
24 again, and you have the -- I think I know
25 the answer to this, but I just want to

1 make sure -- you have the -- the Internet
2 address for the -- for the ombudsman
3 report.

4 Do you see that there?

5 THE WITNESS: Yes.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Is that
7 public that everybody can see? For 8 instance, would DCA be -- be available
9 to -- to look at that?

10 THE WITNESS: I believe it was
11 posted on the Web site.

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: But you
13 don't know for sure?

14 THE WITNESS: I don't know for sure,
15 but it would be normal practice to post
16 it.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

18 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I got it
19 from the URL that is mentioned here. I
20 didn't get it from the file, but I
21 actually typed the URL and I got 22 the -- but I don't know when it was 23 posted.

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Well, I
25 think they responded, but we'll get to

1           that later.

2           Thank you.

3           Okay.

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: Any questions?

5                           - - -

6           EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

7                           BY ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN

8                           - - -

9           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: No, but --
10          perhaps just as a general context, is 11          your position with ICANN 100 percent job?
12          Is that -- or are you having other
13          activities?

14          THE WITNESS: Currently, I don't 15          have other activities.

16          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And you are
17          based in Los Angeles, no?

18          THE WITNESS: No; I'm based in 19          London.

20          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: In London?

21          THE WITNESS: Yeah.

22          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So you
23          travel to all meetings?

24          THE WITNESS: Indeed, I do.

25          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And what's

1 the percentage of meetings that are held
2 via telephone conference or
3 videoconferencing and in person? Would
4 you --

5 THE WITNESS: Well, I don't know
6 about the percentage, but I can tell you
7 that we have three big ICANN meetings a
8 year --

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That's the 10 public ones, yeah?

11 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

12 -- and we have, I think, four what I
13 call "Board workshop," and the rest of it
14 is by telephone.

15 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Thank
16 you.

17 - - -

18 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

19 BY HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL

20 - - -

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You say
22 "currently."

23 You don't have any other --

24 THE WITNESS: Yes.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- at the

1 time this was going on, did you have
2 other responsibilities?

3 THE WITNESS: Yes. I was chairman
4 of a bank, but we sold that bank, and I'm
5 no longer a chairman.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So in
7 October 2012, you were chairman of the 8 bank?

9 THE WITNESS: We sold it probably 10 just before that.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.
12 I'm done.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

14 Thank you, Mr. Chalaby --

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Good. Was 16 that fun?

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- we appreciate
18 you coming and wish you safe travel
19 wherever you're going.

20 THE WITNESS: Thank you. I answered
21 to the best of my ability. That's all I
22 can say.

23 (The witness was excused.)

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Take a
25 break?

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes. Let's take a
2 short break. We'll come back, and we'll
3 start with Ms. Dryden.

4           Let's say a 10-minute break --

5           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.

6           PRESIDENT BARIN: -- 10 minutes
7 back?

8                                 - - -

9                                 (Whereupon, a brief recess was taken
10                                 from 3:07 p.m. to 3:26 p.m.)

11                                - - -

12           PRESIDENT BARIN: Just a couple of,
13 perhaps, housekeeping matters before we 14 start.

15           I'm looking at my watch. It's 3:30.

16           MR. LEVEE: Yeah.

17           PRESIDENT BARIN: We'll obviously
18 get through Ms. Dryden this afternoon.

19           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Obviously?

20           PRESIDENT BARIN: The Panel is in 21 your hands with respect to Ms. Bekele.

22           MR. LEVEE: We spoke, and it's our 23 preference -- obviously, if it gets out
24 of hand, we'll speak again, but it would
25 be our preference to complete the witness

1 testimony today --

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

3 MR. LEVEE: -- so that we could
4 actually have the testimonies in order to 5 prepare for tomorrow.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: So that would
8 require us to sit for however long we 9 need.

10 MR. LEVEE: It make take us a little
11 later into the evening than your schedule
12 had predicted.

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: 9:00, I
14 have to go.

15 MR. LEVEE: Whatever it is, it is.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: He's still on 17 California time.

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: We're wide
19 awake. We're ready to go.

20 MR. LEVEE: It's almost time for
21 lunch.

22 MR. ALI: At 10:00, I nod off in 23 front of the TV.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

25 So that's -- so let's move on to --

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: If you're
2 from France, you're in real trouble.

3 (Laughter.)

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: They took my
5 glass.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: They took
7 the glasses again.

8 You have an efficient firm.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: Ms. Dryden, good
10 afternoon.

11 THE WITNESS: Good afternoon.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you for 13 coming to be with us.

14 First things first. I will do what 15 I did for equality purposes to you as 16 well as Mr. Chalaby.

17 - - -

18 H E A T H E R D R Y D E N,
19 after having been first duly sworn by
20 President Barin, was examined and
21 testified as follows:

22 - - -

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: So you've been
24 sworn.

25 Are you satisfied with that as well?

1 THE COURT REPORTER: Thank you.

2 - - -

3 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

4 BY PRESIDENT BARIN

5 - - -

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Ms. Dryden, I see
7 from your declaration that you're
8 currently a senior policy advisor at the 9 International Telecommunications Policy
10 and Coordination Directorate at the 11 Canadian Department of Industry.

12 THE WITNESS: That's correct, yes.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: And you still hold
14 that position?

15 THE WITNESS: Yes. I am on 16 full-time French training currently and 17 have been since leaving the position of 18 chairing the GAC. So that's actually
19 what I am doing presently.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sorry. Full time?

21 THE WITNESS: French training.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: French training?

23 THE WITNESS: Yes.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Great.

25 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: French

1 training? In the French language?

2 THE WITNESS: Yes.

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Wow. That's 4 great.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Am I the
6 only one who speaks one language? I bet
7 everybody speaks more than one language.

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And for how 9 long?

10 THE WITNESS: It has been for a
11 few months, and I have a test next
12 week -- an exam.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: I assume the 14 Government of Canada has other plans for 15 her.

16 THE WITNESS: We will see. It's --
17 it's yet to be seen what I will do next.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Would you
19 be kind enough to let us know what your 20 professional background is in terms of 21 what you studied and what you've done?

22 THE WITNESS: Certainly.

23 I've been a Canadian public servant
24 since 2002, always with the Canadian
25 Department of Industry.

1           And my educational background is
2           focused on international politics and
3           Russian-Area studies.

4           Before joining the department, I had
5           various roles. I spent some time working
6           for the NATO Information Office in 7           Moscow. I taught English in Korea for a
8           couple of years.

9           So, as I say, I have no idea of 10          different kinds of experience before
11          becoming a public servant.

12          For most of the time working at 13          industry Canada, I've had responsibility
14          for telecommunications or Internet policy
15          matters and, in particular, Internet
16          governance. And my responsibilities have 17          not been limited only to the roles I have 18          played within the -- the GAC, as we say,
19          at ICANN, but -- but includes things like
20          representing the department on the Board
21          of the Canadian operator of the country
22          code for the Internet, which is .ca.

23          I also spent some time as a member
24          of the UN Internet Governance Forum
25          Advisory Group. And, again, that was in

1 my capacity as -- as a Canadian public
2 servant.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: And how was it
4 that you found yourself being involved in
5 ICANN, I believe, as of 2010, correct?

6 THE WITNESS: My experience with the
7 GAC predates that. I -- my first meeting
8 was March 2007, and that was as part of 9 the Canadian representation to the 10 committee. And then over time, I became 11 the Canadian representative.

12 And then, as you pointed out, in 13 June 2010, that's when I was first
14 elected to serve as interim Chair, and
15 then I was elected after that for a total
16 of about four-and-a-half years in the 17 role of Chair.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: And I assume that
19 kind of invitation comes, presumably,
20 from ICANN as opposed to anything any
21 particular government puts forward?

22 THE WITNESS: It's entirely down to
23 the GAC. And so the GAC has its own
24 procedures for electing its leadership.
25 There are three Vice Chairs, for example,

1 in addition to the Chair. And -- and
2 that's certainly the case with the
3 working methods of the Committee as well.

4 That's very much a decision of the
5 Committee.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: And do I
7 understand correctly that you are still a
8 nonvoting liaison member to the Board of 9 Directors of ICANN?

10 THE WITNESS: No. So the October
11 meeting of 2014 was my last meeting
12 serving either as the Chair of the GAC or 13 the other half of that role that comes
14 along with it, which is the nonvoting
15 liaison to the Board.

16 So for any Chair of the GAC, as
17 things stand, it's a dual purpose role.
18 You're chairing the GAC, but then you're 19 also serving as the nonvoting liaison
20 from the GAC to the Board.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And in that
22 capacity, is it fair to say that you
23 play, I guess, a hands-on role when it
24 comes to reporting to the Board? That's 25 the ICANN Board. If it's not, you can

1 correct me. It was just an expression
2 that came to my mind.

3 THE WITNESS: The nature of the 4 role -- clearly, it's nonvoting -- is --
5 is really -- it allows for the nonvoting
6 liaisons to attend meetings. You can ask
7 to speak and contribute and, where
8 possible, you can clarify matters.

9 But the expectation from the GAC is 10 that you are there to represent the 11 collective views of the GAC as a whole.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: If I can just sort
13 of probe into that a little bit more.

14 With respect to the incidents
15 relating to .africa and the claim of 16 DCA Trust, is that something that you
17 would have been, I guess, mostly 18 professionally, intricately involved from 19 the outset?

20 THE WITNESS: My involvement really
21 relates to handling the issue within the
22 GAC --

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

24 THE WITNESS: -- so, as you are
25 aware, the GAC was given a particular

1           role as part of the gtLD program allowing
2           for particular kinds of advice, including
3           GAC consensus objections.

4           And so it was my job to oversee that
5           in the GAC.

6           PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me take you
7           directly to your statement, a copy of 8           which you have in front of you, I
9           believe, correct?

10          THE WITNESS: I do.

11          PRESIDENT BARIN: You don't have
12          any -- just so we don't go through -- you
13          don't have any other notes or anything
14          that you want to refer to that you can 15          give us copies?

16          THE WITNESS: No.

17          PRESIDENT BARIN: No.

18          So let's go to Paragraph 12.

19          And there are other questions I'm
20          sure my colleagues will want to ask you,
21          but I will go directly to the heart of 22          the issue.

23          In Paragraph 12, you say, In any
24          event, the dialogue that occurs among GAC
25          members prior to the particular GAC

1 meeting at which a proposal is supposed
2 to be decided, one does not bind the GAC
3 or any of its participating countries.
4 What matters is what occurs during the 5 actual decisional GAC meeting. On
6 10 April 2013, the GAC met in Beijing
7 specifically to address whether to issue
8 GAC consensus advice in conjunction with 9 DCA's application for .africa.

10 During the meeting, an African
11 country confirmed the DCA's application
12 should remain on the consensus objection
13 agenda for consideration and decision by
14 the GAC.

15 Can you tell me what really happened
16 in Beijing?

17 THE WITNESS: Yes, I can tell you in 18 very precise terms as far as the issue of 19 the decision that was taken regarding
20 .africa.

21 There was a specific agenda that was
22 developed to handle consensus objections.
23 So that particular kind of advice is
24 identified in the Guidebook.

25 And governments had the opportunity

1 before the meeting to signal that they
2 wanted to put a particular string or
3 application for consideration by the GAC
4 to issue very specific language about
5 objecting to a particular string or GAC
6 application.

7 So in that meeting, I was going
8 through that agenda, and one of the items
9 on that agenda, of course, was the 10 application from DCA --

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me -- I don't
12 mean to interrupt you, but let me just 13 back up for a minute because you started
14 with an agenda.

15 THE WITNESS: Yes.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: So who prepares
17 the agenda?

18 THE WITNESS: The GAC.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: The GAC?

20 THE WITNESS: Yes.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: And are you
22 involved in the preparation of that
23 agenda?

24 THE WITNESS: Yes, it's part of my
25 responsibilities to oversee and help the

1 meetings.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Is it fair to say
3 that it was your agenda?

4 THE WITNESS: It's the GAC's agenda.
5 It's agreed by the GAC.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right. But as 7 being the person who was essentially in 8 charge, you would put the agenda forward?

9 THE WITNESS: The agenda was created
10 based on requests coming from individual
11 countries to -- to form that agenda. So
12 it's the sum of those inputs from 13 individual members and the GAC.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. So then
15 there's this agenda that's -- that's 16 prepared and put forward, and then you go
17 from there.

18 And one of the items on that agenda
19 was .africa?

20 THE WITNESS: Correct.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Does the EU
23 have input on this agenda?

24 THE WITNESS: The EU -- the European
25 commission, which I think you're asking

1 about --

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.

3 THE WITNESS: -- did not.

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: How about
5 the AUC?

6 THE WITNESS: They did not either.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Excuse me.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. So
9 continue on. You were saying -- you -- I
10 sort of stopped you from your flow.

11 You were explaining?

12 THE WITNESS: That's fine.

13 So in the decisional meeting, I came
14 to this item and explained to the room
15 that we are now considering a consensus
16 objection to DCA's application. And one
17 African country confirmed that they did
18 want to put it to a question.

19 There were instances where a country
20 might actually decide to remove something
21 from an agenda and -- and make that kind
22 of request.

23 Earlier in the week, on the basis of 24 discussions and so on and so forth --

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: So give us a bit

1 more context. So -- I mean, imagine --
2 because we know nothing about -- for you,
3 I'm sure it's sort of routine, but put us
4 in context as to how these -- how these 5 meetings operate.

6 Where are you and -- you're in
7 Beijing?

8 THE WITNESS: Yes.

9 So would you like me to -- to finish
10 with the -- the decisional point on DCA's
11 application or speak more generally about
12 GAC meetings?

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Well, speak more
14 generally to put us in the context, but I
15 do want to get finally to the decision.

16 THE WITNESS: Okay.

17 So --

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: So you have an 19 agenda -- let me help you -- you have an 20 agenda; it's prepared in advance; it's 21 looked at. And then you --

22 THE WITNESS: I think it's going to 23 be helpful to be specific about the 24 agenda.

25 So in the past, the GAC has not had

1 a specific role as outlined in the
2 Guidebook regarding gTLDs. The GAC can
3 offer advice anytime it wants on any
4 topic that it chooses to issue advice on;
5 but in order to address controversial and 6 sensitive top-level domains, and, in
7 particular, the point about the ability
8 to put forward a consensus objection,
9 there was a specific agenda for that for 10 the Beijing meeting in order to manage
11 that -- handle those particular strings
12 or applications.

13 If you're talking about how GAC
14 agendas are prepared, generally, or how
15 we generate advice, generally --

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: No; I'm more
17 interested in the specific agenda.

18 THE WITNESS: Okay. So as pertains
19 to this particular application.

20 So as I was saying, one African 21 country confirmed that they wanted it put 22 to a question. I asked the question, and 23 there were no objections in the room.
24 And the room was so satisfied with this
25 result that there was unanimous applause.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: How many
2 countries are in the room?

3 THE WITNESS: I can't tell you
4 precisely. If you look at the record of 5 the meeting, which is the communiqué,
6 those are our official records of
7 outcomes from any meeting. You can see a
8 list of countries there. That will give 9 you an idea of the number.

10 Generally speaking, between 50 and
11 70 GAC members would -- would attend.

12 Because of the issues we were
13 dealing with, I think you had a higher
14 number than usual for this particular
15 meeting.

16 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: May I?

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah, sure.

18 - - -

19 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

21 - - -

22 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Am I correct
23 to think that the countries are the only
24 people who can -- people -- sorry -- are 25 the only entity who can see who is their

1 representative -- by whom they are --
2 yeah -- represented and so on?

3 THE WITNESS: Absolutely, yeah.

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So they do
5 whatever they want in terms of --

6 THE WITNESS: Yes.

7 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

8 And so if we speak about Kenya in
9 this particular case, because Kenya had a
10 special role, what do you remember about
11 that for the Beijing meeting?

12 I know, in your declaration, you say
13 you don't remember anything -- you don't 14 remember who was the representative or 15 who was there or not there for Kenya; is 16 that correct?

17 THE WITNESS: In terms of who was at 18 the Beijing GAC meetings, I recall that 19 Michael Katundu was there.

20 If you're talking about the session
21 that I referred to here, which was the 22 decision to take a consensus objection to 23 the application from DCA, then I don't
24 recall him being there.

25 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So

1           you make a difference between the meeting
2           in general and the special session in 3           which DCA applications was voted on; is
4           that correct?

5           THE WITNESS: That's correct.

6           And, of course, people can come in 7           and out, and can be as strategic about 8           attending a particular discussion or 9           decision or not attending a particular
10          discussion or decision. That's entirely
11          up to a country to determine.

12                                           - - -

13          EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD

14                                           BY PRESIDENT BARIN

15                                           - - -

16          PRESIDENT BARIN: So the context --
17          I'm just -- I was just trying to get from 18          you -- is this was on April 10th, 2013,
19          in Beijing --

20          THE WITNESS: Yes.

21          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- there's a room
22          then.

23                                           I assume you're chairing the 24          meeting, right?

25          THE WITNESS: Yes.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: And so people are
2           in front of you, you tabled the issues
3           one by one, that's the general meeting --

4           THE WITNESS: Yes.

5           PRESIDENT BARIN: -- but then, as 6           part of that general meeting, there's 7           this very specific point, which is the 8           DCA .africa --

9           THE WITNESS: Yes.

10          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- point, which 11          you then table, correct?

12          THE WITNESS: Yes.

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: And you get
14          participation from the audience?

15          THE WITNESS: Yes.

16          So GAC members request to speak, and 17          so I acknowledge them. And then they can 18          make an intervention, and then I can make 19          a decision when appropriate.

20

21                        Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

1

Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- and following
17 that point, there was nothing else?

18 THE WITNESS: By my recollection,
19 no.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: So what happens
21 just in terms of process, then? You say
22 Anybody else have any comments, you get 23 no comments, and --

24 THE WITNESS: Right --

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- and then what?

1 THE WITNESS: -- and then I say, I'm
2 now going to ask the question. I ask the
3 question. I see no objections. Then I
4 confirm that I see none, and then I
5 confirm that we now have a GAC consensus
6 objection.

7 That was the exchange.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: And then it's
9 noted into -- into the record?

10 THE WITNESS: Yes. It went into the 11 communiqué.

12 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So there is 13 no vote?

14 THE WITNESS: No.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: As part of the 16 function that you occupied for GAC, had 17 you had a similar situation to that ever
18 occur with respect to any other item?

19 THE WITNESS: Could you clarify what 20 the similarity is?

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: Well, the
22 similarity is -- in this case, you have a
23 specific agenda relating to .africa --

24 THE WITNESS: Yes.

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- you had a

1 general meeting, as you said --

2 THE WITNESS: Yes.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- and you had a
4 specific item on the agenda? The issue
5 was raised. You had one comment, and 6 then, essentially, a decision was
7 reached.

8 THE WITNESS: Yes.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Are 10 there -- were there -- have you been
11 involved in any other situations where a
12 similar decision was -- was reached as 13 part of your tenure at the GAC?

14 THE WITNESS: Other consensus
15 objections were issued at that meeting
16 and at the fall meeting.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: In exactly the 18 same way?

19 THE WITNESS: Yes, the exact same
20 question was asked each time.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And there
22 were objections?

23 THE WITNESS: In some cases, there
24 were objections, in which case, you do
25 not have a consensus objection. And for

1           one string, I can recall certainly there
2           was an objection carried.

3           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: On this very 4           question, when you said, yes, there were
5           the same question asked.

6           Do I have to understand that the 7           "same question" means applications --
8           objections to applicants, specific 9           applicants?

10          THE WITNESS: I would ask the room,
11          Are there any objections to a GAC
12          consensus objection to the string
13          ba-ba-ba-ba?

14          And then I would --

15          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Which 16          example did you have before this year's
17          application --

18          THE WITNESS: So --

19          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- for 20          example, I mean --

21          THE WITNESS: -- this session was 22          the first time that we had done that, and 23          in that session, we agreed to object to 24          .gcc, as I recall.

25          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Dot?

1 THE WITNESS: .gcc.

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: .gcc?

3 THE WITNESS: Yes.

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You agreed
5 to object or there were objectors to your 6 consensus objection?

7 THE WITNESS: We agreed to object.

8 There were other strings that were 9 put forward for consensus objection, and 10 they were not carried.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: They were 12 not carried?

13 THE WITNESS: Right. In other
14 words, countries put up their hands to 15 object and block it, in effect.

16 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So
17 Beijing was the first time you ever did
18 that kind of process?

19 THE WITNESS: To object to a
20 particular application, yes.

21 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Okay.
22 So how did you prepare, as the Chair
23 for this meeting, since you had no
24 precedent to work out of?

25 THE WITNESS: It was really in the

1 preparation of -- of the agenda. We have
2 preparatory calls in between meetings,
3 and we discussed within the Committee,
4 within the GAC how to proceed.

5 I made it very clear what the 6 question would be, and then it's the 7 responsibility of the countries, of 8 course, to consult at home and come with 9 positions prepared and ready to engage
10 with their colleagues if, for example,
11 they wanted an objection, to -- to gauge
12 what the other views are of the 13 colleagues.

14 And -- and in this way, it was clear
15 for colleagues what to prepare and what 16 the question would be and how it would be 17 handled, and when, for that matter.

18 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I sense a
19 kind of contradiction between -- what you
20 say in your declaration is that all the 21 exchange of e-mails before the meeting --
22 and there seem to be substantial amount
23 of e-mail exchange before the meetings --
24 before the meetings -- and you say this 25 does not matter. What matters is what's

1 going on at the meeting.

2 But now you just explained to us
3 that, basically, at the meeting, happens
4 nothing. You ask the question and no
5 discussion almost, one country just write
6 something -- I'm not entirely sure what 7 they said -- and then you declare that
8 there is a consensus.

9 So how do you reconcile that?

10 Because then, you know, in order to get 11 to that consensus -- I mean, I've been 12 chairing meetings where consensus was the 13 rule. You need to do a lot of 14 preparation in advance and make sure that 15 the consensus is going to be accepted.

16 So how do you reconcile those two
17 things?

18 THE WITNESS: A lot happens in the 19 meetings, and the decisional part is at 20 the end. So that's when the communiqués
21 from our meetings are finalized. So
22 that's at the end.

23 And up until that point, there's a
24 lot of engagement, most of it taking
25 place outside the room. Of course, we're

1           having discussions in the room about the
2           topics that we need to. But that's all
3           ready to prepare, that moment when you
4           are going to decide.

5           And, hopefully, you know in advance
6           what is probably going to happen, simply 7           because Chairs don't like to be
8           surprised. But surprises do happen.
9           And -- and it's really -- really a matter
10          of -- of the decisional meeting at the 11          end reflecting the result of the meeting.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN:     So are you
13          saying -- because I asked you this 14          question earlier. I'm a little puzzled
15          now.

16          Are you saying that a lot of the 17          decision-making process takes place prior 18          to the meeting and even during to and 19          leading to the actual decision where 20          people are outside?

21          THE WITNESS:     None of the GAC
22          decision-making takes place in any other
23          form than -- than when the GAC is making
24          a decision.

25          If -- if colleagues are trying to

1 resolve issues, come up with a way
2 forward, that's all very much encouraged;
3 that's -- that's productive. That's more
4 informal but very much encouraged.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: But I also
6 understood you to say that the -- when 7 the issue was tabled, which is the 8 .africa to be specific, it didn't take
9 very long for the decision to be -- to be 10 made, which is --

11 THE WITNESS: No, not at all, yeah.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- which means
13 that a lot of this, I guess,
14 consultation, if I could put it that way,
15 was happening before?

16 THE WITNESS: That is what -- what I
17 certainly hoped, as Chair, would happen.
18 And -- and, as I say, it doesn't always,
19 but -- but --

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: But be specific in 21 this case.

22 Is that what happened in the .africa
23 case?

24 THE WITNESS: The decision was very 25 quick, and --

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: But what about the
2 consultations prior? In other words,
3 were -- were you privy to --

4           THE WITNESS: No. If -- if
5 colleagues are talking among themselves,
6 then that's not something that the GAC,
7 as a whole, is -- is tracking or -- or
8 involved in.

9           It's really those interested
10 countries that are.

11          PRESIDENT BARIN: Understood.

12          But I assume -- I also heard you
13 say, as the Chair, you never want to be 14 surprised with something that comes up.

15          So you are aware of -- or you were 16 aware of exactly what was happening?

17          THE WITNESS: No. No. You do want
18 to have a good sense of where the 19 problems are, what's going to come
20 unresolved back to the full GAC meeting,
21 but that's -- that's the extent of it.
22 And that's the nature of -- of the 23 political process.

1 Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential
Information

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

8 THE WITNESS: -- that question was
9 addressed via having that meeting.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: And what's your 11 understanding of what -- what the 12 consequence of that decision is or was 13 when you took it? So what happens from 14 that moment on?

15 THE WITNESS: It's conveyed to the
16 Board, so all the results, the agreed
17 language coming out of GAC is conveyed to 18 the Board, as was the case with the 19 communiqué from the Beijing meeting.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: And how is that
21 conveyed to the Board?

22 THE WITNESS: Well, it's a written
23 document, and usually Support Staff are 24 forwarding it to Board Staff.

25 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Could you

1 speak a little bit louder? I don't know
2 whether I am tired, but I --

3 THE WITNESS: Okay.

4 So as I was saying, the document is
5 conveyed to the Board once it's
6 concluded.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: When you say "the 8 document," are you referring to the 9 communiqué?

10 THE WITNESS: Yes.

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And there
12 are no other documents?

13 THE WITNESS: The communiqué --

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: In relation to 15 .africa. I'm not interested in any 16 other.

17 THE WITNESS: Yes, it's the
18 communiqué.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: And it's prepared
20 by your staff? You look at it?

21 THE WITNESS: Right --

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: And then it's sent 23 over to --

24 THE WITNESS: -- right, it's agreed
25 by the GAC in full, the contents.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: And then sent over
2 to the Board?

3           THE WITNESS: And then sent, yes.

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: And what happens
5 to that communiqué? Does the Board
6 receive that and say, Ms. Dryden, we have 7 some questions for you on this, or --

8           THE WITNESS: Not really. If they 9 have questions for clarification, they
10 can certainly ask that in a meeting. But 11 it is for them to receive that and then
12 interpret it and -- and prepare the Board
13 for discussion or decision.

14          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And in this 15 case, you weren't asked any questions or 16 anything?

17          THE WITNESS: I don't believe so. I
18 don't recall.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: Any follow-ups,
20 right?

21          THE WITNESS: Right.

22          PRESIDENT BARIN: And in the 23 subsequent meeting, I guess the issue was 24 tabled. The Board meeting that it was 25 tabled, were you there?

1 THE WITNESS: Yes. I don't
2 particularly recall the meeting, but yes.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: As, again, the 4 nonliaison?

5 THE WITNESS: As the nonvoting
6 liaison, correct.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: The nonvoting
8 liaison?

9 THE WITNESS: Correct.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: If there were any
11 questions by the Board on the particular
12 issue, you were a nonvoting member?

13 THE WITNESS: Probably, yeah.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

15 - - -

16 EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD
17 BY ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN

18 - - -

19 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Can I turn
20 your attention to Paragraph 5 of your
21 declaration?

22 Here, you basically repeat what is
23 in the ICANN Guidebook literature,
24 whatever. These are the exact words,
25 actually, that you use in your

1 declaration in terms of why there could
2 be an objection to an applicant -- to a
3 specific applicant.

4 And you use three criteria:
5 problematic, potentially violating
6 national law, and raise sensitivities.

7 Now, I'd like you to, for us -- for 8 our benefit, to explain precisely, as 9 concrete as you can be, what those three
10 concepts -- how those three concepts
11 translate in the DCA case. Because this 12 must have been discussed in order to get 13 this very quick decision that you are 14 mentioning.

15 So I'd like to understand, you know,
16 because these are the criteria -- these
17 are the three criteria; is that correct?

18 THE WITNESS: That is what the 19 witness statement says, but the link to 20 the GAC and the role that I played in 21 terms of the GAC discussion did not
22 involve me interpreting those three
23 things. In fact, the GAC did not provide 24 rationale for the consensus objection.

25 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: No.

1           But, I mean, look, the GAC is taking
2           a decision which -- very quickly -- I'm
3           using your words, "very quickly" --
4           erases years and years and years of work,
5           a lot of effort that have been put by a
6           single applicant.

7           And the way I understand the rules
8           is that the -- the GAC advice --
9           consensus advice against that applicant
10          are -- is based on those three criteria.

11          Am I wrong in that analysis?

12          THE WITNESS: I'm saying that the 13          GAC did not identify a rationale for 14          those governments that put forward a
15          string or an application for consensus
16          objection. They might have identified
17          their reasons, but there was not GAC
18          agreement about those reasons or -- or --
19          or -- or rationale for that.

20          We had some discussion earlier about 21          Early Warnings. So Early Warnings were 22          issued by individual countries, and they
23          indicated their rationale. But, again,
24          that's not a GAC view.

25          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So,

1            basically, you're telling us that the GAC
2            takes a decision to object to an
3            applicant, and no reasons, no rationale,
4            no discussion of the concepts that are in
5            the rules?

6            THE WITNESS: I'm telling you the 7            GAC did not provide a rationale. And 8            that was not a requirement for issuing a
9            GAC --

10           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: But you
11           also want to check to see if the 12           countries are following the right --
13           following the rules, if there are reasons
14           for rejecting this or it falls within the 15           three things that my colleague's talking
16           about.

17           THE WITNESS: The practice among 18           governments is that governments can 19           express their view, whatever it may be.
20           And so there's a deference to that.
21           That's certainly the case here as well.

22           The -- if a country tells -- tells 23           the GAC or says it has a concern, that's 24           not really something that -- that's 25           evaluated, in the sense you mean, by the

1 other governments. That's not the way
2 governments work with each other.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So you
4 don't go into the reasons at all with
5 them?

6 THE WITNESS: To issue a consensus
7 objection, no.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

9 - - -

10 EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD

11 BY PRESIDENT BARIN

12 - - -

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Just a quick
14 follow-up, and this may be an obvious
15 answer to the question.

16 Is there a way that you check as to 17 who is involved in sort of the 18 participation on the part of the 19 governments? In other words, do you --
20 is there a control mechanism that 21 indicates to you that certain people are 22 there that should be there?

23 It -- it's a totally innocent
24 question, if you will.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It's an

1 arbitrator question.

2 (Laughter.)

3 THE WITNESS: The GAC maintains
4 records in the sense of needing to -- to 5 have -- it's useful to have a point of 6 contact within a particular government,
7 knowing which part of government is
8 responsible for GAC, and then having a
9 specific individual that really all other
10 questions about who speaks for that
11 country, who attends a meeting, them
12 being appointed, just generally, that's 13 entirely within the purview of that 14 country.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And I guess
16 that reinforces the point that you were
17 making perhaps earlier that by the time
18 you get to the actual meeting, you pretty 19 much have an idea. Because if there was 20 anything that was to be raised by a
21 particular government, then you would 22 know because they would have their 23 official channels and letters and 24 correspondence and -- to communicate with
25 you?

1 THE WITNESS: Correct.

2 And if I could add, in the instance
3 of being in a meeting, when I called upon
4 someone to speak, if I had incorrectly
5 named them or -- or if they say
6 something, to repeat my point earlier,
7 that -- that doesn't accord with what
8 that government expects, then it is up to 9 them to correct that or address that 10 point. It's . . .

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess it goes
12 back to the point that my colleague
13 Professor Kessedjian was making, with 14 respect to the e-mails and the 15 correspondence and the communications
16 beforehand are -- they do play an
17 important role because you would suspect
18 that if something big was going to 19 happen, you would want to hear or you
20 would hear it or you would have heard
21 about it prior to getting to the meeting?

22 THE WITNESS: Not necessarily.

23 What I'm describing is a scenario
24 that's optimal for a Chair to run a
25 meeting.

1                   Please understand, we had
2                   controversial strings, like

3                   Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

5                   Understand, there's a lot of activity.

6                   And we are encouraging colleagues to 7                   please be speaking to each other,
8                   understand what views are in the room and 9                   to please reach out. There's really not 10                  a lot I can do beyond hoping that 11                  communication is good.

12                  But all of that does not have 13                  bearing on -- on the validity of the 14                  final decision. It doesn't diminish the 15                  validity of a final decision.

16                  PRESIDENT BARIN: Were you,
17                  yourself, involved in e-mail
18                  communications with any --

19                  THE WITNESS: No --

20                  PRESIDENT BARIN: -- countries'
21                  representatives?

22                  No?

23                  THE WITNESS: Regarding the e-mails,
24                  no.

EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL
BY HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You may not know this, but how did the AUC become a member of the GAC?

THE WITNESS: As I recall, they would have followed the usual process, which is to send a letter requesting to join. That letter is addressed to the Chair.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That is not something that you would be involved in?

THE WITNESS: The letter comes to me, as Chair --

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So you would be involved?

THE WITNESS: -- in which case, an acknowledgment is sent. If it's a really straightforward request to join, then it's -- it's immediately a letter to confirm.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did it at all concern you that they were one of the 1 two bidders on the .africa?

2 THE WITNESS: That wasn't relevant
3 at the time --

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It wasn't
5 what?

6 THE WITNESS: That issue wasn't in
7 the GAC at the time. I had no insight
8 into --

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: But at the 10 time of the consensus vote, did it come
11 up that maybe -- you say in your brief
12 that Africa -- I'm talking about Early
13 Warnings. Never mind --

14 THE WITNESS: Early Warnings.

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- but they
16 were going to benefit by this vote.

17 THE WITNESS: It's -- it's a
18 political bucket, the GAC, so it is a
19 political decision that was taken.
20 Procedurally, it was very
21 straightforward.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Politics
23 are involved in this? Geez.

24 THE WITNESS: It's all about 25 politics.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did the GAC
2 ever send out an Early Warning notice in 3 its own name --

4 THE WITNESS: No.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- because
6 I know there was one that went out for 7 AUC.

8 Was there another one that went out?
9 You say in your declaration African Union
10 and other countries requested GAC
11 transmit Early Warning notices.

12 Was that -- what were those notices?

13 THE WITNESS: There were a variety
14 of -- of different notices that were 15 conveyed.

16 Again, just to be precise, that is 17 the GAC transmitting those 18 Early Warnings; it's not the GAC
19 expressing the view.

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So the GAC
21 goes ahead and --

22 THE WITNESS: It's to facilitate
23 those Early Warnings being issued so that 24 those countries could explain what they 25 were concerned about and -- and alert the

1 applicants that there could be an issue.

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did it
3 raise any concerns that African Union
4 Commission was going to send out an Early
5 Warning to its competitor?

6 THE WITNESS: No one raised it in
7 the GAC.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No one
9 raised it. Nobody thought of it either,
10 I guess --

11 THE WITNESS: No one raised it.

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- till
13 now, that's why we're here.

14 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I'm not sure
15 I followed that conversation.

16 Nobody raised what?

17 THE WITNESS: The fact that the AUC
18 issued the Early Warning notice.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Where is it
20 in the rules that you have to be present
21 in order to vote?

22 You make the point that the Kenyan
23 official, who you say doesn't have any 24 authority anyway, but that's my -- but is 25 there a rule that says you have to be in

1           that room at that time? You can't do it
2           from outside or . . .

3           THE WITNESS: That is the -- the
4           practice.

5           So at a decisional meeting, a
6           government's -- certainly in the case
7           with the GAC, you need to be present in 8           order to contribute to that.

9           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's the
10          practice. This was the first time you've 11          done it this way, so there probably 12          wasn't a practice before this.

13          THE WITNESS: All of our communiqués
14          are handled this way. All of our -- our 15          advice in those communiqués from our 16          meetings, it's always an in-person
17          finalization at the end of our -- of our 18          week or so of meetings.

19          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It's been 20          like that forever?

21          THE WITNESS: Yes. For the seven or 22          so years I've been in the GAC, yes.

23          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did
24          everyone understand that -- well, let 25          me -- you don't know what other people

1 understood.

2 Do you think you communicated to
3 other -- everyone that if there was not
4 an objection to -- if nobody stood up and
5 said, I object to taking this off
6 calendar, that then -- then the GAC was 7 going to send a -- a communiqué to the 8 ICANN saying that it's our consensus this
9 be not considered anymore?

10 Does everybody know that was going
11 to happen?

12 THE WITNESS: All efforts were made
13 to be clear about the agenda, the 14 question, how this matter would be 15 handled.

16 It is the responsibility of 17 individual GAC members to -- to be 18 briefed, to be prepared and to know where 19 they need to be if, in fact, they need to 20 be there.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I guess
22 it's your feeling that all the 23 communications from the Kenyan member --
24 the Kenyan person who wasn't there, that 25 was -- that was communications, but the

1           only thing that counted was what happened
2           when you asked for the -- for the 3           consensus vote, right?

4           THE WITNESS: That is the only thing
5           that counted, yes.

6           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

7           I think that's it.

8                           - - -

9           EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD

10                           BY PRESIDENT BARIN

11                           - - -

12           PRESIDENT BARIN: I have one
13           question for you.

14                   We spent, now, a bit of time or a 15           considerable amount of time talking to 16           you about the process, or the procedure
17           leading to the consensus decision.

18                   Can you tell me what your
19           understanding is of why the GAC consensus
20           objection was made finally? In terms of 21           the substance, what is --

22           THE WITNESS: With .gcc?

23           PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes.

24           THE WITNESS: Again, no rationale
25           was provided.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm sorry.

2 Say again.

3 THE WITNESS: There was no rationale
4 echoed by the GAC regarding .gcc.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: But in terms of
6 the .africa, the decision -- the issue
7 came up, the agenda -- the issue came up,
8 and you made a decision, correct?

9 THE WITNESS: The GAC made a
10 decision.

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right. When I
12 say "you," I mean the GAC.

13 Do you know -- are you able to 14 express to us what your understanding of 15 the substance behind that decision was?
16 I mean, in other words, we've spent a bit
17 of time dealing with the process.

18 Can you tell us why the decision
19 happened?

20 THE WITNESS: The sum of the GAC's
21 advice is reflected in its written advice
22 in the communiqué. That is the view to 23 GAC. That's -- that's --

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: I appreciate that.
25 I just wanted to get your view, if you

1 can give it to me.

2 THE WITNESS: That is my view in my
3 capacity as Chair from that time.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah, that's fine.
5 Okay.

6 - - -

7 EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD
8 BY HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL

9 - - -

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So who puts
11 the DCA on the agenda?

12 And I understand that the DCA was on 13 the agenda, but the -- AUC was not on the 14 agenda. So there's only one of the two 15 competing proposals that were on the 16 agenda.

17 Why would that be?

18 THE WITNESS: So GAC members had the 19 option, the possibility of requesting to 20 add a particular string or application to 21 that agenda for the consensus objections.
22 Three African countries asked to put that
23 particular string or application for DCA
24 on the agenda.

25 If -- if there aren't -- if there

1           isn't the -- the AUC application there,
2           it's because no one asked to put it
3           there.

4           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   So how many 5           countries need to be asking to be put on 6           the agenda before --

7           THE WITNESS:   One?

8           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   One?

9           THE WITNESS:   Yes.

10          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   So one
11          country, like Kenyan, can say, I want to 12          put those on?

13          THE WITNESS:   Right.

14                                   - - -

15          EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD

16                                   BY PRESIDENT BARIN

17                                   - - -

18          PRESIDENT BARIN:   I'll come back
19          again.  I want to try this one more time.

20                   Are you able to tell us what the 21          reason behind those three countries
22          objecting were?  In other words, would
23          you know what that reason would be, or it
24          didn't matter for you?

25          THE WITNESS:   It's not germane to my

1           responsibilities in handling that
2           question.

3                   And if you want to understand the 4           views, there's no alternative other than 5           asking them directly.

6                   PRESIDENT BARIN:   Okay.   But I was 7           just curious to know whether you had an 8           understanding as to . . .

9                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   She 10          doesn't.

11                   PRESIDENT BARIN:   No.

12                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:   I still --
13          Babak, can I continue on this?

14                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   Did we
15          interrupt you?

16                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:   I'm sorry.

17                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   We
18          interrupted you.   I'm sorry.

19                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:   No, no.

20                                           - - -

21          EXAMINATION (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF THE BOARD

22                                           BY ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN

23                                           - - -

24                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN:   I just want
25          to come back to the point that I was

1 making earlier.

2 To your Paragraph 5, you said -- you
3 answered to me saying that is my
4 declaration, but it was not exactly
5 what's going on.

6 Now, we are here to -- at least the 7 way I understand the Panel's mandate, to 8 make sure that the rules have been obeyed
9 by, basically. I'm synthesizing.

10 So I don't understand how, as the 11 Chair of the GAC, you can tell us that,
12 basically, the rules do not matter --
13 again, I'm rephrasing what you said, but 14 I'd like to give you another opportunity
15 to explain to us why you are mentioning
16 those criteria in your written
17 declaration, but, now, you're telling us
18 this doesn't matter.

19 If you want to read again what you
20 wrote, or supposedly wrote, it's
21 Paragraph 5.

22 THE WITNESS: I don't need to read
23 again my declaration. Thank you.

24 The header for the GAC's discussions
25 throughout was to refer to strings or

1 applications that were controversial or
2 sensitive. That's very broad.

3 And --

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I'm sorry.
5 You say the rules say problematic,
6 potentially violate national law, raise
7 sensitivities.

8 These are precise concepts.

9 THE WITNESS: Problematic, violate
10 national law -- there are a lot of 11 laws -- and sensitivities does strike me
12 as being quite broad.

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:
14 Sensitivities especially?

15 THE WITNESS: Yes, I would have to 16 agree, yeah.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So we
18 are left with what? No rules?

19 THE WITNESS: No rationale with the 20 consensus objections. That's the -- the 21 effect.

22 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I'm done.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm done.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: So am I.

25 Would you like to take a little -- a

1           few minutes before we continue on? Are
2           you okay?

3           THE WITNESS: I'm okay.

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

5           THE WITNESS: Thank you.

6           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Don't be
7           shy.

8           PRESIDENT BARIN: Mr. LeVee, we'll 9           follow the same --

10          MR. LEVEE: Absolutely. It's --
11          Mr. Ali should go first.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN: So the same?

13          MR. ALI: Yes.

14                                   - - -

15                   EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF CLAIMANT

16                                   DOTCONNECTAFRICA TRUST

17                                   - - -

18          BY MR. ALI:

19           Q.       As you know, I'm Arif Ali. I have 20           some questions and follow up on what it is that 21           the Panel has been asking about on various topics.
22           And if I stray, I will go back to the right path.

23                   So just so I understand one part of 24           your testimony regarding what you knew at the 25           time that the AUC applied to join the GAC.

1           Do you recall when you got the request
2           from the AUC to join the GAC?

3           A.     No, I don't.

4           Q.     Okay.  So do you recall when the AUC
5           was approved to join the GAC?

6           A.     It would be via letter when they
7           joined.

8           Q.     As I understand, it would have been by 9           the end of June 2012, but I stand to be corrected
10          if there's other correspondence that makes it more
11          specific as to when they were formally approved.

12          So if -- with that date in mind, does 13          that trigger anything, any recollection as to 14          when they put their application in?

15          A.     I believe the June 2012 date followed 16          a further discussion about the status of -- of the 17          AUC within the GAC.  They were accepted earlier
18          than that and accepted as an observer.

19          So by my recollection, the letter you
20          saw, if it was addressing the point about them
21          becoming a member listed along with other members
22          that were governments in GAC records, then, I --
23          I think that might be the reason you see a letter
24          from that time.

25          Q.     Okay.  So they -- so the AUC initially

1 joined the GAC as an observer?

2 A. Correct.

3 Q. Nonvoting?

4 A. Correct.

5 Q. Do you recall when that happened?

6 A. I don't. I don't.

7 Q. How would I find out when that
8 happened?

9 A. Through -- there is usually an
10 exchange of letters. The letters might be 11 published on the GAC Web site. They might be 12 available to you directly.

13 Also, the GAC would list in its 14 communiqués when they were new members during 15 that time. So that would be a possible source.

16 Q. So you were here during our opening
17 presentations, right?

18 A. (No audible response.)

19 Q. And you heard me and my colleagues
20 make mention to the draft of the communiqué that 21 was initially sent by Mr. Crocker sometime in 22 March of 2012. And that particular letter that 23 was sent by Mr. Crocker was sent to you to review.

24 Do you recall that part of my
25 presentation?

1           A.     I do, yes.

2           Q.     Okay.  And do you recall having seen
3 the draft letter that was sent by ICANN Staff of 4 BGC to you for comment?

5           A.     I don't recall it.

6           Q.     Have you subsequently seen the draft
7 that was sent to you?

8           A.     Not since -- since it would have been 9 issued, no, I have not.

10          Q.     Okay.  So you have not seen a copy of 11 this letter?

12          A.     Not since it would have been sent, no.

13          Q.     Okay.  And insofar as applications
14 for -- do you recall -- sorry.  Strike that.

15                 Do you recall whether the AUC was 16 already a -- an observer on the GAC prior to 17 February 2012?

18          A.     I don't.

19          Q.     Insofar as other requests are 20 concerned for a country or an international
21 organization to join the GAC, is it common that 22 you would receive a communication from ICANN Staff
23 beforehand?

24          A.     No.  It's entirely a GAC decision.

25          Q.     So in this instance, on 24th of

1 February 2012, you were sent a communication by
2 ICANN Staff which had been drafted with the 3 involvement of the BGC to provide comments on the 4 letter that was going to be going to the AUC.

5 So that was unusual?

6 MR. LEVEE: Could I just interject?

7 Counsel is not showing the witness
8 the letter. The letter doesn't say
9 anything about joining the GAC.

10 If counsel wants to say that the 11 letter does reference it, then he should 12 show it to the witness.

13 MR. ALI: Fair point. Let me
14 rephrase.

15 BY MR. ALI:

16 Q. And I'm happy to -- to -- to show you
17 the letter. It's fairly long.

18 MS. ZERNIK: If you give me an 19 exhibit number, I can get it.

20 BY MR. ALI:

21 Q. And there's a binder right there if 22 you want to find the document if you want to see.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What's the 24 document?

25 MR. ALI: It is --

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: She doesn't
2 have a screen, so that doesn't help.

3 MS. ZERNIK: Right.

4 MR. ALI: If you look under the tab
5 that says --

6 MS. CRAVEN: It's in the middle
7 section, which is the section entitled
8 GAC e-mails. And it is Tab --

9 MS. ZERNIK: I believe it's
10 Exhibit C. I have 24 --

11 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: C-24 is
12 ICANN letter of March 8th.

13 MR. ALI: That's what I'm referring
14 to, because we don't --

15 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So
16 it's C-24.

17 MR. ALI: Yes.

18 -- they didn't produce the other
19 communications, so we don't know when
20 the -- when the AUC applied to become a
21 member in observer status. We don't know
22 when they -- when they were removed from 23 observer status to voting status.

24 And that's what we're trying to 25 establish, if we can create some sort of

1 time markers here as to what happened
2 when.

3 THE WITNESS: I don't have the
4 document.

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: C-24. It's
6 a long letter. It's a cover letter.

7 BY MR. ALI:

8 Q. Just to -- this document references
9 what the AUC could achieve through the GAC. And I
10 think that's a fair characterization of what the 11 letter states in March --

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let's start, to be
13 fair, have you seen this letter before,
14 Ms. Dryden?

15 THE WITNESS: It's something that I
16 would have been copied on or been aware
17 of at the time. The content of it I
18 don't -- I don't recall.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Do you
20 remember seeing it, though, before?

21 THE WITNESS: Before it was sent?

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No --
23 well --

24 THE WITNESS: As a matter of -- of 25 practice, this is the kind of letter that

1 would have been --

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: Can you tell us
4 what the practice is?

5 THE WITNESS: These letters are
6 sometimes shared on the Board list. And 7 I'm on the Board list as a nonvoting
8 liaison, so --

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: So you would see
10 it before it goes in?

11 THE WITNESS: Yes, or sometimes,
12 because I'm the Chair of the GAC and we 13 represent governments and organizations,
14 plus this relates to ICANN documents,
15 it's a courtesy, if nothing else.

16 MR. ALI: Could we pull up C-113,
17 please?

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: C what?

19 MR. ALI: 113.

20 MR. LEVEE: Do you have a copy of 21 that binder for us?

22 MR. ALI: I believe one was provided
23 to you.

24 I apologize for the confusion of the 25 binders.

1 MR. LEVEE: I don't have one.

2 MS. CRAVEN: I think it's actually
3 underneath the one that's next to yours.

4 MR. ALI: Why don't you just put the 5 screen up so she can see?

6 MR. LEVEE: Is it this (indicating)?

7 MS. CRAVEN: It's that. This
8 document is not in that.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: C-113 is the
10 e-mail from Jamie Hedlund, right?

11 MR. ALI: Sorry?

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Is that the e-mail
13 from Jamie Hedlund?

14 MR. ALI: That is an e-mail from 15 Chris Mondini dated 24 February 2012 --

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

17 MR. ALI: -- to Heather Dryden at 18 Heather.Dryden@ic.gc.ca, copying
19 Jamie Hedlund and Anne-Rachel Inné and 20 Diane Schroeder. And it says, Draft
21 response to AU Communiqué.

22 BY MR. ALI:

23 Q. Do you have that document in front of 24 you, Ms. Dryden?

25 A. No, I don't.

1 Q. Okay.

2 MR. ALI: You don't have that up on
3 the screen?

4 MR. LEVEE: We can't find it, so
5 we're still looking.

6 MR. ALI: You can't find it on --

7 MS. ZERNIK: C-113.

8 MR. ALI: Exhibit C-113-001.

9 (Pause.)

10 MR. ALI: Got it?

11 MR. LEVEE: I do have it. And for 12 what it's worth, it's well beyond the 13 scope of the Panel's questions.

14 MR. ALI: I don't believe so --

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let's hear the
16 question --

17 MR. ALI: -- I don't believe so.

18 And I think that it's entirely

19 appropriate in light of --

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You already
21 won.

22 MR. ALI: -- the Panel's
23 questioning -- excuse me?

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You already
25 won.

1 MR. ALI: Thank you.

2 Sometimes the pugilist comes out,
3 and one never figures out if one is
4 actually winning or not. Many a knockout
5 has happened as a result.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No, no.

7 BY MR. ALI:

8 Q. So, Ms. Dryden, let's try this again.

9 C-113, is that up on the screen or do
10 you have that in front of you?

11 A. I have it in front of me.

12 Q. Thank you.

13 And just to be clear, do we have --
14 it's an e-mail from Chris Mondini to 15 Heather Dryden, Jamie Hedlund and 16 Anne-Rachel Inné, Diane Schroeder, and the 17 subject is Draft response to AU Communiqué.

18 Are we looking at the same document?

19 A. Yes.

20 Q. Okay. Who is Jamie Hedlund?

21 A. He's an employee of ICANN.

22 Q. Who's Anne-Rachel Inné?

23 A. She's also an employee of ICANN?

24 Q. And Diane Schroeder?

25 A. Also an employee of ICANN.

1 Q. Okay. And Chris Mondini?

2 A. An employee of ICANN.

3 Q. Okay. This letter -- or this e-mail
4 says, Dear Heather, The attached draft response is
5 the combined effort of a number of staff members
6 as well as members of the BGRC. It will be sent 7 in the form of a letter from Steve Crocker on 8 behalf of the Board.

9 I'm sending it for your review, and
10 welcome any comments or advice before we send it
11 out next week.

12 And the subject is Draft response to 13 AU Communiqué.

14 Do you recall having received this 15 e-mail and having reviewed the draft response to 16 the AU communiqué?

17 A. I don't recall this specific e-mail or 18 providing comments.

19 But I would like to explain that
20 there's nothing unusual about this kind of desire
21 to be diplomatic with -- with government
22 colleagues and -- and to communicate with them.

23 So it's -- it's not unusual.

24 Q. Sorry. I didn't understand that 25 response.

1           Diplomatic on the part of whom with
2       respect to which government colleagues?

3           A.       Governments generally.  So in the GAC,
4       of course, it's comprised of governments, and they
5       would be receiving this communication.  So . . .

6           Q.       Thank you for that clarification.

7                    But what I'm just trying to understand
8       is why ICANN Staff, on this particular occasion,
9       are sending you a draft of a communication that 10      they're sending to the AUC.

11          A.       Because they're wanting to provide 12      that opportunity to provide comments if they 13      deemed it beneficial to their draft.  But that's 14      really an aid of having positive communications
15      with governments, generally.

16                    Obviously, the GAC is a major
17      component of -- of that activity within the ICANN
18      structure.

19          Q.       So is it your testimony that the ICANN
20      Staff here are communicating with you in your 21      capacity as a Canadian Government representative
22      or Chair of GAC?

23          A.       They're communicating with me because 24      I'm the Chair of the GAC.

25          Q.       I see.

1           So -- and the idea here is that
2       they're looking for your implemental or input
3       with respect to the communication that will be
4       sent to the AUC having obtained your views
5       with -- from the perspective of -- as GAC Chair;
6       is that correct?

7           A.     It's quite clear, I think, from what's 8       written here, it's simply providing an 9       opportunity, if I wish to take it, if it was 10      appropriate to do so, to communicate.

11          Q.     Okay. And do you recall if you took
12      it?

13          A.     I don't.

14                MR. LEVEE: Heather, speak up a
15      little bit.

16                THE WITNESS: Sorry.

17                I don't recall.

18      BY MR. ALI:

19          Q.     So you don't recall whether you
20      commented on the draft that had been sent to you
21      by ICANN Staff?

22          A.     Correct.

23                PRESIDENT BARIN: May I?

24                Is this the kind of, sort of, draft
25      letter that you would get from your

1 colleagues on other issues as well? In 2 other words, is it -- was it frequent for 3 you to get letters in draft for you to
4 comment on and . . .

5 THE WITNESS: When the Board was
6 communicating with governments, I think
7 there were circumstances where those 8 letters would be circulated via
9 the -- the Board list, which I mentioned
10 I was a part of as a nonvoting liaison to
11 the Board --

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: But this is not
13 one of them. This is -- as I understood
14 you said, these are letters that are --
15 these are employees of -- of ICANN.
16 These are not Board members.

17 THE WITNESS: But the signatory on 18 the letter is -- is ICANN's leadership,
19 the Chair of the Board.

20 So staff are facilitating that 21 activity.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

23 I guess my question is, There must 24 have been other letters like this that
25 these staff members perhaps prepared

1 for -- I don't know -- I guess, other
2 communiqués, or is this the only one?

3 THE WITNESS: In terms of the
4 letters that come from the Board, then
5 the Board would be better able to respond
6 to the kinds of letters that they would 7 send to -- to -- to governments, which
8 is, I think, what you're -- how you're
9 categorizing this type of letter.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

11 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: May I
12 continue on this question?

13 How many times do you recall having 14 been asked to review these types of 15 letters and -- was that often?

16 THE WITNESS: No, no, but not
17 unusual either.

18 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And for what
19 kind of matters would you be asked to 20 review documents and letters?

21 THE WITNESS: It was really from the 22 view of maintaining positive relations
23 with -- with government stakeholders.

24 There are programs in place at ICANN
25 to deal with other stakeholder groups as

1 well and look at those relational
2 aspects. So this is a component of that 3 --

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Thank you.

5 THE WITNESS: -- that's my
6 understanding.

7 MR. ALI: Thank you.

8 BY MR. ALI:

9 Q. Just staying with -- just staying with 10 the -- with this letter, could you turn, please,
11 to -- if you could pull up C-24, which is the 12 actual letter that Mr. Crocker said and which,
13 presumably, you reviewed a draft of at the time.

14 Can you see that -- do you have it?

15 A. Yes. Yes.

16 Q. You have it, C-24?

17 A. Yes.

18 Q. This is a letter that is from 19 Stephen D. Crocker to Elham Ibrahim on 8th of 20 March 2012. And I'd like you to just turn over to 21 the second page, please.

22 On the second page, in bold, it says,
23 Request 1: Include (.africa, Afrique, et cetera.

24 It says, Response to Request 1.

25 And I'm going to go to the last

1 sentence of the first paragraph. If you would
2 just follow along with me, please.

3 ICANN does wish to explain, however,
4 that protections exist that allow the
5 African Union and its member states to play a 6 prominent role in determining the outcome of any 7 application for these top-level domain name
8 strings.

9 We'll stop.

10 So please feel free to take a look at 11 the paragraphs preceding -- or the language
12 preceding the language I just read and following
13 that, so you get some context.

14 And my question to you, Ms. Dryden,
15 is, Could you explain to us what it is that you
16 understand Mr. Crocker to be saying in the 17 sentence I've just read out?

18 A. I believe he is referring to this
19 particular role that was given to the GAC as part
20 of the Guidebook rules to explain to the AUC that 21 this is one of the -- the options available to 22 them if they did wish to raise concerns.

23 Q. What do you believe he means by "to 24 play a prominent role"? What would have been your 25 understanding of that language when you read the

1 draft back in February of 2012?

2 A. It was to point to the fact that
3 governments were given a specific role as part of 4 this program, to -- to advise on -- on new gTLDs.

5 Q. Does that mean, at this particular
6 point in time, that the AUC was already a voting
7 member of the GAC?

8 A. Offhand, I don't know, but I do not
9 link those two things.

10 Q. I see.

11 But if they weren't, if they were only 12 in observer status, they wouldn't have been able 13 to play a prominent role in determining the 14 outcome of any applications; isn't that correct?

15 A. No, it's not correct.

16 So members and observers can come and 17 contribute to discussions in the GAC and to the 18 development of advice. And, for example,
19 observers that have expertise, a particular
20 expertise -- and WIPO is a member, so if we're 21 talking about trademark-related issues, they may 22 have useful input to provide to that.

23 So, again, it's really about this
24 particular role being given as part of the gTLD
25 program, which hadn't existed in the past for the

1 GAC.

2 Q. Okay. And so, just to be clear,
3 you're saying -- you're telling us that a -- a --
4 a member of the GAC that is there in observer
5 status can issue Early Warning advice?

6 A. No, that's not what I said --

7 Q. I'm sorry.

8 A. -- as far as the -- the link between 9 observers and members and what specific actions
10 they can take generally or with regard to Early
11 Warnings or something else is not -- is not 12 entirely -- it's not something that can be 13 summarized very quickly, or there may be existing 14 lack of clarity today about some of those
15 questions.

16 It's -- it's -- not everything has
17 been tested adequately to an absolute answer.

18 As far as Early Warnings were
19 concerned, the -- the -- there was no particular
20 constraint on issuing those Early Warnings.

21 Q. So an observer could issue an Early
22 Warning?

23 A. I can't tell you that, because none
24 did.

25 Q. It's a simple yes or no.

1 A. I can't tell you that, so --

2 Q. Yes or no.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Wait, wait.

4 Don't argue with her.

5 Why can't you tell him that?

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let her answer.

7 THE WITNESS: None -- none -- other
8 than those that did issue Early Warnings
9 provoked an actual discussion or anyone
10 raising concerns about who issued an 11 Early Warning. So that wasn't a barrier
12 up-front.

13 BY MR. ALI:

14 Q. So I understand what -- your testimony
15 to be that an observer can issue an Early Warning,
16 but it doesn't really matter?

17 A. That's not how I would sum up my 18 comments at all.

19 Q. How would you?

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Why can't
21 you say yes or no? Is that because you
22 don't know the rules or there were no
23 rules? What is the reason? Or you can't
24 tell us because it's secret or something?

25 THE WITNESS: To deal with the Early

1           Warnings specifically, there wasn't
2           adequate clarity beforehand about that.
3           It happens that none that are currently
4           classified as observers issued an Early
5           Warning to any applicant. And so, for 6           that reason, it's -- it's not possible to 7           draw the kind of conclusion that I'm 8           being asked to.

9           BY MR. ALI:

10           Q.       Well, let's just continue with this,
11           then.

12                     In terms of -- so in terms of the AUC
13           joining the GAC as an observer, that request
14           would come to you?

15           A.       Yes. That's the process.

16           Q.       Do you recall whether that particular
17           request came to you?

18           A.       I don't specifically recall a request,
19           but that is the process. So . . .

20           Q.       Okay. So, presumably, it came to you?

21           A.       Yes.

22           Q.       Thank you.

23                     And the movement --

24                     PRESIDENT BARIN: If I may

25                     interrupt --

1 MR. ALI: Yes.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- the AUC request
3 was not a typical request, was it? In 4 other words, the request for --

5 THE WITNESS: For which request?

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: For the observer
7 status that Mr. Ali was just referring 8 to.

9 THE WITNESS: To become a member?

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah.

11 THE WITNESS: It's not common, no.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. So when you
13 receive an uncommon request, what -- what
14 do you usually do? Is that something you
15 decide? Is that something you consult 16 on? Is that something you pass on to 17 somebody else?

18 THE WITNESS: So the -- the only
19 time that I have to deal with the issue
20 of someone that was an observer becoming 21 a member was in the case of the AUC while 22 I was Chair.

23 And so when that request was made,
24 there was a discussion in -- in the 25 meetings. It would have been the Prague

1 meetings, I believe.

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And when was
3 that?

4 THE WITNESS: Prague?

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Can we find
6 it on the Internet?

7 THE WITNESS: Oh, certainly, I think
8 we can.

9 MR. LEVEE: We can figure it out.

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

11 BY MR. ALI:

12 Q. So there's a discussion --

13 MR. ALI: I apologize.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: No, no. That's
15 okay.

16 BY MR. ALI:

17 Q. -- so there's a discussion -- so a
18 request comes from ICANN or the request comes from 19 the AUC that the AUC should move from observer
20 status to voting member status?

21 A. The requests never come from ICANN.
22 If they did, they shouldn't.

23 So it would have come via the usual
24 process when they asked to become an observer.
25 And then -- because they were already in the GAC,

1 then they made a request at a meeting to be
2 considered or to ask why they're not a member and
3 to -- to explore that point.

4 So that resulted in a discussion at
5 the following meeting of the GAC, which, as I
6 say, I believe was the Prague meeting where the 7 AUC was accepted as a member.

8 Q. So I'm being told that the Prague
9 meeting was in June 2012. So, presumably, it was 10 sometime after June 2012 or at the Prague meeting
11 June 2012 when the AUC was moved from a nonvoting
12 to voting.

13 A. The distinction isn't voting to 14 nonvoting.

15 As I mentioned earlier, there isn't
16 enough experience with -- with voting in the GAC
17 to actually have clarity on that point.
18 The -- the GAC is a consensus-based committee and 19 is always working towards consensus as a general
20 practice.

21 The -- the consensus objection
22 mechanism that was part of gTLDs, that was the 23 first time we had done anything like that, and we 24 didn't refer to it as a vote --

25 Q. I see.

1           A.     -- so I can understand why some might
2     construe it.

3           Q.     That's helpful.

4                     But what was the purpose of the 5     discussion at the Prague meeting with respect to 6     AUC?  If there really is no difference or 7     distinction between voting/nonvoting, observer or 8     whatever might be the opposite of observer, or 9     the proper terminology, what was -- what was the 10    point?

11          A.     I didn't say there was no difference.

12                     The issue is that there isn't GAC
13    agreement about what are the -- the rights, if 14    you will, of -- of entities like the AUC.  And 15    there might be in some limited circumstances, but 16    it's also an extremely sensitive issue.  And so
17    not all countries have a shared view about what 18    those -- those entities, like the AUC, should be 19    able to do.

20          Q.     So not all countries share the same
21    view as to what entities, such as the AUC, should 22    be able to do.

23                     Is that what you said?  I'm sorry.  I
24    didn't --

25          A.     Right, because that would only get

1 clarified if there is a circumstance where that 2 link is forced.

3 In our business, we talk about
4 creative ambiguity. We leave things unclear so
5 we don't have conflict.

6 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: This is
7 beautiful. I love it.

8 MR. ALI: I'll take that.

9 BY MR. ALI:

10 Q. Thank you. I understand.

11 So -- but -- let's just leave it in 12 your world --

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Can I just follow
14 up on it for a second, then?

15 MR. ALI: I was kind of hoping you
16 wouldn't.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No; he gets
18 to.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: Is it possible,
20 then, that certain countries would have
21 had a different view of whether AUC
22 should have been a member or not?

23 THE WITNESS: That -- that agreement
24 to list them as a member along with other
25 governments described as members in the

1 GAC's records, the GAC agreed to do that.

2 As to which part of the operating
3 principles they might have referred to or 4 national policy or positions on the 5 matter they might have referred to, that 6 will vary.

7 And so the only way to test that is 8 if you have one particular question or 9 situation where -- where that is brought
10 to light. And it's actually -- when you
11 get into the specifics of -- of -- of how 12 that should work, it is very delicate.

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Why would
14 ASU [verbatim] be a member? You know, it
15 seems like it's so unusual -- I don't 16 mean to give -- it's not a leading
17 question, but it seems like -- why --
18 what were the considerations to letting
19 them become a member? I understand why
20 the EU would be there, but the ASU [sic]
21 is something different, isn't it?

22 THE WITNESS: The considerations are 23 always going to be political, at least to 24 some degree. They tend to be primarily 25 political in the GAC.

1           So it's very difficult for me,
2           again, to go beyond that -- that decision
3           that was recorded in the communiqué or 4           that would have been recorded in the 5           communiqué at the end of that meeting to 6           say that we're now being welcomed as a
7           member.

8           PRESIDENT BARIN: In terms of the 9           AUC becoming a member, the buck stops
10          with the GAC? The GAC makes that
11          decision?

12          THE WITNESS: Absolutely.

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. It doesn't
14          have to explain itself as to why it's 15          making that decision or on what basis?
16          It can just simply make it, is what
17          you're saying?

18          THE WITNESS: Right. And it refers
19          to its own guidance and rules. And 20          members have particular views on that,
21          yes.

22          PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me just follow
23          up.

24          When you say members may have
25          particular views on it -- earlier, I

1 think I understood correctly, you said
2 some members may -- may be for it, some 3 may be against it, but at the end of the 4 day, it doesn't really matter, because
5 GAC decides if they become a member or
6 not.

7 Or am I mistaken?

8 THE WITNESS: Yes, the -- so -- so
9 it has to be a GAC decision. And,
10 certainly, on a question like this, it's 11 brought to the full GAC. It was a
12 discussion of the full GAC.

13 And the main consideration is 14 respective powers and influence, and it's
15 always that way between governments. So
16 does that mean one region gets more
17 represented than another? Does it mean
18 that a particular region end up with more
19 votes if we were to vote? That --

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The GAC
21 could have said no to this, right, the
22 application?

23 THE WITNESS: Yes.

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And it
25 didn't take into consideration that

1 .africa was -- I don't know. I imagine
2 it was one of the biggest things you guys
3 were all dealing with.

4 THE WITNESS: Not that I recall.

5 It was really about the -- the
6 guidance we had from our operating
7 principles, national positions
8 governments have used about what you
9 might call the additionality for regional
10 organizations like the AUC or others.
11 And that all had to be worked through in 12 that exchange.

13 BY MR. ALI:

14 Q. Ms. Dryden, you talked about the GAC
15 governing principles. Perhaps we could go to 16 Exhibit 44.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: Is that C-44,
18 Mr. Ali?

19 MR. ALI: It's C-44 and Page 3 of 20 C-44.

21 BY MR. ALI:

22 Q. My colleagues will help you find the 23 document.

25

1 BY MR. ALI:

2 Q. Are you there?

3 A. Yes.

4 Q. Okay. Thank you.

5 Principle 15, Membership is open to 6 all national governments. Membership is also 7 open to distinct economies as recognized in 8 international fora. Multinational governmental 9 organizations and treaty organizations may also 10 participate as observers on the invitation of the 11 GAC through the Chair.

12 So based on Principle 15, the
13 limitations of the AUC would have come from you
14 or there would have been a request by the AUC.
15 And in your sole discretion, the AUC would have 16 joined the GAC.

17 Is that correct -- sorry.

18 Which is it of those various scenarios
19 that I just put to you?

20 A. So the communication comes to the 21 GAC Chair, and if I confirm them as -- as an 22 observer, then that is on behalf of the GAC.

23 Q. So then Principle 16 -- and you
24 would -- before we go to Principle 16, you would
25 put the AUC into the category of a multinational

1 governmental organization or treaty organization,
2 correct?

3 A. That is what I did.

4 Q. Okay. And so then we go to the next,
5 which is Principle 16. Accredited representatives
6 of governments and other public authorities,
7 members of GAC, have voting rights. Accredited
8 representatives of international organizations and 9 entities other than public authorities participate
10 fully in the GAC and its committees and working 11 groups, as observers, but do not have voting
12 rights.

13 As I take it, Principle 16 does make 14 the distinction between voting rights and 15 nonvoting rights.

16 Could you explain that to us in terms
17 of what that -- what the practical implications
18 are and how that applies to the AUC?

19 A. So, as I commented earlier, these
20 principles are subject to interpretation by GAC
21 members. And so they would read different parts
22 of it and understand it in a way that the -- that 23 accords with their -- their view. And they would 24 come to a GAC discussion about this based on -- on 25 a national view about how observers and members

1 and so on should be participating in the
2 Committee.

3 So unless there's a GAC decision
4 elaborating -- so in the case of the -- the AUC
5 becoming a member, there was no clarity
6 deliberately about the -- the -- the GAC's
7 understanding of what the full implications were 8 of them joining as member.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sorry. What do
10 you mean by that? Deliberately -- there
11 was no clarity?

12 THE WITNESS: So some GAC members
13 found, in the part of the operating 14 principles, that they liked a way to be 15 flexible and arrive at a consensus to 16 accept the AUC as a member, but leaving
17 the -- the specifics unclear.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: But correct me if
19 I'm wrong, but if I understand it
20 correctly, it doesn't really matter
21 because, at the end of the day, they
22 become a member, and that's because GAC
23 decides they become a member.

24 THE WITNESS: They became listed as
25 a member along with other governments

1           also described as members in the GAC's
2           records. That, I can tell you.

3           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: What is very
4           strange is we are talking about a
5           commission which is the kind of 6           Secretariat to an organization and not
7           the organization itself. You know, I
8           could have understood the AU,
9           the African Union, would have become a
10          member, but the AUC, the Commission
11          itself, I have a hard time understanding
12          that.

13          Do you see the difference? I mean,
14          the Commission is not an organization;
15          the Commission is a Secretariat to an 16          organization.

17          So why was the AUC becoming a member
18          and not the African Union?

19          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Good point.

20          THE WITNESS: So I have the record
21          of the result of the GAC accepting them
22          to become a member without further
23          clarification. They invited me to 24          comment on things that -- colleagues in 25          the GAC will have to give their

1 individual perspectives on -- you would
2 have to ask them.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: I guess, as the
4 person who was responsible for that
5 position at the time, would you have, I
6 guess, no power or requirement or 7 obligation to raise any questions, such
8 as the one that my colleague just asked
9 you? In other words, if something didn't
10 seem right to you, could you not question
11 that?

12 THE WITNESS: As far as the running
13 of the GAC, as part of my 14 responsibilities, yes, I may have 15 questions or -- but --

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: But in this case,
17 did you not have any questions or do you
18 not remember, or . . .

19 THE WITNESS: As Chair, my concern
20 was around the longer-term challenge of 21 having observers -- as described now on 22 the list of observers, those
23 organizations, having a greater role than 24 they do now and how that would impact the
25 Committee.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. So you're 2 saying you were sort of focused on the
3 more big picture thing as to why a
4 particular case -- I'm not trying to put 5 words in your mouth. I'm just trying to 6 get a sense of what --

7           THE WITNESS: Yes, that was my -- my 8 concern.

9           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Why didn't
10 the membership meet the requirements of 11 your organization? Because it looks
12 like -- if you just read the words, they 13 don't quite fit with the AUC.

14          THE WITNESS: As I say, the -- the 15 operating principles are -- are guidance
16 to us, they're principles. And 17 governments have national positions that 18 they bring to any discussion and have the 19 right to --

20          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It's hard
21 to say no to governments who want to do
22 what they want to do?

23          THE WITNESS: Yes. They can express
24 their view however they want.

25          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

1 BY MR. ALI:

2 Q. I guess what I've taken away from this
3 discussion -- by the way, please do indicate if 4 you need a break, because you're getting questions
5 from the Panel, from me. And I can appreciate
6 that that's not the easiest to deal with.

7 So that is not by any means
8 gratuitous, so do let me know.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: Would you like to 10 take a break?

11 THE WITNESS: Will this go much
12 longer?

13 MR. ALI: I probably have another
14 hour, 45 minutes --

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: I don't --

16 MR. ALI: -- at least.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- I frankly don't 18 think so, but --

19 MR. LEVEE: I will go for about two
20 minutes.

21 MR. ALI: I do have some questions
22 associated with what happened prior to 23 this advice.

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Do it after 25 the break.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN:    Let's take a
2           few minutes to give her a chance to . . .

3                                 - - -

4                                 (Whereupon, a brief recess was taken
5                                 from 4:58 p.m. to 5:10 p.m.)

6                                 - - -

7           PRESIDENT BARIN:    We're back on the
8           record.

9                                 Mr. Ali, I request that we move
10           along as efficiently and as quickly as we 11           can.

12                                MR. ALI:    I will do my best.

13                                HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:   He told me
14           not to ask any more questions, so . . .

15                                MR. ALI:    Well, I will try and stop 16           before I receive the same instruction.

17   BY MR. ALI:

18           Q.    Let's go to a different topic.

19                                Before we do that, just to confirm, my 20           final understanding is that this -- there is 21           discretion in the GAC Chair to -- with respect to 22           who is invited to join the GAC.

23                                What is the scope of your discretion?

24           A.    So anything that I would do is in,
25           obviously, this -- within the capacity of -- of

1 Chair on behalf of the GAC.

2 Q. I understand.

3 It sort of sounds a little bit like
4 you're trying to herd sheep within the context of 5 a political -- very politicized environment from 6 what you were telling us earlier.

7 Would that be a colloquial and
8 colorful but fair -- fair description?

9 A. You're speaking generally about --
10 about the GAC?

11 Q. Yes.

12 A. So it is only the GAC that can make 13 decisions. I can confirm them and identify where 14 there is consensus or where we have concluded a
15 negotiation on something.

16 Q. Thank you. I think I asked a
17 different question, and you answered a different
18 one. But let's leave it at that.

19 Let's move on to what happened on
20 June 4th when the NGPC -- sorry -- when the GAC
21 consensus advice was issued -- I may have the 22 date there wrong --

23 MR. LEVEE: April 10th.

24 MR. ALI: April 10. Thank you,

25 Jeff.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: April

2 10th, right.

3 BY MR. ALI:

4 Q. -- April 10th when the so-called

5 consensus advice was -- was issued.

Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

11 BY MR. ALI:

12 Q. While they're doing that, let me ask
13 you the following question: When is the agenda
14 developed?

15 And I should say that we don't have
16 the agenda on record, so we don't really know
17 what it says. So we're going to ask you to help
18 us with that.

19 A. Right.

20 So the agenda for the consensus
21 objection agenda was -- was not published. It's 22 confidential as some meetings of the Committee
23 are closed. And related materials also are not 24 publicly published.

25 So that was the case with this

1 consensus objection agenda. It's not something
2 that has been published.

3 Q. So it was -- when was it developed?

4 A. It was developed in advance of the 5 meetings. There was a deadline for countries
6 to -- to request that a particular application be 7 placed on that agenda.

8 Q. So this would have happened three days
9 before, four days before, a week before, two weeks
10 before April 10th?

11 A. I don't recall precisely, but the 12 deadline would have been around three weeks or so.
13 Because governments need time to -- to consult 14 nationally to prepare for a meeting, so you're 15 always wanting to give them adequate notice
16 regarding the -- an issue, whether it's this 17 agenda or any other issue under consideration in 18 the GAC.

19 Some of their internal processes are
20 lengthy, and they need approvals and so on and so
21 forth. So that's the reasoning.

22 Q. I follow you. Indeed.

23 So --

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sorry.

25 Who decides if it's confidential

1 or if it gets published or not?

2 THE WITNESS: The GAC does.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Is that
4 you?

5 THE WITNESS: The GAC does, as a
6 whole.

7 In this case, the -- the current --
8 well, the practice up until I was --
9 until I left the role was to have most of 10 the meetings open, except for the 11 decisional portions.

12 In Beijing, we had more closed
13 meetings than usual because the issues
14 were so sensitive for governments. And 15 we were doing something -- we needed a
16 new capacity, and so the -- the GAC took 17 that decision to -- to close the meetings
18 that they did.

19 BY MR. ALI:

20 Q. So two to three weeks before the 21 meeting, you set a deadline for governments to 22 provide agenda items; is that correct?

23 A. Yes.

24 Q. Okay. And then, with those agenda
25 items, two to three weeks before the meeting, you

1 circulate a draft agenda to all governments?

2 A. That's right. So there's an agenda
3 that is a compilation of all the requests.

4 Q. From all of the different governments?

5 A. Governments.

6 Q. And how many are there again?

7 A. How many governments in the GAC?

8 Q. Yes.

9 A. About 150.

10 Q. So -- I see.

11 So it's 150 governments that decide
12 that it's going to be confidential or not?

13 A. Not all of them will weigh in, but it
14 has the effect of being the full GAC.

15 Q. Okay. And how does that happen?

16 A. In this case, there was a discussion
17 beforehand on GAC calls and some requests to close 18 the meeting. And I believe, at the beginning of 19 our meetings in Beijing, it was further clarified.

20 Q. I think I'm talking about the agenda.

21 So with respect to the -- to the 22 agenda being confidential, you propose it or 23 somebody proposes it or it's presumptively
24 confidential?

25 A. It's not presumptive, but these --

1 these issues are discussed either, as I say, on 2 the preparatory teleconferences we have, we might
3 receive requests. In this case, we received
4 requests from some -- some in the GAC expressing
5 the desire to have the discussions be closed.

6 And then it's confirmed again when we
7 begin our meetings to -- on the basis of -- of 8 people making requests, if necessary, if they 9 feel something should be closed.

10 Q. So it just takes the request of one
11 government in order for the agenda to be kept
12 confidential?

13 A. No. If other governments said they
14 really thought it should be open, and we discussed
15 it and it turned out one government wasn't going 16 to continue to -- to persist to ask that the 17 meetings be closed, then maybe they would still be 18 open --

19 Q. So in this instance --

20 A. -- it's an exchange.

21 Q. I apologize. I didn't mean to
22 interrupt.

23 But in this particular instance,
24 they -- do you recall whether there was any 25 objection as to the confidentiality of the

1 agenda?

2 A. I recall one country did say that they
3 thought all the meetings should be open --

4 Q. Okay.

5 A. -- and that wasn't enough to result in
6 opening up the meetings.

7 Q. Okay. And how many items ended up on
8 the agenda?

9 A. Offhand, I don't recall. I would say,
10 roughly, 20.

11 Q. Okay. And with respect to those 20
12 items, how was the item relating to DCA Trust
13 described?

14 A. It was just the -- listing the 15 countries that had asked it to be and naming the 16 string and the application; a simple list.

17 Q. So it just says .africa?

18 A. Essentially, yes. In the application
19 numbers we were wanting to try --

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: I'm going to ask
21 that we sort of --

22 MR. ALI: Mr. President, we don't
23 have this agenda. It's fairly important.
24 What we have here is -- and just to 25 shortcut this, because I don't need to

1           elicit testimony when we have the
2           documents -- we have now been told that
3           there was an agenda circulated three 4           weeks beforehand, that this agenda has 5           been kept confidential.

6                     This agenda has not been produced.
7           This agenda apparently says nothing but
8           .africa and an application number.
9           This -- this agenda does not include the 10          ZACR application for purposes of any kind
11          of discussion.

12                    We understand that may be because 13          nobody asked that the ZACR application be 14          put on this undisclosed agenda.

15                    Now, what we do know is that a --

But we do now know, based on her

1 testimony, that there's an agenda that's
2 not been disclosed to us but that
3 reflected an item that we have been told
4 is somehow an objection agenda -- or
5 objection advice agenda.

8

PRESIDENT BARIN: And I have no
9 problem, Mr. Ali, looking at these
10 tomorrow if you wish and going through
11 them, but if you have a question, in all 12 fairness to Ms. Dryden, then let's get 13 those questions out.

14

I'm happy to and I'm sure the rest
15 of the Panel is happy to hear that.

16

MR. LEVEE: I also state this is the 17 second time that counsel has stated that 18 there's an agenda that somehow I hid from 19 the Panel.

20

There was no request for any agendas
21 to me at any time. The request that came 22 through was for the e-mail in reference
23 to Ms. Dryden's declaration, and those 24 were produced.

25

PRESIDENT BARIN: Understood.

1           And I think, frankly, the way I
2 understood was that this is an issue that
3 came up during the testimony of
4 Ms. Dryden --

5           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That was
6 going to be a question I asked.

7           Did you ask for it or --

8           MR. LEVEE: It was not requested.

9           And the only other point I want to 10 make, given the hour, I have no problems
11 with questions about this. The parties
12 raised these e-mails in her opening
13 statement. We're going to discuss them
14 tomorrow.

15           What I would prefer or hope for is 16 if there are factually based questions
17 that Mr. Ali wants to ask the witness,
18 fine. If he wants to make his closing
19 argument, let him do it in the morning.

20           PRESIDENT BARIN: That was the point
21 that I just made as well.

22           MR. LEVEE: Thank you.

23           MR. ALI: Thank you. Thank you for 24 the guidance, Judge.

7 Q. I see.

8 And what's the appropriate amount of 9 time?

10 A. Well, if there are no raised hands and 11 several moments pass, then we have a consensus.
12 Silence is agreement.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Enough for you to 14 look around the room to see if
15 anybody else --

16 THE WITNESS: Absolutely.

17 BY MR. ALI:

18 Q. Silence is agreement?

19 A. In -- in that case, yes.

20 Q. I see.

21 Consensus by acquiescence?

22 A. It is a very important tool in -- in 23 the tool kit for governments, yes.

24 Q. I see.

25 So consensus by -- well, I

1 participated in many UN meetings and many
2 international organization meetings and, frankly,
3 I don't believe that I've ever seen a
4 situation --

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: Mr. Ali --

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's
7 tomorrow.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- let's ask
9 questions, please.

10 MR. ALI: I apologize. That was 11 uncordial.

12 BY MR. ALI:

13 Q. So consensus by acquiescence, by 14 silence.

15 So what's the consequence in this
16 instance of GAC consensus advice?

17 A. You would need to ask the Board. It's 18 their responsibility to interpret.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: Frankly, Mr. Ali,
20 I asked her that question, and she
21 responded by saying the same thing. So
22 it may not be a satisfactory answer --

23 MR. ALI: It's not.

24 BY MR. ALI:

25 Q. I would like to know what it is that

1 you, as the GAC Chair, understand to be the
2 consequences of the actions that the GAC will take 3 --

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The GAC
5 will take?

6 BY MR. ALI:

7 Q. -- the GAC will take -- the
8 consequences of the actions taken by the GAC, such 9 as consensus advice?

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: There you
11 go.

12 THE WITNESS: That isn't my concern
13 as the Chair. It's really for the Board
14 to interpret the outputs coming from the 15 GAC.

16 BY MR. ALI:

17 Q. Okay. I'll take that.

18 MR. ALI: And I have no further
19 questions. Thank you.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

21 Mr. LeVee.

22 MR. LEVEE: I'll be very brief.

24 MR. LEVEE: Thank you.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: How did

1           that happen? Did somebody call you or 2           got a note?

3                    THE WITNESS: There were deadlines
4           issued, communications coming out from 5           GAC Support Staff to the membership about 6           how to signal that they would like this
7           added to that agenda. The process laid
8           out deadlines, and then those are 9           compiled and communicated to the GAC.

10          BY MR. LEVEE:

11                Q.     So to clarify, the AUC did not ask for 12          this to be placed on the agenda?

13                A.     Correct.

14                Q.     Okay.

15                    And the AUC did not -- at the meeting
16          that we're talking about on April 10th, the AUC
17          did not speak?

18                A.     Correct.

19                                Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

22                Q.     Okay. And you said something before,
23          and it got swallowed up, I think, in the 24          questioning.

25                    When you announced that the GAC had

1 achieved consensus with respect to DCA's
2 application, what happened next?

3 A. Applause, unanimous applause.

4 Q. So the room broke out into applause?

5 A. Yes.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Is that usual,
7 Ms. Dryden?

8 THE WITNESS: In those situations,
9 yes, if it's a particularly difficult
10 discussion. The -- the agenda was, of 11 course, sensitive and delicate. I don't
12 want it to sound like I'm contradicting
13 with my description of the discussion
14 being very quick and straightforward. It
15 was.

16 But then colleagues are very keen
17 to -- to show comity and that we have 18 reached agreement on something.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me just 20 finish.

21 To be precise, this was in relation
22 to the DCA Trust application?

23 THE WITNESS: Right, directly after
24 and before we went to the next --

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: To the next item?

1 THE WITNESS: Yes.

2 MR. LEVEE: Those are all the
3 questions I have.

4 MR. ALI: I have one follow-up
5 question, if I may.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

19 BY MR. ALI:

20 Q. So just maybe one, perhaps two 21 questions very quickly on that.

22 Do you recall who the Kenyan
23 representative was at the time when the agenda
24 was developed?

25 A. It would have been Michael Katundu.

1 Q. It would have been Michael Katundu?
2 You're sure of that?

3 A. He's been the representative for 4 many years. He's been in the GAC longer than I
5 have. And my first meeting was 2007, so . . .

6 Q. Okay.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: Can you be more
8 precise when you say "would have been"?
9 Was it?

10 THE WITNESS: Yes.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: How are you
12 so sure? Did you talk to him or get a
13 note or see something?

14 THE WITNESS: I'm quite good at 15 knowing who's who. It's part of the job
16 knowing who the people are and which part
17 of government is responsible and what --

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Sure.
19 How do you know he's the one who did
20 it?

21 THE WITNESS: It's in the GAC
22 records that he would be the 23 representative.

24 As to how Support Staff would have
25 handled the details, I don't know

1           precisely how they administered --

2                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's not
3 consistent with some of these other
4 e-mails from --

5                   THE WITNESS: GAC preparations are 6 handled by Support Staff.

7                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

8                   MR. ALI: I said one, and that's 9 one.

10                  PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

11                   Professor Kessedjian?

12                   No?

13                  HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No, I'm

15                  PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you,
16 Ms. Dryden. I appreciate your help and

18                  THE WITNESS: Okay. All right.
19 Good luck.

20                  PRESIDENT BARIN: Have a safe flight

22                  THE WITNESS: Thank you.

23                   (The witness was excused.)

24                  MR. LEVEE: With the Panel's
25 permission, I would just avoid a break at

1           this point and just go straight into

3           just broke 15 minutes ago.

4                       (Pause.)

11          And hopefully we'll finish it tonight.

12          But if -- at whatever point you feel
13          that it's time and you want to stop, then 14          we can consider that as well.

15          MS. BEKELE: Sure.

- - -

PRESIDENT BARIN: So you are sworn in. And I'm not going to start asking you the same background questions that I began with the other witnesses because your detailed statement does spell out what your background is and what you've done.

I'm going to start with referring you to Page 23 of your statement, which you have.

And you don't have any other notes or anything that you want to refer to or that you're using other than your statement?

THE WITNESS: No.

PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. The question I have for you, it somewhat, if you will, resonants throughout the statement that you prepared. You will find as a background Paragraph 51 and 52 of your statement. If you take a look at

1           it.

2                    So you've given us the background.
3           And the title is The AUC's Purported
4           Withdrawal for its Support for DCA.

5                    You say, Whilst in the middle of 6           collecting individual endorsements and
7           making announcements through our public
8           relations campaign, you learned that the 9           AUC had e-mailed you in a letter dated
10          April 16th, stating that they no longer
11          endorsed the individual initiatives for 12          Africa.

13                   And then you go on to say this was 14          shocking to you.

15                   Did you know that that was coming?

16                   THE WITNESS: No, not at all.

17                   PRESIDENT BARIN: So what is the 18          background of what this e-mail is there?

19                   THE WITNESS: Okay. So after we've 20          been endorsed by AUC in 2009 and, prior 21          to that, another organization called
22          UNECA, U-N-E-C-A, in 2008, we proceeded
23          with collecting individual endorsements
24          from different African governments, as 25          well as starting our awareness to the

1 African campaign to raise awareness for
2 the gTLD in Africa.

3 In the midst of that, we received
4 this letter.

5 So I went back to the AUC to 6 reconcile what happened, and what they
7 told me was that ICANN Staff has come a
8 few weeks before and has presented a
9 .africa presentation for them. And they 10 going through a regulatory framework, and 11 they will be working with ICANN and the 12 African community and perhaps private
13 sector to coordinate what is best suited
14 for .africa for Africa.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Are you saying
16 that prior to this, if you will, contact,
17 you were totally in the dark as far as --

18 THE WITNESS: Absolutely. No, I'm
19 not aware.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And so what
21 else were you told by AUC about the 22 presentation by ICANN?

23 THE WITNESS: What else was I told?

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Yes.

25 THE WITNESS: It was a brief

1 meeting. They --

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Put it in context,
3 if you will, just so we have a better --

4 THE WITNESS: Who was the contact
5 there?

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Who was the
7 contact, when was it, where were -- you
8 know -- yeah. Let me finish the 9 question, and then you can -- because,
10 otherwise, we're going to -- she's going
11 to have a problem.

12 So I just asked if you could put it
13 in context so that we could better
14 understand how this -- this news is 15 coming to -- to --

16 THE WITNESS: You want to know the 17 contact?

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: The context.

19 THE WITNESS: Oh, the context. Oh,
20 I'm sorry. I thought you said "contact."

21 The context of how this news came
22 about. As I said, it came through 23 e-mail --

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

25 THE WITNESS: -- so it was a

1 shocking surprise to me.

2 And so I had contacted the
3 African Union headquarters when we
4 received the -- the original endorsement,
5 which is from the Chairman's office.

6 So the Chairman's office facilitated
7 the Chief of Staff, and I went to meet
8 with the Chief of Staff at the time to 9 request. And he's the one that told me
10 this particular presentation was made
11 and -- by an ICANN Staff, and they're 12 very -- they're going to start working
13 with ICANN.

14 And as the letter strictly says, it
15 says it would coordinate with ICANN, the 16 African community and the private sector
17 to -- to -- they didn't even say endorse
18 to come up with what's best for Africa.

19 So what that means is it's not that 20 they withdrew our letter; they were just 21 saying there's another alternative way of 22 coming up with the regulatory framework.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: Did he tell you
24 who at ICANN had visited?

25 THE WITNESS: Yeah. Anne-Rachel,

1           which is the ICANN Staff -- the Africa
2           ICANN Staff.

3           So I thought it was very
4           inappropriate for ICANN Staff to come and
5           do a presentation for Africa, because I
6           thought a bidding party, like ICANN, who
7           develops an RFP, should be independent
8           and should not be working with 9           stakeholder organization. They're not 10          certainly working with DCA to assist how 11          to go about .africa.

12          So I brought it to the attention of 13          the general counsel; I brought it to the 14          attention of the ombudsman; and I brought 15          it to the attention of the Chairman at 16          the time --

17          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

18          THE WITNESS: -- and, somehow, I
19          think the ombudsman did not feel that was 20          irregular; however, the Chairman of ICANN
21          at the time informed me that they have 22          reprimanded her and not to do that any 23          more.

24          PRESIDENT BARIN: Did you have any 25          other reaction from ICANN as a result of

1 your --

2 THE WITNESS: No. That was it. I
3 was expecting after that there's not
4 going to be much contact between ICANN
5 and the AUC.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. So can you
7 then move forward and tell us what 8 happens with --

9 THE WITNESS: So after that, we just 10 continued the campaign. Obviously, we 11 have an endorsement and support from 12 UNECA, which is a equivalent organization
13 to AUC, what we believe. And according 14 to the Guidebook, it's a legitimate
15 endorsing entity. So we moved on with 16 our -- with our campaign.

17 What's important for us was to 18 create that awareness within the
19 governments and within the stakeholders
20 in Africa to sensitize them to what the 21 gTLD is, because it's the first gTLD
22 entry for Africa.

23 And then we started preparing for --
24 for our application upcoming. And then
25 what we found as a result, there was a

1           Dakar meeting, ICANN meeting, and we 2           found out that sort of regulatory
3           framework that the Chief of Staff
4           mentioned turned out to be an AU reserve
5           name agenda.

6           So what that means is they -- AUC
7           and ICANN had consulted to reserve the 8           name, in my opinion, to -- for the three 9           names, .afrique, the Arabic, and 10          .afrikia, the French; and .africa, to be 11          a reserve for AUC under special
12          legislation.

13          So that request was made in Dakar.
14          And DCA -- I stood up in front of the 15          Board and say that's against the 16          guidelines of the gTLD procedure. It's 17          anticompetitive. Had we known that was 18          an arrangement that AUC would have 19          requested, then we would not have spent
20          all this time and monies.

21          And -- and ICANN knows that gTLD has 22          led the process for a very long time
23          before that. We had sponsored ICANN
24          meetings. I have announced my intention
25          to run for the gTLD at Board meetings,

1 public meetings. So the ICANN is very
2 much aware of it.

3 So we were kind of surprised that
4 occurred in Dakar. But in any case,
5 after a while, ICANN, I think maybe
6 three months later -- Dakar was like
7 five minutes before the application
8 started -- they -- they wrote a letter to 9 AUC confirming that they would not 10 reserve that name or the gTLD after the 11 application process started.

12 So we submitted our application with 13 the current support that we've collected
14 from various governments and the AUC and 15 as well as the UNECA. And we proceeded
16 with our application.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And when
18 was it that you found out that the AUC
19 was going to be a member now of -- of --
20 of ICANN?

21 THE WITNESS: The -- the Prague
22 meeting, which is --

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: Can you just -- I
24 don't mean to interrupt you, but --

25 THE WITNESS: -- that was after the

1 application process.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right. So give
3 the Panel the context.

4 THE WITNESS: So around March was
5 the application process, and June -- 2013
6 March, the application opened, and the 7 Prague meeting, which was about
8 June 2013, it was announced that AUC was 9 going to be a member of GAC.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. And your 11 reaction to that was --

12 THE WITNESS: Very shocked, myself
13 and many --

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You've got
15 to let him finish his question.

16 THE WITNESS: Oh, I'm sorry.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: That's okay.

18 So you were shocked?

19 THE WITNESS: Yes.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: And what did you
21 do after you got over being shocked?

22 THE WITNESS: I think we -- we wrote
23 to ICANN, because there was the AUC in 24 the African community and ZACR, they had
25 a meeting with the new CEO. The new CEO

1           joined ICANN at about that time. And
2           they had a presentation, and they came up
3           with what's called ICANN Africa Strategy.

4           And we were not included. We were
5           not invited to the meeting. So we wrote
6           a letter to ICANN stating that DCA has 7           been included -- excluded from this
8           meeting, while AUC and the rest of the 9           supporters of the AUC application held a
10          meeting jointly to pursue an ICANN
11          African strategy.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN: That's why I asked
13          you the question.

14          Why do you think you were excluded
15          from the meeting?

16          THE WITNESS: Because we are not --
17          there was sort of -- we felt there was 18          always a divide as to who the group
19          that -- the group that actually is 20          coordinated with AUC and the group that's 21          not part of AUC.

22          And so we are competitors, in a
23          sense. So the competitors of the AUC are 24          not privy to what's going on with that.
25          So . . .

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: So, initially, you
2           were actually on the same side as AUC?
3           Is that -- is that a fair description?
4           And thing changed?

5           THE WITNESS: "Same side" means,
6           like, when they endorse --

7           PRESIDENT BARIN: The same team, if 8           you will, because you just described as 9           there being two camps --

10          THE WITNESS: Yes, there has been 11          two camps because of the .africa -- two
12          .africa applications.

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

14          But, initially, I think you just 15          told us you did have a rapport with the 16          AUC and things were going forward the 17          way, perhaps, you initially anticipated.

18          But then, subsequently, that
19          changed?

20          THE WITNESS: Yes. What's the
21          point --

22          PRESIDENT BARIN: Pardon me?

23          THE WITNESS: I'm not sure.

24          PRESIDENT BARIN: What was that?

25          THE WITNESS: I was saying, as was

1           pointed -- I'm asking a question, which I
2           shouldn't. I'm sorry.

3           PRESIDENT BARIN: So my question to 4           you is, What -- why -- why do you think
5           the change was there?

6           THE WITNESS: Oh, the change
7           occurred when AUC was introduced and was 8           told they could have the reserve name to 9           themselves. And there was a consultation
10          by the -- by ICANN and the vested group
11          of community that wants to have our 12          competition, who would like to have AU
13          endorsements so they can proceed with 14          their own application.

15          PRESIDENT BARIN: So who would you
16          say would be -- in your own words, who 17          would you say is responsible for --

18          THE WITNESS: Well, I think,
19          initially, if AUC did not get the support
20          of ICANN, I would not think that -- I
21          mean, AUC had no idea of applying for -- 22          for a gTLD when I went to them. They 23          supported our efforts. I made various 24          presentations with the relevant bodies.

25          And I went -- finally, after it's

1           been approved, like almost a year's worth
2           of communication with AUC, e-mails and 3           correspondences and presentations on 4           .africa initiatives. So they had no
5           idea, and they were not interested in 6           applying for .africa until the incident
7           happened where they were advised,
8           obviously, that they could reserve the 9           name and/or, you know, buy.

10                   And we totally feel responsible that 11           ICANN approach to .africa had an 12           influence in it.

13                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. But is it
14           fair to say or ask -- I mean, AUC could 15           have also changed its mind?

16                   THE WITNESS: Obviously, if it
17           consulted, it would change its mind.

18                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm sorry.
19           Say it again.

20                   THE WITNESS: If it's consulted,
21           there's another approach to .africa, it
22           will change its mind.

23                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: It would
24           change its mind again, you mean?

25                   THE WITNESS: No, no. At the time,

1 after they've given us endorsements,
2 right, if they think that they could have
3 it to themselves or work with another
4 organization to have it to themselves,
5 definitely, they would have changed their
6 mind. That's all I'm saying.

7 They become the competitor, right,
8 to have the same thing that we're going 9 after.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You think,
11 as a competitor, they took your idea?

12 THE WITNESS: They took our idea
13 because the whole proposal that we 14 submitted for 18 months going back and 15 forth and -- and -- and even the 16 endorsement they collected from the other
17 governments, and what they showed to them
18 was our idea, our proposal.

19 So -- but we didn't have a problem
20 with the competition, in a sense, because 21 the ICANN gTLD, you know, it allows for 22 competition. But when your endorser
23 becomes a competition and they're trained
24 after that, how they went about it and 25 the GAC advice and how they came through

1 GAC to stop our application completely,
2 it was -- it was not a competition; it
3 was more like --

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: I want to come to 5 that in a minute.

6 But when you say -- but do you
7 attribute that to, if you will -- and I
8 think you alluded to it earlier, that the 9 meeting with the ICANN representative, is 10 that -- is that --

11 THE WITNESS: That's very key --
12 that's a very key meeting.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: But a key I can
14 understand. But the point was made, I
15 guess -- and you heard it this morning,
16 submissions by ICANN -- that they could 17 have changed their mind. AUC could have 18 changed its mind at any time they wanted
19 to.

20 THE WITNESS: But I was told by the 21 Chief of Staff exactly what happened,
22 right, so they didn't tell me that 23 they --

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: What were you
25 told?

1           THE WITNESS: They said the ICANN
2           representative came and made a .africa
3           presentation, and they're going to come
4           up with the regulatory framework.
5           Obviously, they do not understand the 6           language of what the reserve name is 7           really what happened with the regulatory
8           framework.

9           When you think about it, they're 10          trying to say it's -- there's a way to 11          govern the gTLD to the benefits of the --
12          of Africa. So the regulatory framework
13          is what they're told. And so that really
14          turned out in the card to me, the reserve
15          name directly to the AUC.

16          PRESIDENT BARIN: If I can perhaps
17          summarize, what you're saying is AUC
18          found out through, according to you, the 19          presentation that ICANN made to them that 20          they no longer really needed you; they 21          could do it themselves?

22          THE WITNESS: Exactly. That's what
23          they have on their letter. That's what 24          the letter says. It does not withdraw
25          our application. It says, In

1 coordination with ICANN and the
2 stakeholder community, we will identify
3 what's best for Africa.

4 So it's very clear.

6 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

7 BY ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN

8 - - -

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Ms. Bekele,
10 I have a -- the first question for you,
11 and it concerns the -- what you mentioned
12 Page 30, Paragraph 66 of your written
13 statement, that's the request for 14 proposal that was issued by AUC.

15 You heard this morning in the 16 opening statement, I think it was from 17 ICANN, that you refused -- and correct me
18 if my recollection is not correct -- that 19 you refused, quote/unquote, to 20 participate in this request for proposals
21 that AUC has put out.

22 Could you explain to us what --
23 first of all, can you confirm that you
24 refused, and if you do confirm that you
25 refused, can you confirm why you did

1 refuse?

2 THE WITNESS: Sure thing.

3 We made a strong point as to our
4 refusal and communicated it to ICANN --
5 to ICANN as well as AUC executives about 6 it. And the point being this RFP was 7 issued right after Dakar when ICANN could 8 not reserve the name for -- for AUC, when 9 that was known.

10 And so, therefore, the first point
11 of -- the first step that AUC took was to 12 directly appoint ZACR as -- as a registry
13 operator on behalf of AUC. And then we 14 fought that, and we explained to AUC
15 saying that it's only ICANN who has a
16 mandate to appoint a registry. AUC
17 cannot do that.

18 At that point, then they turned that 19 appointment to an RFP, and then they
20 issued the RFP with certain conditions.
21 And, primarily, the people behind -- they
22 put together an African Union Task Force,
23 which is a task force made up of all the 24 people within the African community that
25 has vested interests in .africa.

1           And some of the members of the 2           .africa -- this task force, in fact, have 3           failed to get a direct endorsement from 4           AUC in competition to us, even after we 5           got endorsement. So these are sort of 6           vested group that went and, on behalf of 7           AUC, was executing the RFP.

8           So that was one of the biggest 9           problems we have.

10          But when we saw the RFP
11          requirements, it was extraordinarily
12          different from the ICANN RFP. So one --
13          for example, one is -- first of all, it
14          says, Take a geographic name and apply it
15          for a community.

16          So that means that per -- the 17          application that's going to be endorsed 18          is going to have to apply on behalf of 19          the African community. And we felt that 20          that's irregular, because the .africa
21          gTLD is not a community gTLD; it's a
22          standard gTLD.

23          So that's one constraint we saw.

24          And then the second we saw was that 25          it required ccTL- -- alignment with the

1 ccTLDs -- African ccTLDs. And that's not
2 something that the main ICANN RFP
3 requires. So we didn't have to go with 4 some extraordinary request again.

5 So we felt like there's no need to
6 do that. But the other competition does
7 have already an existing relationship
8 with the ccTLDs. So we felt like it's 9 going to favor them.

10 So the whole thing was, we felt
11 like, contrived by that -- that task
12 force to favor a particular group and 13 come up -- come out with a predetermined
14 outcome.

15 And also, the fact that it's not in 16 compliance with the -- with an
17 ICANN-regulated gTLD, which we've come up
18 with six years of requirements now has 19 changed with a different kind of 20 requirement where we're forced to 21 participate, and we probably will not
22 even win it. And then, when we go to
23 ICANN, it's just a contrary to the RFP.

24 And two things I forgot in there,
25 actually, is that the con- -- the

1 confidentiality of our proposal, because
2 it requires the financial and the
3 technical and all the application
4 proposal they had asked us to submit,
5 which means we're exposing that to our
6 competitors as well, who will have --
7 who, again, are the vested group, as well
8 as the other competition.

9 So we didn't feel like that should 10 be given at the AUC level; it should be 11 given at the ICANN level.

12 Okay. So there many, many reasons.

13 I mean, I have -- my organization
14 has bid in international bids for a long
15 time, my private organizations and so
16 forth. We have experience in 17 administering bids. So we thought that 18 the whole thing is irregular in terms of 19 how they came about it.

20 And, also, one more point on this is 21 that the ICANN RFP, as you know, it's 22 taking, like, six, seven, eight months to 23 evaluate the whole technical, financial
24 application. You know, it's an extensive
25 process that requires expertise,

1 independent evaluators and so forth.

2 The AU RFP was extremely simple, and
3 it required us to give all this
4 information, but the award is going to be
5 given in seven days. So it's just -- you
6 know it was predetermined outcome.

7 So we didn't want to be falling a
8 victim to something that's extraordinary.
9 That was not part of the ICANN rules.

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You are
11 saying a lot of things at the same time,
12 so I'm trying to understand the main
13 points.

14 Are you saying that because AUC was 15 requiring a filing -- an open filing of 16 everything, contrary to what ICANN
17 does -- ICANN has some parts which are 18 confidential in the applications and
19 other parts which are public -- are you
20 saying that AUC was asking you to 21 basically give to the open public and 22 to -- therefore, to the competition all
23 of your application?

24 Is that -- is that what you said?

25 THE WITNESS: No.

1           Let me clarify. What I'm saying is 2 when you actually submit a bid for any
3 RFP, right, you have to -- there's a
4 requirement, which is the financial,
5 technical and whatever requirement they 6 would ask.

7           So that would be -- the
8 confidentiality of that data would fall
9 on the evaluators. And the evaluators of 10 that RFP was our competition.

11           So it would not be fair to give all
12 of our confidential information to them
13 and then we go apply again as a
14 confidential in ICANN as well.

15           So it's like double exposure. Yeah.

16           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Now, I don't
17 know whether, in your opinion, the fact
18 that you refused to participate for the 19 reasons you just explained basically made
20 you an opponent to whoever was in power
21 to decide at the AUC what they were going
22 to do next.

23           So the call was actually a difficult
24 call?

25           THE WITNESS: It was an extremely

1           difficult call. Also, the fact that --
2           the major issue is that AUC wanted that 3           applicant -- the successful applicant to 4           apply on behalf of the community.

5           And this is not a community
6           application; this is a gTLD standard
7           application. So the -- our opponents'
8           differentiation strategy from ours was to 9           apply on behalf of a community. And,
10          even so, they did not apply at ICANN on 11          behalf of the community. That was their 12          differentiation strategy.

13          And we couldn't participate in that 14          process because we would not know the 15          impact of getting an endorsement under -- 16          being a successful applicant to apply on 17          behalf of the community, how it would 18          affect us on the ICANN level, because 19          it's ultra contrary to the RFP of ICANN.

20                 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. My 21          second question goes to the processes
22          that you describe in your -- in your 23          written statement.

24                 And, in fact, at several moments in 25          your written statement -- I'm not going

1 to cite them, but you cite names of
2 people who we have no idea basically who
3 they are. And I'm just taking an
4 example, this Pierre Dandjinou.

5 THE WITNESS: Um-hum.

6 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So you go
7 for quite a long time in your statement,
8 probably several paragraphs, at least the 9 ones that I have here, Page 33,
10 explaining what he did and so on.

11 But why is it -- I have to ask the 12 question -- why is Mr. Dandjinou not
13 here? I mean, if he's that important
14 that you really spend so much time
15 explaining to us what he has done so
16 wrong, why aren't we, you know, listening
17 to him?

18 Can you explain that? What's 19 the --

20 THE WITNESS: I don't know. He's
21 currently an ICANN employee, so I'm not
22 sure exactly. I'm not the one calling
23 the witnesses, so why he's not here --

24 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Fine.

25 THE WITNESS: -- but just to briefly

1 describe the relationship, that, you
2 know, the gentleman was the head of the 3 ICANN Task Force -- I mean, the African
4 Union Task Force during the time the RFP
5 was being administered.

6 So we thought there was a conflict
7 of interest because he's one of the 8 vested groups of .africa that wanted the 9 community to own, the current ones.

10 So the reason we mention him all
11 over is because there is sort of an 12 incestuous relationship with this African 13 community and ICANN and the .africa gTLD
14 in general. And we felt like there's a 15 huge amount of conflicts of interests
16 that are not resolved.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Let's be
18 precise for a minute about this conflict
19 of interest. I mean, you, yourself, have 20 been involved in ICANN. So it seems like
21 in the Internet community, there's a lot
22 of going back and forth.

23 I mean, at some stage, you know, you
24 are -- and I guess in this country, in 25 the U.S. -- and that's why ICANN has this

1 kind of special status in a way -- there
2 is -- I mean, for a French person, I can
3 tell you it's more -- more shocking
4 that -- and we have actually an
5 expression which is "pantouflage."

6 You know, pantouflage is really bad.
7 It's really bad, because that means
8 you're using your contacts that you have
9 been -- you know, your network that you
10 have been crafting at the time you were 11 in an institution for private interests.
12 But it seems that the Internet community,
13 it happens all the time.

14 Would you agree with me?

15 THE WITNESS: I completely agree.

16 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: But then how 17 does that influence the analysis that we
18 have to have on the conflict of interest
19 that you are raising? You are raising --
20 you know, your case is based partly on 21 the conflict of interest. That is 22 very common.

23 If the going back and forth from 24 public to private, from ICANN to other
25 institutions, is pretty common, what is

1 the conclusion for us or what is the
2 analysis for us?

3 I mean, you may not want to answer
4 the question. I don't know. But, you
5 know, this is something that is important
6 for us.

7 THE WITNESS: Well, there could be a
8 measure of response. I mean, I was at 9 ICANN since 2005. I'm very familiar with 10 the environment.

11 When we were given the opinion of 12 gTLDs, a consideration of conflict of 13 interest came in fact and was prevalent
14 while -- during the final stages of the 15 gTLD, I would say. That's why we have 16 about, I think -- maybe I could confirm
17 that -- but maybe about 18 out of 18
18 Board of Directors. About 16 have 19 recused themselves, so that process went
20 in place.

21 And that's why you start identifying
22 people to curtail perceptions of 23 interest -- of -- of -- the thing we were 24 talking about all day today, the 25 perceived conflict versus the actual

1 conflict and so forth.

2 So it's very normal to report it to
3 the upper management of the ICANN Board,
4 and it's within the integrity of the
5 person to step down and recuse themselves
6 so they are not perceived as that. And 7 the consequences are up to the person, I
8 would believe.

9 So . . .

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Thank
11 you.

12 - - -

13 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL
14 BY HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL

15 - - -

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Do you
17 under -- do you agree you need the 18 support of the 60 percent of the African 19 countries to --

20 THE WITNESS: Yes.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And you --
22 you knew it before you got the warning
23 letters?

24 THE WITNESS: Sure.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And did you

1 ever get 60 percent?

2 THE WITNESS: We have, according to
3 the Guidebook, almost 100 percent, right,
4 because we have the AUC -- in our
5 opinion, it's not withdrawn -- and also
6 UNECA, which is another equivalent
7 organization.

8 So the point of the 60 percent was 9 not determined, in fact, until the 10 Dakar -- the Dakar meeting, where I
11 remember we had a discussion with some of 12 the Board members saying, Sophia, in 13 fact, the 60 percent might imply that it
14 would be about 36 governments, instead
15 of, like, a blanket 60 percent -- a
16 blanket endorsement.

17 So there was a tiptoeing about
18 exactly the interpretation of that, what 19 that 60 percent was. But irrelevant to 20 that, when we developed the Guidebook, it
21 was very clear that geographic name
22 applicants -- it's not only .africa --
23 they could come in with the current
24 endorsement they have.

25 And at the end, after the

1 independent evaluators look at them,
2 there is a 90-day period where we can --
3 again, if the -- if the -- the
4 application is viable.

5 Because the application I know we
6 focused here --

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What
8 application is viable?

9 THE WITNESS: The application being 10 viable means the --

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You mean
12 the AUC --

13 THE WITNESS: -- no, no, the
14 actual -- the registry application that 15 you put --

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

17 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

18 -- so I know we focused a lot --
19 because of the GAC advice, we focused a 20 lot on the merits of .africa on -- on the 21 support.

22 But the merits of an application,
23 really, according to the gTLD Guidebook,
24 is the successful applicants should pass
25 technical, financial and support,

1 obviously, for -- for geographic name.

2 So most people, you know, you may
3 not have -- you may have a viable
4 application and not the support. So the 5 gTLD Guidebook says that, you know, if
6 your application is viable, you can go
7 get support. You have 30 days to go get
8 support.

9 So we -- we are counting on the gTLD
10 system to work as it's constructed.

11 So when we apply -- when we went in 12 there, we had already the -- the current
13 endorsements that we had in our hands,
14 but if our application -- that's what we
15 were hoping, that when the two applicants
16 were going -- being evaluated, the 17 applicant who successfully evaluated
18 could go back to the AUC or go back to 19 the African countries to get
20 endorsements. And we had no problem to 21 get them.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. You
23 said the AUC endorsement, as far as 24 you're concerned, is not withdrawn?

25 THE WITNESS: No.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Why do you
2 say that?

3 THE WITNESS: Because it was not
4 withdrawn. They did not say we did not
5 withdraw your application. They just 6 said we will work with a framework with 7 ICANN and --

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I thought
9 they did withdraw.

10 You don't think they withdrew their
11 application?

12 THE WITNESS: We don't think they
13 withdraw it.

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You don't
15 think they changed their mind --

16 THE WITNESS: They changed their 17 mind in the way it's implemented -- they 18 want it implemented.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Are they 20 still endorsing you, even though you're a
21 competitor?

22 THE WITNESS: They did not say
23 withdraw. We didn't see it as a legal 24 withdraw.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

1 THE WITNESS: Yeah. But we have the
2 UNECA, so, for us, it's equivalent. So
3 if we're competitors, then we will
4 compete with each other on that.

5 But the point is the successful
6 evaluate -- the person -- the applicant
7 who is going to be successfully
8 evaluated, at the end, we still have
9 three months to get endorsements.

10 And what we are saying to ICANN is,
11 The GAC advice somehow has stopped us
12 from participating further, so we don't 13 even know -- go to that.

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You had 17
15 countries give you Early Warnings, and 16 one of the -- I think most of them, not
17 all of them, said you need 18
18 countries --

19 THE WITNESS: There are 17, yes.

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.

21 So what did you do when you got that

22 --

23 THE WITNESS: Okay. Again --

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- those
25 complaints are invalid or --

1 THE WITNESS: -- the specifics of
2 that says that you didn't have support.
3 But the 17 countries had no idea of our
4 submission of application. We already
5 have support.

6 So how could they come in and say
7 You don't have support? It's their own
8 perception of what AUC --

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did you
10 respond and say, Look, I do have support?
11 I have AUC --

12 THE WITNESS: Yes, in our early GAC
13 response -- actually, we should not be
14 discussing because, obviously, ICANN did
15 not put even that as a con- -- you know,
16 the endorsements, they are not in public
17 domain.

18 So that's -- the discussion was not
19 if we had support; the discussion is that 20 they -- their response to us was not 21 legitimate. Their objection to us was 22 not legitimate without them knowing that,
23 if we have support or not. Because
24 they're acquiescing to the AUC statement.

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: There's a

1 writing somewhere where you write back
2 and you go, Wait a minute, I don't need
3 18, I've got enough already?

4 THE WITNESS: We did say that, and
5 we also said, Your supported applicant
6 does not also have the proper
7 endorsements, so why are we evaluated
8 differently?

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Whether or
10 not AUC's endorsement program is proper
11 or not, that's not really before us --

12 THE WITNESS: I understand.

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- what's,
14 really, kind of before us is the action
15 of the GAC to stop your application,
16 right?

17 THE WITNESS: Right.

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did you
19 know before the Beijing meeting that that 20 was on the agenda --

21 THE WITNESS: No.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- that one
23 of the things was to stop your -- going
24 forward?

25 THE WITNESS: No.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You didn't
2 know that?

3 THE WITNESS: No. We only know
4 about the Early Warning, which could
5 potentially lead to us --

6 Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential
Information

1 Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential
Information

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: But you had
6 no idea that there was going to be
7 anything consensus -- consensus request
8 at the Beijing meeting?

9 THE WITNESS: Obviously, once we got 10 there, we --

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You were
12 there?

13 THE WITNESS: Yeah, I was there --

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You were
15 there?

16 THE WITNESS: -- yes.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Oh.

18 THE WITNESS: I was not at the GAC
19 meeting, but I was at the meeting for
20 ICANN.

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. Did
22 you talk to anybody to try to get
23 support?

24 THE WITNESS: Yeah. We have intel
25 after -- over there with the government?

1 No.

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No, not
3 with the Beijing government.

4 What I'm hearing is everybody's
5 walking around all this talking --

6 THE WITNESS: We do that, yeah.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- and you
8 needed -- according to the testimony, you
9 needed only one country to stand up and 10 say, Don't take this off the agenda or 11 don't adopt this opinion?

12 THE WITNESS: Kenya objected --

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Who?

14 THE WITNESS: -- Kenya objected.

15 That's what --

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Kenya
17 objected on the e-mails?

18 THE WITNESS: Yes.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did you
20 know that you had to be present --
21 present in the room?

22 THE WITNESS: No. The actual GAC
23 principle says that a member country can
24 send an e-mail when they are not present.
25 We put that as part of our GAC response

1 to ICANN.

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Did you
3 know the position of the -- of GAC, that
4 the person who is sending e-mails is not
5 even the proper person to make the
6 objection?

7 THE WITNESS: That's not still,
8 again, what is the GAC principles. There
9 is no clarity on that. It's only the 10 GAC Chair that says that.

11 So as to who is the one that's
12 supposed to send an objection, a
13 representative versus advisor, it's not 14 in the GAC -- it's not clearly stated in 15 the GAC principle.

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: When you
17 got all the Early Warnings, did you think 18 that those countries were going to oppose
19 your -- your --

20 THE WITNESS: We still had like,
21 according to the GAC principles, that
22 unless it's a policy advice or .africa,
23 they cannot hijack it, the Geographic's
24 Name objection, which is supposed to be 25 done by an independent group, and just

1 stop our application. We thought it was 2 not right. It was very wrongful for
3 ICANN to accept that as advice.

4 If we didn't count on the
5 governments, which I think a lot of 6 confusion is there -- as we say, they can 7 say whatever they like about an 8 applicant, if they don't like the 9 applicant, but it's up to the Board, we 10 think, that should be determining if this 11 is the right sacrifice or not.

12 And we expected the Board to know
13 that Geographic Names Panel would be
14 responsible for objections over --
15 over -- over endorsements and not GAC.

16 So, yeah.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

18 So on Paragraph 101 of your
19 declaration on 46 -- Page 46 --

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: Which paragraph?

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm sorry.
22 Page 46 -- Page 46, Paragraph 101.

24 Paragraph 101.

25

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

2 The second-to-last sentence, you
3 say, AUC used its position on the GAC to 4 persuade GAC members to advise the Board
5 that DCA's application should not
6 proceed.

7 Why did you -- what facts do you
8 have to support that?

9 THE WITNESS: Which one is that --

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm 11 sorry --

12 THE WITNESS: -- it's 46, Page 101?

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Page -- no.

15 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: --
17 Paragraph 101.

18 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You can
20 read the whole paragraph.

21 The second-to-last sentence says,
22 Instead, the AUC used its position on the 23 GAC to persuade GAC members to advise the 24 Board that DCA's application should not
25 proceed.

1           What facts do you have that support
2           that?

3           THE WITNESS: Because I believe the 4           Early Warning was coordinated by AUC
5           assistant. So, obviously --

6           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You believe
7           that? Does anybody ever tell you that 8           or --

9           THE WITNESS: No. The AUC has
10          submitted an Early Warning --

11          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The AUC
12          did, yes, that's true.

13          THE WITNESS: -- for the Early
14          Warning, so why wouldn't they submit --

15          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Why what?

16          THE WITNESS: -- it's very natural
17          to actually coordinate further on the GAC
18          advice as well, yeah.

19          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And then,
20          in Paragraph 102, you say, ICANN allowed
21          the AUC to circumvent the formal
22          objection process.

23          Why do you say that?

24          THE WITNESS: Because the formal
25          objection process for ICANN gTLD requires

1 four different kinds of objection
2 criteria, and one is that -- that of a
3 community.

4 And, unfortunately, the AUC and
5 the -- the successful applicant that they
6 endorsed and should have applied on 7 behalf of the community did not apply on 8 behalf of the community. But they were 9 very unsuccessful in objecting many of 10 our application, including at the IO
11 level, the independent objector, and so
12 forth on a community ground.

13 So it's known that the community --
14 the community want -- if an applicant
15 does not apply as a community, since --
16 it's known that they will not pass the 17 evaluation; so, therefore, the only way
18 they could -- they could formally object
19 to us is through the GAC means, because 20 that's the only power that they have to 21 object.

22 Because the legal objection criteria
23 that's listed under the -- the -- the 24 Guidebook will not apply. So that advice
25 that was given by ICANN in Dakar to tell

1           them to use the GAC as a way of objecting
2           or -- or as a way of prevailing in the 3           applications to the -- to the desired
4           outcome of AUC as another way of saying
5           circumventing them.

6           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Let me go
7           back to Beijing a second.

8           So when they had the meeting where 9           they had the consensus -- what they say
10          is consensus. I know you dispute that --

11          THE WITNESS: Right.

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- did you
13          know that was going to happen during that 14          meeting, that they were going to go
15          through that?

16          THE WITNESS: No, I did not know.
17          There may be an exchange of e-mails, but 18          we did not anticipate it.

19          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: When did
20          you find out for the first time when --

21          THE WITNESS: When it was announced
22          at the GAC -- at the public meeting.
23          Yeah.

24          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Now,
25          what -- you have two people you say have

1 conflicts.

2 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah. And
4 Mr. Disspain, I understand -- what
5 exactly is the conflict?

6 THE WITNESS: For --

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: He's the 8 one from South Africa, I think --

9 THE WITNESS: Yeah.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- no.
11 He's the one from Australia. Sorry, got 12 the wrong guy.

13 THE WITNESS: -- he sits on --
14 and -- on the .au, which is Australian
15 ccTLD, and the -- the .au is affiliated
16 with dot -- I mean -- the ARI Registry
17 Services, which is the registry services
18 that provided ZACR with the registry
19 software.

20 So they've consulted with ZACR. And 21 so by way of business affiliation, we 22 didn't feel it's comfortable that is --

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Why would
24 they object? Would there be an economic 25 or otherwise advantage to them?

1 THE WITNESS: It's always economic
2 advantage during -- with the registries
3 and the consultancy to provide and so
4 forth. There's always a relationship
5 between -- that's why a lot of the Board
6 members recuse themselves.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So if
8 Mr. Disspain voted against your proposal,
9 he would gain how economically?

10 THE WITNESS: Well, I don't know the 11 direct -- the direct financial gain he 12 would have, but they have a business
13 relationship with ARI, which is --
14 supplies software for ZADNA.

15 Usually, when the back-end registry
16 supplies software for you, it depends --
17 I don't know their contractual
18 relationship, but there could be --

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: They could
20 use something -- they could lose
21 something, right?

22 THE WITNESS: Yeah, there's 23 always --

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Mr.
25 Silber -- you heard me say that maybe

1 Mr. Silber was --

2 THE WITNESS: Yes, Mr. Silber is a
3 South African national. He sits on the 4 dot -- he is a treasurer on the .z- --
5 ZADNA, which is a regulator of the .za,
6 which is the country code for
7 South Africa.

8 So .za is managed by UniForum, and 9 UniForum applied for, obviously, the 10 .africa TLD, and they were the ones that 11 are endorsed. And the .za general
12 manager is Vika Mpisane, South African 13 national, and she is also the Chairman of 14 the African ccTLDs that have aligned
15 themselves with ZACR's application.

16 And Mr. -- Vika recommended UniForum
17 to AUC to be endorsed. So, again, there
18 is that very, very close relationship of 19 Mike Silber being a treasurer and -- and 20 ZADNA endorsing UniForum as part of the 21 "dotAfrica Initiative." It's a public
22 record, that they openly endorse them.

23 So I don't know about financial
24 trail, but all I can say is there's a
25 very close working relationship of

1           approvals.

2                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  It wouldn't
3           be an independent vote?

4                   THE WITNESS:  I cannot see that.

5                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  Okay.  What
6           else?

7                   Did you see the ombudsman report
8           when it came out that says there's no
9           conflict?

10                  THE WITNESS:  Yes.

11                  HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  It was very
12           narrow.  It just said, No conflict right
13           now because there's never been any 14           discussion.

15                  Is that right?

16                  THE WITNESS:  Right.  It was a point
17           in time, like an audit.

18                  HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  A point in 19           time.

20                  Did you ever renew that later when 21           it was obvious -- well, did you ever
22           review it later -- did you ever renew
23           your objection to the conflict?

24                  THE WITNESS:  No.

25                  What happened was, during that

1 investigation, the ombudsman, in fact,
2 consulted with ICANN Internet counsel,
3 and then he consulted with the two Board
4 members before he actually decided to
5 go --

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

7 THE WITNESS: -- so we felt that
8 was -- the whole threesome relationship
9 was not independent to begin with.

10 But after -- right after that, that
11 advice came from DCA. The two Board
12 members, in fact, published their -- or 13 updated their statements of interest
14 publicly, which means disclosure, they 15 did the disclosure.

16 After that, we did not submit any
17 other update.

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: When I was 19 asking questions earlier, there was a new
20 fact. And then, as they started, you
21 know -- they say there's never been any 22 votes or any discussion, according to the 23 ombudsman; therefore, at that point in 24 time, there's no conflict. But later,
25 there was.

1 I don't know who's supposed to
2 rejuvenate that. Maybe ICANN --

3 THE WITNESS: ICANN -- sorry.

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- maybe
5 ICANN can.

6 THE WITNESS: ICANN Board is what he
7 was saying, right, and Mr. Chalaby. The 8 ICANN Board brought it to their attention
9 because of --

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That was
11 the second one.

12 THE WITNESS: Right.

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm fine.
14 I understand the answer. I think I'm 15 done.

16 - - -

17 EXAMINATION ON BEHALF OF THE PANEL

18 BY PRESIDENT BARIN

19 - - -

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: I have one quick
21 question for you, and then we'll move on.

22 Did I understand correctly that you
23 said that, in your view, the way the 24 process should work -- the gTLD
25 process -- ICANN should evaluate the

1 technical and financial capabilities of
2 Africans and that the political support
3 should then be left to the applicant and 4 the runnerup, or whoever it is, to then
5 deal within a certain period of time -- I
6 think you said it was 30 days or --

7 THE WITNESS: Ninety.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- 90 days -- is
9 that -- is that what your position is?

10 THE WITNESS: Right. That's why
11 it's on the gTLD Guidebook so you can
12 collect endorsement at any time
13 throughout. Even if you don't submit
14 your application without endorsement, you
15 can still collect endorsements. You have
16 90 days after you're approved as a viable
17 applicant, you can collect endorsements.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: So are the -- are 19 you separating the political issue and 20 the evaluation of technical and financial 21 capability?

22 THE WITNESS: Yeah. We don't
23 consider endorsement as a political; we 24 consider it as -- as a requirement to 25 fulfill, like any other. So -- it only

1 gets political if there's a yes or no.

2 For example -- for example, just let
3 me say -- the -- the Guidebook allows an
4 entity to endorse two applicants, right?
5 That's apolitical. That means the 6 organization is neutral and independent.

7 So the predetermination of something
8 that's political endorsement is political 9 is incorrect. It's only -- ours just 10 only got political because the competitor
11 wanted the same thing -- the AUC wanted
12 to be the competitor, they endorsed an
13 application.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: So if we were to 15 turn the clock back and -- and have
16 you -- that's DCA -- and ZACR go forward
17 together, the evaluation then would be 18 one of financial and technical
19 capabilities?

20 THE WITNESS: Um-hum.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: And then there
22 would be a period, as you said, 90 days
23 for --

24 THE WITNESS: Right.

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- either one of

1 the two --

2 THE WITNESS: Right.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- to go out and
4 get endorsements, as you said, or
5 support?

6 THE WITNESS: Right.

7 If I may add to this, that is what
8 we recommended for ICANN. Knowing that
9 the ZACR application did not satisfy
10 the -- the endorsement requirement as 11 well, we thought that ICANN was at a
12 crossroad of not knowing what to do.

13 And that is why we responded to our
14 Early Warnings when we say, you know,
15 waive the endorsements. This is not to 16 the benefit of DCA; it was to the benefit
17 of .africa gTLD, because we wanted to 18 make sure at least we saved .africa.
19 It's been -- a lot of work has been gone
20 through it.

21 So that was the recommendation we
22 make, because we knew -- we have
23 intelligence that the ZACR application
24 did not have endorsement either. And
25 because the endorsement has not been made

1 public by ICANN, which I do not
2 understand why, because during the
3 application -- during the RFP period,
4 when we did that, there was no reason
5 that endorsement should not be public.

6 Because if it was public, we would
7 not have gone through this step of, you
8 know, issues. People would have known if 9 that endorsement by AUC was legitimate or 10 not, because all those endorsements that
11 was collected were on behalf of a reserve
12 name for AUC, and it wasn't a proper
13 endorsement.

14 So had that been disclosed at the 15 beginning of the application, then we 16 would all know what to do for the next
17 nine months trying to see -- consult with 18 AUC or authorities or governments to do
19 the right thing.

20 But the nondisclosure of that has 21 caused a lot of confusion.

22 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm done.

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: So in the normal
25 course, that's you, Mr. LeVee.

1                   Is there a need for a very punctual
2 short break?

3                   MR. LEVEE: Not for me, but if 4 Ms. Bekele wants a break, she can take
5 one.

6                   THE WITNESS: It's okay.

7                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Are you okay?

8                   THE WITNESS: Yeah.

9                   PRESIDENT BARIN: How much time do
10 you think you'll need?

11                   MR. LEVEE: I'm very cognizant of 12 the hour --

13                   PRESIDENT BARIN: It's fine --

14                   MR. LEVEE: -- I'll be much shorter
15 than the cross-examination.

16                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That
17 doesn't help.

18                   MR. LEVEE: What I'm handing to 19 Ms. Bekele, just so you know, is the 20 binder that has my opening statement
21 slides and exhibits, because there are a
22 couple of exhibits that I'd like to turn
23 to.

INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES AND NUMBERS
BY MR. LEVEE:

Q. The exhibit number that I started with, Ms. Bekele, is Exhibit C-R-10.

Do you see that in front of you?

A. Um-hum.

PRESIDENT BARIN: I don't mean to interrupt you before you even get started.

Are you able to give me an idea, because I need, personally, a nature break.

MR. LEVEE: If you need a break, then you should take one.

HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right now?

PRESIDENT BARIN: I'd rather take it now, maybe five minutes, if that's okay?

MR. LEVEE: Five minutes is good. I won't even leave the room.

(Whereupon, a brief recess was taken from 6:36 p.m. to 6:41 p.m.)

1                   PRESIDENT BARIN: We're back on the
2                   record.

3                   Mr. LeVee.

4                   MR. LEVEE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

5                   BY MR. LEVEE:

6                   Q.     Ms. Bekele, you understood when you
7                   submitted your application to ICANN that you were 8                   supposed to submit with the application whatever
9                   governmental support you had at that time, right?

10                  A.     Yes.

11                  Q.     So when you -- you submitted your 12                  application in the spring or so, March of 2012?

13                  A.     Yes.

14                  Q.     And you attached the letter that you
15                  had received from the AUC in 2009, correct?

16                  A.     Correct.

17                  Q.     And you characterized that as the AUC
18                  supporting your application, right?

19                  A.     Correct.

20                  Q.     Okay.

21                         So let me ask you to look at -- it was 22                         the page -- when I gave you the binder, it was 23                         the page that was open -- Exhibit C-R-10.

24                         So this is a letter dated April 16th,
25                         2010, correct?

1 A. Correct.

2 Q. And it's written by the Deputy Chair
3 of the African Union Commission., correct?

4 A. Yes.

5 Q. And it says, The African -- and it's
6 addressed to you, right?

7 A. Correct.

8 Q. Okay. And it says, The African Union
9 Commission has reconsidered its approach in 10 implementing the subject Internet domain name
11 (.africa) and no longer endorses individual
12 initiatives in coordination with Member states
13 continental.

14 You see that, right?

15 A. Correct.

16 Q. You were pretty unhappy by that,
17 right?

18 A. Surprised.

19 Q. Okay. And you knew that this letter
20 was the withdrawal of the support that you had 21 worked so hard to earn?

22 A. No.

23 Q. Okay. Well, let's test that.

24 Why don't you look, then, at

25 Exhibit C-26 at the beginning of the binder?

1                   You tell me when you're there.

2                   Are you with me?

3           A.       Yes.

4           Q.       Okay.  If you look at the second page,
5 that's your computer-generated signature, correct?

6           A.       Yes.

7           Q.       And this is your letter to the Chief
8 of Staff of the African Union Commission, right?

9           A.       Correct.

10          Q.       And in that, you say, quote, We have 11 been waiting patiently for the past several months
12 to receive an official response from your office
13 regarding the need to properly redress our wishes
14 as conveyed at different times for the official
15 reinstatement of our earlier endorsement received
16 from the AU for the .africa gTLD and registry.

17                   Now, you wrote that, right?

18          A.       Correct.

19          Q.       So you knew what you were asking for 20 was to be reinstated, right?

21          A.       A confirmation.

22          Q.       Well, that's not how I read it.

23                   It looks to me that you knew that your 24 support from the African Union Commission had 25 been withdrawn by the exhibit we just looked, and

1 you were asking for it to be reinstated.

2 You weren't asking for a confirmation,
3 right?

4 A. We did not say anything about
5 withdrawal, though.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm sorry.

7 Say what?

8 THE WITNESS: We did not say
9 anything about withdrawal; we just say
10 reinstated. We wanted to make sure that 11 they confirm what they already have.

12 BY MR. LEVEE:

13 Q. Well, let's look at the next page.
14 There's a lot in the middle here.

15 And -- and in the middle -- well, hold
16 on. Let's stay with the first page.

17 You referred to the fact that DCA had 18 received an endorsement as early as 2009, which 19 it was believed was valid at the time. And in 20 the subsequent months thereafter, the issues
21 became controversial.

22 You see that, right?

23 A. Um-hum.

24 Q. And then, a couple of paragraphs down,
25 you say, We wish to inform our willingness --

1 unwillingness, I should say, to participate in the 2 new AU RFP process.

3           So this was the letter where you
4 informed the AUC that you were not going to 5 submit an RFP response, correct?

6           A.     (No audible response.)

7           Q.     So, here, we've got the AUC, and it
8 has announced that it's going for an RFP process,
9 correct?

10          A.     (No audible response.)

11          Q.     You need to answer audibly so the 12 court reporter can type something down.

13          A.     Yes.

14          Q.     Okay. And you knew that ZACR was 15 going to apply, correct?

16          A.     At that time, it was UniForum, yes.

17          Q.     So you knew UniForum was going to 18 apply?

19          A.     We don't know who is going to apply.

20          Q.     Well, you said earlier that you
21 thought the whole thing was wired for UniForum.
22 You expected them --

23          A.     For a predetermined outcome. And it
24 was UniForum, but then it became ZACR, right? So
25 we really don't know which organization in name

1 that's going to be endorsed, but we know it's the
2 one associated with the group that has vested
3 interest in it. That's it.

4 Q. But you knew, whichever group it was,
5 ZACR or UniForum, or somebody else that might have 6 won the RFP, they were going to get the 7 endorsement of the AUC?

8 A. Certainly not us.

9 Q. Yes.

10 But even so, if you turn to the second
11 page, you say, you know what, I don't like this 12 RFP project, right?

13 You didn't think it was fair, right?

14 A. We thought it was an extraordinary
15 process.

16 Q. Okay.

17 And then you say, In conclusion -- and 18 this is highlighted so you can see it -- In 19 conclusion, we think it would be good for the AU
20 leadership to do what is right and, just in the 21 present circumstances, redress our case
22 satisfactorily and reinstate our endorsements to 23 enable us to go ahead with our application to 24 ICANN.

25 You said that, right?

1 A. Sure.

2 Q. Those are your words?

3 A. Sure.

4 Q. What you're saying is you weren't
5 asking for a reinstatement; you were actually
6 asking for something -- a further endorsement?

7 A. Okay. Mr. LeVee, by the time you have 8 started the very beginning and the highlight and 9 then the end, you missed the whole redress points
10 that were, like, five points in there that we 11 wanted them to redress.

12 So we thought the whole exercise of 13 creating an extraordinary process on the gTLD and 14 creating a parallel policy process, like ICANN --
15 sort of parallel policy process, like ICANN, and 16 extraordinary process of RFP was unfair.

17 And in the process, we're trying to 18 educate them. They did not do the right thing.

19 Q. I know you didn't think they did the 20 right thing --

21 A. Right.

22 Q. -- but my point is you knew that the 23 AUC was no longer endorsing your application. You
24 knew they had pulled their endorsement.

25 A. They have re- -- as they state in that

1 letter, they have reconsidered on the
2 implementation plan.

3 Q. And they -- you knew that they were no
4 longer endorsing you?

5 I'm just trying to get a yes or no.

6 A. Support.

7 Q. You knew that they were no longer
8 supporting you?

9 A. We had the endorsement, but we didn't
10 have support.

11 Q. So you had a piece of paper, right?
12 That was the endorsement?

13 A. We didn't have political support.
14 That's the difference.

15 Q. What you had was a piece of paper from 16 2009 --

17 A. That was called an endorsement, yes.

18 Q. Okay. And you had another piece of 19 paper written in 2010 saying that the earlier
20 piece of paper was no longer valid, right?

21 A. (No audible response.)

22 Q. You have to answer audibly for the 23 court reporter.

24 A. The -- what they said was the -- they 25 want -- they are reconsidering the approach on how

1 they're implementing .africa.

2 Q. It says, No longer endorses individual
3 initiatives --

4 A. Right.

5 Q. -- you were the only individual
6 initiative, right?

7 A. No, actually, it wasn't. There was a
8 lot of people. Those vested group I talked about,
9 they used to go and request AUC, like the AfTLD.
10 There were other groups that used to go and ask
11 it -- to be endorsed.

12 So what their mandate is saying is 13 they don't want individual initiatives.

14 Q. Right.

15 But who else was applying for .africa
16 at that time other than you?

17 A. No. There's AfTLD.

18 Q. They were going to apply to .africa?

19 A. Right. We had --

20 Q. So the letter says they're not going
21 to endorse any individual initiatives, and that 22 included DCA -- you're saying it included DCA,
23 among others?

24 A. Among others.

25 Q. Okay. So you had the letter that says

1 no endorsement of DCA, and you had this other
2 letter where you asked for the reinstatement.

3 But the AUC didn't you give you a
4 reinstatement, right?

5 A. No.

6 Q. No.

7 So when you applied to ICANN in March
8 of 2012, why did you tell ICANN that you had the 9 official endorsement of the AUC?

10 A. We submitted the 2009 letter, which is 11 not withdrawn, and based on a conversation that I
12 had with the Chairman at the time, who endorsed
13 us, he did not withdraw our letter.

14 The letter that you are referring to 15 seems extremely inconsistent. As you can see, it
16 even says, Sophia Bekele, United States of 17 America, While the endorsement was given to 18 Sophia Bekele, DotConnectAfrica, in Africa.

19 We felt like this letter came out of 20 the Deputy's office, while the other one came out
21 of the Chairman's office, which could have easily
22 been done by the Chairman.

23 So we thought there were a lot of 24 irregularities with this letter that confirmed to 25 us that it's not authentic. We --

1 Q. You asked the AUC to send you a second
2 letter, right?

3 A. Right.

4 Q. Saying that the AUC endorses your
5 application, correct?

6 A. Right.

7 Q. And you never got the letter?

8 A. No --

9 Q. Okay.

10 A. -- because they wanted it for 11 themselves now --

12 Q. Okay.

13 A. -- so they consulted differently.

14 Q. You also said in response to one of 15 the Panel's questions that you had, at the time
16 that you submitted your application, the support
17 of governments of Africa.

18 Which governments was that?

19 A. There was the Ethiopian Government and 20 whichever one we filed with our application.

21 Q. Did you also file with your
22 application that you had the support of the Kenyan
23 Government?

24 A. Yeah, because we had the 25 endorsement --

1 Q. Okay.

2 A. -- issued to us, right.

3 Q. And the Kenyan Government later issued
4 an Early Warning advice against your application,
5 correct?

6 A. I'm not familiar with that.

7 Q. You didn't see me use that today?

8 A. I think we discussed that Early
9 Warning. The ccTLDs -- we believe it was the 10 ccTLDs, not the actual governments, that issued
11 the Early Warning. And we are aware of that 12 because if you had gone back, we -- even in our 13 Early Warning, we stated to ICANN that none of 14 the -- these Early Warnings could be justified if 15 it has to actually go back to the government, the 16 Minister level, and -- to see if they were --
17 would be authenticated.

18 So we still felt like the ccTLDs
19 within the GAC structure originated the Early
20 Warnings. It wasn't the actual governments.

21 Q. Well, you're saying what you think.
22 You don't know that, right?

23 A. That's why we say -- that's why it
24 should have been gone to be authenticated by the 25 government.

1 Q. Okay. And GAC Early Warning notice
2 doesn't actually have any legal significance,
3 right? Correct?

4 A. I don't think so.

5 Q. And you responded to it with a lengthy
6 response, correct?

7 A. Right.

8 Q. And did you -- did you say that the --
9 that you had the support of the AUC?

10 A. Our -- our -- our endorsement was just 11 submitted. Whatever we have of support, it was 12 submitted during the application open.

13 And after that, we were waiting for 14 the evaluation by ICANN of all our -- the 15 technical and financial evaluation, which I think
16 the other competition was 301, and ours was about 17 1500. So we would assume -- we were hoping the 18 results of the evaluation coming first and if 19 they have a viable application or not.

20 And then ours were 1500, the number.
21 This is a lottery system that you pick. So
22 whichever viable application comes out of 23 .africa, we expected then to work with AUC and 24 the other governments to show if our application
25 was viable, then we will ask support.

1 Q. Okay. But in the period between the
2 time you submitted your application and the time
3 that the GAC issued the consensus advice -- so
4 that's about a 13-month period, right, March of 5 2012 to April of 2013?

6 A. Right.

7 Q. -- in that period, you did not submit
8 to ICANN any additional written support from any 9 country in Africa, correct?

10 A. No.

11 Q. Okay. No, I'm not correct; or, yes,
12 I'm correct?

13 A. No, no; you are correct.

14 Q. Okay.

15 Now, the Panel asked you a bunch of 16 questions about the impetus of why the AUC
17 changed its mind. So let me ask you few 18 questions about that.

19 You said that -- first of all, you're 20 clear, in your own mind, right, that the AUC was 21 entitled to support an applicant other than 22 DotConnectAfrica, correct?

23 A. That's okay.

24 Q. Okay. And the AUC was also entitled
25 to change its mind -- it was entitled to have a --

1 support your application and then change its mind
2 to support somebody else later, right?

3 A. Sure.

4 Q. Pardon?

5 A. Sure.

6 Q. Okay. So what I think I heard you say
7 was -- is that ICANN told the AUC that it could
8 "reserve" the name for itself.

9 Is that what you said?

10 A. What I said was the Chief of Staff
11 said that the reason we wrote you that letter is 12 because ICANN made a presentation in our offices,
13 and we are now going to go through a regulatory 14 framework.

15 Q. But the word you used -- I wrote it
16 down because you said it at least three times --
17 was that the AUC could "reserve" .africa for 18 itself.

19 That's what you said earlier today,
20 right?

21 A. Right.

22 Q. Okay. Here's what I'm struggling,
23 because you heard my opening statement this
24 morning, right?

25 A. Um-hum.

1 Q. And you saw that I put Dr. Crocker's
2 letter up on the Board. It's Exhibit C-24. It's 3 in your binder.

4 And Dr. Crocker made it very clear to 5 the AUC that it could not reserve .africa, right?

6 So what you're saying is that someone
7 told you in the fall of 2011 that the reason that
8 the AUC changed its mind was because it thought
9 it would get .africa as a reserve name.

10 A. But of course.

11 Q. Okay. But it turns out that whoever 12 told the AUC that, if, in fact, it was told, they 13 were wrong, right? Because ICANN did not permit
14 the AUC to reserve .africa.

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Okay. But irrespective of whether --
17 whether the name is reserved or not -- we know now
18 it was never reserved -- the AUC was entitled to 19 endorse an applicant, right? Originally, they 20 endorsed you.

21 What was wrong with the AUC deciding
22 that they wanted to sponsor their own application
23 through their own RFP process? Was there
24 anything in the Guidebook that prevented that?

25 A. The Guidebook does not specifically

1 say to applicant -- to another regulatory
2 authority to -- that they can develop their only
3 policies and RFP and endorse an applicant. It's 4 not specific.

5 Q. Just silent?

6 A. Right.

7 Q. Okay. So the -- the premise of your
8 objection to the AUC's role was that the AUC was 9 endorsing an application, but there's actually
10 nothing in the Guidebook that says it can't do
11 that?

12 A. No. They endorsed ours, so we don't 13 have any premise of any --

14 Q. Let me rephrase it. Maybe I didn't
15 say it the way I should have.

16 The AUC selected what became the ZACR
17 to apply for .africa.

18 They submitted an actual application,
19 right?

20 A. (No audible response.)

21 Q. Again, you're nodding your head, so --

22 A. Yes, yes, they did.

23 Q. And my point is, there's nothing in 24 the Guidebook that says that the AUC could not do
25 exactly what it did, correct?

1 A. No.

2 Q. Okay. And there's -- there's --

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Correct no?

4 That's a double negative.

5 Was that -- there was nothing in the

6 Guidebook that prevented them from doing

7 this.

8 That's correct, right?

9 THE WITNESS: Right.

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

11 BY MR. LEVEE:

12 Q. Okay. And so you then asked ICANN to 13 change the Guidebook, right? You said, Now that

14 the AUC's involved, we should -- ICANN should

15 change the Guidebook by eliminating the 16 requirement for the 60 percent support.

17 You saw the exhibits I put up this

18 morning?

19 A. I think we said a lot more detail than

20 that.

21 Q. But you did ask ICANN to do that,

22 right?

23 A. But we have a whole page or maybe many

24 written as to why we say that --

25 Q. I understand.

1 A. -- and I -- may -- may I continue?

2 Q. Of course.

3 A. Okay.

4 -- that is in response to the fact
5 that AUC's support letter is as -- is for the 6 reserve name, that same reserve name that you
7 rejected, ICANN has rejected, and you have
8 managed to accept it as part of the application
9 process.

10 And so we say the other applicant,
11 ZACR, does not also have support. Their support
12 letter -- their purported support is not in 13 compliance with the New gTLD Process.

14 So, therefore, we knew ICANN -- when
15 the Early Warning was being issued to us, we knew
16 ICANN did not know what to do, either ICANN will 17 be exposed giving an application to, you know -- 18 because, again, we are not able to see the -- the 19 endorsements publicly -- either ICANN will 20 complicate the .africa process so Africa will not 21 have the .africa gTLD, which actually resulted in 22 that right now, as we speak, and -- or -- so we 23 were trying to advise ICANN to do the right
24 thing.

25 It wasn't trying to say give a

1 favorable position for DCA. It was trying to 2 save the project, because we knew that the 3 support provided by AUC/ZACR was not correct.

4 Q. I think what you're saying is you were 5 trying to help both applications because neither
6 one of them had support?

7 A. I think it's only fair to advise to 8 say give it to the one that's viably -- that has a
9 viable application based on financial, technical 10 and other criteria that's evaluated by ICANN, and 11 then, eventually, try to work with that particular
12 applicant to get the right support.

13 And isn't that what you guys did,
14 Mr. LeVee?

15 Q. Let's be clear, Ms. Bekele.
16 That's not what you asked the Board to 17 do, right?

18 A. Okay. Let's -- we can review it --

19 Q. Yeah, let's do that.
20 You asked the Board to eliminate --

21 A. To waive. That's the word we used,
22 "waive."

23 Q. Let's look first at Exhibit C-35,
24 Page 5.

25 Now, this is your response to the

1 Early Warning notices that were submitted,
2 correct? Yes?

3 A. Yes.

4 Q. Okay. And on Page 5, why don't you
5 read the paragraph that I highlighted?

6 A. We believe that the endorsement issue
7 should no longer being considered as relevant in 8 the evaluation of the .africa gTLD as a geographic 9 strength. We therefore urge the ICANN Board to 10 waive this requirement because of the confusing
11 role that -- that was played by the African Union.
12 The organization has created huge problems of 13 legitimacy regarding the endorsement issue by 14 acting both as endorser and the coapplicant for 15 .africa. It's also our view that the final 16 decision by ICANN regarding the delegation of 17 .africa string should now only be based on 18 evaluated technical, operational and financial 19 criteria, and not the issue of endorsement, which 20 has been highly politicized.

21 Q. Okay. Let me ask you about 22 Mr. Buruchara. I'm sure I'm not pronouncing his 23 name correctly. I'm not sure anyone here has.

24 He was the chairman of your -- of the 25 DCA Strategy Committee at one point in time,

1 correct?

2 A. Correct.

3 Q. Are you and he friends?

4 A. No.

5 Q. Have you worked together on any
6 business matters before?

7 A. Before? No.

8 Q. Okay. Did you consider it a conflict
9 of interest that he was the chairman of your 10 Strategy Committee before being appointed as the 11 GAC advisor to the Government of Kenya?

12 A. No.

13 Q. Okay. Did you ask him to object to
14 the GAC advice?

15 A. I don't remember. But if I did, it's 16 within the context of our application.

23           Q.       Okay. The last question: You knew
24   that Mr. Buruchara was the GAC advisor for Kenya,
25   not the GAC representative, correct?

1           A.     To be honest with you, I wouldn't know
2     the difference between the two. I was only aware
3     of it after the fact --

4           Q.     Okay.

5           A.     -- I'm not a GAC person or --

6           Q.     Okay. I thought DCA had issued a
7     press release announcing that he had been 8     appointed as the GAC advisor.

9                     Do you remember that?

10          A.     Okay.

11          Q.     And it says that --

12          A.     Again, I would not know the difference
13     between an advisor and a representative. I only 14     came to learn the difference between the two after 15     the issue became an issue.

16          Q.     Okay.

17                     MR. LEVEE: Well, in that case, I'll 18     conclude.

19                     Thank you.

20                     PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you,

21     Mr. LeVee.

22                     Mr. Ali.

23                     MR. ALI: I have nothing further.

24                     ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Nothing.

25                     HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No.

P R O C E E D I N G S

Washington, D.C.

Saturday, May 23, 2015; 9:13 a.m.

PRESIDENT BARIN: Good morning,
everyone.

The second day of the Merits Hearing
in the IRP under the American Arbitration
Association Case Number 50 2013 00 1083.

We are going to have the closing arguments this morning, but a preliminary housekeeping matter.

After yesterday's hearing of the witnesses produced by both ICANN and DCA Trust, the Panel, having consulted one another, would like to get, Mr. LeVee, a copy of the reports of the Subcommittee on Ethics and Conflicts that's available in relation to the testimony that Mr. Chalaby gave yesterday.

So to the extent those are available and -- then the Panel would request that a copy be provided to it.

MR. LEVEE: Yes, I understand the

1 request. Because the documents are
2 privileged, I will take the request back
3 to ICANN and have an answer for you next
4 week.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Thank you.

6 MR. LEVEE: Thank you.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. Then that
8 brings us to the closing argument.

9 Mr. Ali, good morning.

10 - - -

11 CLOSING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF CLAIMANT

13 - - -

14 MR. ALI: Good morning.

15 And thank you, Members of the Panel.

16 Good morning colleagues from 17 Jones Day.

18 One of the best things about a
19 closing before such a hot Panel, and I
20 mean that in the sense of a very active
21 Panel, is that, in many respects, make 22 our life --

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

24 Thank you.

25 MR. ALI: -- easier.

1           But I should say that I'm sure I
2           don't speak just for myself, but sort of 3           the colleagues from ICANN. We very much
4           appreciate the degree of preparedness of 5           the questions that you put to us and to 6           the witnesses.

7           And, of course, as one does a
8           closing, one tries to divine what it is 9           that's of the greatest interest to a
10          panel. And with any sort of predictive
11          process of that nature, what ends up
12          happening is that rather than presenting 13          a symphony, one presents something that's
14          more like a Bohemian Rhapsody.

15          So I will -- with that caveat --

16          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: "Bohemian
17          Rhapsody For A Hot Panel," that's a great 18          title.

19          MR. ALI: -- to try and present a
20          coherent view of what it is that we 21          believe has happened and why it is that 22          ICANN has breached its Bylaws and 23          Articles of Incorporation, as well as the 24          Applicant Guidebook.

25          Let me start out with some quick

1 pointed remarks associated with the
2 presentation of yesterday from my
3 colleague and friend, Mr. LeVee.

4 Mr. LeVee took the position, which I
5 must say I find quite remarkable, that
6 ICANN is not a regulator, but ICANN is 7 just an administrator; that the AGB, the 8 Applicant Guidebook, is just a contract;
9 and ICANN simply promises to evaluate the 10 applications that are put forward in 11 accordance with this contract.

12 Now, ultimately, there are some
13 questions that are immediately raised by 14 a contract that apparently has only
15 limited enforceability in any fora and,
16 apparently, even before you.

17 So that's Point Number 1.

18 In fact, it isn't just a contract;
19 it is a set of rules that are reflective
20 of ICANN's core principles and reflective
21 of the fundamental underlying principle
22 in ICANN's Articles -- written Articles
23 of Incorporation that ICANN must conduct
24 itself in accordance with local law and 25 international law.

1           That constitutive document, which
2           constitutes part of ICANN's raison d'être
3           and ICANN's commitment that they're
4           reflected in the Bylaws, and the Bylaws
5           get reflected in the Applicant Guidebook.

6           So ICANN's promise is not just 7           evaluate the application according to the 8           Applicant Guidebook, but to evaluate the 9           application according to the Guidebook,
10          the Bylaws and the Articles of 11          Incorporation, everything that they
12          reflect and incorporate and the promise
13          that is thereby made to parties that are 14          seeking to participate in the domain name
15          system which ICANN is responsible for.

16          And you need only look at Article IV
17          of the Articles of Incorporation. The 18          quote would state The corporation shall 19          operate for the benefit of the Internet
20          community as a whole, carrying out its 21          activities in conformity with relevant
22          principles of international law and 23          applicable international conventions and 24          local law and, to the extent appropriate
25          and consistent with these Articles and

1           its Bylaws, through open and transparent
2           processes that enable competition and
3           open entry in Internet-related markets.

4           Then one need just simply go through
5           various parts of ICANN's bylaws.

6           Article I, The mission of the Internet
7           Corporation for Assigned Names and
8           Numbers is to coordinate, at the overall
9           level, the global Internet's systems of 10          unique identifiers and, in particular, to 11          ensure the stable and secure operation of 12          the Internet's unique identifier systems.

13          In particular -- and there are a
14          variety of obligations and functions of 15          ICANN, including policy development.

16          Now, a coordinator of policy
17          development also ensures that the 18          policies are implemented. And ICANN does 19          that through the various mechanisms that 20          we have heard about.

21          So ICANN does have a regulatory 22          function. ICANN is a body that is the 23          curator of the Internet domain name
24          system. It governs who it is that 25          actually has the right to seek Internet

1 domain name, and it governs who it is
2 that ultimately can go forward in terms
3 of a domain name being put into the 4 Internet server.

5 So ICANN will tell you, No, that's
6 the U.S. Government, and there are others
7 involved, but those are ultimately really
8 rubber stamps that are applied once ICANN
9 has done its job, which one hopes is done
10 fairly, transparently and in a balanced
11 way, and in accordance with the missions
12 they're going to look at.

13 So the question was -- was put to 14 Mr. LeVee by the President as to who is 15 ICANN answerable if there is an issue.
16 Who is ICANN answerable to if -- in light
17 of this litigation waiver?

18 When an applicant has a problem --
19 yes, ICANN is answerable to governments
20 generally, although it pushes back and 21 says, No, we do not, we're not guided by 22 governments, but we have a bottom-up
23 process.

24 But at the end of the day, the only
25 people that ICANN is accountable to are

1 the three of you in the -- in this
2 particular instance, the Independent
3 Review Panels.

4 Within the system that they have
5 created, one that constitutes a -- in 6 this instance, the NGPC, which is part of 7 the Board, a Board Governance Committee
8 that reviews the NGPC's work, and the 9 NGPC adopts the Board Governance
10 Committee's recommendations.

11 Somewhat incestuous, particularly
12 when one looks at the number of people
13 who are on the Board -- the Board, the 14 NGPC, the Board Governance Committee.
15 It's all -- there's a fair amount of --
16 of overlap.

17 And so where does the accountability
18 come in? When we have no right to seek 19 damages, according to ICANN, that is; we 20 have no right to go to public forum; we 21 have no right to apparently seek a
22 binding decision, according to the rules
23 that they have written and rules which 24 they change as and when they wish.

25 Now, that's put down to

1 interpretation, but I would submit to you
2 that it is arbitrary application of rules
3 that are very clear as to what must
4 happen.

5 But ICANN chooses how those rules
6 will be applied. And when those rules
7 are applied in a way that creates for an 8 applicant, such as DCA Trust, a -- a -- a
9 significant problem in that its vision,
10 its goals, its objectives, its work is 11 simply wiped away, but they can go
12 nowhere but to an IRP Panel that could 13 only issue a recommendation which the 14 very Board whose conduct is being 15 questioned can decide whether they're
16 going to accept it or not.

17 Is that a real system of 18 accountability?

19 I would submit to you, no. The 20 accused cannot decide whether it will
21 accept the verdict as correct or not.

22 At the end of the day, there is a
23 decision that ICANN will tell you, Oh, of 24 course, we will comply with it, but we're
25 not bound by it.

1           So the curator of the Internet and
2           fair play in the Internet governance
3           system cannot decide what it will do when
4           it wants to and decide whether or not it
5           is going to be bound by the hard work
6           that you are doing.

7           Now, we're also told that ICANN
8           tries to be neutral but has no obligation
9           to be neutral.

10          Let me table that for one side,
11          because that's going to be a core part of 12          my overall presentation.

13          And I'm quoting Mr. LeVee. ICANN
14          tries to be neutral but has no obligation
15          to be neutral.

16          Now, I know that Mr. LeVee knows the 17          Bylaws inside and out. And the Bylaws
18          are replete with references to 19          neutrality, transparency, equity,
20          nondiscrimination, and fairness and 21          equitable treatment.

22          So let's -- let's just turn now, if 23          we might, to some of the key facts that 24          we have now become aware of and that we 25          believe are undisputed, and those which

1 are disputed and which we would hopefully
2 convince you that the evidence falls in
3 our favor in terms of our view of what
4 happened.

5 So there's no question that through
6 2007 to 2010, DCA has gone about
7 gathering support in support of its -- or 8 endorsements in support of its idea, its 9 initiative.

10 Maybe ICANN will say it's irrelevant
11 that, ultimately, .africa was 12 Ms. Bekele's idea and initiative and 13 vision.

14 But what did DCA do? DCA went
15 around the African continent and obtained
16 support at the highest levels of the AUC,
17 which, like most public bodies, is rife
18 with politics. But she got the support
19 of Chairman Ping; she got the support of 20 UNECA, a UN body that -- that represents
21 African interests; it got the support of 22 the Ethiopian Government; got the support
23 of the Kenyan Government.

24 And we've heard two things from
25 ICANN, that at the time the application

1 was submitted, DCA Trust did not have the
2 support that was required.

3 Well, that's incorrect. Perhaps
4 there are questions that can be raised
5 about the AUC's position, which certainly
6 should be viewed under a cloud, in light
7 of what the AUC is doing at the same
8 time, which is acting as a competitor or 9 was a competitor to DCA Trust.

10 But when the application was 11 submitted, there was support. And as the 12 rules state very clearly, that support
13 can continue to be garnered throughout
14 the process of evaluation of financial
15 and technical and other infrastructure
16 aspects -- do something that is very 17 technical, operate a registry that will
18 not, in any way, undermine the security
19 and stability of the Internet.

20 And so support will come along
21 during this process.

22 What we do know, though, is that
23 ZACR, the AUC's applicant, actually
24 didn't have, technically, the same kind
25 of support that DCA did when the

1 application was submitted.

2 What ZACR was relying upon was the
3 support that was given by the AUC -- AU
4 Members for the Reserved Names Initiative
5 that, ultimately, ICANN rejected.

6 Now, insofar as this issue of
7 support is concerned, I would simply ask
8 you to look at the correspondence between 9 ICANN Staff and the independent
10 Geographic Names Panel, because that
11 documentation, which we will visit
12 shortly, makes it very clear that the 13 independent Geographic Names Panel
14 certainly considered that DCA did have
15 support.

16 And this discussion went on for over
17 a year between ICANN Staff -- between 18 ICANN -- really, one shouldn't make a
19 distinction. ICANN Staff operates at the 20 behest and direction of the Board.

21 ICANN -- I mean, for -- for -- for 22 Mr. LeVee to say, Well, you can only look
23 at Board action or inaction, independent
24 of ICANN Staff, I find to be, with all
25 respect, something of an absurd

1 proposition.

2 ICANN Staff only does what they are
3 directed to do or what they believe they
4 can do if they do not have specific
5 direction and are, therefore, part of the 6 overall accountability through the 7 mechanism of the IRP examining the 8 actions or inaction of the Board and,
9 thereby, ICANN and its constituent
10 organizations.

11 And I will point you shortly to 12 where it says that ICANN is responsible 13 or that your responsibility is to look at 14 the overall application of the system --
15 ICANN system that includes ICANN, the 16 Secretariat and the constituent bodies.

17 So DCA's gathered support. ZACR
18 doesn't have it -- doesn't have support
19 when it files its application. At the end
20 of the day, there's a big question mark of 21 how they're going to deal with this
22 question of support.

23 The application window opens in 24 January 2012. Slightly before that, we 25 have seen the request that was made by the

1           AUC. The AUC has written to ICANN
2           October 2011.

3           And what the AUC wants -- and we heard
4           some reference to this yesterday about 5           country code top-level domains, such as 6           .fr; or .us; or, in the special instance of 7           the European Union, .eu.

8           Well, the African Union Commission --
9           the Secretariat has made a request to ICANN
10          saying, We want the same thing as the EU.
11          Yes, we accept that we're not the EU --
12          they know that -- but we want the same
13          thing that the EU has. We want .africa
14          reserved. Although it's well-recognized
15          country code, it's not on the list of 16          country codes, but we want .africa,
17          .afrikia, you know, .afrique reserved for 18          us.

19          And ICANN writes back telling the AUC,
20          after some months of deliberation, which 21          includes, as we have seen, consultation of 22          some sort with the GAC -- and, clearly,
23          Ms. Dryden couldn't remember how much
24          consultation, or perhaps could have been 25          reminded through documentation, which we

1 didn't have, of the degree of consultation
2 that took place.

3 But we know that she was given the 4 opportunity to review the final
5 communication that went back to the AUC's
6 request.

7 And what is it that the -- that ICANN
8 tells the AUC?

9 Well, it says, Look, we can't do what
10 you want because the Reserve Names List is 11 closed. And you don't technically fall
12 within this reserve names category, but we 13 are going to tell you how you can achieve
14 the same end through the processes that are 15 in place.

16 And I would suggest to you that 17 there's nothing necessarily sinister about
18 that. But is the same direction, guidance,
19 advice being given to .africa or other
20 applicants where the applicant will be able 21 to use the system to its own benefit when 22 the other applicants aren't being told --
23 the nongovernmental applicants aren't being
24 told that governments can apply -- oh,
25 well, it doesn't say that governments can't

1 apply, so, therefore, governments can
2 apply -- and that governments can use the
3 system in any way they so wish to benefit
4 themselves?

5 That really isn't fairness. That's an
6 imbalance of power within the context of 7 what is supposed to be rules that apply
8 with equal force and effect to all parties.

9 And to the -- and that is what ICANN,
10 in some respects, is saying. Look, we
11 cannot do for you what you want, but play
12 in this system where these rules apply,
13 but, by the way, you can game the system to 14 your benefit to achieve the same ends.

15 And, of course, as we come to see, the 16 AUC took that very much to heart.

17 Now, the AUC -- again, Ms. Dryden
18 couldn't help us very much as to why the 19 AUC was part -- made part of the GAC, how 20 it moved from being a nonvoting member to a
21 voting member.

22 And, apparently, nobody really quite
23 knows, including the GAC Chair, as who it
24 is to be a voting member, a nonvoting
25 member, whether or not you can issue

1 Early Warnings or not, whether or not you
2 can issue GAC advice or participate in the 3 issuance of GAC advice or not.

4 If the GAC Chair isn't clear, how is
5 it that DCA Trust is supposed to know what
6 any of this means?

7 But I will put forward to you, as the
8 Independent Review Panel, the following
9 proposition: that when the system allows
10 applicant to also participate in the 11 overall judging, there is a higher degree
12 of care that is required in the evaluation
13 of that application.

14 And what is it that we know from the 15 documents? There is a debate that starts
16 as early as August 2012, soon after the 17 application period is closed. There is a
18 debate that's taking place about the highly 19 politicized nature of these applicants, the 20 controversy associated with these
21 applications.

22 Everybody appreciates and understands
23 that there are issues associated with these 24 applications, issues associated with
25 potential conflicts of interests vested

1 interests, that there are two applicants,
2 there's the AUC, the AUC may not
3 necessarily be entitled to be in the 4 position that it is.

5 Well, all of this considered and
6 evaluated by intelligent individuals and many
7 individuals within the ICANN infrastructure
8 should lead to the outcome that I'm suggesting,
9 that we need to apply a heightened degree of 10 diligence and care associated with these
11 applications because of the imbalance of power.

12 Now, I wish I had the documentation
13 that would allow me to prove the propositions
14 that we fundamentally believe that ICANN and the 15 GAC and the AUC were basically rigging the 16 system. And I think that there's enough there
17 for you to be able to make -- to arrive at the 18 conclusion that what they were doing was perhaps 19 not purposely, perhaps not in a sinister fashion,
20 but ICANN, as a political organization, was 21 tilting the balance in favor of one of the 22 parties to achieve the ccTLD outcome through a
23 process which is not the right process, because 24 it couldn't use the right process to achieve the 25 outcome that the AUC wanted.

1           All right. So we -- there are
2 question marks now that are raised about the GAC
3 advice that are, I believe, incredibly
4 significant.

5           What's the image that was created in 6 my mind as I heard Ms. Dryden speak? A large
7 room filled with people milling in and out,
8 having discussions, discuss- -- discussions in 9 the corridor, discussions in the room. And 10 there's Ms. Dryden, who puts forward a
11 proposition that apparently appears on the agenda
12 that we haven't seen, but what we're told is, All
13 the agenda says is .africa and DCA's application.
14 That's her testimony.

15                           Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

19                   As she tells you, Well, we had no
20                   rationale. We're not required to give a 21                   rationale. I didn't give a rationale. That's 22                   not the GAC's job.

23                   What does she tell you? Whose job is 24                   it? It is the Board's job. It is our job to 25                   somehow reflect some type of consensus, consensus

1 of one government that raises its hand, consensus
2 by acquiescence or silence, and the Board then
3 simply accepts that.

4 What sort of system of fairness,
5 transparency and integrity is that? Certainly 6 not one that I believe is appropriate for the 7 massive responsibility that ICANN has to the 8 Internet domain name system and the applicants
9 who spend their money and come before ICANN
10 asking for a fair deal.

11 How is it fair that ICANN Staff are 12 trying to strong-arm the independent Geographic 13 Names Panel? Why?

14 Ask yourself the following questions,
15 please: What role is it of ICANN Staff to say to 16 the Geographic Names Panel whether or not the 17 AUC's endorsement is valid or not and to say, no,
18 it's not in August 2012; to question whether or 19 not UNECA's support is sufficient; to delay the 20 very questions, the clarifying questions that the 21 GNP is insisting, per the Guidebook, per the 22 rules, by the Bible, by the Koran, per the --
23 whichever book you wish, the very, very rules say
24 that these clarifying questions should be issued.

25 Why delay? Why delay? Why delay?

1 Delay for over a year?

2 No, you mustn't send those out, please
3 confirm that you are not going to send those out.

4 You mustn't contact the AU. You
5 mustn't contact the AU- -- well, actually, they 6 don't say, Don't contact the AUC; they say, Don't 7 contact the AU.

8 Send the clarifying questions to the 9 individual applicants, is their final concession;
10 but within days of that final consensus, they 11 write back and say, Oh, don't send out the 12 clarifying questions and, by the way, the AU
13 support -- or the AUC support is sufficient; a 14 complete about-face between May of 2012 and May 15 of 2013.

16 Is that fair? Is that transparent?

17 I believe not.

18 So let's take a look very quickly at 19 some of these -- some of the standards that we 20 believe you should be applying.

21 I, yesterday, addressed the -- the
22 question of the standard review, so I won't
23 repeat myself. But, of course, I look forward to 24 answer any questions that you have.

25 I'll simply emphasize that please

1 think of the standard review within the context
2 of where you sit, the litigation waiver, the fact
3 that there is this incestuous circular system of 4 checks and balances or controls within ICANN.
5 And at the end of the day, you are the only
6 independent objective reviewers of what it is --

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What do you
8 mean by "litigation"?

9 MR. ALI: The litigation waiver,
10 sir?

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yes.

12 MR. ALI: Yes. As you know, as --
13 when an applicant files an application,
14 they are required --

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The
16 waiver -- the trial --

17 MR. ALI: -- to waive all of their 18 rights with respect to taking ICANN to 19 any forum other than the IRP --

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I
21 understand what --

22 MR. ALI: -- so I think that that,
23 to me, is dispositive.

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What you're
25 talking about is when you say, I'm not

1 going to go to Court, right?

2 MR. ALI: Yes. We cannot take you
3 to Court. We cannot take you to
4 arbitration. We can't take you anywhere.
5 We can't sue you for anything.

6 The only thing you, applicant, can
7 do is come before this Panel, which, by 8 the way, cannot issue anything that's 9 binding against us, which, of course, we 10 don't agree with, as -- as DCA, and the 11 Panel, you know, must defer to -- to the 12 omnipotence of ICANN.

13 So let's just go back, if we could.
14 Let's run back to Slide 4.

15 I already told you about Slide -- on 16 the third slide, you had the Articles of 17 Incorporation.

18 I'd like you to take a look at
19 Slide 4.

20 This is direct response to 21 Mr. LeVee's submission yesterday on
22 neutrality.

23 Let's take a look at what ICANN's
24 core values provide.

25 In performing its mission, the

1 following core values should guide the
2 decisions and actions of ICANN. And
3 Number 8, Making decisions by applying
4 documented policies neutrally and
5 objectively, with integrity and fairness.

6 Those are words that are incredibly
7 important, "integrity and fairness,"
8 "neutrally and objectively."

9 Let's take a look at Section 3 of
10 the Bylaws.

11 ICANN shall not apply its standards,
12 policies, procedures or practices
13 inequitably or single out any particular
14 party for disparate treatment unless 15 justified by substantial and reasonable
16 cause, such as the promotion of effective
17 competition.

18 Yes, there is a carve-out, the 19 promotion of effective competition.

20 Well, the disparate treatment to 21 which -- that was applied to -- to 22 .africa -- to DCA Trust, was that to
23 promote effective competition?

24 Not at all. It was completely the 25 opposite. There was no reason to single

1 out or treat DCA Trust in the way that it
2 was treated.

3 Article III, Transparency. ICANN
4 and its constituent bodies shall operate,
5 to the maximum extent feasible, in an
6 open and transparent manner and
7 consistent with procedures designed to 8 ensure fairness.

9 I wish to speak. I say something
10 that is incomprehensible. The GAC Chair
11 reformulates what I say, tables a motion
12 based on what she says. And that is 13 supposed to be fairness?

14 The consequence that it has with --
15 the GAC Chair knows what the consequence
16 could be because the GAC Chair
17 participates in the subsequent meetings.

18 And there are at least two meetings,
19 May 8th and June 4th of 2013, when the 20 GAC Chair is participating in the NGPC
21 review, or the GAC advice.

22 And she cannot recall whether she
23 said anything, and she cannot recall
24 whether anything was raised.

25 I recall what I said about the

1           heightened standard that should be
2           applied.

3           I'm not saying by evidentiary
4           standard; I'm saying greater diligence
5           when you know that there are
6           sensitivities at play.

7           When it should be just so obvious,
8           as it was to Mr. Chalaby when I put my 9           last question to him about conflicts of 10          interest. And Mr. Chalaby, who said that 11          he applies the highest standards of 12          conflict of interest, that you have 13          applicant and judge within the system,
14          well, greater care is required, greater 15          diligence is required of the NGPC. Ask
16          questions, investigate, do what you are 17          required to do according to the very 18          Bylaws that govern the way you are 19          supposed to operate.

20          But they give it short shrift. It
21          goes to the Board Governance Committee,
22          which includes some people of the NGPC,
23          and the Board is required to conduct
24          investigations, or at least it should 25          conduct greater investigation of the

1 matter. But it doesn't; it gives it
2 short shrift.

3 Now, Mr. LeVee told us yesterday --
4 we can go to Slide Number 8. My numbers
5 are different. Go a slide back,
6 please -- that I don't know that the core
7 values refer to anticompetitive conduct
8 within a particular gTLD string. The 9 mission of ICANN was to increase
10 competition in the registry space.

11 I mean, that's, to me, akin to 12 saying that the United States economy is 13 an open capitalist economy, and it
14 doesn't matter if Microsoft acts
15 anticompetitively.

16 No. Competition applies at every
17 level. It applies a granular level,
18 because without those grains, the system
19 can't grow and remain anti- -- remain
20 competitive.

21 So I think that is a statement which 22 Mr. LeVee may want to retract.

23 So we'll move on.

24 I've talked a little bit about the 25 GAC. So let's -- you know, we've -- no

1 distinct rules; there is the limited
2 public records; fluid definitions of
3 memberships and quorums; fluid
4 definitions of what can happen within the 5 context of the -- the GAC.

6 It's all politicized. We're not
7 quite sure even what different GAC
8 Members do within the GAC.

9 So, you know, again, I think that 10 there is yet another violation of the --
11 that -- there's another element of 12 unfairness as a result of how the GAC
13 operated.

14 But the GAC then transfers over
15 responsibility to -- to the Board. And I
16 must say, I -- I think, with respect to 17 this interaction between the Board -- the 18 GAC and the NGPC, the following
19 statements should say it all:

20 "Question: So not all countries
21 share the same view as to what entities,
22 such as the AUC, should -- what they
23 should be able to do. Is that what you
24 said?

25 "Answer: Right, because that would

1           only get clarified if there is
2           circumstances where you find the force --
3           I'm sure that's meant to say
4           something else -- meant to sent something
5           else. But this is the interesting
6           part -- in our business, we talk about
7           creative ambiguity. We leave things --
8           we leave things unclear so we don't have
9           conflict."

10                   "Creative ambiguity," I don't find
11           those words anywhere in the GAC
12           principles. I don't find those words
13           anywhere in the Bylaws. I don't find 14           those words anywhere articulating any 15           principle of California law or
16           international law.

17                   But creative ambiguity is what was 18           applied, and creative ambiguity is the 19           responsibility that is then transferred 20           over, according to Ms. Dryden, to the 21           Board.

22                   What does she say with respect to 23           the GAC consensus of advice that's a
24           result of creative ambiguity?

25                   That isn't my concern as the Chair.

1           It's really for the Board to interpret --
2           to interpret the creative ambiguity
3           outputs coming from the GAC.

4           Okay. So does -- and then she goes
5           on to tell you, I'm telling you the GAC
6           did not provide a rationale. And that
7           was not a requirement for issuing GAC
8           advice.

9           So GAC issues this advice through
10          facts that we now know that reflect a
11          decision taken in moments, creative 12          ambiguity as the overall atmosphere, and 13          now it goes over to the Board.

14          And you can take a look at what it
15          is that the Board is supposed to do.

16          Let's go to the slide that shows
17          what the Board must do in exercising due
18          diligence in care. And this is some 19          element of the standard review.

20          So even if we look at the specific 21          elements of what it is that -- that 22          the -- that the Board is supposed to 23          particularly do -- do. So did the Board
24          act without conflict of interest in 25          taking its decision?

1 Well, just very briefly on the
2 conflict of interest -- and I had made an
3 absolute commitment to Mr. LeVee that I
4 would end on 45 minutes.

5 So five minutes left, if you're
6 timing me.

7 MR. LEVEE: I'm not timing you.

8 MR. ALI: Okay.

9 The -- on the question of the
10 conflict of interest, I mean, we know
11 very little, other than the fact that 12 Mr. Chalaby doesn't know and cannot 13 recall whether or not he interviewed, in 14 his digging and digging and digging and 15 digging, Mr. Silber and Mr. Disspain.
16 But they normally dig and dig and dig,
17 but he can't remember whether that
18 happened here or not.

19 He can't remember what materials
20 were actually presented as part of this
21 overall conflict of interest.

22 And, frankly, given the timing of 23 this conflict-of-interest review, six to 24 eight weeks after the actual vote was 25 taken, what difference would it have

1           made?

2                   This review that they took -- that
3           they apparently did, digging and digging
4           and digging, wouldn't have changed the 5           outcome if they had come to the 6           conclusion that there was a conflict of 7           interest.

8                   Why? Because, apparently, they had 9           enough votes anyway.

10                   So there's a fundamental
11           inconsistency here.

12                   How can you, on one hand, say the 13           vote was fair, transparent, and that 14           nothing untoward took place insofar as 15           the potential conflicts were concerned,
16           and, at the same time, say that we did a
17           very thorough conflicts of interest
18           review?

19                   The only reason we were given was 20           that if conflicts of interest had been 21           determined, those who were -- those who 22           were the conflicted parties would have
23           been removed from the Board for purposes
24           of subsequent decisions.

25                   That doesn't help DCA Trust. And we

1 don't know, because we don't have
2 details. They don't provide details. We
3 don't have the details as to what
4 Mr. Disspain's role or what Mr. Silber's
5 role was in guiding the outcomes.

6 But we do know that Mr. Silber is on
7 the -- is -- is a nonexecutive Board
8 member of ZADNA, and ZADNA has endorsed
9 the AUC application.

10 Actual, potential, or perceived
11 conflict of interest? I think that all
12 three standards are satisfied here.

13 Now, there's no obligation for the 14 NGPC to follow the GAC advice. It
15 doesn't say that. It doesn't say they
16 must accept GAC advice. It simply says
17 that it should be duly taken into 18 account.

19 Well, I would say that that actually
20 means something when you decide to adopt
21 a GAC advice. There's no doubt that the 22 Board members understand how the GAC
23 operates. That requires the Board, as a
24 control mechanism, to dig into and
25 understand what it is that happened

1 within the GAC advice and how that GAC
2 advice has come about.

3 Why else does Heather Dryden
4 participate as a nonvoting liaison? A
5 liaison liases. A liaison provides 6 information. A liaison describes what
7 happened. Ah, here were the 8 communications that took place, this is 9 what Kenya said, here is what was the 10 final agreed text of the governments, and 11 here's what happened at the meeting.

12 That's what she's supposed to 13 present as a liaison; that's what's
14 supposed to be the inquiry by the Board;
15 and that is what Mr. Chalaby is supposed
16 to be directing. But, apparently, none
17 of that happened.

18 So once the NGPC unanimously accepts
19 the GAC advice, DCA files a request for 20 reconsideration, which now goes to the 21 Board Governance Committee. And the 22 Board Governance Committee also has
23 certain obligations. It doesn't --
24 again, there is what they call their 25 "control mechanism." These are the

1 internal checks and balances.

2 The Board Governance Committee is --
3 is supposed to conduct a meaningful
4 review, according to the Bylaws,
5 Section -- Article IV, Section 2, that 6 lays out a number of things that the 7 Board should do.

8 And here, in this instance where the
9 Board Governance Committee and the NGPC
10 know how complicated and politically
11 sensitive this application is with two 12 applicants competing and one applicant
13 having certain superpowers or certain
14 extraordinary influence on the outcomes,
15 the control mechanisms don't work.

16 The NGPC -- well, the GAC basically
17 lies down. The Board Governance
18 Committee says, Well, we'll just casually
19 accept, with wave of a hand, that we got 20 from the GAC -- the NGPC, sorry, and then
21 the Board Governance Committee says,
22 Well, you know, we will sort of look at 23 this application. We don't see anything
24 that causes us any concern, so we're
25 going to accept the NGPC's -- we're

1 not -- we're going to deny the request
2 for reconsideration.

3 And then all the Board Governance
4 Committee members walk next door to the 5 room that says NGPC, and they say, Well,
6 we adopt the Board Governance Committee's
7 recommendation. And they then tell
8 ICANN Staff, "ICANN Staff, please, go
9 right ahead."

10 And ICANN Staff goes right ahead and 11 does what it wanted to do, which is to 12 draft the support letter from the AUC to 13 the Geographic Names Panel.

14 Okay. Yes, it was a template, but 15 this is just nothing more than reflective
16 of how they were treating this applicant
17 all along.

18 But even more telling is the fact
19 that after months and months and months
20 and months of delay, some of which may 21 have been partly due to legitimate
22 debate, and some of it, I'll even
23 concede, may have been due to the fact
24 that ICANN Staff is somewhat busy and 25 overburdened, but 12 months of debate,

1 12 months of delay, 12 months of
2 resisting what it is that the GNP is
3 asking.

4 And then, as soon as the Board
5 Governance -- as soon as the NGPC accepts
6 the GAC advice, it's now rush, rush,
7 rush, rush, rush. We need to get this
8 application approved; and we need to get 9 this application voted on; and we need to 10 get this application pushed through.

11 Not fair, not in the least bit
12 equitable, no transparency. And 13 certainly, their internal systems that 14 they're asking you to defer to didn't
15 operate with the rigor or care that one
16 would expect and DCA Trust expected when
17 it put its application in and the rules
18 and the Bylaws and the Articles of 19 Incorporation demand.

20 So with that, I will stop exactly on 21 48 minutes, and thank you very much for 22 your attention.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

24
25 MR. ALI: I should have said if you

1 had any questions, now, I'm happy to
2 answer them or --

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Don't
4 worry. We would have.

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I just have
6 a very short question. And it came up
7 yesterday when Ms. Bekele was testifying.

8 Could you, at some stage before the 9 end of the proceedings, point out to us
10 the exact rule -- it's probably in the 11 Guidebook -- which says that an applicant
12 can have an extra time to garner support
13 after the first application has been -- I
14 was unable to find the exact rule.

15 But you can answer later if you
16 want, but --

17 MR. ALI: It's right here. I may 18 forget.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: We do have some
20 questions for Mr. Ali. I'm happy to ask
21 them now or after Mr. LeVee is done.

22 MR. ALI: I will point to -- take a
23 look in our opening slides at two 24 particular slides, 31 and 32.

25 Thirty-one --

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What pages?

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Just one minute.

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What page
4 numbers?

5 MR. ALI: Thirty-one and 32 of our
6 opening slides.

7 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So
8 that's in your --

9 MR. ALI: Yes, the evaluation --
10 sorry -- well, 31 says -- addresses, I
11 think, a fundamental point here that --
12 which reflects the process, that really
13 does reflect what can happen here and 14 what the -- what the Bible says, which 15 is, you know what, countries can accept 16 the applications or support the 17 applications of two applicants, fair
18 game. Let them go into the ring and let 19 them, you know, duke it out with each
20 other.

21 So that's what 31 tells you.

22 And 32 says, on -- on Page 32, which
23 is Claimant's Exhibit 11, Page 72, AGB
24 Module 2.2.1.4.4, In cases where an
25 applicant has not provided the required

1 documentation, the applicant will be
2 contacted and notified of the requirement
3 and given -- given a limited time frame
4 to provide the documentation.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Who makes
6 the -- who contacts the -- the applicant?

7 MR. ALI: The GNP is supposed to.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The GNP is 9 supposed to contact the applicant --

10 MR. ALI: Yes.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- and say,
12 You don't have enough support?

13 MR. ALI: Right, the GNP is supposed
14 to have this opportunity to do that.

15 And then it says, The applicant will 16 have additional time to obtain the 17 required documentation; however, if the 18 applicant has not produced the required
19 documentation by the required date (at 20 least 90 calendar days from the date of 21 notice), the application will be
22 considered incomplete.

23 So there are a number of
24 opportunities for the applicant to garner
25 the political -- the support, the

1           endorsements, along the way.

2                   At the end of the day, that
3           support -- you know, that's a soft
4           requirement. I mean, governments change,
5           political whims change, as we've seen.

6                   At the end of the day, the technical
7           and financial criteria cannot change
8           because those two elements go to the core
9           functioning of the Internet stability and 10          integrity.

11                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Now, in Procedural
12          Order Number 18 -- we don't have to stick
13          to that -- we said we would ask you
14          questions after Mr. LeVee is done with 15          his presentation.

16                   I do have some questions for you.
17          So I'm happy to ask them now or wait
18          until Mr. LeVee --

19                   MR. LEVEE: That's your pleasure.

20                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

21                   While we have you, Mr. Ali, let's --

22                   MR. ALI: I'm not going anywhere.

23                   PRESIDENT BARIN: -- let's ask you,
24          because then -- then, if my colleagues
25          have any questions, then they can

1 follow-up.

2 I would like you to do -- well, I
3 have a couple of questions. One of them
4 is the following -- you can also take the 5 time to amend if you wish.

6 If you look at Article IV, Section 3
7 of the ICANN rules -- sorry -- Bylaws, I
8 want to know how you would assist the 9 Panel in reconciling what Section 3,
10 Subparagraph 4 says with Section 11.

11 So -- and you -- put the screen up
12 yourself, if you will.

13 MR. ALI: So Bylaws, Article IV?

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

15 MR. ALI: Article IV, Section 3?

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Article IV,
17 Section 3, that's Subparagraph 4, which
18 says, Requests for independent review
19 shall be referred to the IRP, which shall 20 be charged with comparing contested
21 actions of the Board through the Articles
22 of Incorporation and Bylaws, and then
23 declaring whether the Board has acted --
24 and then the questions that it sets out.

25 Then, if you turn to Subsection 11,

1           it says, The IRP Panel shall have the
2           authority to.

3           And you, yourself, put up, I guess,
4           a number of these. And one of them in 5           11.c. says, Declare whether an action or 6           inaction of the Board was consistent with
7           the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

8           So is the IRP -- my question to you
9           is, Is the IRP allowed to do all of that,
10          do a combination of 4 and 11? And where 11          do you draw in terms of any limits there
12          are in terms of what the IRP can or 13          cannot do?

14          Is my question clear?

15          MR. ALI: I think sufficiently for 16          me to give you an answer now. And I will 17          certainly reflect upon what you've asked.

18          And this was a question -- a very 19          similar question that was put to us by 20          the Schwebel Panel, and it's something
21          that's very, I think, to a certain
22          degree, controversial because of the way
23          in which ICANN has designed its 24          accountability mechanisms.

25          Given how much of a mess the

1           accountability system is at ICANN -- and 2           ICANN is now undergoing a full review of 3           its accountability mechanisms in light of 4           the fact that it has been heavily
5           criticized for what it has done -- I
6           think that you are at a certain liberty
7           to try and to put order within -- you
8           know, that applies to the particular case
9           that's before you. But to take the 10          construct, the construct that is provided
11          by the Bylaws, that's provided -- keeping 12          in mind that the Bylaws are supposed to 13          reflect the principles reflected in the 14          Articles of Incorporation -- and apply
15          those within the Board of construct or 16          the dispute resolution framework, that 17          you are free to and have so far
18          constructed that is appropriate for the 19          particular case at hand.

20                 Now, with respect to what you can 21          do, you are testing Board action and 22          inaction. To use the terminology that 23          was provided by Mr. LeVee, what the Board
24          knew and what the Board should have 25          known, what the Board did and what the

1 Board should have done with reference to
2 the principles that are set out in the
3 Articles and the Bylaws and the Applicant
4 Guidebook.

5 So, from our perspective,
6 particularly when you -- you know, when
7 you cradle all of this within the 8 principles of international law that, to 9 me, also include fundamental principles
10 of -- of -- of procedure and due process,
11 allows you to -- allows you considerable
12 amplitude and latitude in terms of what
13 it is that that you can do.

14 Now, at one level, you could be
15 looking at the particular Bylaw and say,
16 Well, technically, yes, this was 17 breached, and that was not breached; or 18 this was breached, and that was not
19 breached. But I think that you have a
20 more significant role, and that more
21 significant role is -- is motivated,
22 informed -- and informed by
23 the -- the -- the Articles of 24 Incorporation and the Bylaws, themselves.

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: Are you, in

1 essence, saying -- and I will obviously
2 put the same question to you,
3 Mr. LeVee -- are you, in essence, saying
4 that, if you will, Subparagraph 4 gives
5 us a framework, but that then Sub 11
6 gives us the broad powers to decide what 7 we need to -- perhaps in light of the 8 facts and circumstances that you've given
9 us?

10 Is that a fair characterization?

11 MR. ALI: That's a fair
12 characterization --

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

14 MR. ALI: -- but, ultimately, I
15 believe that you have the latitude that 16 you need to do what it is that's really,
17 at its core, applying the standards and
18 the Bylaws.

19 And every regulator will say, Let's
20 take a look specifically at what my rules
21 say, but, you know, at the end, they have 22 to be applied in good faith in accordance 23 with the core values.

24 And who is there to police the core
25 values?

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: As a follow-up to
2           that -- and I appreciate that I'm sort of 3           throwing this at you now, but maybe when 4           you sit down and reflect on it -- I would
5           be interested in -- in seeing where you
6           could find support -- maybe it goes
7           without saying, but if, for example,
8           staff or people involved in a -- in an 9           organization do certain things or do not 10          do certain things or whatever they are,
11          that ultimately then sort of either goes
12          up or down to -- to the Board -- the 13          action or inaction.

14                 So to the extent that you can give 15          the Panel some support for that, either
16          Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation, I
17          would be interested in that -- in seeing
18          that.

19                 MR. ALI: Absolutely.

20                 I will respond, but I would like to 21          think about that, because I think I have 22          a -- a good response. But I want to 23          articulate it since it is in a more
24          coherent fashion than I have answered
25          your last question.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: In all fairness,
2           that's why I asked it now as opposed to
3           later.

4           I have one other question for you,
5           and, again, you may reflect on this.

6           I want you to tell us, Mr. Ali, what 7           it is exactly that -- and I want this
8           articulated clearly -- what it is exactly
9           the DCA Trust is asking this Panel to do.

10          I have put up on my own screen the 11          relief requested in your Amended Notice
12          of IRP, and I have also put up on my own
13          screen the conclusion and the -- what I
14          would say, the relief that you have 15          requested in the DCA Memorial on the 16          Merits.

17          And I think the Panel would be
18          grateful if it has a very clear
19          indication from you as to what it is that 20          DCA Trust is seeking. Because,
21          admittedly, I understand what the relief
22          sought is in the Amended Notice of IRP;
23          but when I read what is being sought in 24          the Merits Memorial, it perhaps goes 25          beyond what the initial request is.

1 MR. ALI: Sorry? Beyond?

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: It goes beyond the
3 initial request, if you will.

4 And maybe that's my misunderstanding
5 or maybe my characterization; but if I'm
6 wrong, I would like to know that.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yes.

8 It's important we know what you're
9 asking us to do.

10 MR. ALI: Yes. Let me review this
11 specifically. Thinking of being more
12 specific with respect to what we had put 13 in the amended request, I will view the 14 requests in light of the question you
15 just put to me and, of course, also 16 consult Ms. Bekele as to the precise
17 relief we're requesting.

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: On Page 56
19 and 57 of your client's declaration, she
20 also states what she's seeking. And I --
21 not all -- we want it to be consistent,
22 so we want to be very clear what you're 23 seeking and she's seeking.

24 Okay?

25 MR. ALI: Okay.

1           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: May I add on
2 this particular problem?

3           The way I read your submissions was 4 that, basically, what is here in Page 30,
5 3-0, of your Memorial of the Merits was 6 superceding, in a way, or, kind of, you
7 know, the -- the actual --

8           MR. ALI: It's an evolution, yes, of 9 what was in the amended request. So it
10 is more -- it is a -- it is a more
11 precise articulation, at least that's how 12 we'd intended it, of what it is that we 13 wanted.

14           The way I would put it, both with 15 respect to the amended request, as well
16 as with respect to Ms. Bekele's
17 statement, is that the amended request,
18 the statement ultimately reflected an 19 articulation of the requested relief at
20 Paragraph 56.

21           But I will --

22           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Fifty-six?
23 I was reading that only.

24           So in your response later on, you
25 must tell us whether I was correct or

1           whether we should do something else.

2           MR. ALI: Yes, absolutely.

3           PRESIDENT BARIN: And, again, I'm
4 going to insist on that, because we have
5 to walk away from this knowing exactly
6 what it is that's being sought --

7           MR. ALI: Absolutely.

8           PRESIDENT BARIN: -- so depending on 9 what your answer is and how you
10 articulate it, then I will certainly have 11 some questions for you --

12          MR. ALI: Okay.

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- but I'd rather 14 give you the time to reflect on that, and 15 then we can come back to it.

16          MR. ALI: I must consult with my 17 client to make sure we've got it down
18 with the requisite precision.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: I understand.

20          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: When I
21 first read it, I was wondering whether we 22 had the power to do some of the things
23 you were asking for, even if we agree
24 with you on the standard of care, the 25 standard review and everything else.

1           It seemed like there was some --

2           MR. ALI: Fair question.

3           And that's, again, what we will be 4 discussing with Ms. Bekele and relay that
5 to the Panel. A very fair question.

6           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

7           PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

8           Thank you.

9           MR. ALI: Thank you.

10          PRESIDENT BARIN: Would you like a
11 little break?

12          MR. LEVEE: I would like a very 13 short break so I can deal with the 14 computer issues and get everything
15 switched around.

16          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

17          Great. So maybe --

18          MR. LEVEE: Ten minutes is fine.

19          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- 10 minutes?

20          10:30?

21          MR. LEVEE: Thank you.

22                                 - - -

23                 (Whereupon, a brief recess was taken
24                 from 10:23 a.m. to 10:35 a.m.)

25                                 - - -

1 PRESIDENT BARIN: Mr. LeVee.

2 - - -

3 CLOSING STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT
4 INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES AND NUMBERS

5 - - -

6 MR. LEVEE: Thank you,
7 Mr. President.

8 Let me begin my closing by 9 acknowledging that the Members of the 10 Panel, opposing counsel, everyone has put 11 in an enormous amount of effort into this 12 matter.

13 On behalf of ICANN, we very much
14 appreciate the effort and the attention
15 you paid, and we -- we do appreciate that 16 very much.

17 I know there's more to do, but this 18 is the culmination of a -- particularly 19 for the two of you, a very long period of 20 time, much longer than ICANN hopes in 21 these situations.

22 But we did have a death of a
23 panelist and things happen, so we're very 24 pleased to have reached this point.

25 I'm going to do three things in my

1 opening -- in my closing -- if I'm doing
2 my opening, I'm a little late, I
3 suppose -- first, I'm going to run
4 through, pretty quickly, a couple of the 5 Bylaws, provisions that you were looking
6 with Mr. Ali.

7 Secondly, in the opening statement
8 that DCA presented to you, they listed
9 what they believe the various Bylaws and 10 Guideline breaches were. I think there
11 were seven of them. And I'm going to 12 review them one by one with you.

13 And then, third, I'm going to 14 return, again, briefly, to the 15 assumptions that I laid out for you in my
16 opening statement and demonstrate to you
17 that after the testimony that we've had,
18 that it is, in fact, the case that each
19 of DCA's assumptions is false.

20 And so while DCA makes a number of 21 arguments, each of those arguments is 22 based on these assumptions. And if the 23 Panel finds the assumptions false, then
24 it should find in ICANN's favor.

25 First, you have already referred to

1 and quoted this provision of the Bylaws
2 on multiple occasions, but Article IV,
3 Section 3, Paragraph 2 does say that Any
4 person materially affected by a decision
5 or action by the Board that he or she
6 asserts is inconsistent with the Articles
7 or Bylaws may request an independent
8 review.

9 The person must suffer injury or
10 harm that is directly or causally
11 connected to the Board's alleged
12 violation of the Bylaws or the Articles
13 of Incorporation, and not as a result of 14 third parties acting in line with the 15 Board's action.

16 So you asked a question yesterday,
17 Well, what about the GAC?

18 And the answer is that an
19 Independent Review Proceeding does not
20 exist to test whether the GAC conformed
21 to the ICANN Bylaws or the Articles, or,
22 candidly, even to its own operating
23 principles. So we're not here under the 24 Bylaws to test whether the GAC got it
25 right.

1           That's not to say that the GAC isn't
2 relevant. Clearly, it is. Because the
3 GAC issued consensus advice -- I'll call
4 it "consensus advice," recognizing that
5 there's a dispute -- and that advice went
6 to the Board.

7           And then the question is, Did the 8 Board deal with the advice consistent
9 with the Guidebook, the Articles and the 10 Bylaws?

11           But looking at whether the GAC does
12 things really or whether the GAC has good
13 operating principles or what -- what 14 happened inside that room, it's not for 15 this Panel to decide.

16           Next --

17           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Can I ask
18 you a question about that?

19           MR. LEVEE: Of course.

20           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Is it your
21 position that the Board has nothing --
22 has no -- let me try this again.

23           The powers that the GAC have, where 24 do they come from? The Board?

25           MR. LEVEE: The GAC. The GAC makes

1           its own rules.

2                   These are governments. The 3 governments have no interest in having
4 ICANN lay down rules or set rules.

5                   The GAC determines its rules.
6 Ms. Dryden said that yesterday.

7                   HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No. I
8 remember that.

9                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me just follow
10 up on that, then.

11                   Who is responsible for the GAC?

12                   MR. LEVEE: The GAC.

13                   PRESIDENT BARIN: And does the GAC
14 report to anybody?

15                   MR. LEVEE: When you say "report,"
16 the GAC issues communiqués to ICANN.
17 You've seen one of them, but it does so
18 in almost every meeting of the Board.

19                   It then has a nonvoting liaison, the 20 Chair, who participates in ICANN
21 meetings, but not as a voting member.

22                   But it doesn't really report to 23 anyone. It -- it -- the GAC is -- is --
24 it is its own body.

25                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. But then --

1           then help me out in terms of trying to
2           understand.

3                     If the GAC then issues the 4           communiqué, is the communiqué of the GAC
5           of any significance without the approval
6           of the Board?

7                     MR. LEVEE: The communiqué has 8           significance to the governments, and then
9           the communiqué is transmitted to the 10          Board.

11                    Now, it depends what the communiqué
12          says. The communiqué can say to ICANN,
13          We recommend that you look at something.
14          The communiqué can say to ICANN, We wish
15          that we be involved in policy relating to 16          something.

17                    You have seen only GAC communiqué
18          that relates to specific advice relating 19          to the new gTLD program. That advice
20          does get transmitted to the Board, and it
21          creates what we've seen, the strong
22          presumption if the advice should be 23          accepted.

24                    But that's only one piece of what
25          the GAC has done.

1           Historically, prior to the new gTLD
2           program, the GAC issued communiqués on 3           all sorts of subjects, and they were 4           transmitted to ICANN. And, typically,
5           they were in the form of requesting
6           information, requesting that ICANN do
7           something, requesting that ICANN take 8           things into account. And ICANN would 9           listen and ask.

10           PRESIDENT BARIN: But, you know,
11           let's be very specific about this,
12           because --

13           MR. LEVEE: Sure.

14           PRESIDENT BARIN: -- the communiqué
15           that's issued by the GAC, if it's just a 16           communiqué and it goes nowhere, then it's 17           simply a reflection or, I guess, a -- a
18           reprint of what transpired as -- you
19           know, in a certain event, right?

20           I mean, does it have any more
21           meaning than that? In other words --

22           MR. LEVEE: To be clear, all GAC
23           communiqués are transmitted to the Board.

24           PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

25           And if they're transmitted to the

1 Board, to the extent that the Board then
2 acts on them, does it not create, I
3 guess, the value that that GAC -- GAC
4 communiqué then brings forward? In other
5 words, without the approval of the Board,
6 what is the value of the GAC communiqué?

7 MR. LEVEE: I get your point.

8 You're exactly right. The advice of 9 the GAC can only be acted on by the 10 Board, particularly in the sense of 11 advice not -- that a particular
12 application should not proceed.

13 But sometimes -- I'm just trying to 14 be clear that sometimes the GAC is 15 issuing communiqués that the GAC is 16 saying, We wish to be involved. Even
17 with the new gTLD program, the GAC
18 periodically said, Hey, you guys are
19 doing something. We, as governments,
20 would like to be involved. And so we 21 hereby notify ICANN to, you know, talk to 22 us.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: But in this
24 case -- specifically in this case, when
25 GAC says, for example, We are objecting

1 to it or there's an objection to an
2 application --

3 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- if the Board
5 does not approve that, then is the 6 decision of the GAC of any value?

7 MR. LEVEE: No. With these two
8 caveats: first, the Guidebook says that
9 the -- the issuance of consensus advice
10 by the GAC creates a strong presumption
11 that the Board should follow.

12 Then the Bylaws -- separate and 13 apart from the Guidebook, the Bylaws have 14 a provision that says that if ICANN is 15 not going to follow GAC advice, there's 16 then a process that has to occur where 17 the parties talk to one another -- and 18 that's in my first -- in my opening
19 statement, I had -- it was part of my 20 opening statement yesterday -- so the 21 parties would have to talk to each other.

22 ICANN cannot simply say, Thank you,
23 GAC, for recommending something, nah, and 24 we're done. There's a process --

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

1           MR. LEVEE: -- but, otherwise, I'm
2 not -- I think I'm answering your
3 question. I'm just not sure.

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: No; you are. You
5 are.

6           But I just want to follow up just on 7 one more thing.

8           If -- if the Board gets a communiqué
9 from the GAC and thinks that it should
10 follow up, as you say, on the communiqué,
11 or perhaps something was followed or not
12 followed, or whatever, it can then go
13 back and say, Why was this done this way
14 or not done this way? Or is that 15 possible?

16           MR. LEVEE: I do believe that the 17 Board has the power to ask the GAC to 18 clarify advice. I'll be candid. I've 19 never seen it happen, but I do believe
20 the Board has the power to ask the GAC,
21 Why did you send me this advice or Could
22 you amplify on it?

23           I certainly believe that that's one
24 thing within the Board's --

25           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: There's no

1 way to answer that question from the
2 testimony we heard because she doesn't
3 have an idea of what the reasons are.
4 She just accepts the --

5 MR. LEVEE: I think Ms. Dryden was 6 worried about dealing with it
7 hypothetically, because there's so many
8 different scenarios that come up.

9 From the GAC's perspective, when the 10 GAC issues advice, they do so at a place
11 and time, and it is their advice.

12 Governments change, policies change,
13 advisors and representatives change. And 14 so she can never be confident that
15 something that the GAC says in March
16 would be the same outcome of what the GAC
17 might say in August, because the people
18 in the room are different and the 19 governments might have changed policy --

20 I'm sorry.

21 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Sorry. I
22 didn't want to interrupt.

23 MR. LEVEE: -- so her whole --
24 Ms. Dryden's whole point was that she
25 doesn't -- there can be communication --

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

2 MR. LEVEE: -- but when the GAC
3 issues something, they view it as final.

4 Now, if the Board comes back to the 5 GAC and says, Well, we want to discuss 6 something or We need your rationale, the 7 GAC could then choose to provide it or 8 not. The GAC would have -- would be
9 under no obligation to -- to say, Well,
10 the Board has asked me to clarify
11 Section 2 that I issued on the communiqué
12 in April, but we choose not to.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sorry.

14 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Go ahead.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me follow on 16 this, because these are important
17 questions.

18 MR. LEVEE: I'm with you.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: To the extent
20 that -- and I'm putting a hypothetical to 21 you -- to the extent that the Board then
22 adopts a view or a communiqué of GAC
23 without taking the time to perhaps either
24 look at it closely or analyze it or do
25 further examination of it, and approves

1           it, then is it not then the Board's
2           decision, and the consequences then
3           follow from that? In other words, where 4           else can the issue be put to if it's not
5           to the Board?

6           MR. LEVEE: Yes. So applied here --
7           and that's what I was trying to make
8           clear -- applied here -- I'm not saying
9           at all that the Board's decision
10          vis-a-vis the GAC advice on DCA's
11          application is not reviewable by this 12          Panel; it is.

13          The Board did something. It acted.
14          It approved the GAC advice. It had a
15          Guidebook that said there was a strong
16          presumption that it should. It reviewed
17          various materials. It reached that 18          conclusion. That conclusion is 19          reviewable by this Panel, undoubtedly.

20          Have I clarified that?

21          PRESIDENT BARIN: You have. Thank
22          you.

23          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: But -- I'm
24          sorry. Go ahead.

25          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I'll be

1 patient.

2 No, no. You may ask the same
3 question as I have in mind. And if so,
4 then I will be quiet; but if not, I will
5 go after you.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I think I
7 forgot my question now.

8 DCA is arguing that the GAC, when it
9 made its decision to stop the 10 application, basically killed the 11 project -- killed DCA's project.

12 Does the Board have any
13 responsibility? Because the Board is 14 supposed to evaluate the applications
15 based on financial, technical, all that,
16 but that never happened because of what
17 happened at the GAC. And --

18 MR. LEVEE: Well, there was some 19 evaluation, but once the GAC ruled and 20 then the Board adopted the GAC advice, it
21 is correct that, at that point, the 22 application evaluation terminated.

23 The -- but I'm not sure I'm
24 answering your question.

25 If -- the killing that Mr. Ali was

1 referring to is the fact that because of
2 the strong presumption, there has to be
3 an awfully good reason for the Board not
4 to accept the GAC advice.

5 DCA, under the Guidebook, was given
6 an opportunity to respond to the GAC
7 advice. It did with a 15-page response.
8 It's in the exhibits that I gave to you
9 yesterday.

10 The Board considered -- the NGPC
11 considered that response along with the 12 GAC advice, along with the Guidebook, and 13 made a decision; it accepted the advice.

14 So the killing, I suppose -- I don't
15 like using the word --

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I know.

17 MR. LEVEE: -- but the decision to 18 suspend evaluation of that application
19 was done by the Board, and that is 20 certainly a decision that the Panel can
21 review.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: And review
23 in what way? That we can say -- we can 24 go back and look at the GAC process and 25 decide -- have an opinion as to whether

1 GAC did its job right?

2 MR. LEVEE: No. That's what --

3 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's
4 where we're stuck here.

5 MR. LEVEE: -- the -- and that's
6 why -- let me lay out -- it's actually in 7 the next slide, although I don't want to 8 jump ahead.

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I have a
10 question.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You have a
12 different one?

13 MR. LEVEE: If you have a different
14 one, let's go there. And the next slide
15 answers the next question.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: I assure you, you
17 will have all the time you need.

18 MR. LEVEE: Turn off the watch.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You have
20 48 minutes.

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: We are asking you
22 questions, but these are important
23 questions, so . . .

24 MR. LEVEE: I've always encouraged
25 you to interrupt.

1           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So my
2 question goes to your Slide Number 2 --
3 if we could have it on the screen -- and 4 your last -- actually, the slide on the 5 screen is not the one we have in our --
6 there's something missing --

7           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's
8 Number 2.

9           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- the last 10 bullet.

11           That's it. That's it.

12           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I see. I
13 see.

14           There I am.

15           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So you are 16 telling us that we do not have the 17 mandate to review GAC's conduct?

18           MR. LEVEE: Correct.

19           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Now, several 20 questions: One, what is the legal 21 basis -- where in the Bylaws, Articles of 22 Incorporations or Guidebook do you see
23 the basis for this assumption, for
24 this --

25           MR. LEVEE: In the paragraph I quote

1 above and the paragraph on the next
2 slide.

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: The
4 paragraph above does not say what you
5 say.

6 MR. LEVEE: Obviously, we're
7 disagreeing.

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: What you're
9 saying is that your interpretation of 10 Article IV, 3, 2 --

11 MR. LEVEE: And -- and Article IV,
12 3, 4, which is --

13 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Where does
14 it say?

15 MR. LEVEE: That's the next -- you
16 can look. It's on the next page --

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay --

18 MR. LEVEE: -- it says --

19 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- so your
20 basis -- the legal basis for you is IV,
21 3, 2 and IV, 3, 4?

22 MR. LEVEE: And, really, if you look
23 in the entirety of Section IV -- so
24 here -- why are we here today?

25 We're here because ICANN created

1           what we've -- you and I have had this
2           discussion before -- ICANN created this
3           very unusual process that says We're
4           going to permit Independent Review Panels
5           to evaluate things.

6                     ICANN's position is these are
7           unique, we get to decide the rules.

8                     Now, to be clear, these rules were 9           created with thousands of public
10          comments, accountability panels, experts,
11          all of that. It's not the Staff and I
12          sitting in a room wishing for an outcome.

13                    But the decision was made to adopt
14          this particular form of independent
15          review.

16                    We could have adopted a form of 17          independent review that specifically
18          says, By the way, we're also going to 19          review what the Staff does.

20                    That exact proposal is under 21          consideration as we speak, but it's not
22          what these Bylaws say.

23                    ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I have
24          follow-up.

25                    Now I know what's your answer to my

1 first question.

2 My second question is, If it were
3 true that the GAC's conduct cannot be
4 reviewed by us, why in the world you ask
5 Ms. Dryden to be a witness?

6 You were the ones who gave us the 7 declaration, and it's because you did
8 this that we went on and on and on 9 discussing what the GAC was doing and 10 what the processes in the GAC were --
11 were done.

12 So I don't understand the rationale
13 behind your procedure or strategy.

14 MR. LEVEE: I can tell you exactly.
15 We had this exact discussion.

16 The application challenged the 17 Board's decision to accept the GAC
18 advice, and it said that the GAC advice
19 was not consensus advice.

20 That was DCA's amended notice,
21 which, by the way, was all I had at the 22 time Ms. Dryden -- we had to make the 23 decision.

24 I had a 25-page piece of paper that 25 said, Here's what Mr. Buruchara had

1 written in an e-mail. He objected to GAC
2 advice.

3 He wasn't at the meeting. He may or
4 may not have been the GAC representative
5 from Kenya. He may or may not have the 6 authority to do what he was e-mailing
7 about. But their notice said, Here's 8 what we've got.

9 So I called Ms. Dryden. I said,
10 This seems like an incomplete picture.
11 Can you tell me what actually happened?
12 And she did.

13 By submitting her declaration, I
14 then explained to you that the Board
15 should have had and did have confidence
16 that what the GAC told the Board was 17 accurate.

18 The GAC did issue consensus advice,
19 according to Ms. Dryden.

20 We can debate -- I know the Panel
21 will ultimately look at these issues
22 fresh -- but Ms. Dryden's view is that 23 it's not a close call.

24 She explained to you how you issue
25 consensus advice and it was done.

1           That's why we gave you her
2           declaration, to demonstrate that the 3           Board's reliance on the GAC advice was --
4           was a good thing, was accurate, was 5           within its realm.

6           Because if I had given you no
7           declaration and we had just this
8           assertion that the GAC advice was not GAC
9           advice, then I think it would be 10          reasonable for somebody to say, Well, if 11          the Board was on notice that the GAC
12          advice was not, in fact, consensus
13          advice, why didn't the Board do its own
14          investigation?

15          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Would you
16          agree, nonetheless, that at least, as you
17          say, as far as the Board's way of taking 18          its decision, the GAC conduct is 19          pertinent?

20          MR. LEEVEE: It is. I'm not
21          suggesting that it's not.

22          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Thank you.

23          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I think she 24          did a better job than me.

25          Go ahead.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: I just want to
2 complete one circle coming back to
3 Professor Kessedjian's question.

4           If you look at the last bullet
5 point, where you say GAC conduct is not
6 the proper subject of an IRP.

7           If I was to ask you to complete that 8 sentence in saying GAC conduct is the 9 proper subject of what review --

10          MR. LEVEE: In this instance,
11 there's no specific accounting mechanism
12 to challenge GAC advice that is
13 separate -- in other words, the GAC
14 issues advice, and no one does anything
15 with it.

16          So take my previous example where 17 the GAC says, I want to be involved in 18 the creation of the New GTLD Program.
19 Somebody might think that's a bad thing
20 for governments to do. There would be no
21 basis to challenge that.

22          The only basis would be when the 23 Board adopts or does not adopt specific
24 GAC advice, you are clearly free to look
25 at the Board's decision. And in that

1           regard, if you were to find that the 2           Board was on notice that the GAC just
3           fell down, that there was no GAC needed,
4           that the -- you know, that the 5           representative of Kenya walked into the 6           Board meeting and said, Wait a second, I
7           was at the GAC meeting and I jumped up
8           and down, and Ms. Dryden refused to 9           recognize me when I tried to oppose the 10          issuance of GAC advice, if those types of 11          things had happened, then you would say
12          maybe the Board didn't do due diligence
13          because the applicant submits a response
14          to the Board, and the Board reads it, and 15          maybe the Board didn't do due diligence
16          in evaluating it.

17                 Instead, what we know is what
18          Ms. Dryden testified in her declaration
19          and testified to the Panel, and she does
20          attend the Board -- these meetings as a
21          liaison. She's doesn't remember this
22          particular meeting. I'm not surprised.
23          She's attended literally hundreds of 24          meetings during her tenure as the GAC
25          Chair.

1           And while what brings us here today
2           is important for all of us, what I heard
3           her say yesterday was that there are a
4           lot of other things that are also very
5           important, much more complicated
6           politically for her to deal with.

7           So I don't know that this was the 8           most important thing that ever happened
9           to her at the GAC.

10          PRESIDENT BARIN: So, in other
11          words, if I was to say it in my way, the 12          GAC decision and conduct is whatever it
13          is, and it's not really reviewable or 14          subject to any, if you will, analysis up
15          until the time it's then put up to the 16          Board?

17          And then the Board accepts it or 18          approves it or acts on it --

19          MR. LEVEE: Yes.

20          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- at which point
21          in time, it becomes something that has 22          value, at which point in time, it becomes 23          subject to the IRP?

24          MR. LEVEE: Yes.

25          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You require

1 actual notice to the Board if something
2 is going wrong in the GAC, right?

3 MR. LEVEE: I didn't hear you.

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You would
5 require -- for instance, Mr. Ali's
6 arguing that the -- there was just this 7 quiet, you know -- very quickly, it was 8 approved -- the issue was tabled and
9 there was consensus on it --

10 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- and it
12 basically sounds like it happened in a
13 minute, but -- and that's one of the 14 things he really has been hitting us on.

15 Does the Board -- you're saying that 16 the Board doesn't know that or know that 17 objection, then the Board is reasonable
18 to accept the GAC's recommendation --

19 MR. LEVEE: What the Board in this 20 instance had, it had a communiqué from 21 the GAC saying we have issued consensus
22 advice against the Application Number so
23 forth. It then had Ms. Bekele's response
24 to the GAC advice, 15 pages, in which she 25 explains why she thinks the GAC advice

1           should not sway the Board and was
2           improperly issued.

3           The Board then meets -- it has this 4           information. It meets. It approved the 5           GAC advice.

6           So the Board is not operating in a
7           vacuum, say, taking the GAC advice and 8           not listening to anybody else. It had a
9           thorough response from the applicant that 10          did not persuade the Board.

11          And Ms. Dryden -- one of the 12          purposes of Ms. Dryden's declaration was 13          to explain to you that the objection that 14          DCA made was not, in fact, accurate.

15          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Mr. LeVee,
16          the Board has records and minutes?

17          MR. LEVEE: It does.

18          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Do we have 19          those in the binder?

20          MR. LEVEE: We do. They were in the 21          binder I gave to you yesterday,
22          the minutes of that particular meeting
23          showing what the Board reviewed.

24          I'll get you the exhibit number.

25          But it's the minutes of the

1 meeting that show -- it's Exhibit R-1.
2 It's the formal minutes of the ICANN NGPC
3 meeting of June 2013, and it says what
4 the Board looked at.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So you
6 would say, with all due respect to 7 Mr. Ali, the fact that you think that the 8 GAC operated unfairly is really
9 irrelevant to what my job is to do here
10 because you -- no matter what they did,
11 they had the other side of the story?

12 MR. LEVEE: Okay. Let me come to it
13 now. I was going to come to it later.

14 I have a completely different
15 perspective of whether the GAC acted
16 fairly or unfairly.

17 The GAC had an agenda that had been 18 generated three weeks in advance of the 19 meeting, according to Ms. Dryden's
20 testimony yesterday. Three countries
21 placed on the agenda their interest in 22 having a consensus advice objection
23 issued vis-a-vis DCA's application.

24 Ms. Dryden, her job is then to go
25 through the agenda. She goes through the

1 agenda. Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential
Information

13 We went from a few minutes to a
14 nanosecond during Mr. Ali's closing --

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Fair
16 enough.

17 MR. LEVEE: -- but whatever
18 second -- however much time it takes, I
19 don't think it takes a long time to 20 register that no one opposes.

21 In fact, no one opposes. The 22 request carries, at which time, there is 23 applause in the room, according to 24 Ms. Dryden. So people were paying 25 attention.

1           So I think the GAC advice was issued
2 exactly as it was supposed to be.

3           There isn't necessarily supposed to 4 be tons of debate at the meeting. What
5 Ms. Dryden said is we put these things on 6 the agenda three weeks in advance so that 7 the government officials can go back to 8 their own countries and get instructions.
9 And then they come to the meeting.

10           If there is consensus, it will be 11 reflected at the meeting. There's 12 nothing more to do. There's no debate to 13 have.

14           Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

19           We know Mr. Katundu, who is the 20 representative from Kenya, he's
21 physically in Beijing. He's physically
22 attending GAC meetings. And all
23 Ms. Dryden told you was, Look, I've got a
24 lot of these meetings. There's 70 to 150
25 people in the room. I can't tell you at

1 the moment whether he was there or not.

2 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So if the
3 GAC -- Mr. Ali argues that the GAC
4 procedures were flawed and the result was
5 not fair, that's -- that, to you, no
6 matter what the answer to that question
7 is, we don't get to look at that?

8 MR. LEVEE: No, you don't --

9 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

10 MR. LEVEE: -- and there -- first of 11 all, this is the first time I'm hearing
12 that the notion of issuing consensus
13 advice is unfair --

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: He said the 15 procedure -- the procedure is what he's 16 talking about.

17 MR. ALI: -- but this is how the GAC
18 has been operating since Ms. Dryden was 19 involved in 2007. That's her testimony.

20 And there's no indication that the 21 GAC has ever operated in any other
22 fashion.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Well, she 24 said this is the first time that this was 25 done this way.

1 MR. LEVEE: For gTLDs --

2 MR. ALI: Fair enough.

3 MR. LEVEE: -- the GAC has issued
4 consensus advice many, many times.

5 It's the first time that a gTLD --
6 and she also said there were several
7 other gTLDs on the agenda, one of which 8 got consensus advice, another of which 9 did not.

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Mr. LeVee,
11 have you attended a GAC meeting ever?

12 MR. LEVEE: A long time ago, not 13 recently.

14 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. So is 15 my assumption correct that each
16 government has a flag, has a --

17 MR. LEVEE: No. They actually made
18 a decision some time ago not to have 19 flags.

20 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: No, I mean
21 flags -- something with their name or
22 something with the name of the country.

23 MR. LEVEE: Like a name tag or a
24 card?

25 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Yeah.

1 MR. LEVEE: No, I don't think they
2 even do that now. They didn't when I was
3 there. I don't think they do that now.

4 Ms. Dryden knows everyone in the
5 room.

6 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So you
7 answered the question that was coming.

8 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So how do
10 you reconcile that to the fact that she
11 says that she didn't know whether Katundu
12 was there or not? She knows everybody.
13 She says it's the Chair's job to know
14 everybody.

15 MR. LEVEE: She does know everyone.

16 I think Ms. Dryden was being
17 incredibly honest. She was saying -- I
18 wanted her to say, Wasn't he in the
19 room --

20 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I'm not
21 asking you that. I'm not asking you to 22 rehearse what she said.

23 MR. LEVEE: Why doesn't she
24 remember? I think it's easy.

25 There are so many people in these

1 rooms -- she did not say one thing I wish
2 she would have said, which is to explain
3 that the GAC meeting sometimes go on for 4 eight, 10, 12 hours. People are coming
5 and going.

6 She did say that a lot of the real
7 work of the GAC is done --

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You should
9 have been on the stand instead of her.

10 MR. LEVEE: She -- what she said was 11 that people are coming and going, and a
12 lot of the work is done outside.

13 When I asked her, when we were
14 sitting together drafting her
15 declaration, and I said, Can you place
16 him in the room?

17 She said, Look, there are so many 18 meetings that I cannot, at that meeting,
19 say that he was there.

20 I know he didn't speak at the 21 meeting because, if he did, I would
22 remember that he was there.

23 But I have no fault for Ms. Dryden
24 not remembering that a particular
25 individual -- it turned out to be

1 important to us whether the
2 representative from Kenya was in the room
3 or not, but it was not something she
4 would have known at the time to even look
5 for.

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay. So
7 the authority for us that we read, we
8 have no power to evaluate what the GAC
9 did is in what you have given us in 10 Article IV, right?

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: Let me -- I just 12 want to clarify one last question.

13 When the Board -- and the minutes
14 are there. I've looked at them, but you
15 can perhaps help -- when the Board looks 16 at the consensus advice that's being put
17 before it in this case for DCA Trust --
18 and you earlier said, if I understood
19 correctly, that there was, of course, the 20 submission, if you will, of DCA Trust or 21 its opposition --

22 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- that the Board
24 was then able to compare, and then based 25 on that, I believe your position was that

1           then the Board took its decision -- was
2           the Board privy to also what happened in 3           that meeting that Ms. Dryden was at and 4           the particular facts or the explanations
5           that she gave when that request was 6           raised?

7           MR. LEVEE: The Board members would
8           not ordinarily be attending the GAC
9           meetings where those issues are 10          addressed. They're actually excluded.

11          They attend other meetings.

12          So if you're asking whether Board
13          members were in attendance, the answer
14          would be no.

15          PRESIDENT BARIN: No.

16          Did the Board members ask questions
17          from Ms. Dryden, who was there and who 18          was the --

19          MR. LEVEE: They have the ability to 20          do so.

21          Ms. Dryden's testimony was that she 22          didn't remember that there was discussion
23          or not. She just didn't remember.

24          PRESIDENT BARIN: And there's
25          nothing reflected in the minutes?

1 MR. LEVEE: Correct.

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Am I correct
3 to think that the -- the NGPC had Ms.
4 Bekele answer, so 15 pages?

5 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

6 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And I see --
7 I'm reading R-1.

8 MR. LEVEE: Yes. It's highlighted
9 on Page 4 of 5 what the NGPC had before
10 it.

11 Do you see that?

12 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.
13 There's nothing highlighted in the copy I
14 have, but it's okay. I will read it
15 thoroughly.

16 MR. LEVEE: It is on Page 5. And 17 I'm sorry that yours is not highlighted.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: I can explain why.
19 In your copy yesterday, I remember
20 clearly it was highlighted. You were 21 absolutely right, Mr. LeVee.

22 But then copies were made for us. I
23 asked your colleague to make -- and these 24 are probably the new copies that we got 25 that don't have the highlighting, which

1 explains why.

2 MS. ZERNIK: That's a copy of all
3 our exhibits.

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So we should
5 take the copy in the opening statement?

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: Right --

7 MR. LEVEE: That's the version
8 that's highlighted.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- and then you
10 will have a highlighted version there.

11 MR. LEVEE: Okay.

12 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Got it.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: I just want to
14 clarify this was the first -- the one and 15 only time, in the case of a gTLD, that 16 this issue of a consensus advice was 17 being put up.

18 MR. LEVEE: It was the first and the 19 second at the same meeting. In other
20 words, there were two gTLDs that received
21 consensus advice at that meeting.

22 It was the first time that the GAC
23 had taken up any of the applications.

24 The -- the -- the applications were 25 not published to the world until June of

1           2012.

2                   This was the GAC meeting in April of 3           2013. It was the first time they had 4           been, in essence, digesting and going
5           through the applications.

6                   Subsequently, there had been more,
7           but it was the first time that they had 8           done this.

9                   PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. So I'm
10          going to put a very hard question to you.
11          And I realize it's a hard question,
12          Mr. LeVee, but I want to do it for the 13          Panel and for what this Panel does.

14                   Do you think the Board did what it
15          should have and it could in light of all
16          the facts that it had when an application
17          was put up for the first time for the 18          gTLD with the actual, if you will, Chair
19          of the gTLD being present at that -- at 20          that Board meeting in arriving at the 21          conclusion or the decision that it
22          reached?

23                   MR. LEVEE: Absolutely.

24                   Now, you guys obviously have a very 25          different perspective --

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: I don't want you
2           to think we have any perspective, because
3           at this point, we don't.

4           MR. LEVEE: I will be candid. You
5           won't like my answer, but I don't view
6           this as a close call. I know you do.

7           This is why I don't: The GAC has a
8           process for issuing consensus advice. It
9           does it all the time. Yes, this was the 10          first time it issued consensus advice
11          vis-a-vis a particular application, but 12          it followed the policy that it always 13          follows. Ms. Dryden laid that out for 14          you.

15          You put an item on the agenda. It
16          allows governments to deliberate. And 17          then you do -- then you come at the 18          meeting.

19          What happens at the meeting is what 20          happens. And there are a lot of 21          political reasons for that, because 22          literally -- as she said, you're taking a
23          decision at a place and time.

24          So I think what the GAC did was 25          absolutely appropriate.

1           Did it have a consequence?
2           Absolutely, it did. It was intended to.
3           The Guidebook gave the GAC the ability
4           that the GAC had not previously had,
5           which was to give ICANN advice that ICANN
6           was almost forced to take into account.

7           It created a -- a so-called "strong
8           presumption." That language didn't exist
9           previously with the GAC. The GAC had 10          requested the ability to have that kind
11          of influence over the course of 12          several years of negotiating the
13          Guidebook.

14          The GAC got that influence. It
15          exercised that influence.

16          I -- the fact that it's the first
17          time doesn't mean that -- that we ought 18          to give it a bogey and say, Well, we 19          really think you should do it again. I
20          think they did it exactly how they were 21          supposed to.

22          PRESIDENT BARIN: All right.
23          Understood.

24          But how do you then reconcile, if 25          you will, what we understood -- and,

1           again, subject to being corrected -- but
2           the GAC end of it was perhaps, if you
3           will, the consensus, the political, the 4           endorsements, the views that were being
5           expressed by Members that were there --

6           MR. LEVEE:   Yes.

7           PRESIDENT BARIN:  -- there is then
8           what I call the sort of technical,
9           financial, all of the ability and the 10          time and know-how and the $185,000 that 11          goes into this application, all of that 12          sort of gets by the wayside because you
13          have a decision of the GAC that says --
14          or a proposal by the GAC that says,
15          Somebody raised their hand and said, This
16          application should not go forward?

17          MR. LEVEE:  The answer to your
18          question --

19          PRESIDENT BARIN:  I told you it was 20          a tough question.

21          MR. LEVEE:  Again, I don't view it
22          as a tough question.

23          -- the answer to your question is 24          the Guidebook is very clear that any 25          applicant that applies subject to GAC

1           advice -- any applicant could have put 2           in years and years of time, passed all of
3           the other evaluations, been the best TLD
4           that anyone could have ever imagined for 5           the entire world, and if the GAC issues
6           advice that creates the strong
7           presumption, the Board adopts it, that's 8           how -- that's the rule.

9           You may say you don't like the rule.
10          I get that.

11          But if ICANN is following the rule,
12          what did it do wrong?

13          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: We don't 14          contest that this is the rule. We 15          contest the way -- I mean -- we contest.
16          Sorry -- we -- we are puzzled at this --
17          I am puzzled by the way it was done.

18          I see the rule. I'm totally with 19          you with the rule. And it happens that I
20          know, because I have studied the 21          Guidebook for other cases, so I know what 22          they are.

23          But what the perception is to this
24          moment is that the accumulation of a
25          number of hiccups in the process may end

1 up giving the conclusion that the -- the
2 Bylaws -- the exact words in your
3 Bylaws -- the ICANN Bylaws, that the
4 process -- the processes must be fair,
5 must be transparent, must be neutral.

6 I mean, you have set up -- the "you"
7 being ICANN -- ICANN has set up for 8 itself a very high standard --

9 MR. LEVEE: Yes, it has.

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- and what
11 I am struggling with, because I don't 12 want to speak for my colleagues, of 13 course, on the Panel -- but what I'm 14 struggling with is did -- in this 15 particular case, did we respect those 16 high standards?

17 And, you know, when you -- when you
18 point out our attention to R-1 and you
19 want us to be just satisfied by those
20 three little paragraphs that say
21 nothing -- I'm sorry, they say nothing
22 that you have highlighted in the -- in 23 the -- now I found the highlighted
24 version -- how do you want us to -- to 25 make a decision on this?

1           MR. LEVEE: But that's how ICANN
2 does minutes. It does not do minutes by
3 having a scribe write down what everybody
4 says.

5           So there are so many meetings, so
6 many decisions by the Board that ICANN
7 literally -- and it's very public about 8 what it does.

9           You would like for the minutes to 10 say there was an objection, the Board
11 talked about the consensus advice, the 12 Board asked Ms. Dryden 50 questions, and 13 there was an hour-long discussion.

14           I don't actually know whether any of 15 that did or did not happen, but it gets 16 encapsulated in the minutes. And that's 17 what ICANN does.

18           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: I'm used to 19 organizations who are more prolific in 20 their --

21           MR. LEVEE: There are times where
22 ICANN has transcripts, full Board
23 meetings, various other meetings that do
24 get posted. Not every meeting and not
25 every NGPC meeting.

1           But let me posit one other scenario.
2           I was going to save this for last, but --
3           the fairness issue, I think, comes back
4           to the question that you asked Ms. Bekele
5           yesterday about the time and the effort
6           and so forth that went into this.

7           I respect that. She did a lot of 8           work. I get that.

9           And maybe the AUC took her idea and 10          made it its own. And -- and that's too
11          bad.

12          I don't see anything in the 13          Guidebook that tells me they couldn't do
14          that.

15          But there's one thing that we do
16          know, which is that Ms. Bekele knew that 17          she had lost the AUC support. She goes
18          ahead and applies, and she submits with 19          her application the 2009 letter from the 20          AUC. But she knew in 2011 that the AUC
21          had stopped supporting her -- actually,
22          she knew in 2010. She asked for a
23          reinstatement in 2011. She didn't get
24          it.

25          One question you might ask is, Why

1 did she proceed?

2 Did she believe in good faith that
3 she had the ability to get 60 percent of 4 the countries of Africa to support her
5 when the AUC, which was her main trump
6 card at the beginning, had withdrawn the 7 card to go elsewhere?

8 So fairness is in the eyes of the 9 beholder. My only point is that ICANN --
10 and it's in the rest of the slides. I'll 11 try to get through them -- ICANN did
12 treat the applicants equally pursuant to 13 the terms of the Guidebook.

14 When -- it wasn't ICANN that said Go
15 to the GAC. There's no evidence of that.
16 It wasn't ICANN that put the AUC on the 17 GAC. It wasn't -- and by the way, the 18 AUC didn't even put the issue on the 19 GAC's agenda.

20 Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

24 MR. LEVEE: -- so the GAC then
25 issues consensus advice. None of this

1 has happened as a result of a single
2 thing that ICANN did.

3 The only piece of evidence that --
4 that DCA has ever pointed to is
5 Dr. Crocker's letter, which I am more
6 than happy to rely on, because it
7 factually says what the Guidebook says.

8 So ICANN did not maneuver this.
9 What happened is that the AUC decided to 10 support one particular proposal. It
11 issued an RFP. DCA didn't respond -- she 12 explained her view as to why she did
13 that -- and then it submits an
14 application.

15 And the countries of Africa then
16 say, Well, we want to support the AUC.
17 Sixteen of them issue Early Warning
18 notices that say we want what the AUC is 19 doing.

20 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Mr. LeVee,
21 there's something that I don't understand
22 what you just said to us.

23 The AUC is not an applicant.

24 MR. LEVEE: They supported an 25 applicant.

1           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Well, they
2 supported an applicant but they are not
3 an applicant --

4           MR. LEVEE: Correct.

5           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- and that
6 makes a fairly strong difference.

7           There's another thing that you are
8 not saying here, as Ms. Bekele testified
9 yesterday, that -- and it is in her
10 written statement, so we didn't hear it
11 yesterday, that ICANN went to Africa -- I
12 don't remember the country, Dakar or 13 whatever -- explained to a bunch of 14 people in the room how to do it -- they 15 didn't know how to do it, so how to do
16 it -- bypassing DCA.

17           The person from ICANN, the employee
18 from ICANN got a reprimand, got a
19 novation -- I don't know how Ms. Bekele
20 characterized the whole thing. I call it
21 a reprimand.

22           So you are saying here ICANN didn't
23 do anything, ICANN is a virgin. But I
24 hear from the other side, that, in fact,
25 ICANN did a number -- again, the

1 impression I get -- and I hope you
2 understand my point. I'm trying the best
3 I can to be fair myself.

4 And, therefore, what I'm hearing is
5 every single step may not -- as of 6 itself, if it were isolated, may not be
7 of such a nature to actually trigger a
8 problem for ICANN, but it's the 9 accumulation of everything, the fact that 10 DCA has not been called to certain
11 meetings where they should have been
12 called, the way they have been treated,
13 the fact that -- I mean, I have not heard
14 from you -- of course, we have asked you
15 a lot of questions, so you were not 16 able -- but that is the one question I
17 would like you to address.

18 Madam Bekele said yesterday that
19 even ZACR didn't have the proper support.

20 So why is ZACR treated one way and 21 DCA is treated another way?

22 MR. LEVEE: It is in the slides, but
23 let me -- let me respond to the one thing
24 about ICANN going to Africa with a
25 proposal.

1 I also heard the testimony
2 yesterday. If we were in a court of law,
3 as you know, none of that testimony gets
4 admitted. It's entirely hearsay.

5 I have no way of challenging it.
6 There's not a single piece of paper that
7 anyone has produced -- not in our files,
8 and DCA didn't produce it -- that says
9 that ICANN, in the fall of 2011, went to 10 Africa and said, Here's how you do it,
11 you get a reserve name.

12 All I know is that when the AUC
13 asked ICANN formally to reserve the name,
14 ICANN said no.

15 So I'll be candid. That testimony
16 is very puzzling to me. I, personally,
17 have no basis to credit it because
18 there's not any corroborating evidence --

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: But --

20 MR. LEVEE: -- and even if it
21 occurred, what I don't know is did
22 ICANN -- like, when Mr. -- when 23 Dr. Crocker, Chairman of the Board of 24 ICANN, writes a nine-page letter to the 25 African Union answering all of their

1 requests, not giving them what they want,
2 but telling them a bunch of other things,
3 that letter is 100 percent accurate.

4 What I don't know is if there was a
5 meeting of people who I never met -- so I
6 don't know who they are, other than the 7 possibility that someone from the AUC
8 then reported it -- I don't know if that
9 person from the AUC was at the meeting,
10 but then they reported it, apparently, to 11 Ms. Bekele -- I don't know if the same
12 basic presentation wasn't given, which
13 is, if Africa wants to have a name, there
14 are ways of going about doing that, which 15 would have been a completely factually
16 based presentation.

17 I simply don't know.

18 What I do know is this: There's no
19 reason that one particular applicant
20 should be the only applicant. Ms. Bekele
21 acknowledged that there was nothing
22 improper for the AUC to sponsor ZACR for 23 their application. And I don't know -- I
24 just -- I don't understand why that
25 alleged event causes anyone to feel that

1 something happened that was unfair.

2 If ICANN communicated factually, we
3 have a New GTLD Program. It's about
4 to -- our application window is about to 5 open. If you are interested, we're happy
6 to come talk to you.

7 What's wrong with that?

8 Nothing.

9 So I also hear --

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Do you do
11 that with all applicants?

12 MR. LEVEE: Any applicant that
13 wanted information, absolutely. People
14 ask questions of ICANN -- ICANN provided
15 a ton of information in addition to the
16 Guidebook.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Do you meet
18 with potential applicants?

19 MR. LEVEE: ICANN would -- I don't
20 remember meetings.

21 There were -- I don't attend. I
22 know Amy is not -- my understanding is 23 that anyone that had questions about the 24 application process, a letter to apply,
25 did, in fact, and was encouraged to, meet

1 with ICANN.

2 And, in fact, some of the senior
3 officials of ICANN went all over the 4 world explaining to people what this
5 program was. There was a whole
6 communications program that ICANN adopted
7 to let people know about this program,
8 because they wanted people to apply.

9 And ICANN has gotten some prominence
10 now, but back in 2011, nobody knew
11 anything about ICANN. So it was trying 12 to get people aware of this opportunity.

13 And if ICANN went to Africa and said
14 to people in those countries that they
15 have the ability to apply for a domain
16 name, including .africa, that would have 17 been a good thing, not a bad thing.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: I'm very mindful,
19 Mr. LeVee, that you have to -- that 20 you've got slides that you want to go
21 through.

22 So, please, do you want to take a
23 few minutes to gather your thoughts or 24 just go?

25 MR. LEVEE: No; I'm fine.

1 I'm fine. Let's keep moving.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: I do want you to
3 get to the end of your --

4 MR. LEVEE: Yeah.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Sorry. But
6 we're clear that the authority that we
7 have not the ability to review the GAC is 8 in the slides you gave us, right?

9 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

10 So this provision and the previous
11 slide, that's the authority that says you
12 look at what the Board has done, and then
13 it says here, The IRP Panel must apply a
14 defined standard review to the IRP
15 request focusing on -- and then those --
16 the three things that I'm not going to 17 read in full.

18 Then -- and, Professor Kessedjian,
19 you asked, Well, what about Paragraph 11,
20 a little bit farther down, which says,
21 The IRP Panel shall have the authority
22 to: c., declare whether an action or
23 inaction of the Board was consistent
24 [verbatim] with the Articles of 25 Incorporation or Bylaws --

1                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That was the 2 Chair.

3                   MR. LEVEE: Oh, it was the Chair.
4 My apology.

5                   -- and the answer is absolutely,
6 there's no inconsistency. You do have
7 the ability to declare whether an action
8 or inaction of the Board was inconsistent
9 with the Bylaws.

10                  What Paragraph 4 is doing is -- we 11 want you to focus on these three things,
12 but you have every right -- if the Board
13 makes a decision, you have every right to 14 declare that decision, in your view,
15 right or wrong, as in consistent or
16 inconsistent with the Bylaws.

17                  I'll note that in Paragraph d -- I
18 don't have a slide for this, I
19 apologize -- the Panel -- and by the way,
20 Paragraph 11 is the authority of the 21 Panel, what you have the authority to 22 do --

23                  ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: It's
24 Paragraph 11 of the Bylaws?

25                  MR. LEVEE: Correct, we're in the

1 Bylaws. It's Article IV, Section 3.

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Yes.

3 MR. LEVEE: And this is what the
4 Panel has the authority to do.

5 You asked Mr. Ali, to come back,
6 Well, what do you want us to do? This 7 paragraph tells you what you have the 8 authority to do.

9 And in d., it says that you can
10 recommend that the Board stay any action
11 or decision or that the Board take any 12 interim action until such time as the 13 Board reviews and acts upon the opinion
14 of the IRP.

15 I'm not going to get into, today,
16 the question of whether it's binding --
17 your Panel's declaration is binding or 18 not. You've already made a preliminary
19 ruling on that. We don't have to discuss
20 it --

21 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah,
22 whatever.

23 MR. LEVEE: -- my point is that
24 these are the specific things that the 25 Panel is authorized to do. And I do urge

1           you to look at Paragraph 11 when you make
2           the decision.

3           One other thing that we now have --

4           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Let me
5           ask -- sorry -- Mr. Ali makes the 6           argument that there's an obligation in 7           the Bylaws of ICANN for transparency,
8           accountability, fairness and equitable
9           treatment.

10          Does that apply to the GAC?

11          MR. LEVEE: No.

12          I think the GAC tries to do all of 13          those things, but I don't think it's 14          bound to do any of those things.

15          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

16          MR. LEVEE: We have a declaration
17          that another IRP Panel made in March.
18          And I don't view any IRP decision as 19          binding, but the Articles do say that 20          they are -- that they do provide 21          precedent and -- much like developing 22          case law.

23          We have a decision in the 24          Booking.com matter, and, basically, what 25          it says that it's not for the Panel to

1           opine on whether the Board could have
2           acted differently. The IRP Panel's role
3           is to assess whether the actions of the 4           Board were consistent with the applicable
5           rules found in the Bylaws -- Articles,
6           Bylaws and Guidebook. Nor, as stated, is 7           it for us to purport to appraise the 8           policies and procedures established by 9           ICANN in the Guidebook.

10           And my point here is simply, it's 11           easy to second-guess anything that's in 12           the Guidebook and wish that something was 13           done differently. Indeed, the 14           Booking.com Panel raised questions for 15           ICANN to look at for the next Guidebook.
16           And there will be another one some -- a
17           few years for the next round.

18           But the Panel made it clear, We're
19           going to look at the current Guidebook;
20           we're going to look at ICANN's conduct
21           vis-a-vis the current Guidebook.

22           And all I would ask this Panel is to 23           do the same.

24           PRESIDENT BARIN: Can I then maybe
25           stop you for a second?

1           MR. LEVEE: You can stop me anytime.

2           PRESIDENT BARIN: I did take the
3 time to read, at your suggestion,
4 particularly when you introduced it at --
5 as an exhibit, if you will, in this case,
6 this very paragraph in the Booking.com
7 case.

8           I would need your help, Mr. LeVee,
9 to reconcile the bold sentence that you
10 have put there that says, In other
11 words -- well, I think you have to start
12 from That -- that -- That being said, we 13 also agree with ICANN to the extent that
14 in determining the consistency of Board
15 action with the Articles, Bylaws and
16 Guidebook.

17           Now, an IRP Panel is neither asked
18 to, nor allowed to. The "asked to," I
19 understand.

20           The "nor allowed to substitute its 21 judgment for that of the Board," in other
22 words, it is not for the Panel to opine
23 on whether the Board could have acted
24 differently than it did, how would you
25 then reconcile that with 11.c. of the

1 Bylaws, which says, to you, The IRP shall
2 have the -- the authority to declare
3 whether an action or inaction of the 4 Board was consistent or inconsistent with
5 the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws?

6 MR. LEVEE: I think they say exactly
7 the same thing.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: So do you agree
9 that the Panel can decide whether there
10 was an action or inaction?

11 MR. LEVEE: Oh, absolutely.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay. I don't get 13 quite the same thing, then, from what the 14 Booking.com, the bolded sentence --

15 MR. LEVEE: What I think the Panel
16 in Booking was saying is that the 17 applicant in Booking said, We think
18 that -- it was a string similarity case.
19 ICANN had a vendor that determined that
20 .hotels, H-O-T-E-L-S, and .hoteis,
21 H-O-T-E-I-S, were so similar that they 22 should not be both put into the Internet
23 root.

24 Booking did not like the process
25 that the Guidebook had established for

1 the string similarity test. And Booking
2 said, You know, we have our own expert,
3 and he comes to a different conclusion.

4 What the Panel said was, We're not
5 going to opine as to whether the Board
6 could have set up things differently or
7 whether, in this instance, the Board
8 could have done something differently.

9 In that case, the Board didn't even
10 review the decision. String similarity
11 Panel said, These two are two confusingly
12 similar. And under the Guidebook, it's 13 automatically disqualifying for both.
14 One of them will get to proceed, but not 15 both.

16 So there was, actually, not even 17 Board action. But what Booking was 18 arguing -- that's the reason for the 19 language -- Booking was saying, You
20 should find that the process that the 21 Board established was inconsistent with
22 the Bylaws.

23 And the Panel said, No, we're not
24 going to second-guess what the Board did.
25 You could -- you could have set it up

1           differently, but the way you set it up
2           was consistent with the Guidebook and the 3           Articles and the Bylaws.

4           PRESIDENT BARIN: Yeah. And I guess
5           the point is that a Panel is entitled to 6           do that. But when you look at a
7           situation objectively, what I was trying 8           to point out to you is that 11.c., for 9           example, says that the Panel can decide
10          whether there was an inaction on the 11          Board -- on the part of the Board,
12          "inaction" meaning it could have done
13          things differently.

14          MR. LEVEE: I see what you're --
15          you're focusing on the word "inaction"?

16          PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

17          MR. LEVEE: I understand.

18          If -- if you think, in this
19          instance, that the Board had a duty to do
20          something and it didn't, then I think
21          that is an inaction.

22          We've had difficulty with the word
23          "inaction" over the years because there
24          are frequently situations where people
25          write letters to ICANN, I'm unhappy, my

1 domain doesn't work, and ICANN does
2 nothing, because it's not something ICANN
3 does. It doesn't deal with people whose 4 computers don't work.

5 And people say, We're going to
6 initiate an IRP, it's a Board inaction.
7 We say No, No. It's not a Board
8 inaction, because there's no duty to act.

9 Here, I agree, the word "inaction"
10 is in the Bylaws, and if you find an 11 inaction where you felt there was an duty
12 to act, then I think you have 13 the -- the -- the legal ability under the 14 Bylaws to so say.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

16 MR. LEVEE: Okay. So here's what
17 I'm going to do: I'm going to cut this 18 short by doing it this way:

19 I'm not going to discuss -- I will
20 explain to you what I'm going to do. I 21 had -- at the back of the opening -- of 22 my closing exhibit slides, I repeated the 23 five assumptions that I made, and then I
24 consolidated my responses to them.

25 I'm not going to cover that. Some

1 of them I've already done.

2 I'm going to leave you -- you guys
3 are reading everything --

4 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: We have --
5 we have it.

6 MR. LEVEE: -- you have it. You can
7 look at it.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: That I can assure
9 you, we do read and have read --

10 MR. LEVEE: It's clear --

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- everything that 12 you've given us --

13 MR. LEVEE: -- it's clear.

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: --
15 especially here.

16 MR. LEVEE: -- what I do want to 17 do is -- and I will do this briefly -- go
18 to DCA's opening Slide 9.

19 So, again, just as a reminder, DCA's
20 opening Slide Number 9 was the slide that 21 is entitled Summary of ICANN's Actions in 22 Breach of the Bylaws.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That
24 Number 5 -- oh, their 9.

25 MR. LEVEE: Their Number 9.

1           PRESIDENT BARIN: I'm not following
2           you.

3           Hold on one second.

4           MR. LEVEE: It's from yesterday,
5           their opening, their Slide Number 9.

6           You don't even have to go find it --
7           it's Slide 9.

8           ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That's
9           DCA's, not ICANN's? DCA's?

10          MR. LEVEE: Yeah, DCA's.

11          This is what Mr. Ali and his 12          colleagues allege were the breaches --

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: Right.

14          MR. LEVEE: -- and I just want to go
15          through those.

16          So if you turn to the next slide,
17          Slide 6, right at the top, I'm repeating,
18          at the top, so DCA, colon, this is what
19          they say on Slide 9 --

20          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: It's each of 21          the bullets --

22          MR. LEVEE: Correct, the --

23          ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- of DCA's
24          slides --

25          MR. LEVEE: Correct.

1 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- so this
2 is Slide 9, first bullet?

3 MR. LEVEE: Correct.

4 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sorry. Just one
5 minute.

6 Can you help me? I'm not following.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Here.

8 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You take
9 Slide 9 of DCA of the -- of the opening?

10 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The
11 opening?

12 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay. Got
13 it.

14 So each bullet is the title of --

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Great. Thank you.

16 MR. LEVEE: Okay.

17 I'll run through these fairly
18 quickly because, to some degree, I think
19 I've already done it.

20 The first allegation of the Bylaws
21 breach was that the Board directed the 22 AUC on using the GAC to quash DCA's
23 competing application.

24 I've already told you and Ms. Dryden
25 told you that ICANN has no authority over

1 GAC membership.

2 By the way, we were requested to
3 produce, and we did produce, every
4 communication between the GAC relating in
5 any way to the AUC, relating in any way
6 to .africa. There is no evidence of some 7 correspondence or conspiracy.

8 The only evidence was Dr. Crocker's
9 letter, Exhibit C-24.

10 I'm not going to go through it.
11 It's on the next slide.

12 The guts of the letter say, you want
13 to reserve .africa. You can't. But the 14 countries of Africa can have significant
15 influence over the outcome. Of course,
16 they could. Any string that was going to 17 be named Africa had to have support of 18 60 percent of the governments.

19 Now, Dr. Crocker did not say, Go
20 join the GAC. He did not say, And when 21 you do, you can issue -- get the GAC to 22 issue consensus advice.

23 It's not in the letter, and there's
24 no evidence of any other communication
25 saying the same.

1           So I skipped the next slide because
2           that was just discussing the letter.

3           Second, DCA alleges as a breach that 4           the NGPC failed to investigate the many 5           overt indications that the GAC advice was 6           not consensus advice.

7           I think I covered this in some
8           considerable amount in answers to earlier
9           questions. But Ms. Dryden told you how 10          consensus advice works.

11          You may not like that. You may wish
12          that the -- that the people had to speak
13          at length before consensus advice would 14          be issued. But the GAC has a process,
15          and the process worked.

16                   Redacted - GAC Designated Confidential Information

24           Now, if you turn to the next slide,
25           Section 3.1 of the Guidebook provides

1           that the GAC advice is intended to
2           address applications that are identified
3           by governments to be problematic, e.g., 4           that potentially violate national law or
5           raise sensitivities.

6           The Panel had questions yesterday as 7           to what that means, problematic,
8           violating national law, raising
9           sensitivities.

10          Now, the GAC advice can be raised
11          with respect to any application that a
12          government, for whatever reason, deems
13          problematic. We've heard that there are 14          no restrictions for which GAC advice may 15          be issued.

16          And the GAC is not required to 17          provide a rationale.

18          But we know something else. We know
19          that 16 individual African governments
20          had issued Early Warning notices. And in 21          those notices, they said they want
22          .africa to be managed by the AUC for the 23          benefit of the African region.

24          That was the reasons that they gave
25          for issuing the Early Warning notices,

1 and that clearly falls within the
2 sensitivities that would be perfectly
3 appropriate for the GAC to issue
4 consensus advice.

5 Now, as Ms. Dryden explained, the 6 GAC doesn't give a rationale. There's no
7 appendix. So it -- it doesn't feel that 8 it has to do that.

9 But we know that the governments,
10 themselves, that issued the
11 Early Warnings, they very much had a
12 rationale.

13 Finally -- you have to turn to the 14 next slide -- DCA, in the opening
15 statement, says that the NGPC failed to 16 investigate these indications and that 17 the Committee itself should have done
18 more.

19 Let's be clear that when the -- when
20 ICANN's Board received the consensus
21 advice, it created a, quote/unquote,
22 strong presumption that DCA's application
23 should not proceed.

24 The New gTLD Committee acted in 25 accordance with the Bylaws; it acted in

1           accordance with the Guidebook; it
2           reviewed the materials that Ms. Bekele
3           submitted; and it made a decision.

4           Now, the Guidebook also says that
5           the Board may consult with an independent
6           expert. And DCA has argued that we 7           should have. I get that.

8           But nothing an independent expert
9           would have done here would have addressed
10          DCA's main concern, which was that they 11          did not think the consensus advice, in 12          fact, was consensus.

13          No independent expert, somebody who 14          didn't even attend the meeting, could 15          have shed light on that issue.

16          So where the Board has discretion
17          whether to retain an expert, the failure
18          to do so in an instance where the 19          applicant can't even tell you what
20          exactly the expert could have shed light
21          on can't possibly be a violation of the
22          Guidebook.

23          The next bullet in the opening was 24          that ICANN Staff improperly coordinated
25          with the Geo Names Panel.

1           First, we haven't heard any
2           connection to the Board on this, only
3           that the Staff interacted, but let's get 4           past that.

5           The evidence presented by DCA
6           actually disproves the notion that ICANN
7           coordinated with the AUC with respect to
8           .africa.

9           If there was coordination, surely,
10          ICANN would have said right at the outset
11          that the AUC's support was sufficient for 12          60 percent name -- 60 percent support
13          requirement. Instead, there was a lot of 14          back-and-forth, by the way, applied to 15          both applicants.

16          Why? Because DCA had submitted the 17          2009 letter of support, even though that 18          support had been withdrawn.

19          There was great confusion as to who 20          AUC was supporting. So, yes, it did take 21          a long time to sort out who we're going 22          to talk to, what we're going to ask and 23          what we're going to accept.

24          If the AUC's support had been
25          counted right off the bat, the AUC's

1 endorsed candidate, ZACR, would have
2 passed the Geo Names review almost
3 immediately. And, by the way, DCA would
4 have then failed at that same time.

5 Instead, the process was -- took a
6 long time. By the way, ICANN received
7 1930 applications. They weren't staffed
8 to be prepared to process that many, and 9 it did take a long time to evaluate.

10 DCA argued (but provided no actual
11 evidence) that ICANN received the ICC's
12 recommendation to count the AUC's
13 endorsement only after the GAC advice was 14 accepted by ICANN's Board.

15 We have already given to you in our
16 briefs -- and this is part of the reason
17 I -- I just didn't accept all of these 18 arguments yesterday, because it's
19 literally addressed in two pages of all
20 of the briefing that DCA submitted.

21 We responded in our brief. It's on 22 Page 23. We cite an exhibit, C-R-16, and
23 others. We make it clear that ICANN
24 accepted the ICC's recommendations
25 sometime before April 26, 2013, while

1 DCA's application was still pending.

2 So the timing is not nefarious. The
3 timing is not evidence that we're trying
4 to support one or the other. The timing
5 reflects that it takes time.

6 Moving along. The next bullet
7 continues that ICANN Staff improperly
8 coordinated with the Geo Names Panel.

9 The evidence that you have been
10 provided makes it clear that the Staff
11 expressed concern that both applicants for 12 .africa be treated equally and be given the 13 same opportunity to demonstrate the 14 requisite support.

15 Now, ultimately, this issue then
16 becomes irrelevant for DCA, because the 17 DCA's application didn't proceed once the 18 Board accepts the GAC advice.

19 Nothing that the Geo Names Panel could 20 ever have done would have changed that.

21 Now, I do want to address -- you
22 asked, this morning, the Panel -- there was 23 a reference that you could submit stuff
24 later.

25 And there's two slides in the -- in

1 the closing that Mr. Ali gave you, and I
2 wanted to just note that it's not the case
3 that you could submit your application and 4 then have some unlimited amount of time to 5 go get support of the governments.

6 What these slides were saying -- it
7 says --

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Which ones
9 are they?

10 MR. LEVEE: I'm on 31 and 32 --

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

12 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Of the 13 closing?

14 MR. LEVEE: -- of Mr. Ali's closing.

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Sorry.

16 When you say 31 and 32, I have only
17 got Page 27.

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Well, I've
19 got 27.

20 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That must be 21 the opening.

22 MR. LEVEE: And you have the
23 opening?

24 PRESIDENT BARIN: No; I have the
25 closing.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No. The
2 closing is Page 27.

3 MR. LEVEE: I have, at the bottom,
4 Slide 31.

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So that must
6 be the opening.

7 MR. LEVEE: My apology. You are
8 correct. This is the opening.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: So it's the
10 opening?

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You were
12 just testing us.

13 MR. LEVEE: I'm testing myself, I
14 think.

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: This is 16 what you're talking about (indicating)?

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: We're still alert.

18 MR. LEVEE: Now --

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: This one
20 (indicating) is what you're talking
21 about?

22 MR. LEVEE: Correct.

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

24 MR. LEVEE: -- Slide 31 address a
25 situation where an application for a

1 string representing a name -- if there's
2 more than one application, and the
3 applications have the requisite
4 government approvals -- so you have a
5 situation where two applicants each have
6 the requisite Government approvals.
7 That's not this case.

8 The AUC did -- was not endorsing
9 DCA's application on the day Ms. Bekele
10 submitted it. And although she submitted
11 it, it -- this paragraph has nothing to 12 do with these facts.

13 Only if the two applicants both had 14 the requisite support would you then set
15 it aside.

16 The next page, Slide 32 from the 17 opening yesterday, is the other provision
18 that Mr. Ali said gives me more time --
19 gives DCA more time.

20 This is, again, only in a situation
21 where the applicant has not provided the 22 required documentation. The applicant
23 will be contacted and given additional
24 time.

25 So, as you know, the support letters

1 had to say certain things. The AUC's
2 original support didn't, so, ultimately,
3 it had to be corrected.

4 If an applicant submits
5 documentation, but it's not the required
6 documentation, ICANN said, Look, we're
7 going to give you some more time. You
8 can go have additional time and -- and
9 get us the language that is correct.

10 Again, that's not the issue for DCA.
11 It's not that she had or -- had all of 12 the documentation submitted and the 13 documents were wrong; it's that she did
14 not actually have the support of the 15 governments or the AUC that she said.

16 I'm almost done.

17 PRESIDENT BARIN: You can take your
18 time, Mr. LeVee.

19 MR. LEVEE: The next bullet was 20 the -- DCA argued that the Staff drafted
21 a passing letter of endorsement for 22 ZACR's application.

23 I want to be clear. This was
24 entirely appropriate. There's absolutely
25 nothing wrong with ICANN and an entity

1           that wants to support an application
2           working together to write the correct
3           words.

4           It sounds -- they make it sound
5           nefarious, but it's also appropriate if
6           the entity is struggling to figure out
7           how to do it.

8           There's a sample attached to the 9           Guidebook but nothing untoward.

10          But even more importantly, it just 11          doesn't matter here, because DCA's
12          application had already been stopped.
13          And so it doesn't affect the evaluation
14          of DCA's application.

15          Finally, there's a bullet that says
16          that BGC failed to undertake an 17          independent investigation.

18          I've quoted in this slide the 19          provision of the Bylaws that says what 20          the BGC is supposed to do. It then
21          issued an 11-page recommendation saying
22          that DCA had not met the standard.

23          I want to emphasize one thing.
24          DCA's request for consideration focused
25          on one topic, the Board's decision not to

1 get an expert.

2 DCA's reconsideration did not raise
3 the GAC advice issue. It did not raise
4 the conflict of interest issue. So there
5 was nothing for the BGC to do.

6 DCA said, We want you to reconsider
7 and, in doing so, we think you ought to
8 get an expert.

9 BGC said, No. You haven't told us
10 what an expert could say.

11 The very last bullet.

12 DCA argued yesterday that the New
13 gTLD Program Committee reviewed and 14 approved its own decision. And that's 15 what happened, and I want to tell you
16 why.

17 The Bylaws provide that the BGC is 18 to review all reconsideration requests.

19 For reconsideration requests that
20 involve Board action, as opposed to Staff
21 action -- that's what happened here,
22 Board action -- the BGC does not make the 23 final determination; it makes a
24 recommendation to the Board.

25 But something else had happened

1 here, which is that the Board had created
2 the New gTLD Program Committee consisting
3 of Members who did not have a conflict
4 relative to the program.

5 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: There's so
6 many acronyms.

7 MR. LEVEE: Way too many. I can't
8 keep the acronyms straight.

9 Why, oh, why would you send the 10 BGC's recommendation to a Board that 11 consisted of people who had declared
12 conflicts?

13 Instead, what -- as Mr. Chalaby
14 testified, the New gTLD Program Committee
15 was delegated all decision-making
16 authority with respect to the program.
17 So the Board resolved that in instances
18 that relate to the New gTLD Program,
19 including Board Governance request
20 recommendations, we're going to send 21 those to the NGPC, because that's the 22 committee that is not conflicted.

23 That's what happened, and that's
24 what should have happened.

25 Now, I'm going to skip to my

1 conclusion.

2 So all the other slides that I had
3 addressing DCA's assumptions, you can
4 read them separately. But it's a summary
5 of what I said yesterday and the accuracy
6 of those things.

7 So here's the conclusion slide.

8 You can look at it in your book.

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: That's okay.

10 MR. LEVEE: DCA had five assumptions

11 --

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Are you on

13 Page 33?

14 MR. LEVEE: Pardon me?

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: Are you on

16 Page 33?

17 MR. LEVEE: I am on Page 33.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

19 MR. LEVEE: -- each of DCA's
20 assumptions is false. The evidence
21 yesterday confirmed that.

22 None of the purported breaches
23 identified by DCA that I just went
24 through represent Board action that
25 violated the Articles, the Guidebook or

1 the Bylaws.

2 The AUC was entitled to sponsor an
3 application for .africa. And that's
4 where all of this goes sideways for 5 Ms. Bekele, and I understand that.

6 And it can be argued whether that
7 was fair to her or not, but it had
8 nothing to do with ICANN.

9 ICANN didn't say, Oh, there's --
10 Ms. Bekele is doing something here, and 11 you should go trump her.

12 The AUC made an independent decision
13 to sponsor an application for .africa.
14 And they were entitled to do that, as 15 Ms. Bekele confirmed when she testified.

16 Nothing in the Guidebook says that 17 that sponsorship created a conflict of 18 interest or, at that point, relieves any 19 of the parties who are applying from the 20 requirement that they get 60 percent of 21 the support of the countries.

22 Whether the outcome is fair is truly
23 not the issue. Many applicants have 24 devoted years to this process but did not 25 obtain a gTLD.

1           DCA knew the risks, knew in
2           April 2010 that it had lost the AUC
3           support and knew that it did not have 4           support of 60 percent of the governments
5           of Africa.

6           It also knew that its application
7           could be the subject of GAC advice. It
8           was right there in the Guidebook.

9           ICANN took no actions to tilt the 10          "playing field" -- I put it in quotes
11          because that's what Mr. Ali said in his 12          opening -- in favor of AUC or ZACR.
13          ICANN followed the rules.

14          The outcome may seem unfair to the 15          applicant, but it does not create conduct
16          inconsistent with the Bylaws.

17          I don't know if I've exhausted you.
18          I have myself. But if you have other
19          questions, I'd be more than prepared.

20          The only other thing I wanted to say
21          is I know Mr. Ali is going to tell you 22          now specifically what he seeks. And 23          there were a couple of other questions.

24          I may wish to reserve three or four
25          minutes to respond.

1           Other than that, I don't have
2 anything else.

3           PRESIDENT BARIN: Absolutely,
4 Mr. LeVee.

5           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I do have
6 one question.

7           MR. LEVEE: Oh, okay.

8           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yesterday,
9 I asked you about constituent bodies,
10 including the GAC --

11          MR. LEVEE: Yes.

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- and in 13 the closing argument I got from Mr. Ali,
14 there's a Page 9 that quotes it, and they 15 say this -- they argued your answer to be 16 yes, the GAC is a constituent body.

17          Your first answer was, Yeah. Okay.

18          Then what you talked about -- what
19 you then said was that Independent Review
20 Proceedings don't apply to GAC --

21          MR. LEVEE: Yes.

22          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- so is 23 GAC a constituent body or --

24          MR. LEVEE: GAC is a constituent 25 body.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So why
2 wouldn't it apply to the --

3 MR. LEVEE: The -- the GAC set up
4 its own operating principles. And so
5 it -- I'm not saying that the -- maybe I
6 said it inartfully before. I'm not
7 saying that -- where the Guidebook refers
8 to the constituent bodies and their
9 obligations, that those don't apply to 10 the GAC; they do.

11 The -- what I'm saying is that the 12 Board has no mechanism to determine,
13 verify things that are happening in the 14 GAC so that -- to know whether the GAC
15 has done something right or wrong or 16 otherwise.

17 So the GAC -- the GAC is supposed to 18 have -- operate neutrally, operate
19 fairly, all those things.

20 The GAC, because it's a political 21 body, set up its own rules. And I think
22 it does a -- an excellent job, but it
23 is --

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So if that
25 is part of the ICANN Bylaws, why wouldn't

1 the -- this Panel be able to look and see
2 whether the GAC, as a constituent body,
3 was feasible, open and transparent?

4 MR. LEVEE: Because the IRP process,
5 which is defined in a different section,
6 lays out what the purpose of the Panel
7 is, which we went over.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

9 MR. LEVEE: So, yeah, there are 10 multiple constituent bodies within
11 ICANN --

12 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

13 MR. LEVEE: -- none of the conduct
14 of -- you know, I gave you one of them,
15 which was the Generic Names Supporting 16 Organization, which came up with the 17 policy for this whole thing, the whole
18 program.

19 We've never had an IRP challenging
20 something that they do; it's only Board
21 action.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

23 PRESIDENT BARIN: Just before you
24 go, Mr. LeVee -- but I think you also 25 told us there is nothing there; in other

1 words, there's no process in place that
2 can, in any way, examine or evaluate what
3 the GAC does. In other words, the GAC
4 can do whatever it wants to do and
5 however it wants to do it.

6 MR. LEVEE: I think that's fair.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: Is that a fair
8 statement?

9 MR. LEVEE: Yes, yes. That's why I
10 said -- I think that's right.

11 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Then how do
12 you explain that the Chair of the GAC is 13 a liaison? If you -- if ICANN has felt 14 important to have a liaison, to have
15 somebody from the GAC who is not anybody
16 from the GAC, it's the Chair, she is the 17 one who organizes the meetings, who makes 18 sure the agenda is what the agenda is.

19 So how -- are you saying -- why and 20 how can you say that the Board doesn't
21 have the means to review?

22 MR. LEVEE: What I'm saying is -- so
23 there are five liaisons to the -- to the 24 Board, not just the GAC Chair.

25 The GNSO has a liaison, all of the

1 supporting organizations have liaisons --

2 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: The
3 committees.

4 MR. LEVEE: -- it's the means of
5 liaisoning -- that's probably not a right
6 word -- liaise? -- what I'm saying is 7 that the Board does not have the -- the 8 power to say to the GAC, You must do
9 something --

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: No; but,
11 remember, it is only a presumption the --
12 the decision taken by the GAC is only a 13 presumption. We are lawyers, so let's be 14 clear on what it is.

15 Yes, it is a strong presumption, but
16 it's still a presumption --

17 MR. LEVEE: Yes, I agree.

18 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: -- so the 19 Board -- because the Board has the 20 authority not to accept the GAC's advice,
21 it seems, to me -- and because the Chair
22 is here in the room, it seems, to me,
23 that the Board has the possibility to 24 review what the GAC has done.

25 MR. LEVEE: Oh, if I left a

1 different impression than that, I
2 apologize.

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You agree
4 with me?

5 MR. LEVEE: I agree with you,
6 absolutely. The Board can review what
7 the GAC did; the Board can ask questions;
8 the Board can say, GAC, we need more
9 clarity --

10 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Okay.

11 MR. LEVEE: -- the Board can do all
12 of that.

13 And it can ask Ms. Dryden, We're a
14 little confused. Can you tell us what 15 happened at the meeting? The Board has 16 the ability to do all of that.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: And then
18 refuse the advice?

19 MR. LEVEE: And in the past, the GAC
20 has done certain things, and the Board
21 said, You know what, we don't really like
22 that; we're not going to do it.

23 Even when the Guidebook was being
24 prepared, the GAC took multiple positions
25 of things that it wanted, and ICANN said,

1 No, we're not going to give that to you.

2 So what happened was there were
3 meetings -- Ms. Stathos was at a lot of 4 them -- there were meetings where they
5 tried to sort it out, but the GAC would
6 say things, and the Board would say, I
7 don't really like that.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Before you leave,
9 there's just one last question.

10 Is it also possible for the Board to 11 do that as part of the reconsideration
12 process?

13 MR. LEVEE: To do?

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: To, in other
15 words, look at an application or an issue
16 that's come up through the GAC, for 17 example?

18 MR. LEVEE: The reconsideration
19 process is much narrower under the 20 Bylaws. It is -- because they don't
21 want -- every time someone has a decision
22 made at the Board level, they don't want
23 people basically appealing that decision.

24 So the reconsideration process was
25 intentionally designed under the Bylaws.

1 We've put up the specific Bylaw. It was
2 internally designed to be much narrower,
3 where there are things you could have
4 said, things that you could have done,
5 things that you know the Board should
6 have looked at but didn't.

7 So it's a much narrower nature of
8 review.

9 PRESIDENT BARIN: Understood, in 10 terms of explanation.

11 But in terms of the process, is it
12 possible that -- is it possible for a
13 reconsideration application to review
14 what the GAC has done?

15 MR. LEVEE: I don't believe so --

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

17 MR. LEVEE: -- it's very 18 hypothetical, but it -- yeah.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: Hypothetically, I
20 ask, because if you look at the 21 reconsideration provisions, which, again,
22 I looked at carefully because it is part
23 of the accounting and review process
24 here, it says to you, The Board has
25 designated the Board Governance Committee

1 to review and consider any such
2 reconsideration requests. The Board
3 Governance Committee shall have the
4 authority to conduct whatever factual
5 investigation is deemed appropriate.

6 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

7 PRESIDENT BARIN: So, to me, that
8 seems that if the Board considers that 9 perhaps something isn't done, should --
10 should have been done or could have been 11 done differently, or whatever else, it's
12 part of that process.

13 MR. LEVEE: Within the defined
14 standard of the mandate of the Board
15 Governance Committee, absolutely, they 16 have the right to go figure out what
17 happened.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: So in this case,
19 could they have if they wanted to?

20 MR. LEVEE: They weren't asked to,
21 and that was part of the -- the -- it was 22 important. They weren't asked to find
23 out anything about the GAC advice. They 24 weren't asked to look into the conflict
25 issue. They were asked why didn't the

1 Board hire an expert.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: And who would have
3 had to ask that?

4 MR. LEVEE: The applicant, DCA.

5 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Sorry.
6 That raises one more.

7 You know, we have the issue about
8 the conflict, and the -- and the 9 ombudsman said at the time that there's
10 been no discussion about .africa;
11 therefore, at this time, there's no
12 conflict.

13 And we had this discussion yesterday
14 about the new fact, where the .africa
15 comes in and it starts being discussed by 16 the people who -- and objected to.

17 Whose responsibility would it be 18 then to check to see at that time whether 19 or not there was a conflict or not?

20 It could be you-all, because you
21 have this higher standard, or it could be
22 you don't respond unless the applicant
23 asks you to.

24 But if it turns out that when they 25 start talking about it, then it's got to

1 be reevaluated again, doesn't it?

2 MR. LEVEE: The -- the -- there are
3 two things going on simultaneously: One
4 is that each Board member is supposed to 5 be updating his forms --

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yes.

7 MR. LEVEE: -- and the second is 8 that if an applicant is concerned, the 9 applicant is supposed to be saying
10 something.

11 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: All right.
12 And they -- okay.

13 So they say something, and it's
14 clearly --

15 MR. LEVEE: They said something in 16 2012.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.
18 But -- yeah, but -- you know, I'm not
19 sure whether there's an actual conflict.
20 Perceived conflict is a much more squishy
21 concept, but it's kind of determined by 22 outside people sometimes --

23 MR. LEVEE: Yeah.

24 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: -- but when
25 the time came to look at the perceived

1 conflict later, nobody asked you to do
2 it, and you don't feel as though there
3 was any obligation for the ombudsman or 4 anyone else to look at that?

5 MR. LEVEE: The ombudsman usually
6 only acts in response to a complaint. He 7 doesn't initially investigate --

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: So DCA
9 should have made a new complaint?

10 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

11 Now, you know, we -- I skipped over
12 this whole part because -- not in the 13 slides, but the -- what we have in this
14 situation is that because of the way it
15 came up, where there was a speech,
16 somebody thanked Mr. Disspain and
17 Mr. Sadowsky, and another Board member
18 said, Hey, shouldn't we just reconfirm
19 this?

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.

21 MR. LEVEE: There was a very
22 extensive process. We can debate the 23 nature of the investigation and whether
24 more or less should have been done --

25 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah.

1 MR. LEVEE: -- but there was a very
2 extensive process that was done at that
3 time, all knowing that the Board's
4 approval was unanimous.

5 But even so, they wanted to check,
6 because if there were people conflicted,
7 those people should not be voting.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I
9 understand that.

10 I'm not worried about the second
11 one. That seems, to me, like it was 12 handled properly.

13 MR. LEVEE: The conflicts policy
14 does not really address your scenario of 15 how this came up --

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.
17 Right.

18 MR. LEVEE: -- it did come up in
19 some way as happenstance, but the Members
20 were asked twice, once at the meeting and 21 then once at the next meeting.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It only
23 came up once for Mr. Silber. That was 24 the first time.

25 The second time, Mr. Silber was not

1           one of the two people in the statement
2           that was made at the meeting, so
3           Mr. Silber was not looked at a second
4           time.

5                     But even though --

6                     MR. LEVEE:  Actually, Mr. Chalaby
7           said that he was.

8                     HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  That's
9           right, he did say that.  Yep.

10                    MR. LEVEE:  Because he had been part
11           of the first challenge.

12                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  That was 13           for an actual conflict, not a perceived
14           conflict?

15                    MR. LEVEE:  Well, they knew there
16           had been a challenge to Silber and 17           Disspain.

18                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  They knew
19           that it was one day --

20                    MR. LEVEE:  Earlier.

21                    HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL:  -- yeah,
22           one day earlier.

23                    MR. LEVEE:  So they looked at Silber
24           and Disspain again.  That's what Mr.
25           Chalaby testified.

1 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I know. He
2 looked at them for actual conflicts, it
3 sounded to me, not for perceived
4 conflicts.

5 MR. LEVEE: That's not how I heard
6 it.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.
8 Well, it's all there in pixel form.

9 By the way, I have no more
10 questions.

11 MR. LEVEE: Thank you very much.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you,
13 Mr. LeVee.

14 How much --

15 MR. ALI: Five minutes.

16 PRESIDENT BARIN: Five minutes?

17 MR. ALI: Yes.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Do we need a
19 break, perhaps?

20 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: If it is
21 five minutes.

22 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It's not
23 going to be five minutes when we ask
24 questions.

25 MR. ALI: We can take a break

1 and . . .

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: Do you need a
3 break?

4 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: I'm fine.

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: So let's
6 continue.

7 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The one
8 thing I need to hear is what your 9 response to we have no authority as this
10 Panel to look at the -- the GAC conduct.

11 MR. ALI: That was going to be my
12 second --

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Let me be
14 quiet and let you do your job.

15 MR. ALI: Your wish is my command.

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: No.

17 - - -

18 CLOSING STATEMENT (CONTINUED) ON BEHALF OF CLAIMANT

20 - - -

21 MR. ALI: So we had Mr. LeVee,
22 yesterday and today, confirm that the GAC
23 is a constituent body of ICANN. So that 24 is now uncontroversial.

25 The -- the second thing that I -- as

1           you, Judge Cahill, pointed out, is
2           Article III, Section 1 of the Bylaws. It
3           says, ICANN and its constituent bodies
4           shall operate, to the maximum extent
5           feasible, in an open and transparent
6           manner and consistent with the procedures
7           designed to ensure fairness.

8                     And then Mr. LeVee pointed us to 9           Article IV on Accountability and Purpose.
10          And Article IV, Section 1 states, In 11          carrying out -- previously, what I just 12          read out was Article III, Section 1. So,
13          here, I'm in Article IV, Section 1.

14                    And I quote, In carrying out its 15          mission as set out in these Bylaws, ICANN
16          should be accountable to the community
17          for operating in a manner that is 18          consistent with these Bylaws and with due
19          regard for the core values set forth in 20          Article I of these Bylaws.

21                    So that's, overall, the accounting
22          framework.

23                    The provisions of this Article,
24          creating processes for reconsideration
25          and independent review of ICANN actions

1 and periodic review of ICANN's structures
2 and procedures, are intended to reinforce
3 the various accountability mechanisms
4 otherwise set forth in these Bylaws,
5 including the transparency provisions of 6 Article III and the Board and other
7 selection mechanisms set forth throughout
8 these Bylaws.

9 Now, that is the only place where we 10 can find a connection between the 11 accountability mechanisms set forth in 12 Article IV and the obligations of 13 fairness and transparency that are also 14 imposed on the -- on the constituent
15 bodies.

16 I would submit to you that it was 17 the intention of the drafters that the 18 IRP be a mechanism through which the 19 transparency and fairness, as set out in 20 Article III, Section 1 of the Bylaws, be 21 given effect and -- and enforced.

22 Otherwise, this is meaningless,
23 simply because, as has been pointed out,
24 there is no other mechanism foreseen,
25 either in the GAC operating principles or

1 within the context of the Bylaws, whereby
2 the GAC is held accountable.

3 So reading Article IV and
4 Article III together, and based on the
5 principle that rules or text or statutes
6 must be read in a way that allows for 7 them to be -- to be given effect in a
8 F-A-O-T law, whatever the -- would be
9 the -- the equivalent effective utility
10 or to implement, I think that therein
11 lies your avenue for reviewing the GAC
12 processes.

13 We're not talking about, here,
14 again, as was in Booking.com, whether or 15 not somebody actually likes the Guidebook
16 or not. We're talking about
17 implementation --

18 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Right.

19 MR. ALI: -- and that implementation
20 is tested at two levels: It is tested
21 through Article IV and Article III, as 22 I've just explained. And I think it's 23 tested on the other side by virtue of the 24 fact, as Ms. Dryden put it yesterday,
25 that the Board interprets the outputs of

1 the -- of the GAC.

2 As you were pointing out, there's
3 strong presumptions, but, ultimately, the 4 NGPC has a duty. And as Mr. LeVee
5 pointed out, if there is a duty, as you
6 just indicated, then -- or he indicated
7 in responding to your question,
8 Mr. President, is that -- that the -- the 9 discharge of that duty can be evaluated
10 by you.

11 And in this particular instance,
12 given the controversy, given the 13 sensitivities, given the politics, given
14 the fact that we had this imbalance in 15 the application process, the Board had a
16 duty, an absolute duty, to conduct
17 additional diligence and to make 18 inquiries as to what it is that had
19 happened.

20 What -- they might have just asked
21 one question of Ms. Dryden. We have an 22 agenda, which we haven't seen, that was 23 drafted three to four weeks before the 24 GAC meeting.

10                   But the Board, what does the Board
11 know -- why would the Board ask those
12 questions?

13                   ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: They have 14 the 15-page of --

15                   MR. ALI: It has to be incumbent
16 upon Ms. Dryden, as the liaison, to have 17 provided them with the background
18 briefing as to how the consensus advice
19 emerged.

20                   I mean, it seems, to me, that as a
21 decision is about to be taken of great
22 consequence and import to an applicant,
23 that Ms. Dryden, as the liaison for the 24 GAC, might have provided even a brief
25 summary of what had taken place in the

1 process.

2 Or Mr. Chalaby, given, again, the
3 context of these applications, given the
4 first time, this is new, we have a
5 controversial set of circumstances
6 surrounding these applications that
7 everybody knows about, that it might --
8 might've occurred to somebody, Heather,
9 could you please provide us some 10 background on what took place and how is 11 it that we've come to this point?

12 Not very difficult. But we have
13 absolutely no evidence to that effect.
14 All we know is that a perfunctory line is 15 included in a Board minute that says it
16 was considered.

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: If that had
18 been done and the Board just said, Okay,
19 I got it, and they list -- that -- that 20 -- that -- we can't second-guess that
21 decision had that been done, right?

22 MR. ALI: I can't tell you what it
23 is that would have subsequently happened.
24 What I can tell you is what you have just 25 inquired about didn't happen. There was

1 no inquiry.

2 The Board had a duty. The Board has
3 a duty. The Board is the curator of this
4 system.

5 If the GAC is not subject to your
6 review, then, somehow within this -- then
7 the Board, as Ms. Dryden tells you, has 8 the power to interpret and implement what
9 the GAC is -- what the GAC's consensus
10 advice is.

11 So thereby exists the control
12 mechanism, which means a duty to 13 investigate, a duty to make inquiries,
14 even some inquiry. And that wasn't done.

15 So you can approach it from two
16 different ways: either it's the GAC
17 review, Article IV and Article III; or it
18 is through the Board mechanism.

19 So just on this issue of -- of --
20 very quickly on the Staff. I would just 21 point you to the fact that the -- that 22 this litigation waiver that is found in 23 AGB Module 6.6 also covers the Staff; it
24 covers consultants; it covers everybody.

25 So I think, for purposes of IRPs,

1           you have to look at the conduct as a
2           whole, everybody that is part of this
3           ICANN system that is administering, that 4           is overseeing, that is implementing, that 5           is caretaking the application of the 6           Bylaws, the Articles and the Applicant
7           Guidebook.

8                     If it is a rule book, somebody
9           implements those rules. Those rules are 10          being implemented by ICANN Staff on a
11          day-to-day basis. Hence, the litigation
12          waiver covers everybody, including ICANN
13          affiliates.

14                    So I would -- it would suggest that 15          Module 6.6, for purposes of the IRP, at 16          least, would provide a basis for you to 17          consider the action of Staff.

18                    It also says that DCA didn't know
19          what was going on between the Geo Names
20          Panel -- the Geographic Names Panel and 21          ICANN Staff. DCA had no way of knowing 22          what was going on in these internal 23          e-mails.

24                    But DCA did raise on a number of 25          occasions that their -- that ICANN Staff

1           was taking actions that were not fair to
2           DCA, and they raised this with the NGPC.
3           And we have Ms. Bekele's testimony to --
4           to that effect.

5                     But the NGPC never made any 6           inquiries as to what is going on with 7           respect to Staff's Interactions With 8           The -- With The -- With The Geo Names
9           Panel.

10                    So I think that Staff has to be 11           covered. They're the very important 12           implementers of the direction of the 13           Board.

14                    And if one were to simply say, Well,
15           the Staff can do one thing, but the 16           Board's actions are nonreviewable on the 17           Board -- they're reviewable, but the 18           Board is not responsible for Staff's
19           actions, particularly when the CEO would 20           be Staff and is on the Board, would be a
21           really surprising outcome.

22                    Again, on the issue of support, I
23           think the easiest path for you here, as 24           opposed to the debate that we're having 25           as to what was the right support from the

1 beginning, what was the right support at 2 the end, is just to look at the
3 correspondence that was taking place
4 between the Geo Names Panel, a panel that 5 was retained in order to conduct an
6 independent evaluation. Its views, its
7 recommendations and what it was saying
8 was considered to be support.

9 The fact of the matter is that ZACR
10 didn't have 60 percent support when it
11 filed its applications from individual
12 governments. And at the point in time
13 when it entered into contract
14 negotiations and the application was --
15 was -- was approved, it still didn't have 16 60 percent support from the individual
17 governments.

18 What it did have was support from 19 the AUC, which, again, you recall, was 20 initially not considered to be support.

21 It subsequently becomes support.
22 And if that support is applicable, then
23 the support that .africa had -- or DCA
24 has should also be subject to somebody's
25 evaluation and interpretation.

1           Now, the answer that we're given by
2           Mr. LeVee to the letter, I think, is 3           something that perhaps applies as the 4           capstone to this entire proceeding, at 5           least from our perspective.

6           Mr. LeVee said, What's wrong with 7           helping an entity that is struggling to 8           figure it out?

9           I hope you recall him saying that.

10          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Um-hum.

11          MR. ALI: I just simply say, Let's
12          substitute the word "entity" for what's 13          wrong with helping applicant that is 14          struggling to figure it out?

15          There's everything wrong, because
16          you're helping out one applicant, opening
17          every door all along the way for that 18          applicant but closing the door for the 19          other applicant.

20          So what's wrong with helping out one
21          applicant that is struggling to figure it
22          out?

23          Everything, because it's unfair,
24          it's inequitable, it's discriminatory,
25          and it's a violation of the Articles of

1 Incorporation, Bylaws, the Applicant
2 Guidebook, international law and just --
3 and general principles of good faith and 4 fairness.

5 And so, with that, I have nothing
6 more to add, except that I owe you the 7 final relief requested, which is being
8 specified with our client.

9 So this will be the document.

10 This may be an appropriate time to 11 take a break. I'll finalize it, give to 12 Mr. LeVee and then bring it back.

13 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Okay.

14 PRESIDENT BARIN: Mr. LeVee, do you
15 want an opportunity to respond to what --

16 MR. LEVEE: Just very quickly on 17 Staff -- the question of whether an IRP
18 covers Staff --

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: I was going to ask
20 you a question.

21 MR. LEVEE: -- I mean, it's a policy
22 argument, right?

23 Mr. Ali's arguing he doesn't think
24 it's right that the Staff should have a
25 litigation waiver, but the language of

1 Article IV is very precise. It says, The
2 Board --

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: But you don't
4 disagree that the Board is ultimately
5 responsible for the conduct of the Staff?

6 I mean, otherwise, who else is?

7 MR. LEVEE: No, no. In any
8 corporate setting, the Board is
9 ultimately responsible. But when a Staff
10 member sends a letter or shows up in 11 Africa to a meeting that may or may not 12 have occurred, the Board may have some 13 legal responsibility, but it's not for
14 conduct --

15 PRESIDENT BARIN: I understand.

16 MR. LEVEE: -- that's the point I'm
17 making. It's only Board conduct that's 18 reviewable in an IRP. And ICANN did not 19 want --

20 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: But if the 21 conduct is not supervising the personnel,
22 isn't that --

23 MR. LEVEE: Well, you could argue
24 that. You could also argue that it was 25 the manager's responsibility.

1           No board that I'm aware of is
2           responsible for each event that an 3           employee does.

4           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: That's
5           probably right, but we'd have to have
6           more facts. So . . .

7           MR. LEVEE: We would have to have 8           more facts.

9           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah,
10          right.

11          PRESIDENT BARIN: Anything else?

12          MR. LEVEE: No.

13          PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

14          What I suggest, then, is while we 15          wait for Mr. Ali and his team --

16          MR. ALI: It shouldn't take more
17          than a few minutes.

18          PRESIDENT BARIN: That's fine. We 19          can take a break.

20          We do have a few things.

21          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: We have
22          things to talk about.

23          PRESIDENT BARIN: It's 12:30.

24          If we were to resume -- I don't
25          know --

1 MR. LEVEE: Ten minutes.

2 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- 10 minutes?

3 Fifteen minutes? Is that okay?

4 MR. LEVEE: Ten minutes would be

5 better.

6 PRESIDENT BARIN: In 15 minutes, it

7 will ten to 1:00.

8 In 15 minutes.

9 MR. LEVEE: Very good.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: Thank you.

11 Mr. Ali and Mr. LeVee, I do want to 12 speak to the Panel Members first, but it

13 may be that I would ask you to come and

14 join us again for a few seconds.

15 MR. LEVEE: I'm not going anywhere.

16 (Whereupon, at 12:34 p.m., a

17 luncheon recess was taken.)

18

19 20

21

22

23

24

25

1           And I don't have any questions. It
2           seems clear to me in terms of what you're
3           asking.

4           MR. LEVEE: Since it has arrived as 5           we were about to go on, in the event that 6           ICANN has anything to say about it, may
7           we send a very short letter to the Panel
8           over the next several days?

9           PRESIDENT BARIN: Sure.

10          MR. LEVEE: I don't know that we 11          will.

12          PRESIDENT BARIN: That's fine. I
13          don't see a problem if you do have 14          something that you want to say. You're 15          just getting it at the hearing, so,
16          that's fine, as long as it's to the point
17          and brief.

18          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: It will be 19          brief.

20          MR. LEVEE: Understood.

21          MR. ALI: As you see, it's 22          effectively the same as what we've 23          previously provided.

24          PRESIDENT BARIN: That's fine.

25          But in all fairness, he's just

1 getting it now, so he can react to it.

2 MR. ALI: Yes.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

4 So are we done then, now, in terms
5 of closing arguments?

6 MS. BEKELE: Mr. Chair, if I could
7 just address the Panel one last time
8 before we adjourn, I would appreciate
9 that.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: Do you have any
11 objection?

12 MR. LEVEE: I would object.

13 PRESIDENT BARIN: What's the nature
14 of the --

15 MS. BEKELE: I just wanted to thank
16 the Panel for all the work they're doing.

17 MR. LEVEE: I have no objection to
18 that.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: For your
20 side --

21 PRESIDENT BARIN: I just wanted to 22 make sure that I heard what she was going
23 to say first before I --

24 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: You object
25 before she said anything, just in case.

1           MR. LEVEE: I was envisioning
2 something different.

3           HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Yeah, me,
4 too.

5           I do a lot of arbitrations, and
6 these are as good a lawyers as they get.
7 So whatever -- sorry. Don't tell them
8 that I said that.

9           PRESIDENT BARIN: In terms of house
10 cleaning -- and we'll get to that --
11 we'll get to that, too --

12          HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Housekeeping

14          PRESIDENT BARIN: -- housekeeping --
15 there's one other -- one last item
16 that -- Mr. LeVee, the Panel would like 17 to request from ICANN, and, that is, we 18 understood yesterday that there are
19 recordings of Board meetings of ICANN
20 that are kept.

21          Now, whether they're available or
22 not is a question that I put to you.

23          To the extent that the recordings
24 are available, the Panel would appreciate
25 getting the recording that relates to the

1 Board meeting of June 4, 2013, that's
2 Exhibit R-1, and the main agenda for
3 which was the Consideration of
4 Nonsafeguard Advice in GAC's Beijing
5 Communiqué and Rationale for Resolution
6 of 2013/06/04. So if that's available.

7 MR. LEVEE: I will respond in the
8 same time that I respond to the Panel's
9 request for the other document relating
10 to the Ethics Panel that we discussed
11 yesterday.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

13 And, of course, you'll have a
14 chance, Mr. Ali, to comment.

15 I note that there was a
16 transcription of this proceeding. So
17 what I suggest is that you will get a --
18 a copy of that transcription, probably.
19 And if counsel can sort of accord on the 20 final text that gets to us.

21 Then you can have a look at it in 22 the period that you do, but as long as we 23 get a copy that we don't have to then be 24 concerned as to whether there are any 25 comments on it or not --

1 MR. ALI: Of course.

2 MR. LEVEE: That's fine.

3 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- in terms of the 4 transcript.

5 MR. LEVEE: Yes.

6 And, yesterday, we discussed that we
7 will not plan on closing briefs.

8 I just wanted to confirm that that
9 remains the Panel's preference.

10 PRESIDENT BARIN: Well, to be
11 perfectly candid, I don't think the Panel
12 had any preference in particular, but --
13 but I don't think one is necessary,
14 unless -- if you want to put one in,
15 we're not going to say no.

16 MR. LEVEE: The parties did not 17 believe that additional briefing was 18 necessary.

19 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thank you.

20 PRESIDENT BARIN: But to follow
21 that, what we will do, though, is --
22 because we will have an important job now
23 going forward deliberating on this -- and 24 it will take us as long as it'll take
25 us -- if we do need information,

1 documents or anything else, including
2 submissions, then we will come back to
3 you, perhaps, put it to you by written
4 question. We'll evaluate it as we go
5 forward.

6 MR. LEVEE: We have no objection to 7 that at all.

8 PRESIDENT BARIN: Okay.

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Could we 10 have an idea of the calendar for 11 the -- for the transcript? When are you
12 going to send the drafts?

13 MR. LEVEE: We have a draft from 14 last night already.

15 THE COURT REPORTER: It looks like
16 June 8th and 9th.

17 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: Then you
18 will have to work on it?

19 MR. ALI: Maybe a week or so or to 20 confirm, maybe faster than that. But as 21 soon as we get the clean from Ms. Sebo,
22 we'll --

23 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: So around
24 the 20th of June -- around the 20th of 25 June, approximately, a clean transcript

1 for us?

2 MR. LEVEE: That's fine.

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: We will be
4 able for us to plan our deliberations?

5 PRESIDENT BARIN: The 20th of June
6 is a Saturday, so maybe the 19th, on or 7 about.

8 How's that?

9 MR. ALI: We'll work it out. We
10 understand why you need it, and we'll try
11 and get it to you as quickly as we can.

12 PRESIDENT BARIN: So on or about 13 June 19th, we'll get a final version of 14 the -- of the transcript.

15 Okay. Any other issues? No?

16 Questions?

17 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Not me, no.
18 I'm fine.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: I do have a
20 question for you.

21 And the question to both of you is
22 that I trust you're happy with the way
23 the Hearing went, that you're satisfied
24 with the ability to make your
25 presentations and an opportunity to make

1 your points known in as full of a manner
2 as you could under the circumstances?

3 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: If you're
4 not, it's too late.

5 MR. ALI: Thank you.

6 And from DCA Trust side, absolutely.
7 Thank you.

8 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: What are
9 you going to say?

10 MR. LEVEE: Likewise.

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: The issue is if
12 there's anything that you want to do that 13 you haven't been able to do, this is the 14 time to do it.

15 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: The appeals
16 say otherwise, that's fine, because --
17 it's kind of a -- a loaded question.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: Then that brings
19 me to two last items, and that is I want
20 to thank our stenographer, Cindy Sebo --
21 I think I pronounced that perfectly
22 well --

23 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Perfectly
24 well.

25 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- from

1 TransPerfect, who has been sitting here
2 the last one-and-a-half day, long days,
3 for what she's done. So thank you.

4 And then I wanted to personally --
5 and I'm sure my colleagues will
6 definitely have their only words to 7 say -- thank your -- the counsel, both
8 Mr. LeVee and Mr. Ali, for -- and --
9 pardon me -- and your team --

10 MR. ALI: Far more importantly.

11 PRESIDENT BARIN: -- some of whom,
12 you said yesterday, were presenting for 13 the first time. I think the Panel agrees
14 that it was a very good job.

15 Well done.

16 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: You'll
17 probably always remember that, so good
18 job.

19 PRESIDENT BARIN: I particularly 20 want to commend you for -- for being 21 extremely civil.

22 Sometimes these issues are not easy,
23 but in the complete, thorough and, I
24 think, excellent way -- and I say this in 25 your front of your clients, both of your

1 clients -- the -- the Panel is very
2 thankful and grateful.

3 We enjoyed being here, and we will
4 go into the deliberations for the next
5 however long it takes. So --

6 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Thanks for
7 choosing the three of us. We get along
8 very well.

9 ARBITRATOR KESSEDJIAN: We decided
10 to propose at the end of this that we 11 will form a permanent tribunal.

12 MR. LEVEE: ICANN has been looking
13 for a permanent tribunal.

14 HONORABLE JUDGE CAHILL: Wait till
15 you see what we do, because we don't know
16 what we're going to do. Maybe you will 17 want us back or maybe not.

18 PRESIDENT BARIN: With that, I wish
19 you a good day, and have a great, long
20 weekend.

21 MR. LEVEE: Thank you.

INTRODUCTION

1. The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”) hereby submits its Response to the Request for Independent Review Process (“IRP Request”) submitted by claimant Vistaprint Limited (“Vistaprint”) on 11 June 2014.

2. This Independent Review Process (“IRP”) is conducted pursuant to Article IV, Section 3 of ICANN’s Bylaws, which creates a non-binding method of evaluating certain actions of ICANN’s Board of Directors.<sup>1</sup> This IRP Panel has one responsibility – to “declar[e] whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of [ICANN’s] Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>2</sup> An IRP is not an arbitration process, but rather a means by which entities that participate in ICANN’s processes can seek an independent review of decisions made by ICANN’s Board of Directors. Specifically, the IRP, when invoked, calls for the IRP Panel to consider and then declare whether the IRP Panel believes an action or decision of ICANN’s Board of Directors was consistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation (“Articles”) or Bylaws.<sup>3</sup> The ICANN Board then considers that declaration. The declaration is not binding on the ICANN Board but, of course, ICANN takes the IRP seriously and the Board will consider the declaration at the first opportunity.

3. The IRP Panel is to “apply a defined standard of review to the IRP Request, focusing on”:

ICANN’s Bylaws have been revised since that time, but the provisions relevant to Vistaprint’s IRP Request and ICANN’s response have not changed. For ease of reference, ICANN will refer to the Bylaws as submitted by Vistaprint in Cl. Ex. RM-2.

- b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
- c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?<sup>4</sup>

4. As the Bylaws make clear, the IRP addresses challenges to conduct undertaken by ICANN's Board of Directors; it is not available as a mechanism to challenge the actions or inactions of ICANN staff or third parties that may be involved with ICANN's activities.

5. Vistaprint's IRP Request relates to its two applications to operate a .WEBS generic Top Level Domain, or "gTLD." Vistaprint submitted its applications to ICANN in connection with ICANN's program to facilitate the creation of hundreds of new gTLDs to supplement those that have existed for many years, such as .COM, .NET, and .ORG. ICANN is administering this "New gTLD Program" pursuant to an Applicant Guidebook ("Guidebook") that ICANN adopted in June 2011 following years of consideration and public input.<sup>5</sup> The window for submitting new gTLD applications, which was open to all interested entities, commenced on 12 January 2012, and ICANN received 1,930 new gTLD applications.

6. In addition to VistaPrint's applications to operate a .WEBS gTLD, several entities applied to operate a .WEB gTLD. Pursuant to the Guidebook, Vistaprint's .WEBS applications were challenged by one of the applicants for .WEB in an independent dispute resolution process. In this dispute proceeding,<sup>6</sup> an expert panel ("Expert Panel") selected by the ICDR<sup>7</sup> was tasked with determining whether the relevant .WEBS and .WEB applications are so similar as to be confusing to Internet users. If the Expert Panel determined pursuant to the process set forth in the Guidebook that these applications were confusingly similar, only one of them could proceed.

7. In the dispute involving Vistaprint's applications for .WEBS and the Objector's application for .WEB, the Expert Panel determined they were confusingly similar.

8. Vistaprint sought to overturn the Expert Panel's decision by filing with ICANN a "Reconsideration Request," which is another ICANN accountability mechanism by which ICANN's Board Governance Committee ("BGC") evaluates whether ICANN properly followed its policies and procedures in taking the challenged action. The BGC found that neither the Expert Panel nor ICANN failed to follow policies and procedures, and therefore it denied Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request.

9. In this IRP, Vistaprint challenges the underlying Expert Panel Determination as well as the denial of Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request. Vistaprint first claims that ICANN's Board violated its Articles and Bylaws by "blindly accepting" the Expert Panel's Determination without reviewing its analysis or result. There is, however, no requirement that ICANN's Board conduct such an analysis. Indeed, "accepting" or "reviewing" the Expert Panel's Determination is not something ICANN's Board is tasked with doing or not doing. Per the Guidebook, the "findings of the panel will be considered an expert determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process."<sup>8</sup> Following receipt of expert determinations, it is ICANN staff that is tasked with taking the next step, not ICANN's Board. As such there is no Board action in this regard for the IRP Panel to review.

10. Next, Vistaprint claims that ICANN breached its Articles and Bylaws when ICANN's BGC denied Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request without referring the matter to the entire ICANN Board. But ICANN’s Bylaws specifically permit the BGC to reach its own conclusion when an ICANN staff action or inaction is at issue, as it was in Vistaprint’s case.

11. Finally, without identifying any particular Article or Bylaws provision violated, Vistaprint claims that the BGC just “got it wrong” when it denied Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request. But the BGC did precisely what it was supposed to do in reviewing Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request – it reviewed the Expert Panel’s and ICANN staff’s compliance with policies and procedures, rather than the substance of the Expert Panel’s determination, and found no policy or process violations.<sup>9</sup>

12. Ultimately, Vistaprint has initiated this IRP because Vistaprint disagrees with the Expert Panel’s Determination and the BGC’s finding on Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request. ICANN understands Vistaprint’s disappointment, but IRPs are not a vehicle by which an Expert Panel’s determination may be challenged because neither the determination, nor ICANN accepting the determination, constitutes an ICANN Board action. Nor is an IRP the appropriate forum to challenge a BGC ruling on a Reconsideration Request in the absence of some violation by the BGC of ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws. Here, ICANN followed its policies and processes at every turn with respect to Vistaprint, which is all it is required to do.

BACKGROUND FACTS

Background Information On ICANN

13. ICANN was formed in 1998. It is a California not-for-profit public benefit corporation. As set forth in its Bylaws, ICANN’s mission “is to coordinate, at the overall level,

the global Internet’s system of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure option of the Internet’s unique identifier systems.”<sup>10</sup>

14. ICANN is a complex organization that facilitates input from stakeholders around the globe. ICANN has an international Board of Directors, nearly 300 staff members, and an Ombudsman. However, ICANN is much more than just the corporation—it is a community of participants. In addition to the Board, the staff, and the Ombudsman,<sup>11</sup> the ICANN community includes an independent Nominating Committee,<sup>12</sup> three Supporting Organizations (“SOs”),<sup>13</sup> four Advisory Committees (“ACs”),<sup>14</sup> a group of technical expert advisors,<sup>15</sup> and a large, globally distributed group of community members who participate in ICANN’s processes.

15. In its early years, and in accordance with its Core Values, ICANN focused on increasing the number of companies that could sell domain name registrations to consumers. ICANN also focused on expanding, although more slowly, the number of companies that operate gTLDs. In 2000, ICANN approved a few new gTLDs in a “proof of concept” phase that was designed to confirm that adding additional gTLDs would not adversely affect the stability and security of the Internet. In 2004 and 2005, ICANN approved a few more gTLDs.

Background Information On The New gTLD Program

16. The New gTLD Program constitutes by far ICANN’s most ambitious expansion of the Internet’s naming system. The Program’s goals include enhancing competition and consumer choice, and enabling the benefits of innovation via the introduction of new gTLDs, including both new ASCII and non-ASCII internationalized domain name (IDN) gTLDs. In developing the Program with the ICANN community, numerous versions of the Guidebook were drafted. The Guidebook provides instructions to gTLD applicants and forms the basis for ICANN's evaluation of new gTLD applications.<sup>16</sup>

17. Within the New gTLD Program, section 3.2.1 of the Guidebook enumerates grounds upon which objections to gTLD applications may be filed.<sup>17</sup> If an objection is filed on the grounds that an applied-for string is confusingly similar to another string (existing or applied-for), Section 3.2.3 provides that the ICDR will administer the dispute resolution process.<sup>18</sup>

18. Section 3.5.1 of the Guidebook provides that an objection will be upheld according to the following standard:

A DRSP panel hearing a string confusion objection will consider whether the applied-for gTLD string is likely to result in string confusion. String confusion exists where a string so nearly resembles another that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion. For a likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user. Mere association, in the sense that the string brings another string to mind, is insufficient to find a likelihood of confusion.<sup>19</sup>

19. If strings are determined to so nearly resemble each other that it is likely to deceive or cause confusion, the strings will be placed in a contention set, which is then resolved pursuant to the contention set resolution processes set out in the Guidebook.

20. Per the Guidebook, the dispute resolution provider selects the expert panel that renders a final determination on an objection.<sup>20</sup> Accordingly, ICANN's Board played no role in selecting the Expert Panel or issuing the Determination; Vistaprint does not claim otherwise.

<sup>16</sup> Vistaprint attached the 4 June 2012 version of the Guidebook to its IRP Request as Exhibit RM-5; the String Similarity Review provisions in this Guidebook version govern Vistaprint's application for .WEBS.

Relevant Facts Regarding Vistaprint’s Applications For .WEBS

22. Vistaprint filed one community and one standard application for .WEBS.<sup>22</sup> Web.com Group, Inc. (“the Objector”), along with six other applicants, each applied for .WEB.

23. On 13 March 2013, the Objector objected (the “Objections”)<sup>23</sup> to each of Vistaprint’s applications,<sup>24</sup> claiming that “the applied-for gTLD string is confusingly similar to an existing TLD or to another applied-for gTLD string in the same round of applications.”<sup>25</sup>

24. On 23 May 2013, Vistaprint responded to the Objections.

25. On 28 June 2013, the ICC appointed Mr. Steve Y. Koh, Esq. as the expert to consider the Objections (the “First Expert”).

26. On 19 July 2013, the Objector submitted a supplemental written statement replying to Vistaprint’s response, to which Vistaprint objected; the First Expert accepted the submission and permitted Vistaprint to submit a sur-reply.

27. On 1 October 2013, the ICDR removed the First Expert due to a conflict that arose and on 14 October 2013, the ICDR appointed Bruce W. Belding, Esq. as the expert (the

28. On 4 November 2013, the ICDR removed the Second Expert in response to the Objector’s challenge. On 20 November 2013, the ICDR appointed Professor Ilhyung Lee to serve as the expert to consider the Objector’s Objection (the “Expert Panel”). No party objected to the appointment of Professor Lee.

29. On 24 January 2014, the Expert Panel issued its Determination in favor of the Objector.<sup>26</sup> The ICDR then notified the parties of the Determination and ICANN staff posted the Determination on ICANN’s website. Thereafter, Vistaprint filed a Reconsideration Request.<sup>27</sup> Reconsideration, per ICANN’s Bylaws, involves a review conducted by the BGC.<sup>28</sup> Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request asked ICANN to reject the Determination and instruct a new Expert Panel to issue a new Determination.<sup>29</sup>

30. The BGC denied Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request, finding “no indication that the ICDR or the Expert violated any policy or process in reaching the Determination.”<sup>30</sup>

31. Dissatisfied with the denial of its Reconsideration Request, and following an informal attempt to resolve or narrow the issues,<sup>31</sup> Vistaprint filed this IRP.<sup>32</sup>

STANDARD OF REVIEW

32. The IRP is a unique mechanism available under ICANN's Bylaws. It is a non-binding process in which persons or entities that claim to have been materially and adversely affected by a decision or action of the ICANN Board that the person or entity asserts is inconsistent with ICANN's Articles or Bylaws may submit a request for independent third party review of that decision or action.<sup>33</sup>

33. The IRP Panel is tasked with determining whether the Board's actions are consistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws.<sup>34</sup> ICANN's Bylaws specifically identify the deferential standard of review that the IRP Panel must apply when evaluating the actions of the ICANN Board, and the rules are clear that the IRP Panel is neither asked to, nor allowed to, substitute its judgment for that of the Board.<sup>35</sup>

34. ICANN has appointed the ICDR as ICANN's IRP Provider. ICANN's Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures that the ICDR has adopted specially for ICANN IRP proceedings apply here.<sup>36</sup> Unlike arbitration or mediation, the Bylaws expressly provide that the IRP be conducted via "email and otherwise via the Internet to the maximum extent feasible."<sup>37</sup> The IRP Panel may also hold meetings via telephone where necessary, and "[i]n the unlikely event that a telephone or in-person hearing is convened, the hearing shall be limited to argument only; all evidence, including witness statements, must be submitted in writing in advance.”<sup>38</sup>

35. Consistent with ICANN’s Bylaws, the IRP Panel is to issue a written declaration designating, among other things, the prevailing party.<sup>39</sup> The IRP Panel’s declaration is not binding, however, because the Board is not permitted to outsource its decision-making authority. The Board will, of course, give serious consideration to the IRP Panel’s declaration and, “where feasible,” shall consider the IRP Panel’s declaration at the Board’s next meeting.<sup>40</sup>

ARGUMENT

I. VISTAPRINT’S CLAIM THAT ICANN BREACHED ITS BYLAWS BY “BLINDLY ACCEPTING” THE EXPERT PANEL’S DETERMINATION IS INCORRECT AND INVOLVES NO BOARD “DECISION OR ACTION.”

36. The IRP is only available to persons “materially affected by a decision or action of the [ICANN] Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.”<sup>41</sup> The IRP is thus limited to challenging ICANN Board conduct, and is not available as a means to challenge the conduct of third parties or the conduct of ICANN staff. Vistaprint argues that ICANN breached its Bylaws by “accepting,” without any review or analysis, the Expert Panel’s Determination involving Vistaprint’s applications for .WEBS and the Objector’s application for .WEB.<sup>42</sup> But as set forth below, there is no Article or Bylaws provision that requires the ICANN Board to review or analyze expert panel determinations.

<sup>38</sup> Bylaws, Cl. Ex. RM-2, at Art. IV, § 3.12; ICDR Supplementary Procedures, ¶ 10 (Resp. Ex. 2.) The Bylaws provide that IRP requests shall not exceed 25 pages (double-spaced, 12-point font) of argument (Vistaprint’s IRP Request was 25 pages), and that ICANN’s response shall not exceed that same length. Vistaprint states that it is “reserving all rights to rebut ICANN’s response in further briefs....” ICANN disagrees that Vistaprint has any “rights to rebut,” but will reserve discussion on that topic unless and until Vistaprint seeks leave to place additional information before the IRP Panel.

37. The Guidebook states that the designated dispute resolution provider (here the ICDR), not ICANN, will appoint “one expert in proceedings involving a string confusion objection.”<sup>43</sup> The “findings of the [ICDR] panel will be considered an expert determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process.”<sup>44</sup>

38. The Guidebook provides that “[i]n a case where a gTLD applicant successfully asserts string confusion with another applicant, the only possible outcome is for both applicants to be placed in a contention set and to be referred to a contention resolution procedure (refer to Module 4, String Contention Procedures).”<sup>45</sup>

39. The Guidebook could not be more explicit: Once the Expert Panel has sustained an objection involving two applied-for strings on string confusion grounds, “the only possible outcome” is for the two strings to be placed into a contention set.<sup>46</sup> This is a result not of any ICANN Board action, but a straightforward application of the Guidebook provisions to the Expert Panel’s Determination.

40. Vistaprint’s claim that the ICANN Board violated its Bylaws by “accepting” the Expert Panel’s Determination without a substantive review is not accurate. The ICANN Board took no action with respect to the Expert Panel’s Determination upon its issuance because the Guidebook does not call for the Board to take any such action and it is not required by any Article or Bylaw provision. Accordingly, it cannot be a violation of ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws for the Board to not conduct a “substantive review” of an Expert Determination. And because there is no Board action or decision associated with the Expert Panel’s Determination, there is nothing for the IRP Panel to review.

II. THE BGC DID NOT VIOLATE ANY ARTICLE OR BYLAWS PROVISION IN DENYING VISTAPRINT’S RECONSIDERATION REQUEST.

41. Article IV, Section 2 of ICANN’s Bylaws permits an entity that has been adversely and materially affected by an ICANN staff or Board action or inaction to request that the Board reconsider that action or inaction.<sup>47</sup> In order to present a proper Reconsideration Request based on staff action or inaction, a requester must provide a detailed explanation of the facts as presented to the staff and the reasons why “one or more staff actions or inactions ... contradict established ICANN policy(ies).”<sup>48</sup> And, as the BGC has made clear on a number of occasions with respect to Expert Panel determinations like the one at issue in this matter, the reconsideration process does not allow for a full-scale, substantive review.<sup>49</sup> The BGC’s focus instead is whether the Expert Panel complied with its own and ICANN’s policies and procedures in reaching its determination.<sup>50</sup>

42. Vistaprint filed a Reconsideration Request seeking a review of the Expert Panel’s finding that .WEBS and .WEB are confusingly similar.<sup>51</sup> The BGC denied Vistaprint’s

<sup>47</sup> See Article IV, Section 2.2 of ICANN’s Bylaws states in relevant part that any entity may submit a request for reconsideration or review of an ICANN action or inaction to the extent that it has been adversely affected by:

- (a) one or more staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policy(ies); or
- (b) one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that have been taken or refused to be taken without consideration of material information, except where the party submitting the request could have submitted, but did not submit, the information for the Board’s consideration at the time of action or refusal to act; or
- (c) one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that are taken as a result of the Board’s reliance on false or inaccurate material information.

Reconsideration Request because it found “no indication that the ICDR or the Expert violated any policy or process in reaching the Determination.”<sup>52</sup>

43. Vistaprint takes issue with two aspects of the BGC’s decision. First, Vistaprint claims the BGC should have referred Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request to the entire ICANN Board rather than decide the issue on its own.<sup>53</sup> Second, Vistaprint argues that the BGC got it wrong when it denied Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request.<sup>54</sup> Neither of these claims supports Vistaprint’s IRP Request.

A. ICANN’S BYLAWS PERMIT THE BGC TO MAKE FINAL DETERMINATIONS OF RECONSIDERATION REQUESTS.

44. ICANN’s Bylaws specifically state that the BGC has the authority to “make a final determination of Reconsideration Requests regarding staff action or inaction, without reference to the Board of Directors.”<sup>55</sup> Because Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request was a challenge to alleged staff action,<sup>56</sup> the BGC was well within its authority – and in compliance with the Bylaws – by denying Vistaprint’s Reconsideration Request.

B. VISTAPRINT’S CLAIM THAT THE BGC “GOT IT WRONG” HAS NO PLACE IN AN IRP, AND IS WITHOUT MERIT IN ANY EVENT.

45. Vistaprint dedicates most of its IRP Request to the notion that the BGC substantively erred in denying the Reconsideration Request. In its Reconsideration Request, Vistaprint argued that the Expert Panel did not comply with its own policies and processes in reaching its Determination.<sup>57</sup> Here, Vistaprint argues, exactly as it did in its Reconsideration Request, that the Expert Panel violated its processes or policies in the following fashions:

1. The ICDR's appointment of the First Expert was untimely;
2. The Expert Panel improperly accepted and considered unsolicited supplementary filings;
3. The ICDR violated established procedure when it informed the parties that an expert determination would be issued on 4 October 2013;
4. The First Expert failed to maintain his impartiality and independence;
5. The ICDR improperly accepted the Objector's challenge to the Second Expert; and
6. The Determination was untimely;
7. The Expert Panel improperly concluded that the Objector had met its burden of proof; and
8. The Expert Panel improperly applied the standards governing a string confusion objection.

46. But Vistaprint does not suggest that anything about the BGC's handling of Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request violated ICANN's Bylaws or Articles. In fact, Vistaprint fails to identify any ICANN Article or Bylaws provision that was allegedly violated by the BGC in reviewing Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request. Instead, just as it did in its Reconsideration Request, Vistaprint seeks to use the IRP to challenge the substantive decision of the IRP Panel. But again, the IRP may only be used to challenge ICANN Board actions, and may only challenge them on the grounds that they do not comply with ICANN's Articles or Bylaws, neither of which are present here.

47. Putting aside the fact that an IRP is not a forum for challenging substantive decisions of the BGC in connection with the reconsideration process, the BGC properly denied

Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request. The following briefly addresses why the BGC correctly determined that reconsideration was not warranted.

1. ICDR's Purported Failure To Appoint The First Expert In A Timely Manner Did Not Support Reconsideration.

48. Vistaprint claimed in its Reconsideration Request that the ICDR's appointment of the First Expert was untimely. Specifically, Vistaprint claimed that because its response to the Objection was submitted on May 23, 2013, the Expert Panel "had to be appointed by June 22, 2013."<sup>58</sup> Because it "took the ICDR until June 28, 2013 to appoint Steve Y. Koh, Esq.," Vistaprint contended that the First Expert's appointment was in violation of Article 13(a) of the Procedure, which provides: "The DRSP shall select and appoint the Panel of Expert(s) within thirty (30) days after receiving the Response."<sup>59</sup>

49. The BGC determined that Vistaprint failed to provide any evidence that it contemporaneously challenged the timeliness of the ICDR's appointment of the First Expert, and that a Reconsideration Request was not the appropriate mechanism to raise the issue for the first time.<sup>60</sup> More importantly, the BGC concluded that Vistaprint had failed to show that it was "materially" and "adversely" affected by the brief delay in appointing the First Expert, rendering reconsideration inappropriate.<sup>61</sup>

2. The First Expert's Acceptance Of Additional Submissions Did Not Support Reconsideration.

50. On 19 July 2013, the Objector submitted a supplementary filing to the First Expert. Vistaprint claimed that the First Expert's acceptance of this supplementary filing violated Article 17 of the Procedure. But Article 17 of the Procedure clearly provides the Expert Panel with the discretion to accept such a filing:

The Panel may decide whether the parties shall submit any written statements in addition to the Objection and the Response, and it shall fix time limits for such submissions.<sup>62</sup>

As the BGC correctly found, it was not the BGC's place to second-guess the Expert's exercise of permitted discretion.<sup>63</sup>

3. The ICDR's Representation That An Expert Panel Determination Would Be Issued By 4 October 2013 Did Not Support Reconsideration.

51. In its Reconsideration Request, Vistaprint claimed that “[o]n September 18, 2013 (i.e. 82 days after the appointment of Mr. Koh as the Expert Panel) . . . the [ICDR] informed the parties that the expert determination was going to be issued on or about October 4, 2013 (i.e. 98 days after the appointment of Mr. Koh as the Expert Panel).”<sup>64</sup> Vistaprint contended, as it contends again here, that this would have resulted in the issuance of an untimely Determination because Article 21(a) of the Procedure provides that “[t]he DSRP and the Panel shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that the Expert Determination is rendered within forty-five (45) days of the constitution of the Panel.”

52. The BGC properly determined that Vistaprint's claims in this regard did not support reconsideration, for two reasons.<sup>65</sup> First, on 1 October 2013, before the Determination was purportedly to be issued, the ICDR removed the First Expert. The BGC therefore could not evaluate whether the First Expert rendered an untimely Determination in violation of the Procedure, given that he was removed before a Determination could be issued. As such, the BGC concluded no established policy or procedure was violated.

53. Second, the 45-day timeline cited by Vistaprint applies to the Expert's submission of the Determination "in draft form to the DRSP's scrutiny as to form before it is signed."<sup>66</sup> The BGC correctly noted that the ICDR and the Expert are merely required to exercise "reasonable efforts" to issue a determination within forty-five days of the constitution of the Panel.<sup>67</sup>

4. Removal Of The First Expert Did Not Support Reconsideration.

54. On 1 October 2013, the ICDR informed the parties that "due to a new conflict, the Expert, Steve Koh ... will no longer be able to serve and has been removed."<sup>68</sup> Vistaprint argued in its Reconsideration Request that this "shows that Mr. Koh failed to maintain his impartiality and independence" in violation of the Procedure,<sup>69</sup> but this claim was (and is) unsupported, as the BGC properly found.

55. As the BGC noted when denying Vistaprint's Reconsideration Request, Article 13(c) of the Procedure states that "[a]ll Experts acting under this Procedure shall be impartial and independent of the parties."<sup>70</sup> Section 3.4.4 of the Guidebook provides that the ICDR will "follow its adopted procedures for requiring such independence, including procedures for challenging and replacing an expert for lack of independence."<sup>71</sup>

56. As the BGC noted, Vistaprint provided no evidence demonstrating that the First Expert failed to follow the applicable ICDR procedures for independence and impartiality.<sup>72</sup>

Rather, all indications are that the First Expert and the ICDR complied with these rules as to this “new conflict,” which resulted in a removal of the First Expert. Further, Vistaprint presented no evidence of being materially and adversely affected by the First Expert’s removal, which is another justification for the BGC’s denial of the Reconsideration Request.<sup>73</sup>

5. The ICDR’s Acceptance Of The Objector’s Challenge To The Second Expert Did Not Support Reconsideration.

57. On 14 October 2013, the ICDR informed the parties that it had appointed Bruce W. Belding, Esq. as the Second Expert, the appointment of which the Objector timely challenged. On 4 November 2013, the ICDR accepted the Objector’s challenge and denied Vistaprint’s request to reconsider that challenge. Vistaprint claims that the ICDR’s acceptance of the Objector’s challenge to the Second Expert and denial of Vistaprint’s request to reconsider this decision constitute a violation of the Procedure.

58. As the BGC properly determined, this claim does not support reconsideration.<sup>74</sup>

59. Vistaprint has not stated which provision of the Procedure was purportedly violated, and the Procedure makes clear that the ICDR had the “sole discretion” to review and decide challenges to the appointment of expert panelists.<sup>75</sup>

60. While Vistaprint may disagree with the ICDR’s decision to accept the Objector’s challenge, it is not the BGC’s role to second guess the ICDR’s discretion, and it was not a violation of the ICANN Articles or Bylaws for the BGC to deny reconsideration on this ground, particularly given that Vistaprint provided no basis to believe that the ICDR’s decision was in violation of the ICDR’s policies.

<sup>73</sup> Indeed, had Vistaprint successfully challenged Mr. Koh for lack of independence at the time he was removed, the remedy under the applicable ICDR procedures would have been the removal of Mr. Koh, which was the result here.

6. Vistaprint’s Argument That The Expert Panel’s Determination Was Untimely Did Not Support Reconsideration.

61. On 20 November 2013, the ICDR appointed Professor Ilhyung Lee as the Expert Panel. Vistaprint claimed in its Reconsideration Request that, pursuant to Article 21 of the Procedure, the Determination therefore “should have been rendered by January 4, 2014,” which was forty-five (45) days after the Panel was constituted.<sup>76</sup> Because “it took this Panel until January 24, 2014 to render the Decision,” Vistaprint contended that the Determination was untimely because it was twenty days late.<sup>77</sup> The BGC properly held that this claim did not support reconsideration.<sup>78</sup>

62. According to the Procedure, the Expert must exercise “reasonable efforts” to ensure that it submits the Expert Determination “in draft form to the DRSP’s scrutiny as to form before it is signed” within forty-five (45) days of the Expert Panel being constituted.<sup>79</sup> As the BGC noted, there is no evidence that the Expert failed to comply with this Procedure, and reconsideration was therefore unwarranted on this ground.

7. Vistaprint’s Argument That The Expert Panel Incorrectly Applied The Burden Of Proof Did Not Support Reconsideration.

63. In its Reconsideration Request, Vistaprint claimed that the Expert Panel contravened ICANN process because “the Panel does not give an analysis showing that the Objector had met the burden of proof” and that “[i]t is unclear how the Panel came to [the] conclusion [that the .WEBS string would result in string confusion].”<sup>80</sup>

64. The BGC found that the Expert Panel extensively detailed the support for its conclusion that the .WEBS string so nearly resembles .WEB—visually, aurally and in meaning—that it is likely to cause confusion.<sup>81</sup> Indeed, the BGC noted that the Expert Panel adhered to the procedures and standards set forth in the Guidebook relevant to determining the existence of string confusion.<sup>82</sup> The BGC therefore properly found that reconsideration was not warranted on this basis.<sup>83</sup>

8. Vistaprint’s Argument That Expert Panel Incorrectly Applied The Standards Governing String Confusion Objections Did Not Support Reconsideration.

65. Finally, Vistaprint argued to the BGC that the Expert Panel violated ICANN processes by incorrectly applying the standards governing string confusion objections.<sup>84</sup> Specifically, Vistaprint contended that the Expert “failed to provide a description of the average, reasonable Internet user.”<sup>85</sup>

66. As the BGC set out in the reconsideration proceeding, Section 3.5.1 of the Guidebook states that, “For the likelihood of confusion to exist, it must be probable, not merely possible that confusion will arise in the mind of the average, reasonable Internet user.”<sup>86</sup> Vistaprint failed to cite any Guidebook provision or otherwise that requires the Expert to “provide a description of the average, reasonable Internet user” in the Determination. Absent an

<sup>83</sup> Vistaprint also claims that “it is unclear whether [the Objector] could have met the burden of proof if its unauthorized additional submission had not been accepted.” IRP Request, ¶ 45. As set forth above, the acceptance of additional written submissions by both parties did not contravene ICANN process or policy. The acceptance of the supplementary filings therefore does not impact the BGC’s conclusion concerning the application of the burden of proof.

articulation of what policy or procedure Vistaprint claimed was violated in this regard, the BGC properly found that reconsideration was not appropriate.

67. Vistaprint also claims that the Expert Panel “failed to apply the burden of proof and the standards imposed by ICANN” because the Expert “questions whether the co-existence between Vistaprint’s <webs.com> and the Objector’s <web.com> for many years without (any evidence of) actual confusion is relevant to his determination.”<sup>87</sup>

68. As the BGC noted in the reconsideration process, the relevant consideration for the Expert is whether the applied-for gTLD string is likely to result in string confusion. Vistaprint does not cite any provision of the Guidebook, the Procedure, or the Rules that have been contravened in this regard, and accordingly, the BGC did not find a basis for reconsideration.

69. In sum, Vistaprint disagrees with the Expert Determination, but the BGC correctly stated that its job was not to evaluate the Expert Panel’s substantive Determination.<sup>88</sup> Likewise, an IRP is not intended to be an appeal mechanism to challenge the outcome of a request for reconsideration. The BGC followed the applicable policies and procedures in considering Vistaprint’s Request for Reconsideration, and Vistaprint does not argue those policies themselves violate any Article of Bylaw provision. Because Vistaprint presses the same arguments now that the BGC already rejected—and with good reason—the IRP Request should be denied.

III. VISTAPRINT DOES NOT IDENTIFY ANY INSTANCE WHERE THE ICANN BOARD VIOLATED ITS BYLAWS OR ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

70. In an attempt to frame its claims in a manner that suggests they are amenable to an IRP, Vistaprint argues that ICANN violated five principles enunciated in the Bylaws. However, each consists of a thinly veiled attack on the Expert Panel’s Determination, which neither forms a proper basis for an IRP nor (as set forth above) identifies any substantive or procedural deficiency in the Determination. Moreover, Vistaprint does not identify any ICANN Board action that supports its asserted Bylaws violation.

71. First, Vistaprint contends that ICANN failed to comply with the general principle of “good faith.” But the only reason Vistaprint asserts ICANN failed to act in good faith is in “refus[ing] to reconsider the substance” of the Determination or to “act with independent judgment[.]”<sup>89</sup> The absence of an appeal mechanism by which Vistaprint might challenge the Determination does not form the basis for an IRP because there is nothing in ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation requiring ICANN to provide one.

72. Second, Vistaprint contends that ICANN failed to apply its policies in a neutral manner. Here, Vistaprint complains that other panels let other applications proceed without being placed into a contention set, even though they, in Vistaprint’s opinion, presented “at least equally serious string similarity concerns” as .WEBS/.WEB.<sup>90</sup> Vistaprint’s claims about ICDR’s treatment of other string similarity disputes cannot be resolved by IRP, as they are even further removed from Board conduct. Different outcomes by different expert panels related to different gTLDs are to be expected. Claiming that other applicants have not suffered adverse determinations does not convert the Expert Panel’s Determination into a “discriminatory ICANN Board act.”

73. Third, Vistaprint contends that the ICANN Board violated its obligation to act transparently for not investigating the “impartiality and independence” of the Expert Panel and thereby “did not seek to communicate with [ICDR] to optimize [its] service.”<sup>91</sup> Aside from the disconnect between the particular Bylaws provision invoked by Vistaprint requiring ICANN’s transparency, and the complaint that the ICDR did not act transparently, Vistaprint fails to identify any procedural deficiency in the ICDR’s actions regarding the removal of the First Expert, as set forth above. Moreover, Vistaprint cites no obligation in the Articles or Bylaws that the ICANN Board affirmatively investigate the impartiality of an Expert Panel, outside of the requirement that the ICDR follow its policies on conflicts, which the ICDR did.

74. Fourth, Vistaprint contends that ICANN “has not created any general process for challenging the substance of the so-called expert determination,” and thus has “brashly flouted” its obligation to remain accountable.<sup>92</sup> But again, Vistaprint does not identify any provision of the Articles or Bylaws that requires ICANN to provide such an appeals process.

75. Fifth, Vistaprint “concludes” that the ICANN Board neglected its duty to promote competition and innovation<sup>93</sup> when it failed to overturn the Expert Panel’s Determination. Vistaprint claims that the Objector’s “motive in filing the objection was to prevent a potential competitor from entering the gTLD market” and therefore ICANN’s “acceptance” of the objection purportedly contravenes ICANN’s core value of promoting competition. But every objection to a gTLD application by an applicant for the same string seeks to hinder a

competitor's application. By Vistaprint's logic, ICANN's commitment to promoting competition requires that no objections ever be sustained and every applicant obtains the gTLD it requests. There is no provision in the Articles or Bylaws that require such an unworkable system.

76. All in all, Vistaprint's attempt to frame its disappointment with the Expert Panel's decision as the ICANN Board's dereliction of duties does not withstand scrutiny.

IV. RESPONSE TO VISTAPRINT'S REQUESTED RELIEF.

77. Vistaprint requests that, this IRP Panel issue a declaration "[r]equiring that ICANN reject the determination that .WEBS and .WEB are confusingly similar and disregard the resulting contention set" and "[r]equiring that ICANN organizes a new independent and impartial string confusion objection procedure between Vistaprint and [Objector] Web.com."<sup>94</sup>

78. Any request that the IRP Panel grant affirmative relief goes well beyond the IRP Panel's authority. An IRP Panel is limited to "declaring whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws" and recommending that the Board stay any action or decision or take any interim action until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP Panel.<sup>95</sup> This IRP Panel simply does not have the authority to award affirmative relief or to require ICANN to undertake specific conduct.<sup>96</sup>

CONCLUSION

79. ICANN's conduct with respect to Vistaprint's application for .WEBS was fully consistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. ICANN followed the procedures in the Guidebook and followed the procedures set forth in its Bylaws in evaluating Vistaprint's

<sup>96</sup> Indeed, the IRP Panel in the first IRP ever constituted under ICANN's Bylaws found that "[t]he IRP cannot 'order' interim measures but do no more than 'recommend' them, and this until the Board 'reviews' and 'acts upon the opinion' of the IRP." See Advisory Declaration of IRP Panel, ICM Registry, LLC v. ICANN, ICDR Case No. 50 117 T 00224 08, at ¶ 133, Cl. Ex. RM-21.

Reconsideration Request. The fact that Vistaprint disagrees with the Expert Panel's Determination that put .WEBS and .WEB in a contention set does not give rise to an IRP. Vistaprint's IRP Request should be denied.

INTRODUCTION

The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”) hereby submits its Response to the Request for Independent Review Process (“IRP Request”) submitted by claimant Merck KGaA (“Merck”) on 24 July 2014.

1. ICANN has been caught in the middle of a nearly century-old battle between two international pharmaceutical companies—Merck and its former affiliate, U.S.-based Merck Sharp & Dohme, Corporation (“MSD”)—that continue to litigate against one another in multiple fora. ICANN has not taken the side of either company. Both Merck and MSD have applied to ICANN for the opportunity to operate a “.MERCK” top-level domain (“TLD”) (like .COM or .ORG). Both Merck and MSD objected to the other’s applications, arguing that the proposed TLDs would infringe upon their respective legal rights. Consistent with ICANN’s procedures, which were accepted by Merck and by MSD, an independent expert was appointed by WIPO, an independent dispute resolution service provider, to decide the merits of the objections. Both Merck and MSD lost their objections. As a result (and as the parties were aware might happen when they chose to apply for the same gTLD), both parties’ applications for .MERCK are proceeding and have been placed in contention.

2. Only Merck has challenged the result of its objection to MSD’s applications. First, Merck asked the independent expert to reconsider his final determinations with respect to MSD’s applications. The independent expert did so, but still dismissed Merck’s objections. Merck then asked ICANN’s Board Governance Committee (“BGC”) to reconsider the expert determinations based on the same procedural and substantive arguments as the ones presented in Merck’s IRP Request. The BGC denied Merck’s request for reconsideration because it did not state a proper basis for reconsideration as defined in ICANN’s Bylaws. While conceding that it is not for ICANN to review the merits of the expert determination, Merck now argues that ICANN has not acted consistently with the provisions of its Articles of Incorporation (“Articles”) and Bylaws when ICANN “accepted” the expert determination. However, as explained further herein, the ICANN Board has taken no action that violates either the ICANN Articles or Bylaws.

3. Merck continues to refuse to accept the final expert determination, claiming that MSD “plans to willfully violate” Merck’s legal rights.<sup>1</sup> Yet, Merck does not support this statement by any evidence other than its own interpretation of MSD’s intended use. The fact that Merck is dissatisfied because it is concerned that MSD might, in the future, violate Merck’s legal rights, is not a basis to claim that ICANN’s Board has violated its Articles or Bylaws by not taking action in Merck’s favor. Merck’s dissatisfaction with the decision of an independent expert is not a proper basis for an Independent Review Proceeding (“IRP”).

4. This IRP is to be conducted pursuant to Article IV, Section 3 of ICANN’s Bylaws, which creates a non-binding method of evaluating certain actions of ICANN’s Board of Directors.<sup>2</sup> The IRP Panel has one responsibility: to provide its opinion as to “whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of [ICANN’s] Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>3</sup> Absent Board action, there is nothing for the IRP Panel to evaluate. Here, however, Merck’s IRP Request does not challenge Board action, but rather improperly challenges the determination of an independent expert, designated by an independent third party dispute resolution provider. Merck argues that the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles by not reviewing the provider’s decision on the merits, but ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles do not contain any such requirement. To the contrary, the rules and procedures that govern the ICANN program in which Merck voluntarily participated do not even address the possibility that the Board would engage in substantive reviews of independent expert decisions.

5. Merck’s IRP Request relates to competing New gTLD applications for strings incorporating the word “Merck,” including Merck’s application for .MERCK and MSD’s applications for MERCK and .MERCKMSD.<sup>4</sup> Merck and MSD submitted their applications to ICANN in connection with ICANN’s program to facilitate the creation of hundreds of new generic TLDs (“gTLDs”) to supplement those that have existed for many years, such as .COM, .NET, and .ORG. ICANN is administering this New gTLD Program pursuant to an Applicant Guidebook (“Guidebook”) that ICANN adopted in June 2011 following years of consideration and public input.<sup>5</sup>

6. As is explained in detail in Merck’s IRP Request, MSD was founded as a subsidiary of Merck, but subsequently became an independent American company. Merck and MSD currently exercise their rights in the “Merck” trademark under a reciprocal use agreement, which has been in force (through various versions and revisions) since the 1930s. MSD’s rights are territorially limited to certain countries within North America, whereas Merck retains those rights throughout the rest of the world. The two companies have a long and well-known history of litigating their rights to the “Merck” mark; Merck currently has cases pending against MSD in at least Germany, the United Kingdom, and France, and Merck claims that if MSD obtains the rights to operate the new gTLD of .MERCK, MSD will further infringe on Merck’s rights.

7. After Merck and MSD filed their respective applications for the .MERCK TLD, each used an objection process made available under the Guidebook—the legal rights objection—to challenge the other’s gTLD applications as infringing on their existing legal rights to the “Merck” mark. Those challenges were heard by an independent expert panel (“Expert Panel”) selected by the World Intellectual Property Organization (“WIPO”). Pursuant to the Guidebook, if the Expert Panel had determined that an application did in fact infringe on the existing legal rights of the objector, that application would not have proceeded. However, in each of the legal rights objections involving Merck’s and MSD’s applications, the Expert Panel determined that the applications did not infringe on the existing legal rights of the objector. As a result, all of the relevant applications, including Merck’s for .MERCK, are still in the running, and the parties’ respective applications for .MERCK are in contention with each other.

8. Merck sought to overturn the Expert Panel’s determinations ruling in favor of MSD on Merck’s legal rights objections (“Expert Determinations”) by filing a “Reconsideration Request” with ICANN. The Reconsideration Request is an ICANN accountability mechanism by which ICANN’s Board Governance Committee (“BGC”) evaluates whether ICANN properly followed its policies and procedures in taking a challenged action. The BGC found that neither the Expert Panel nor ICANN failed to follow the required policies and procedures in finding against Merck, and therefore properly denied Merck’s Reconsideration Request.

9. Merck devotes the vast majority of its IRP Request to its contention that the Expert Panel was wrong. Merck claims that ICANN’s Board violated its Articles and Bylaws by “accepting” the “erroneous” Expert Determinations. However, neither the Bylaws, nor the Articles, nor the Guidebook require the ICANN Board to conduct any analysis of the decisions of expert panels that were retained for the purpose of having third party experts evaluate the legal challenges submitted against gTLD applications—they do not even suggest the Board would do so. To the contrary, ICANN’s Board is not intended to “accept” or “review” each expert determination (and doing so would insert the Board into every dispute resolution process provided for in the Guidebook). Instead, the Guidebook provides that the “findings of the panel will be considered an expert determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process.”<sup>6</sup> As such, there simply is no Board action for the IRP Panel to review.

10. Merck also argues that independent review is warranted because of the Board’s decision that there would not be any substantive appeals of expert determinations. But Merck does not demonstrate that the Board violated any Articles or Bylaws provision by adopting the Guidebook developed by the ICANN community, which did not include an “appellate process” for reviewing expert determinations. Merck’s argument also ignores the fact that nothing deprives Merck of the option of pursuing legal remedies against MSD if MSD is given the opportunity to operate. MERCK and Merck believes that MSD is infringing on Merck’s rights.

11. Merck also claims that ICANN breached its Articles and Bylaws when ICANN’s BGC denied Merck’s Reconsideration Request. Merck makes various arguments in this regard, including that the BGC was “incompetent” to review its Reconsideration Request, despite the fact that the Bylaws specifically designate the BGC to review Reconsideration Requests. In the end, Merck’s real argument is that the BGC did not rule in Merck’s favor and find that the Expert Panel made the wrong decision. However, the BGC did precisely what it was supposed to do—review the Expert Panel’s and ICANN staff’s compliance with policies and procedures.

12. In sum, IRPs are not a vehicle by which an expert panel’s determination may be challenged because neither the determination, nor ICANN’s acceptance of the determination, constitutes an ICANN Board action. Nor is an IRP the appropriate forum to challenge a BGC ruling on a Reconsideration Request absent some violation by the BGC of ICANN’s Articles or Bylaws in its conduct in reviewing that request. Here, ICANN followed its policies and processes at every turn with respect to Merck.

BACKGROUND FACTS

Background Information On ICANN

13. ICANN was formed in 1998. It is a California not-for-profit public benefit corporation. As set forth in its Bylaws, ICANN’s mission “is to coordinate, at the overall level, the global Internet’s system of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internet’s unique identifier systems.”<sup>7</sup>

14. ICANN is a complex organization that facilitates input from stakeholders around the globe. ICANN has an international Board of Directors, approximately 300 staff members, and an Ombudsman. However, ICANN is much more than just the corporation—it is a community of participants. In addition to the Board, the staff, and the Ombudsman,<sup>8</sup> the ICANN community includes an independent Nominating Committee,<sup>9</sup> three Supporting Organizations (“SOs”),<sup>10</sup> four Advisory Committees (“ACs”),<sup>11</sup> a group of technical expert advisors,<sup>12</sup> and a large, globally distributed group of community members who participate in ICANN’s processes.

15. In its early years, and in accordance with its Core Values, ICANN focused on increasing the number of companies that could sell domain name registrations to consumers. ICANN also focused on expanding, although more slowly, the number of companies that operate gTLDs. In 2000, ICANN approved a few new gTLDs in a “proof of concept” phase that was designed to confirm that adding additional gTLDs would not adversely affect the stability and security of the Internet. In 2004 and 2005, ICANN approved a few more TLDs.

Background Information On The New gTLD Program

16. The New gTLD Program constitutes by far ICANN's most ambitious expansion of the Internet's naming system. The Program's goals include enhancing competition and consumer choice, and enabling the benefits of innovation via the introduction of new gTLDs, including both new ASCII and non-ASCII internationalized domain name (IDN) gTLDs.<sup>13</sup> In developing the Program with the ICANN community, numerous versions of the Guidebook were drafted. The version of the Guidebook published on 4 June 2012 provides instructions to gTLD applicants and forms the basis for ICANN's evaluation of new gTLD applications.

17. Within the New gTLD Program, section 3.2.1 of the Guidebook enumerates grounds upon which objections to gTLD applications may be filed.<sup>14</sup> If an objection is filed on the grounds that an applied-for string infringes the existing legal rights of the objector, Section 3.2.3 provides that WIPO will administer the dispute resolution process.<sup>15</sup> Section 3.5.2 of the Guidebook provides that an objection will be upheld according to the following standard:

[A] DRSP panel of experts presiding over a legal rights objection will determine whether the potential use of the applied-for gTLD by the applicant takes unfair advantage of the distinctive character or the reputation of the objector's registered or unregistered trademark or service mark ("mark") or IGO name or acronym (as identified in the treaty establishing the organization), or unjustifiably impairs the distinctive character or the reputation of the objector's mark or IGO name or acronym, or otherwise creates an impermissible likelihood of confusion between the applied-for gTLD and the objector's mark or IGO name or acronym.<sup>16</sup>

18. Where a legal rights objection is based on trademark rights, Section 3.5.2 the Guidebook specifies that in applying that standard, the panel will consider the following eight

“non-exclusive” factors:

1. Whether the applied-for gTLD is identical or similar, including in appearance, phonetic sound, or meaning, to the objector’s existing mark.
2. Whether the objector’s acquisition and use of rights in the mark has been bona fide.
3. Whether and to what extent there is recognition in the relevant sector of the public of the sign corresponding to the gTLD, as the mark of the objector, of the applicant or of a third party.
4. Applicant’s intent in applying for the gTLD, including whether the applicant, at the time of application for the gTLD, had knowledge of the objector’s mark, or could not have reasonably been unaware of that mark, and including whether the applicant has engaged in a pattern of conduct whereby it applied for or operates TLDs or registrations in TLDs which are identical or confusingly similar to the marks of others.
5. Whether and to what extent the applicant has used, or has made demonstrable preparations to use, the sign corresponding to the gTLD in connection with a bona fide offering of goods or services or a bona fide provision of information in a way that does not interfere with the legitimate exercise by the objector of its mark rights.
6. Whether the applicant has marks or other intellectual property rights in the sign corresponding to the gTLD, and, if so, whether any acquisition of such a right in the sign, and use of the sign, has been bona fide, and whether the purported or likely use of the gTLD by the applicant is consistent with such acquisition or use.
7. Whether and to what extent the applicant has been commonly known by the sign corresponding to the gTLD, and if so, whether any purported or likely use of the gTLD by the applicant is consistent therewith and bona fide.
8. Whether the applicant’s intended use of the gTLD would create a likelihood of confusion with the objector’s mark as to the source, sponsorship, affiliation, or endorsement of the gTLD.<sup>17</sup>

19. Per the Guidebook, the dispute resolution provider selects the expert panel that renders a final determination on an objection.<sup>18</sup> ICANN’s Board played no role in selecting the Expert Panel or issuing the Determination; Merck does not claim otherwise. And, as noted above, the Guidebook does not provide for any procedure by which ICANN (or anyone else) is to conduct a substantive review of the expert panel determinations.<sup>19</sup>

Relevant Facts Regarding Merck's and MSD's New gTLD Applications

20. MSD filed one community and one standard application for .MERCCK, one standard application for .MERCCKMSD, and one standard application for .MSD.<sup>20</sup> Merck filed a community application for .MERCCK and a standard application for .EMERCK.

21. On 12 March 2013, Merck filed legal rights objections to MSD's applications for .MERCCK and .MERCCKMSD, arguing that "the string[s] comprising the potential new gTLD[s] infringe[] the existing legal rights of others that are recognized or enforceable under generally accepted and internationally recognized principles of law."<sup>21</sup> On 13 March 2013, MSD filed legal rights objections to Merck's applications, making the same argument.<sup>22</sup>

22. On 14 June 2013, WIPO appointed Willem J.H. Leppink as the Expert Panel to consider both Merck's objections and MSD's objections. On 30 July 2013 and 31 July 2013, the Expert Panel rendered its determinations on MSD's objections, finding Merck the prevailing party and dismissing the objections.<sup>23</sup> The Expert Panel determined that MSD had failed to demonstrate that Merck's applied-for gTLDs would infringe on MSD's existing legal rights.

<sup>20</sup> A community-based gTLD is a gTLD that is operated for the benefit of a clearly delineated community. An applicant designating its application as community-based must be prepared to substantiate its status as representative of the community it names in the application. A standard application is one that has not been designated as community-based. See <http://newgtlds.icann.org/en/applicants/glossary>.

MSD did not submit a Request for Reconsideration with respect to this ruling and has not submitted a Request for Independent Review.

23. On 6 September 2013, the Expert Panel rendered its determinations on Merck's objections, finding MSD the prevailing party and dismissing the objections.<sup>24</sup> The Expert Panel determined that the Merck had failed to demonstrate that MSD's applied-for gTLDs would infringe on Merck's existing legal rights.

24. In its IRP Request, Merck repeatedly references an alleged factual error made by the Expert Panel in rendering the Expert Determinations. Merck previously raised that issue with the Expert Panel. Specifically, on 23 September 2013, Merck sent a letter to WIPO, challenging, among other things, the following statement in the Determinations:

Applicant has made it clear that it will take all necessary measures, including geo-targeting, to avoid that Internet users in the territories in which Objector has trademark rights[] will be able to visit websites that use the Disputed gTLD String.<sup>25</sup>

Merck's letter noted that while Merck's "commitment to using geo-targeting was made clear from the exhibits in the case . . . . [a]t no time has [MSD] indicated that it would consider using geo-targeting, or taking any other affirmative measures to prevent infringement or confusion."<sup>26</sup> Merck claimed that this misstatement was material to the Expert Panel's denial of the Objections.

25. On 24 September 2013, in response to Merck's correspondence, the Expert Panel issued an addendum to its determinations ("Addendum").<sup>27</sup> In the Addendum, the Expert Panel clarified that the inclusion in the determinations of the statement regarding MSD's commitment to geo-targeting was "inadvertent," but that the Expert Panel "was in fact aware of the distinction in this regard, as is reflected in the pleadings as cited and summarized in the Expert Determinations.”<sup>28</sup> The Addendum also stated that the misstatement was not material to the Expert Determinations and explained the basis for the Expert Determinations.

26. On 27 February 2014, ICANN published the Addendum on its New gTLD microsite. On 13 March 2014, Merck filed a Reconsideration Request. Merck’s Reconsideration Request asked ICANN to reject the Expert Determinations and instruct a new Expert to issue new determinations.<sup>29</sup> On 29 April 2014, the BGC denied Merck’s Reconsideration Request, finding “no indication that the Panel violated any policy or process in reaching . . . the [Expert] Determinations.”<sup>30</sup> In response, Merck filed this IRP.<sup>31</sup>

27. MSD’s applications for .MERCK and .MERCKMSD, as well as Merck’s application for .MERCK, are currently on hold due to this IRP.<sup>32</sup> Absent this IRP, because both Merck’s and MSD’s objections were overruled, both parties’ applications for .MERCK would proceed. Because both Merck and MSD each filed a community application for .MERCK, their applications would be invited to Community Priority Evaluation (“CEP”). If only one party’s application prevails in CEP, that application will be the one that moves forward while the others will not. If neither application prevails in CEP, or if both applications do, both applications will proceed and their contention will have to be resolved. That contention can be resolved by

“voluntary agreement” between Merck and MSD.<sup>33</sup> If such voluntary agreement does not occur, the Guidebook provides that .MERCCK will proceed to auction, the last resort “tie-breaker method for resolving string contention among the applications within a contention set.”<sup>34</sup>

STANDARD OF REVIEW

28. The IRP is a unique, non-binding process available under ICANN’s Bylaws for persons or entities that claim to have been materially and adversely affected by a decision or action of the ICANN Board. Those persons or entities may submit a request for independent third party review of that Board decision or action, explaining why they believe it was inconsistent with ICANN’s Article or Bylaws.<sup>35</sup> The IRP Panel is tasked with providing its opinion as to whether the Board’s actions violated ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws.<sup>36</sup> ICANN’s Bylaws specifically identify the deferential standard of review that the IRP Panel must apply when evaluating the actions of the ICANN Board, focusing on:

- a. did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;
- b. did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and
- c. did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?<sup>37</sup>

The IRP Panel is neither asked to, nor allowed to, substitute its judgment for that of the Board.<sup>38</sup>

29. ICANN has appointed the ICDR as ICANN’s IRP Provider. ICANN’s Bylaws and the Supplementary Procedures that the ICDR has adopted specially for ICANN IRP

proceedings apply here.<sup>39</sup> The Bylaws provide that the IRP be conducted via “email and otherwise via the Internet to the maximum extent feasible.”<sup>40</sup> The IRP Panel may also hold meetings via telephone where necessary, and “[i]n the unlikely event that a telephone or in-person hearing is convened, the hearing shall be limited to argument only; all evidence, including witness statements, must be submitted in writing in advance.”<sup>41</sup>

30. Consistent with ICANN’s Bylaws, the IRP Panel is to issue a written declaration designating, among other things, the prevailing party.<sup>42</sup> The Board will, of course, give serious consideration to the IRP Panel’s opinion and, “where feasible,” shall consider the IRP Panel’s declaration at the Board’s next meeting.<sup>43</sup>

ARGUMENT

31. Merck and MSD have a long history and a complicated relationship. ICANN is not unsympathetic to the possibility that either Merck or MSD might violate the other’s rights in the event either becomes the registry operator for .MERCCK. But if such alleged violations occur after the delegation of .MERCCK, both Merck and MSD are fully capable of attempting to protect their rights, as they have done and continue to do in jurisdictions around the world.

32. Following years of discussion, policy development, and policy implementation, the ICANN community established a process for independent experts to review claims that a party’s rights might be impaired by another party’s operation of a particular gTLD. In this

<sup>39</sup> Absent a governing provision in ICANN’s Bylaws or the ICDR’s Supplemental Procedures, the ICDR Rules apply. But in the event of any inconsistency between the Supplementary Procedures and the ICDR’s Rules, the Supplementary Procedures shall govern. Id., Art. IV, § 3.8; see also Ex. instance, that Expert determined – after a careful review of the parties’ respective claims – that he would not sustain the objection of Merck to MSD’s applications based on the possibility that MSD might, if it becomes the registry operator, violate Merck’s rights by not using “geo-targeting.”<sup>44</sup> ICANN appreciates that Merck disagrees with the Expert’s determination, but for the reasons set forth herein, that disagreement does not constitute a basis for an IRP under ICANN’s Bylaws.

I. ICANN’S BOARD DID NOT “ACCEPT” THE EXPERT DETERMINATIONS AND DID NOT UNDERTAKE ANY ACTION THAT IS REVIEWABLE IN THIS PROCEEDING.

33. An IRP is available only to persons “materially affected by a decision or action of the [ICANN] Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.”<sup>45</sup> An IRP is thus limited to challenging ICANN Board conduct and cannot be used as a means to challenge the conduct of third parties or even the conduct of ICANN staff.

34. Merck argues that ICANN breached its Bylaws by “accepting” the Expert Determinations without “exercis[ing] due diligence and care.”<sup>46</sup> However, the Board did not in fact “accept” the relevant Expert Determinations or take any other actions with respect to those determinations, and there is no Article or Bylaws provision that requires the Board to do so.

35. The Guidebook states that the designated dispute resolution provider (here, WIPO), not ICANN, will appoint “one expert, or, if all parties agree, three experts with relevant experience in intellectual property rights disputes in proceedings involving an existing legal rights objection.”<sup>47</sup> The “findings of the [ICDR] panel will be considered an expert

determination and advice that ICANN will accept within the dispute resolution process.”<sup>48</sup>

36. Accordingly, Merck’s claim that the ICANN Board “accepted” the Expert Determinations is wrong. The ICANN Board took no action with respect to evaluating or accepting the Expert Determinations and Merck has not shown otherwise. Nor is any such action required by any Articles or Bylaws provision. Because there is no Board action or decision associated with the Expert Determinations, there is nothing for this IRP Panel to review.

II. LIKEWISE, THE BGC DID NOT VIOLATE ANY ICANN ARTICLE OR BYLAWS PROVISION IN DENYING MERCK’S RECONSIDERATION REQUEST.

37. Merck is also incorrect in arguing that the BGC violated ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws in denying Merck’s Reconsideration Request. Article IV, Section 2 of ICANN’s Bylaws permits an entity that has been adversely and materially affected by an ICANN staff or Board action or inaction to request that the Board reconsider that action or inaction.<sup>49</sup> In order to present a proper Reconsideration Request based on staff action or inaction, a requester must provide a detailed explanation of the facts as presented to the staff and the reasons why “one or more staff actions or inactions . . . contradict established ICANN policy(ies).”<sup>50</sup> As the BGC made clear in its Determination—as well as on a number of occasions with respect to

<sup>48</sup> Id. § 3.4.6. As is discussed below, the decision not to provide for substantive appeals of expert determinations on objections reflects a considered decision of ICANN’s Board, made after significant public input and comment, that the experts (and not ICANN) should be resolving these types of objections.

<sup>49</sup> Article IV, Section 2.2 of ICANN’s Bylaws states in relevant part that any entity may submit a request for reconsideration or review of an ICANN action or inaction to the extent that it has been adversely affected by:

- (a) one or more staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policy(ies); or
- (b) one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that have been taken or refused to be taken without consideration of material information, except where the party submitting the request could have submitted, but did not submit, the information for the Board’s consideration at the time of action or refusal to act; or
- (c) one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that are taken as a result of the Board’s reliance on false or inaccurate material information.

Reconsideration Requests involving expert determinations like the one at issue in this matter<sup>51</sup>—the reconsideration process does not allow for a full-scale, substantive review of expert determinations. The BGC is not tasked with second-guessing expert determinations of ICANN’s dispute resolution providers. Its focus instead is whether the expert complied with the dispute resolution providers’ own and ICANN’s policies and procedures.<sup>52</sup>

38. Merck filed a Reconsideration Request seeking a review of the Expert Determinations that MSD’s applications did not infringe Merck’s legal rights.<sup>53</sup> In that Request, Merck argued that the Expert violated established policies and procedures by: (i) failing to apply the proper standard and instead “rel[ying] on the wholly inapplicable reasoning” of the UDRP standards, and (ii) failing to “take reasonable care in evaluating the parties’ respective evidence.”<sup>54</sup> The BGC denied the Reconsideration Request because it found “no indication that the ICDR or the Expert violated any policy or process in reaching the Determination.”<sup>55</sup>

39. Merck argues that, despite the fact that the Bylaws expressly authorize the BGC to issue determinations on Reconsideration Requests, the BGC was not a “competent” body to issue a determination on its Reconsideration Request. Merck then speculates, without proffering any evidence to support its claims, that the BGC has a financial interest in denying its Reconsideration Request. Next, Merck argues that the BGC improperly failed to recommend that the Board take further action on its Reconsideration Request. Finally, Merck claims that the BGC’s determination was substantively flawed. Each of these claims fails to support an IRP.

A. THE BGC WAS THE “COMPETENT” BODY TO REVIEW MERCK’S RECONSIDERATION REQUEST, BUT IT IS NOT AUTHORIZED TO, AND DID NOT, ENGAGE IN ANY SUBSTANTIVE ANALYSIS OF THE EXPERT DETERMINATIONS.

40. Pursuant to ICANN’s Bylaws, the BGC is designated with the authority to “review and consider” reconsideration requests.<sup>56</sup> For reconsideration requests regarding staff action, such as Merck’s Request, the BGC has the authority to “make a final determination . . . without reference to the Board of Directors.”<sup>57</sup> Merck argues that the BGC was “not competent” to review its Reconsideration Request because determining whether the Expert Panel correctly applied the standard for legal rights objections “necessarily also involve[d] a legal, substantive analysis of the Panel’s argument.”<sup>58</sup> Insofar as Merck is arguing that the BGC was required to conduct a substantive review of the Expert Determinations, that argument is wrong. As Merck itself acknowledges, the Bylaws provide that reconsideration of staff (or DRSP) action is appropriate only where that action “contradict[ed] established ICANN policy(ies),” and do not provide for a substantive review of expert determinations.<sup>59</sup> The fact that Merck views the expert as having made the wrong decision does not somehow vest the BGC with authority that it otherwise does not have to engage in a substantive legal analysis.<sup>60</sup>

41. Insofar as Merck is making the opposite argument—that the BGC “embarked on an impermissible substantive review of the [Expert Determinations] decision and analysis under the LRO Standards and non-exclusive factors”—that argument too is without merit.<sup>61</sup> The BGC engaged in no substantive legal analysis in rendering its determination on Merck’s Reconsideration Request. Instead, the BGC determined whether, as Merck had argued, the Expert Panel had failed to apply the proper standard in rendering its determinations. The BGC determined that the Expert Panel had applied the proper standard, noting that the Expert Panel had “correctly referenced and considered the eight non-exhaustive factors listed in the Guidebook and explained how those factors supported the Expert Panel’s Determinations.”<sup>62</sup> The fact that Merck did not like the Expert Panel’s conclusions is not a basis for reconsideration and, in conformance with the Bylaws, the BGC made no determination regarding the Expert’s substantive application of those factors.

42. In its Reconsideration Request, Merck also argued that the Expert Panel failed to apply the proper standard because it “relied on the wholly inapplicable reasoning” of the UDRP standards.<sup>63</sup> The BGC determined that no policy or procedure prevented the Expert Panel from “consider[ing] the UDRP as a means to provide further context” in assessing the Guidebook factors, and that the New gTLD Dispute Resolution Procedure makes clear that “in addition to apply the standards that have been identified by ICANN, the Expert Panel may ‘refer to and base its findings upon . . . any rules or principles that it determines to be applicable.’”<sup>64</sup> Again, in conformance with the Bylaws, the BGC made no legal or substantive conclusions regarding the UDRP standards, or regarding the Expert Panel’s consideration of those standards.

B. MERCK HAS NO BASIS TO ARGUE THAT THE BGC WAS BIASED OR FINANCIALLY MOTIVATED.

43. Because both Merck's and MSD's objections to the other's applications for .MERCK were denied, both of those applications are still in contention. As noted above, because Merck and MSD each filed a community application for .MERCK, those applications will be invited to CPE. Therefore, assuming each will participate in CPE, .MERCK will proceed to auction only in the event that: (i) both community applications prevail in CPE or neither prevails in CPE, and (ii) Merck and MSD cannot reach a resolution among themselves. As the Guidebook makes clear, auction is a "last resort" means of contention resolution; and ICANN expects most parties to settle contention by mutual agreement.<sup>65</sup> While Merck speculates that ICANN is trying to encourage auctions so that it can collect funds for its own benefit, giving the BGC a financial incentive to deny Merck's Reconsideration Request (and, presumably, all other requests that might result in auctions), Merck does not offer any evidence to support its unfounded speculation.<sup>66</sup>

44. In any event, the proceeds of such an auction would not, as Merck claims, proceed "directly" to ICANN. Rather, as the Guidebook states, those proceeds "will be reserved and earmarked until the uses of [the] funds are determined," and must be used in a way that "allows ICANN to maintain its not for profit status."<sup>67</sup> As such, Merck's claim does not support independent review.

Possible uses contemplated by the Guidebook include the "formation of a foundation with a clear mission and a transparent way to allocate funds to projects that are of interest to the greater internet community" or the "establishment of a security fund to expand [the] use of secure [internet] protocols, conduct research, and support standards development organizations." Id.

45. Merck argues that the BGC improperly failed to “recommend[] that the ICANN Board take appropriate measures that the BGC is incompetent to make.”<sup>68</sup> Merck does not cite to any Article or Bylaws provision that would require the BGC to recommend further action on Merck’s Reconsideration Request. To the contrary, as noted above, the Bylaws provide that the BGC may “make a final determination on Reconsideration Requests regarding staff action or inaction, [including DSRPs and related expert panels,] without reference to the [Board].”<sup>69</sup>

D. MERCK’S ARGUMENT THAT THE BGC RENDERED AN INCORRECT DETERMINATION ON ITS RECONSIDERATION REQUEST HAS NO PLACE IN AN IRP, AND IS IN ANY EVENT WITHOUT MERIT.

46. The crux of Merck’s argument is that the BGC substantively erred in denying Merck’s Reconsideration Request. However, Merck fails to identify any Article or Bylaws provision that the BGC allegedly violated in taking action on Merck’s Reconsideration Request. Instead, just as it did in its Request, Merck seeks to use the IRP to challenge the substantive decision of the Expert Panel, which is not appropriate for an IRP for several reasons, not the least of which is that this is not an ICANN Board action. Even so, ICANN briefly responds below.

47. In its Reconsideration Request, Merck argued that the Expert violated established policies and procedures by: (i) failing to apply the legal rights objection standard and instead “rel[ying] on the wholly inapplicable reasoning” of the UDRP standards, and (ii) failing to “take reasonable care in evaluating the parties’ respective evidence.”<sup>70</sup> The BGC denied the request,

<sup>69</sup> Bylaws, Art. IV, § 2.3(f). Merck argues that the BGC recommended further action in its determinations on Reconsideration Requests 13-9 and 13-10, presumably suggesting that if the BGC has recommended further action in other cases, it must do so here. This argument is without merit. As set out in the Bylaws, it is wholly within the BGC’s discretion to determine if a recommendation for further Board action is warranted..

<sup>70</sup> Request 14-9, p. 10, 13-14. Merck does not appear to dispute the BGC’s finding that the Panel did not base its determinations on an incorrect finding of fact. And as discussed above, the Panel itself addressed that argument, noting that its error was inadvertent, did not represent a misunderstanding of the evidentiary record, and in any event involved a fact immaterial to the Panel’s determinations.

finding that the Expert Panel: (i) correctly referenced and considered the factors required by the Guidebook, and (ii) did not base its determinations on an incorrect finding of fact.<sup>71</sup>

48. Merck argues that the BGC failed to address the Expert Panel’s alleged failure to apply the correct standard in evaluating Merck’s Objections.<sup>72</sup> But the BGC’s determination explicitly addresses Merck’s claim, noting that the Expert Panel “correctly referenced and considered the eight non-exhaustive factors listed in the Guidebook and explained how those factors supported [its] Determinations.”<sup>73</sup> Disagreeing with the BGC’s determination in this regard is not a proper basis for independent review.<sup>74</sup>

49. Merck also argues that the Expert Panel failed to apply the correct legal rights objection standard by failing to determine “whether the potential use of the applied-for gTLD by the applicant takes unfair advantage of . . . or unjustifiably impairs the distinctive character or the reputation of [Merck]’s mark . . . or otherwise creates a likelihood of confusion between the applied-for gTLD and [Merck’s mark].”<sup>75</sup> Merck is wrong: the Expert Panel found that “the potential use of [.MERCK and .MERCKMSD] by [MSD] [did] not” take unfair advantage of, unjustifiably impair, or otherwise create a likelihood of confusion with Merck’s mark. In making that determination, the Expert Panel, as it was required to do, considered and applied the eight required Guidebook factors (and, again, this is not a matter for independent review).<sup>76</sup>

50. Merck’s real complaint is with the Expert Panel’s substantive (and logical)

<sup>73</sup> 14-9 Determination, p. 8. In considering and applying those eight factors, the Expert Panel was applying the correct legal rights objection standard—the Guidebook provides that those are the factors experts are to consider in determining whether the “potential use of the applied for gTLD by the applicant” infringes on the existing legal rights of the objector. Guidebook, § 3.5.2.

<sup>74</sup> Merck also argues that the Expert Panel did not give enough weight to the “potential use of the applied-for gTLD” (as set forth in Section 3.5.2 of the Guidebook) in making its decision, but again, this is a challenge to the Expert Panel’s findings, not a question of whether the Expert Panel applied the correct criteria.

conclusion that:

The question [raised by Merck’s Objections] is whether a bona fide trademark owner that owns trademark rights in certain countries but does not have rights to a certain trademark in all countries of the world, should for that reason be prevented from obtaining a gTLD. In the view of the Panel, such a proposition does not make sense. . . .

. . . .

Of course a rejection of the Objection[s] does not preclude the Objector from taking regular legal action should the use of the Disputed gTLD String[s] by Applicant be infringing. It is not, however, for this Panel to anticipate all the possible types of use [MSD] could make of the Disputed gTLD String.<sup>77</sup>

Merck disagrees because it believes that MSD’s Applications reflect that MSD has the intent to, sometime in the future, violate Merck’s intellectual property rights in countries located outside of North America.<sup>78</sup> But Merck’s substantive disagreement with the Expert Panel’s determination does not relate to any ICANN Board action and thus cannot be a basis for independent review.

51. Merck apparently wanted the Expert Panel to assume, based on a lack of affirmative assurances in MSD’s Applications, that MSD was going to infringe on Merck’s marks.<sup>79</sup> The Expert Panel declined to do so, finding that it was not the Expert Panel’s place to “anticipate all the possible types of use [MSD] could make” of its applied-for gTLDs” and noting that, if MSD did in fact infringe on Merck’s marks, Merck was not precluded from enforcing its rights by taking legal action.<sup>80</sup> Merck’s disagreement with that conclusion does not indicate that the Expert Panel failed to assess the “potential use of the applied-for gTLDs.” More importantly, none of this suggests that the BGC erred in denying Merck’s Request or should

<sup>79</sup> For example, it is unclear how MSD’s statement that it intends to use “geographical indicators as second-level domain names” constitutes MSD “admit[ting] its intention to use the gTLDs in an unrestricted and impermissible manner.” Id. (quoting MSD’s Applications, § 22).

<sup>80</sup> The IRP Request reflects that Merck has been doing just that, bringing suit against MSD in courts in Germany, the United Kingdom, and France. Id. ¶ 11.

prevail in this IRP.

III. ICANN’S BYLAWS AND ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION DO NOT REQUIRE THAT ICANN PROVIDE FOR APPEAL AND REVIEW MECHANISMS BEYOND THOSE ALREADY PROVIDED.

52. Merck argues that the fact that the Guidebook provides no mechanism for the substantive review of expert determinations itself violates ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation.<sup>81</sup> Merck apparently is challenging the outcome of the Guidebook development process, a process that was started many years ago and completed over two years ago, and one for which the time for challenge has long since past. As noted above, ICANN adopted the Guidebook following years of consideration and community involvement.<sup>82</sup> Merck argues that the Board’s failure to provide for a substantive appeals mechanism violates Article I, Section 2.8 of the Bylaws, which requires ICANN to “mak[e] decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.”<sup>83</sup> But the decision to have no appeals mechanism is applied neutrally, as there is no substantive appeals mechanism for any expert determinations.<sup>84</sup>

53. Further, as Merck acknowledges, “[t]he availability of the Legal Rights Objection as an administrative dispute resolution option does not preclude court options which either party may have to submit the dispute to court.”<sup>85</sup> This is especially important here because Merck’s main concern is that its rights might, one day, be impaired if MSD becomes the registry operator for .MERCK and then operates the registry in a manner that affects Merck’s rights. The ICANN

<sup>82</sup> Merck points to several public comments suggesting that the Guidebook include a substantive review mechanism. (IRP Request, Annex 56.) However, none of the ten versions of the Guidebook, each of which was discussed and debated by the community, has contained such a mechanism, revealing that the overall community was not in favor of including a substantive review mechanism.

<sup>84</sup> Contrary to what Merck argues, ICANN’s Board has not adopted the “Proposed Review Mechanism to Address Perceived Inconsistent Expert Determinations on String Confusion Objections.” IRP Request ¶ 83; Id. Annex 55

<sup>85</sup> Ex. C-R-3, Legal Rights Objections FAQs, also available online at <http://www.wipo.int/amc/en/domains/lro/faq/#19a>; IRP Request ¶ 103.

Board cannot possibly violate its Bylaws or Articles by “declining to address” a theoretical concern about what might happen in the future between two entities that have been dealing with such trademark-related issues for decades.

54. Merck cites to a United States District Court order dismissing a case arising out a legal rights objection to argue that courts “deny jurisdiction” over cases involving legal rights objections and “show prejudice to [] parties who have not exhausted ICANN accountability mechanisms.”<sup>86</sup> But Merck’s characterization of the Court’s order in Del Monte Int. v. Del Monte Corp. is not accurate: the Court decided to exercise jurisdiction over the case even though it had the discretion to decline jurisdiction under the Declaratory Judgment Act.<sup>87</sup> The Court then dismissed the case not for any failure to exhaust ICANN’s accountability mechanisms, but because the new gTLD at issue had not been delegated.<sup>88</sup> The Court specifically noted that its ruling did not “foreclose application of the [Anti-Cybersquatting Consumer Protection Act] in the context of successful gTLD registrations” that infringe on existing legal rights.<sup>89</sup>

IV. RESPONSE TO MERCK’S REQUESTED RELIEF.

55. Merck’s request should be denied in its entirety, including its request for relief. Merck requests that this IRP Panel issue a declaration “[r]equiring that ICANN instruct a DSRP to appoint a new LRO Panel or Panels to decide upon [Merck’s] Legal Rights objections with regard to [MSH’s Applications] . . . and/or provide any such relief as the Panel may find appropriate.”<sup>90</sup> An IRP Panel is limited to stating its opinion by “declaring whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws” and recommending that the Board stay any action or decision or take any interim action until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP Panel.<sup>91</sup> Even if there were a basis for some kind of relief here (which there is not), neither this nor any IRP Panel has the authority to award affirmative relief.<sup>92</sup>

CONCLUSION

56. ICANN's conduct with respect to its evaluation of Merck's Reconsideration Request was fully consistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. ICANN followed the procedures set forth in its Bylaws in evaluating Merck's Reconsideration Request. The fact that Merck disagrees with the Expert Determinations does not properly give rise to an IRP. Merck and MSD may well continue to litigate against one another for years to come, but ICANN's Board did not violate its Articles or Bylaws by declining to inject itself into that dispute. Merck's IRP Request should be denied.

PANEL

Section I – Procedural History

1. The Claimant, Merck KGaA (“Merck”), of Frankfurter Straße 250 64293 Darmstadt, Germany, is represented in this matter by Bettinger Schneider Schramm, Cuvilliesstraße 14, 81679 Munich, Germany.
2. The Respondent, Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”), of Suite 300 12025 E. Waterfront Dr., Los Angeles, CA 90094, USA, is represented in this matter by Jones Day, 555 South Flower Street Fiftieth Floor Los Angeles, CA 90071, USA.
3. A Notice of Independent Review dated July 17, 2014 was filed by Merck with the International Centre for Dispute Resolution, together with its Request.
4. ICANN filed its Response on August 29, 2014.
5. The Panel held a preliminary hearing call on April 1, 2015 and issued the following direction by email thereafter:

Merck KGaA V. ICANN - Case 01-14-0000-9604

The Preliminary Hearing Call in this matter took place at 9am, Pacific Time, on April 1, 2015, and was duly notified and convened. Counsel (Bettinger, with Gray, for Merck KGaA; LeVee for ICANN) for both parties made observations on the procedure to be adopted in this Independent Review Process. At the conclusion of the Preliminary Hearing Call the parties were asked whether there was anything further they wished to raise, and the answer from each side was no.

The Panel (Dinwoodie, Matz, and Reichert) now, bearing these observations in mind together with the materials already filed by the parties to date, issues the following directions:

- 1. Merck KGaA shall file its Reply Submission on May 20, 2015.*
- 2. ICANN shall file its Rejoinder Submission on July 8, 2015.*
- 3. A page limit of 20 pages applies to both Submissions (the page limit does not apply to matters such as tables of contents).*

4. The Submissions should only attach any additional evidentiary exhibit which is strictly necessary for the purpose of reply/rejoinder. Also, the parties must focus their Submissions on matters which are strictly for the purposes of reply/rejoinder, and not seek to reformulate the case as already presented.

5. If there is any dispute as to acronyms or other defined terms, the Submissions should clearly flag these in order that there is no misunderstanding.

6. As soon as possible after July 8, 2015, the Panel will communicate with the parties as to the next stages of this Independent Review Process.

As noted on the Preliminary Hearing Call by the ICDR representative, communications will now take place directly between the Panel and the parties, with a copy at all times to the ICDR.

For and on behalf of the Panel.

Klaus Reichert SC

6. On May 20, 2015, Merck filed its Reply.
7. On July 9, 2015, ICANN filed its Rejoinder.
8. On July 12, 2015, the Panel issued the following direction by email:

Dear Counsel,

The Panel has considered the submissions received.

Having considered the submissions made to date, do the parties wish to have an oral hearing? If the answer from a party is yes, we would like to know the likely duration of such a hearing, and whether there is a preference for it to be conducted in person, or by telephone.

Once we have received your responses to the foregoing we will consider the future conduct of this matter and revert to the parties.

We do not set a particular deadline for your responses, rather we ask that you reply as soon as possible.

Klaus Reichert

9. On July 14, 2015, ICANN indicated that it believed that a hearing by telephone would be useful.
10. On July 21, 2015, Merck indicated that a hearing would be unnecessary.
11. On July 21, 2015, the Panel issued the following direction by email:

Dear Counsel,

Noting Article 4 of the Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) Independent Review Process ("the Procedures"), the Panel has determined that a telephone hearing will not be necessary.

Noting Article 11 of the Procedures, we invite each side to submit their respective claims for costs by July 29, 2015. Thereafter an opportunity will be afforded to each side to comment on the claim for costs of the other.

Klaus Reichert

12. On July 28, 2015, Merck stated that ICANN should be held responsible for (a) the fees and expenses of the panelists, and, (b) the fees and expenses of the administrator, the ICDR.
13. On July 28, 2015, ICANN stated that Merck should be held responsible for costs (identifying the same headings as those identified by Merck).
14. On July 28, 2015, the Panel issued the following direction by email:

Dear Parties,

Thank you both for your letters on costs.

We now ask each side for any final observations they might wish to make on costs in light of the letters received today. The deadline is 4 August 2015.

Klaus Reichert

15. On July 31, 2015, Merck stated that it had no comment on ICANN's letter regarding costs. ICANN did not make any final observations on costs.

Section II – The Panel's Authority

16. The Panel's authority and mandate is as follows (from Article IV, Section 3.4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws):

Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Process Panel ("IRP Panel"), which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. The IRP Panel must apply a defined standard of review to the IRP request, focusing on:

- a did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;*
  - b did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and*
  - c did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?*
17. The analysis which the Panel is mandated to undertake is one of comparison. More particularly, a contested action<sup>1</sup> of the Board is compared to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws in order to ascertain whether there is consistency. The analysis required for a comparison exercise requires careful assessment of the action itself, rather than its characterization by either the complainant or ICANN. The Panel, of course, does take careful note of the characterizations that are advanced by the Claimant and ICANN.
18. As regards the substantive object of the comparison exercise, namely, whether there was consistency as between the action and the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, the parameters of the evaluation for consistency are informed by the final part of Article IV, Section 3.4, which is explicit in focusing on three specific elements. The phrase “defined standard of review” undoubtedly relates to the exercise of comparison for consistency, and informs the meaning of the word “consistent” as used in Article IV, Section 3.4. The mandatory focus on the three elements (a-c) further informs the exercise of comparison.

19. The parties dwell in various ways on whether the Panel’s approach is deferential or de novo. The Panel does not find this debate to be of assistance as it diverts attention from the precise parameters of its authority, namely, to do exactly what it is mandated to do by Article IV, Section 3.4.
20. Nothing in the language of Article IV, Section 3.4, suggests that there be any deference afforded to the contested action. Either the action was consistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, or it was not.
21. Discussion as regards whether the Panel should engage in a de novo standard of review is also apt to mislead. However, it is clear that the Panel may not substitute its own view of the merits of the underlying dispute.
22. In summary, the Independent Review Process is a bespoke process, precisely circumscribed. The precise language used in Article IV, Section 3.4 requires the party seeking to contest an action of the Board to identify exactly such action, and also identify exactly how such action is not consistent with the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. Thus, a panel is required to consider only the precise actions contested. Such a contesting party also bears the burden of persuasion.

Section III – Analysis

23. The first contested action, as characterized and raised by Merck in paragraph 46 of the Request is:

The ICANN Board has accepted three expert determinations which suffer from palpable mistakes and manifest disregard of its own LRO standards, without due diligence and care to prevent the acceptance of such determinations, resulting in fundamental unfairness and a failure of due process for the Claimant.

24. Merck says that this is a violation of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, Article I, Section 2.8, which provide as follows:

In performing its mission, the following core values should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN..... 8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.

25. The Panel will first describe, based on its appreciation of the materials put before it, the background leading up to the initiation of this Independent Review Process.

26. Merck is a long-established pharmaceutical and chemical business in Germany. In 1917 its then American business (now Merck & Co., Inc. (“MSD”)) was separated from it by the Trading with the Enemy Act arising from the entry of the United States as a belligerent into World War I. The co-existence of Merck and MSD has been the subject of a number of formal agreements over the years, and also a number of disputes.

27. Merck and MSD each filed applications with ICANN for new gTLDs incorporating the word “Merck”. As a result, Merck and MSD then filed a number of Legal Rights Objections (“LROs”) against each other with the WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre in accordance with the New gTLD Dispute Resolution Procedure. At the heart of Merck’s complaint was the point that MSD apparently was not intending to limit, through geo-targeting, the potential global reach of its applied-for domains. In contrast, Merck made explicit its intention to use geo-targeting.

28. By Determinations issued in July and September 2013, the Sole Panel Expert rejected the LROs. The following extract from LRO2013-0068 is reflective of the reasoning common to all:

The starting point of this case is that Objector and Applicant are both bona fide users of the MERCK trademark, albeit for different territories.

The question is whether a bona fide trademark owner that owns trademark rights in certain countries but does not have rights to a certain trademark in all countries of the world, should for that reason be prevented from obtaining a gTLD. In the view of the Panel, such a proposition does not make sense. If the opposite view would be accepted, it would be expected from any trademark owner interested in a gTLD to have trademark registrations in all countries of the world as otherwise another party could register one trademark in an “uncovered” country and thus prevent the first trademark owner from applying for and using its own gTLD.

In essence there should not be a significant difference between the criteria for the legal rights objection as included in the Guidebook on the one hand and the provisions included in the Uniform Domain Name Dispute Resolution Policy (“UDRP”). If the applicant for a new gTLD is bona fide, it will not be likely that one of the three criteria will be met. It might be that advantage of the distinctive character or the reputation of the objector’s registered trademark is taken, but it is then likely not unfair. It might be that the distinctive character or reputation of the objector’s registered trademark is being impaired, but it is likely justified. It might be that a likelihood of confusion between the Disputed gTLD String and the objector’s mark is created, but it is not necessarily impermissible.

Of course a rejection of the Objection does not preclude Objector from taking regular legal action should the use of the Disputed gTLD String by Applicant be infringing. It is, however, not for this Panel to anticipate on all the possible types of use Applicant could make of the Disputed gTLD.

It is also not for this Panel to interpret the existing coexistence agreements and arrangements between the Parties. Should the application of a new gTLD allegedly violate any such agreement or arrangement, it will be for the Parties to settle their dispute by means of the dispute resolution provisions of the contracts governing their relationship or as provided under applicable law.

For the aforementioned reasons the Panel rejects the Objection.

In reaching the above conclusion, the Panel has considered the following non-exclusive list of eight factors.

The Panel addresses each of them in turn:

i. Whether the applied-for gTLD is identical or similar, including in appearance, phonetic sound, or meaning, to Objector's existing mark.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

ii. Whether Objector's acquisition and use of rights in the mark has been bona fide.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

iii. Whether and to what extent there is recognition in the relevant sector of the public of the sign corresponding to the gTLD, as the mark of Objector, of Applicant or of a third party.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

iv. Applicant's intent in applying for the gTLD, including whether Applicant, at the time of application for the gTLD, had knowledge of Objector's mark, or could not have reasonably been unaware of that mark, and including whether Applicant has engaged in a pattern of conduct whereby it applied for or operates TLDs or registrations in TLDs which are identical or confusingly similar to the marks of others.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

v. Whether and to what extent Applicant has used, or has made demonstrable preparations to use, the sign corresponding to the gTLD in connection with a bona fide offering of goods or services or a bona fide provision of information in a way that does not interfere with the legitimate exercise by Objector of its mark rights.

[Sole Panel Expert stated that this factor would be discussed together with the factor mentioned under vi.]

vi. Whether Applicant has marks or other intellectual property rights in the sign corresponding to the gTLD, and, if so, whether any acquisition of such a right in the sign, and use of the sign, has been bona fide, and whether the purported or likely use of the gTLD by Applicant is consistent with such acquisition or use.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

vii. Whether and to what extent Applicant has been commonly known by the sign corresponding to the gTLD, and if so, whether any purported or likely use of the gTLD by Applicant is consistent therewith and bona fide.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

viii. Whether Applicant's intended use of the gTLD would create a likelihood of confusion with Objector's mark as to the source, sponsorship, affiliation, or endorsement of the gTLD.

[Sole Panel Expert analysis follows]

29. On September 23, 2013, Merck raised with WIPO a number of points of its concern with the contents of three of the Determinations. First, Merck noted that the Sole Panel Expert referenced intended geo-targeting by MSD, when in fact it was Merck which was intending to do so. Secondly, Merck stated that the Sole Panel Expert did not consider the three elements of the LRO Policy but rather those contained in the UDRP. In addition, Merck stated the following:

There is no appeals process for incorrect decisions under the LRO procedure, and accordingly there is no clear way in which my client (Merck KgaA) can rectify the damage done by an inattentive Panel. No court can review these decisions, and indeed even ICANN likely has limited powers to overturn a decision, even where it has been entered based on a wholly erroneous review of the submitted facts and evidence.

30. The Sole Panel Expert issued an Addendum dated September 24, 2013. As regards geo-targeting, he stated:

It is correct that the Expert Determinations under 6. (Discussion and Findings) under the heading Trademark Infringement, under non-exclusive factor viii, should not have included the following sentence:

"Applicant has made it clear that it will take all necessary measures, including geo-targeting, to avoid that Internet users in the territories in which Objector has trademark rights, will be able to visit websites that use the Disputed gTLD String."

Having noted this, the Panelist should make clear that, in reviewing LRO2013-0009, LRO2013-0010 and LRO2013-0011, he was in fact aware of the distinction in this regard, as reflected in the pleadings as cited and summarized in the Expert Determinations, between the latter three cases and cases LRO2013-0068 and LRO2013-0069 in relation to the competing applications at stake.

In any event, the Panelist considers it important to confirm that the above-mentioned sentence as such is immaterial to the conclusion which the Panelist reached in rejecting the Objections.

31. As regards his application of UDRP or LRO Policy, the Sole Panel Expert was of the view that, UDRP comparisons notwithstanding, he had applied the specific LRO criteria.
32. On February 27, 2014, ICANN informed Merck that it had updated the LRO Determinations together with the Sole Panel Expert's Addenda.
33. On March 13, 2014, Merck filed a Request for Reconsideration. It requested ICANN to reject the advice recorded in the Sole Panel Expert's Determinations, and "instruct a panel to make an expert determination that applies the standards defined by ICANN".
34. Merck's grounds for its Request for Reconsideration were summarized as follows:

In this case, the Expert Panel failed to take reasonable care in evaluating the parties' respective evidence and to make a correct application of the LRO standard developed by ICANN in the Applicant Guidebook, resulting in a denial of due process to the Requester in the context of its three LRO disputes.

35. On April 29, 2014, the Board Governance Committee of ICANN ("BGC") made its Determination dismissing the Request for Reconsideration. The initial part of that Determination summarized the reasons:

Merck Registry Holdings, Inc. applied for .MERCK and MSD Registry Holdings, Inc. applied for .MERCKMSD. The Requester, who also applied for .MERCK, objected to these applications and lost. The Requester claims that the Panel failed to comply with ICANN policies and processes in reaching its determinations. Specifically, the Requester contends that the Panel:

(i) improperly interpreted the factors governing legal rights objections in light of “wholly inapplicable” Uniform Domain Name Dispute Resolution Policy (“UDRP”) standards; and

(ii) failed to “accurately assess critical facts concerning the Parties’ pleadings, leading to mis-attribution of party intent [concerning geo-targeting commitments] and a material misrepresentation of the parties’ respective positions.” (Request, §§ 6, 8, Pgs. 6, 18.)

With respect to the claims submitted by the Requester, there is no evidence that the Panel either applied the improper standard or failed to properly evaluate the parties’ evidence. First, the Panel correctly referenced and analyzed the eight factors set out in the Applicant Guidebook relevant to legal rights objections and considered the UDRP only as a means to further provide context to one of the eight factors. The Requester does not identify any policy or process that was violated in this regard. Second, after the Requester brought the Panel’s mis-attribution of geo-targeting commitments to the attention of WIPO, the Panel issued an Addendum to the Determinations, confirming that the misstatement was “inadvertent,” that the Panel “was in fact aware of the distinction,” and that the misstatement was not material to the Determinations in all events. Because the Requester has failed to demonstrate that the Panel acted in contravention of established policy or procedure, the BGC concludes that Request 14-9 be denied.

36. On April 29, 2014, the BGC held a meeting and the minutes note the following:

Reconsideration Request 14-9– Ram Mohan abstained from participation of this matter noting conflicts. Staff briefed the BGC regarding Merck KGaA's Request seeking reconsideration of the Expert Determinations, and ICANN's acceptance of those Determinations, dismissing Merck KGaA's legal rights objections to Merck Registry Holdings, Inc.'s application for .MERCK and MSD Registry Holdings, Inc.'s application for .MERCKMSD. After discussion and consideration of the Request, the BGC concluded that the Requester has not stated proper grounds for reconsideration because the Request failed to demonstrate that the expert panel acted in contravention of established policy or procedure. The Bylaws authorize the BGC to make a final determination on Reconsideration Requests brought regarding staff action or inaction; the BGC still has the discretion, but is not required, to recommend the matter to the Board for consideration. Accordingly, the BGC concluded that its determination on Request 14-9 is final; no consideration by the NGPC is warranted. □

37. In light of the foregoing, this Panel now analyses the first contested action for the purposes of the comparison exercise. Although in paragraph 48 of its Request Merck characterizes the challenged action as the “acceptance” of by the Board of the BGC determination, it is clear from the Request as a whole that the focus of the complaint is the decision of the BGC. While this Panel’s focus is on the first contested action precisely as advanced by Merck (namely, “acceptance”), concomitant with that exercise will be an analysis (within the confines of this Panel’s jurisdiction) of the BGC’s Determination (noting ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, Article I, Section 2.3(f)).
38. The question now arises as to whether the first contested action was consistent with Article I, Section 2.8, namely, was there a neutral and objective application, with integrity and fairness, by the Board of documented policies.
39. Assistance for this Panel is derived from the three elements defining the focus of the review in Article IV, Section 3.4, namely:
- a did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision?;*
  - b did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them?; and*
  - c did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?*
40. The Panel takes each of the three factors, a-c, in turn.
41. Factor (a): Did the Board act without conflict of interest in taking its decision? The Panel finds that there is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that there was any conflict of interest. Merck suggests that ICANN had a conflict of interest due to the potential for a financial windfall in the event of there being an Auction of Last Resort. This is a submission made without evidence, is speculative, and is unfounded. Moreover, this Panel does not consider that this Independent Review was initiated (or capable of being initiated) to challenge, in substance, the policy decision of ICANN in 2012 to include the Auction of Last Resort.

42. The Panel finds that the answer to question “a” is yes.
43. Factor (b): Did the Board exercise due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them? In the Panel’s assessment of the materials and arguments put before it, this appears to be at the heart of Merck’s complaints.
44. Merck criticizes severely the manner by which the Sole Panel Expert dealt with the issue of geo-targeting. Merck also takes particular issue with the application (or otherwise, as it suggests) by the Sole Panel Expert of LRO standards. It claims that these failings caused a denial of due process. Put another way, Merck is contending that the Sole Panel Expert got it so badly wrong, the process should be run again.
45. Merck’s criticisms of the Sole Panel Expert flow through into its complaints directed at the BGC.
46. Merck wanted the BGC to “reject the advice set forth in the Decisions, and instruct a panel to make an expert determination that applies the standards defined by ICANN”. Merck effectively wanted the BGC to overturn the Sole Panel Expert’s decisions and have the process re-run (which is what it, in substance, wants from this Panel). Its reasons for making that request of the BGC were that the Sole Panel Expert failed to decide the case on the basis of the correct and applicable LRO Standard, and moreover failed to decide the case on the basis of the true and accurate factual record which was presented to him in the course of the dispute. Merck then concludes from those points that it had “been denied fundamental due process, as its pleadings were not meaningfully taken into account in the course of the panel’s deliberations, and the panel elected to decide the case on inapplicable grounds”.

47. However, this basis for requesting relief does not sit easily with Merck's own stated position on September 23, 2013, noted above, and repeated here for emphasis:

There is no appeals process for incorrect decisions under the LRO procedure, and accordingly there is no clear way in which my client (Merck KgaA) can rectify the damage done by an inattentive Panel....

Merck plainly recognized that the sole recourse was by means of the Request for Reconsideration process (which Merck itself invoked). That process is of limited scope, with Article IV, Section 2.2, delineating that jurisdiction:

Any person or entity may submit a request for reconsideration or review of an ICANN action or inaction ("Reconsideration Request") to the extent that he, she, or it have been adversely affected by:

- a. one or more staff actions or inactions that contradict established ICANN policy(ies); or*
- b. one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that have been taken or refused to be taken without consideration of material information, except where the party submitting the request could have submitted, but did not submit, the information for the Board's consideration at the time of action or refusal to act; or*
- c. one or more actions or inactions of the ICANN Board that are taken as a result of the Board's reliance on false or inaccurate material information.*

None of these three bases for the Request for Reconsideration process requires or even permits this Panel to provide for a substitute process for exploring a different conclusion on the merits.

48. The BGC recognized in its Determination that the Sole Panel Expert, in his Addenda, specifically noted the correct position as regards geo-targeting, and also that he further considered that his conclusions remained the same. In light of the Addenda, there is nothing to suggest that the Sole Panel Expert made his decision on the basis of incorrect facts. More importantly for the purposes of this Review, the BGC analyzed whether he had done so.

49. Moreover, Merck's complaints about the Sole Panel Expert's application, or in its view, non-application of the LRO Standards lack merit. The BGC determined that the Sole Panel Expert did not apply the wrong standards. That is a determination which this Panel does not, because of the precise and limited jurisdiction we have, have the power to second guess. Rather, the critical question for this Panel is whether the BGC exercised due diligence and care in having a reasonable amount of facts in front of them. Merck complains that the BGC did not have "sufficient and accurate facts", and that Merck was thus deprived of an "accurate review of its complaints". These formulations miss the point, and indeed misstate the applicable test in proceedings such as these. The BGC had to have a reasonable amount of facts in front of it, and to exercise due diligence and care in ensuring that it did so. There is no evidence that the BGC did not have a reasonable amount of facts in front of it or consider them fully. It plainly had everything which was before the Sole Panel Expert. Nothing seems to have been withheld from the BGC.
50. Merck's complaints are, in short, not focused upon the applicable test by which this Panel is to review Board action, but rather are focused on the correctness of the conclusion of the Sole Panel Expert. Because this is not a basis for action by this Panel, the Panel answers question "b" with "yes".
51. Factor (c): Did the Board members exercise independent judgment in taking the decision, believed to be in the best interests of the company?
The Panel does not see that Merck has mounted any attack through this route other than inferentially by vague references to the auction process. As regards that particular decision, there is no evidence (or indeed any concrete allegation) that the BGC or Board members did not exercise independent judgment.

52. In summary, therefore, the Claimant's first contested action complaint is dismissed.

53. The second contested action as characterized and raised by the Claimant in paragraph 46 of the Request is:

The ICANN Board improperly disposed of the Claimant's RFR as the BGC violated its competency and independence in its evaluation of the application of the LRO standard. Further, its assessment was incorrect and failed to take into account the global use of the gTLD by Merck & Co. Additionally, the ICANN Board has provided the possibility for third-party review of some prima facie erroneous expert determinations while denying the same to other, similarly situated parties, including the Claimant. This results in discrimination and unfairness to, and failure of due process for, the Claimant.

54. The Claimant says that this is a violation of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, Article I, Section 2.8, which provide as follows:

In performing its mission, the following core values should guide the decisions and actions of ICANN..... 8. Making decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.

55. The action of the Board, as precisely contested by Merck, is set out in paragraph 53 above. This particular action of the Board is developed by Merck as follows at paragraph 79 of the Request:

The BGC did not address the Claimant's concerns (i) competently, (ii) independently, and (iii) substantively on the basis of the Claimant's legal argument.

56. Incompetence: Merck asserts, at paragraph 82 of the Request that the BGC was incompetent because it had no alternative but to engage "in impermissible substantive analysis and interpretation". Merck then states that the BGC should have taken steps to address its concerns by, citing prior ICANN examples, appointing an independent legal advisor, or "recommending that the ICANN Board take appropriate measures that the BGC is incompetent to make”. Drawing on these, Merck criticizes the fact that in some instances where there has been a prima facie erroneous determination ICANN provides for a review, whereas in others it does not. It says that this is a violation of the requirements of neutrality and fairness.

57. The Panel’s attention is drawn by Merck to a document recording the Resolutions of the Meeting of the New gTLD Program Committee (“NGPC”) on March 22, 2014, which notes that:

...the Board may wish to seek a clear understanding of the legally complex and politically sensitive background on its advice regarding .WINE and .VIN in order to consider the appropriate next steps of delegating the two strings.

58. A professor of law in Paris was commissioned to provide advice, and this was incorporated into the decision of the NGPC.

59. The Panel’s attention is also drawn to the Recommendation in relation to the Reconsideration Request 13-9 of October 10, 2013, made by the BGC. At the end of the Recommendation, the following is stated:

Though there are no grounds for reconsideration presented in this matter, following additional discussion of the matter the BGC recommended that staff provide a report to the NGPC, for delivery in 30 days, setting out options for dealing with the situation raised within this Request, namely the differing outcomes of the String Confusion Objection Dispute Resolution process in similar disputes involving Amazon’s Applied-for String and TLDH’s Applied-for String. In addition, the BGC suggested that the strings not proceed to contracting prior to staff’s report being produced and considered by the NGPC.

A proposed review mechanism is outlined thereafter.

60. Merck’s arguments are unavailing. If this Panel were to find that the BGC and Board are incompetent to assess the propriety of a Panel determination under the LRO this would effectively require a referral or appeal process for LRO decisions. Such a mechanism was not included in the delegation, challenge and dispute resolution process adopted by ICANN and it is not open to this Panel to create it.

61. As to the claim of discrimination, this Panel finds that it was within the discretion of the BGC and Board, once the Sole Expert had revised his original determination to reflect his complete basis for the decision, to conclude that the Sole Expert had applied the correct legal standard to the correctly found set of facts. Of course, in different cases, the BGC and Board are entitled to pursue different options depending upon the nature of the cases at issue. It is insufficient to ground an argument of discrimination simply to note that on different occasions the Board has pursued different options among those available to it.
62. In conclusion, Merck was not discriminated against. These two examples, properly and fairly assessed, do not provide it with support for an allegation of discrimination.
63. Independence: Merck's complaint as to the lack of independence relies on the "Auction of Last Resort" argument which imputes to ICANN a financial interest, insinuating something improper. This is the same point, in substance, which was rejected by this Panel in paragraph 42 above. It is an argument which is speculative, and made without evidence to support it. In light of its dismissal above, it is also dismissed at this point.
64. Mischaracterization: Merck complains that the BGC mischaracterized its arguments. Merck describes its core concern as presented to the BGC as follows (paragraph 89 of the Request):

...did the LRO Panel fail to decide the case on the basis of the correct and applicable LRO Standard, which requires it to consider the potential use of the applied-for gTLD ....

65. This complaint is identical in substance to the matters already addressed by the Panel in paragraphs 43-50 above. In effect, Merck is running the same argument here as before, and it is therefore dismissed.

66. In summary, therefore, the Claimant's challenge to the second contested action complaint is dismissed.

67. The third contested action raised by Merck in paragraph 46 of the Request:

As the result of the prior two violations, the ICANN Board has accepted without due diligence and care, a dysfunctional expert determination procedure within the New gTLD Program which has not provided for the possibility to review or overturn determinations on the basis of substantial errors or manifest disregard of the LRO Standards, despite the foreseeable and forewarned possibility of such, resulting in fundamental unfairness and a failure of due process for the Claimant.

68. In light of the resolution of the first two contested actions against Merck, the Panel finds that this third contested action must also be dismissed. It is predicated for success upon the first two by use of the language “[A]s the result of the prior two violations”.

Section IV – Costs

69. As ICANN is the prevailing party, Merck is held responsible for costs. Therefore the administrative fees and expenses of the International Centre for Dispute Resolution (ICDR) totaling US$3,350.00 shall be borne by entirely by Merck KGaA, and the compensation and expenses of the Panelists totaling US$97,177.08 shall be borne by entirely by Merck KGaA. Therefore, Merck KGaA shall reimburse ICANN the sum of US$48,588.54, representing that portion of said fees and expenses in excess of the apportioned costs previously incurred by ICANN.

Section V – Declaration

1. Merck has not succeeded in this Independent Review Process. ICANN is the prevailing party. As per paragraph 69, Merck must pay ICANN costs in the amount of USD $48,588.54.

This Final Declaration of the Independent Review Process Panel may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original, and all of which shall constitute together one and the same instrument.

CLA-009

Arbitration CAS 2002/O/410 The Gibraltar Football Association (GFA)/Union des Associations Européennes de Football (UEFA), award of 7 October 2003

Panel : Mr. Bruno Simma (Germany), President; Professor Pierre Lalive (Switzerland); Mr. Dirk-Reiner Martens (Germany)

Football

Application for UEFA membership

Rules on membership applicable at the time when the application was made

Legality of a change of rule with a retrospective effect

Principles of fairness and good faith

Freedom of association

- 1. According to the new version of Article 5 of the UEFA Statutes, UEFA membership is restricted to associations in countries which are recognised as independent States by the United Nations. This new rule should not be regarded as a rule dealing only with procedural aspects justifying immediate application regardless of when the facts at issue occurred. The immediate application in this matter would entail a violation of general principles of law which are widely recognised, particularly the principles of fairness and of good faith.
- 2. According to the old version of Article 5 of the UEFA Statutes “Membership of UEFA is open to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe which are responsible for the organisation and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory”. GFA indisputably exercises sole responsibility for the organisation and structure of football in its territory. The concept of “nation” or “country” in the sports environment must not necessarily be “understood within its common political meaning. More importantly, UEFA already has – and had at the time when the application was made – a number of member associations from countries which do not enjoy independent statehood, such as Scotland, Wales or the Faroe Islands.
- 3. Generally, freedom of association includes the freedom of an association to accept or to refuse any applicant for membership, even if the applicant fulfils all statutory conditions. However, the exclusion of athletes, or of a sports association to which athletes are affiliated, from an international sports organisation which occupies a dominant or monopolistic position in the organisation of sports competitions may have the effect of a boycott. Such an exclusion should therefore be held invalid, at least to the extent that it is not grounded on objective and justified reasons.

The Claimant, the Gibraltar Football Association (“GFA”), is an unincorporated body that is responsible for the organisation of all football in the territory of Gibraltar. The GFA was established in 1895, and today it has between 2000 and 2500 members.

The GFA has a Men’s senior league composed of three divisions, a Junior league, and Ladies and “Futsal” competitions. All football currently organised by the GFA is non-professional.

Despite proposals made in the past that the Claimant may become affiliated to the Spanish Football Association, the GFA has always been independent from any other football association, whether within Gibraltar or elsewhere.

The territory of Gibraltar is a dependent territory of the United Kingdom. It forms part of Her Majesty the Queen’s Dominions, but it is not part of the United Kingdom, and it is not an independent State either although it enjoys a certain level of autonomy.

The Respondent, the Union des Associations Européennes De Football (“UEFA”), is an association incorporated under the laws of Switzerland with its headquarters in Nyon, Switzerland. UEFA is the governing body of European football, dealing with all questions relating to European football and exercising regulatory, supervisory and disciplinary functions over national associations, clubs, officials and players of the European continent.

The Respondent is one of the continental football confederations. All national associations located in Europe and which wish to be affiliated to the Fédération Internationale de Football Association (“FIFA”) must previously become a member of UEFA.

In January 1997, the GFA applied to FIFA for membership.

On 27 November 1997, the English Football Association (“FA”) confirmed to FIFA its thorough support of the GFA's application for membership.

On 3 March 1999, FIFA wrote to the GFA confirming that the “preliminary procedure” was completed, and that “consequently, FIFA may submit the file to the confederation concerned for the second phase of the procedure (evaluation of the organisation for a period of at least two years)”.

In that same letter, FIFA further stated that “according to article 4.7 of the FIFA Statutes the confederation concerned shall decide whether to grant provisional membership or associate membership to the applicant association”.

In parallel to this letter, FIFA forwarded to UEFA the GFA's file for membership, as confirmed by UEFA to the Claimant on 23 March 1999. The GFA was consequently invited to make an oral presentation of its application to UEFA representatives in April 1999 in Nyon, Switzerland.

On 20 April 1999, following the presentation made by the GFA's representatives in Nyon, UEFA informed the Claimant that they would examine the file with FIFA, possibly proceed with a visit on site in Gibraltar, and then make a recommendation to the UEFA Executive Committee, outlining that “no final decision will be taken until the year 2000”.

On 7 January 2000, UEFA informed the GFA that FIFA was in the process of reviewing its affiliation procedure rules, that a meeting was scheduled to take place within FIFA's organisation in March 2000 and, therefore, that UEFA would not be able to give the GFA more information on the process of its own affiliation request until that time.

By letter dated 19 January 2000, the GFA responded to UEFA that it failed to understand why a “present ongoing review of affiliation procedure rules” within FIFA should affect the application by the GFA which had been made before such review was commenced. The Claimant further expressed its concern because the UEFA inspection of the GFA's facilities should have occurred already by the end of the year 1999, and it insisted that it be given “the necessary assurances that our application is being processed as per the present applicable procedures”.

By e-mail dated 25 March 2000, UEFA informed the GFA that “FIFA and UEFA administrations have discussed the application procedure for your association. After having received also the green light by the FIFA Committee for national associations we inform you that a joint FIFA/UEFA delegation will visit your association”.

On 25 April 2000, UEFA provided the GFA with details of the visit to the GFA's facilities and infrastructures by representatives of FIFA and of UEFA. Such visit was scheduled to take place between 8 and 10 May 2000.

A joint delegation from the FIFA and UEFA administrations eventually conducted the inspection visit in Gibraltar between 8 and 10 May 2000.

On 11 July 2000, the UEFA delegation issued a report of the visit conducted in Gibraltar two months earlier. In this report, the UEFA delegation proposed inter alia that “the FA of Gibraltar be admitted to UEFA on a provisional basis” under three cumulative conditions, namely that (i) Gibraltar teams could not enter club competitions or senior and Under-21 national-team competitions immediately, but only UEFA's youth, women's and amateur competitions; (ii) the football infrastructure in Gibraltar must correspond to the UEFA requirements at the time of entering the relevant competitions; and (iii) the GFA's statutes had to be adapted to UEFA's requirements.

The UEFA administration justified this position, which in principle favoured the affiliation of the GFA, by stating that “the FA of Gibraltar fulfils all requisite statutory conditions for admission to UEFA (Article 2 of the Regulations governing the implementation of the UEFA Statutes)”.

The report on the FIFA/UEFA joint visit to Gibraltar and the proposals contained therein were supposed to be submitted to the UEFA Executive Committee at its next meeting which was scheduled to be held on 25-26 August 2000.

On 3 August 2000, the FIFA Executive Committee apparently decided to freeze all applications from associations to FIFA, pending the approval of new FIFA Statutes in the year 2004. FIFA informed UEFA of this decision in September 2001.

On 26 August 2000, the UEFA Executive Committee decided to postpone its decision concerning the GFA's provisional membership until its next meeting which was scheduled to take place in October 2000, and to call a meeting between UEFA, the English FA and the Spanish FA on 22 September 2000 in order to discuss this matter.

The meeting between UEFA, the English FA and the Spanish FA did not take place until 30 November 2000. During its meeting on 4-5 October 2000, the UEFA Executive Committee had decided to postpone its decision on the matter again as it was waiting for the results of the aforementioned meeting with the English FA and the Spanish FA.

On 14-15 December 2000, the UEFA Executive Committee met again. In respect of the GFA's application for membership, it considered that independent legal advice was necessary for it to be able to evaluate the application. Therefore, the UEFA Executive Committee decided to set up a legal panel with three members from UEFA's External Legal Experts Panel which was entrusted with the preparation of a substantiated report to the UEFA Executive Committee based on the FIFA and UEFA Statutes (the "Expert Panel").

The Claimant was informed of these decisions by UEFA on 15 December 2000. At that time, UEFA also provided the GFA with a copy of a written report that had been filed by the Spanish FA (in which the latter opposed the GFA's application), asking the GFA to comment thereon in writing by the end of January 2001. The same request was made by UEFA to the English FA.

By the end of the year 2000, the Expert Panel set up by UEFA had received all of the written submissions by the Spanish FA, the English FA and the GFA. The Claimant also filed a supplementary report in March 2001.

The aforementioned three parties made oral submissions before the Expert Panel on 19 April 2001. According to the order of procedure decided by its members, the Expert Panel was then to submit a written legal report to the UEFA Executive Committee, for it to take a final decision on the GFA's application.

As from June 2001, the Claimant repeatedly asked the UEFA what the conclusions of the Expert Panel were. The UEFA Executive Committee was to meet in July 2001 and the GFA assumed that the report of the Expert Panel would be available before such meeting, where the GFA's application for membership would be on the agenda.

The UEFA Executive Committee met on 11-12 July 2001. It did not take any decision on the GFA's application. However, what the UEFA Executive Committee did decide was to put an amendment of the UEFA Statutes before the UEFA Congress to be held in October 2001.

According to this proposed amendment, UEFA membership would be restricted to associations in countries which are recognised as independent States by the United Nations.

On 30 July 2001 and 20 August 2001, the GFA again asked the UEFA what the conclusions of the Expert Panel were.

On 27 August 2001, the Expert Panel appointed by the UEFA rendered its written legal opinion to the UEFA Executive Committee.

The members of the Expert Panel unanimously considered that according to Art. 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes (NB: the version that came into force on 24 December 1997 and was amended on 30 June and 1 July 2000) and to Art. 1 and 2, sentence 1 of the Regulations governing the implementation of the UEFA Statutes, "the GFA was entitled to provisional admission as a member of UEFA".

In the same Expert Report of 27 August 2001, the members of the Expert Panel suggested to the UEFA Executive Committee "to amend the UEFA Statutes (...) to avoid similar problems in the future". The Expert Panel thus proposed "an amendment to the effect that only UN-recognised States may apply for admission to and membership of UEFA".

On 30 August 2001, the UEFA confirmed to the GFA that the Expert Panel had rendered its decision. However, as per the order of procedure decided from the outset, the UEFA refused to communicate a copy of the Expert Report to the GFA. The UEFA indicated to the Claimant that the report would be discussed by the members of the UEFA Executive Committee on 6-8 September 2001 and that a decision on the GFA's application would then be taken.

In addition, the UEFA also communicated to the GFA on 30 August 2001 that "as regards the extraordinary Congress in October in Prague, we confirm that there is a request for a change of the UEFA Statutes, and especially the provision of UEFA membership. However we cannot provide you with a copy of these amendments until you are part of the UEFA family".

On 5 September 2001, FIFA's Secretary General wrote to UEFA stating that in FIFA's view it would be premature to proceed with the affiliation of the GFA in the forthcoming months, and that FIFA was planning to change its rules on membership.

On 7 September 2001, UEFA wrote to the GFA and informed it that, at its most recent meeting on the same day, "the Executive Committee did not enter into the request of the Football Association of Gibraltar to be provisionally affiliated to UEFA. The UEFA Executive Committee has already discussed and decided at its July 2001 meeting to change the membership conditions in the UEFA Statutes. These proposals will be dealt with by the UEFA member associations at the next extraordinary Congress in Prague in October 2001. (...) The decision concerning the affiliation request of the Football Association of Gibraltar is therefore postponed until further notice."

During the same meeting of the UEFA Executive Committee, a request for admission to UEFA filed by the Football Association of Kazakhstan was considered, and the Executive Committee agreed that such request should proceed.

The Football Association of Kazakhstan, which requested admission to UEFA after leaving the Asian confederation in 2001, was eventually admitted as a UEFA member by the UEFA Congress upon the recommendation of the UEFA Executive Committee in April 2002. Kazakhstan is an independent State and accepted as a member by the United Nations.

As from September 2001, the GFA repeatedly requested UEFA to render a decision on its request for provisional membership without delay, and to do so on the basis of the UEFA rules that existed at the time when the application was made.

On 5 October 2001, a meeting took place between senior officers of UEFA and of the GFA during which no solution could be found.

On 11 October 2001, the UEFA Congress approved the change of the UEFA Statutes, whereby UEFA membership would from then on be open only to associations in a country “recognised by the United Nations as an independent State”.

On 13 November 2001, UEFA wrote to the Claimant rejecting the latter’s repeated demands for immediate consideration of its affiliation request and stating that “the Executive Committee has so far not taken a negative decision on your application request but has only postponed its decision upon FIFA's request”.

The GFA replied to UEFA on 20 November 2001 that it considered that UEFA had acted illegally in this matter.

It must be noted that in November 2001, a number of national Football bodies of UK Dependencies which are not independent States and not members of the United Nations were already FIFA members, such as the FA of Anguilla or the FA of the Turks and Caicos Islands. Similarly, the FA of the Faroe Islands, which is not an independent State but a dependency of Denmark, is a FIFA member since 1988 and was admitted as a UEFA member in the mid-nineties.

On 26 April 2002, the GFA, acting through one of its counsel, wrote to UEFA stating that “the GFA (...) understands UEFA’s position to be that the GFA is not eligible for membership of UEFA under (new) Article 5.1 and that therefore the GFA's application cannot succeed”. The GFA further stated that “(a) UEFA’s failure to assess the GFA's application to become a member of UEFA by reference to the rules applicable when the application was made in 1999, under which the application would have been successful, and (b) UEFA’s decision instead to change the rules with purportedly retrospective effect in such a way as to make the GFA's application incapable of success, are illegal.”

In that same letter, the GFA requested UEFA to accept CAS arbitration in this matter. The same request was submitted again by the Claimant to UEFA on 6 June 2002.

On 12 July 2002, UEFA confirmed to the GFA that its Executive Committee had accepted CAS jurisdiction in respect of the GFA's claims against UEFA in this matter.

On 16 August 2002, the GFA filed a Request for Arbitration accompanied by 38 Exhibits with the CAS, asking principally (i) that the UEFA Executive Committee be ordered to consider the GFA's application for membership by reference to the rules applicable when the application was made in 1999, (ii) to declare that under those rules the GFA is entitled to provisional membership of UEFA with immediate effect, and (iii) to order payment by the Respondent UEFA of all costs of the arbitration as well as legal costs suffered by the Claimant.

The Respondent filed its Answer, accompanied by 8 Exhibits, on 27 September 2002, requesting the CAS to “dismiss all Principal Orders of the Request for Arbitration”, with all costs and compensations to be charged to the Claimant.

The hearing was held on 27 May 2003 in Lausanne.

The Claimant presented in its Request for Arbitration and specified in its Statement of Claim the following principal requests for relief:

- That UEFA be ordered to decide the GFA's application for membership by reference to the rules applicable when the application was made or was or ought to have been considered prior to 11 October 2001.
- That it be declared that under those rules the GFA is entitled to provisional membership of UEFA with immediate effect;
- That the Respondent UEFA be ordered to pay of all the costs of the arbitration as well as the legal costs incurred by the Claimant.

The Claimant principally submits that:

- a) Under the rules on membership contained in the UEFA Statutes before the modification approved by the UEFA Congress on 11 October 2001, the GFA's application for provisional membership fulfilled all requisite conditions.
- b) Under those rules, the GFA was therefore entitled to membership, as evidenced by the behaviour of the UEFA competent bodies in their processing of the Claimant's application.
- c) The change of the UEFA rules on membership was inspired by the simple wish to prevent the GFA's application from succeeding, and the reason for that wish was to be seen in the political pressure exercised by the powerful Spanish FA.
- d) In July 2001, when the UEFA Executive Committee proposed that the UEFA Statutes be amended to the effect that only associations in countries which are recognised by the United Nations as independent States are eligible for membership, the UEFA Executive Committee must have been aware of the Expert Panel's conclusions.
- e) It would be unfair under the circumstances to permit the dismissal of the GFA's application for affiliation by reference to the amended version of the UEFA rules on membership.

The Respondent submitted in both its Answer and its Response the following principal requests for relief:

- That all of the principal orders requested in the Request for arbitration be dismissed.
- That the Claimant be ordered to pay all of the costs of the arbitration as well as the legal costs incurred by UEFA.

The Respondent is principally of the opinion that:

- a) Under Swiss law, any association, such as UEFA, has a discretionary right to refuse a person or entity as a member, even if such person or entity fulfils all of the conditions stipulated in the association's statutes.
- b) While there are limits to this discretionary right of the association under Swiss law, namely the protection of the personality (art. 28 Swiss Civil Code) and the rules of Swiss Cartel law, those limits were not violated in the present case since UEFA's attitude was neither arbitrary nor based on unjustified reasons.
- c) UEFA's attitude in this matter was not dictated by political pressure exercised by the Spanish FA, which however openly opposed the application made by the GFA.

LAW

1. The CAS has jurisdiction over this dispute on the basis of the correspondence exchanged by the parties on 6 June and 12 July 2002.
Furthermore, during the hearing in Lausanne on 27 May 2003, it was explicitly acknowledged between the parties that the competence of the CAS is not in dispute.
2. Pursuant to Article R45 of the Code, the dispute must be decided "according to the rules of law chosen by the parties or, in the absence of such a choice, according to Swiss law".
3. The issue of the Claimant's right to membership of UEFA is to be examined in the light of the applicable UEFA Statutes. The Panel considers that Swiss civil law is applicable to all aspects of the dispute relating to the construction of the FIFA and UEFA Statutes and Regulations, in accordance with Article R45 of the Code, Article 4, par. 3 a) of the FIFA Statutes and Article 59, par. 1 of the UEFA Statutes.
4. In addition, to the extent that it deems it appropriate, the Panel may apply general principles of law, which are applicable as a type of lex mercatoria for sports regardless of their explicit presence in the applicable UEFA or FIFA Statutes. Such general principles of law include for example the principle of fairness, which implies inter alia the obligation to respect fair procedures (see, in particular, AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague vs. UEFA, CAS 98/200, sections 60/61 and 155 and seq., in Digest of CAS Awards II, 1998-2000, edited by Matthieu Reeb, pp. 65-66 and 102-103).

5. At the time when the GFA applied for membership to FIFA, and when FIFA subsequently forwarded the GFA's application file to UEFA, the criteria for eligibility as a member of UEFA provided for under Article 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes were set out as follows:

“Membership of UEFA is open to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe which are responsible for the organisation and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory” (the prevailing German text read “Mitglieder der UEFA können europäische Verbände werden, die in ihrem Gebiet für die Organisation und Durchführung des Fussballsports verantwortlich sind”; hereinafter the “Old Rule”).

6. Article 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes was amended by the UEFA Congress on 11 October 2001. According to the new version of this provision, UEFA membership is restricted to associations in countries which are recognised as independent States by the United Nations (hereinafter the “New Rule”). The Panel interprets this text to mean that the respective country must have been admitted as a member of the United Nations. The United Nations do not “recognise” countries in the strict sense of the word. However, what is clear is that under the New Rule, the GFA would not be eligible as a member of UEFA, since Gibraltar is not an independent State admitted to membership in the United Nations.

7. The first question which the Panel must address is therefore to establish whether today, taking into account the circumstances of this particular case, UEFA may validly rely on the New Rule to appraise (and hypothetically dismiss) the GFA's application, although such application was filed and dealt with for a period of several years on the basis of the Old Rule.

8. The CAS has already considered in the past that in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, laws and rules relating to procedural matters apply immediately upon entering into force and regardless of when the facts occurred. On the other hand, it is a general principle that laws, regulations and rules of a substantive nature that were in force at the time when the facts occurred must be applied. Such principles were set out in particular in the CAS award S. vs. FINA, CAS 2000/A/274, sections 72-73 (see, in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., p. 405):

“Under Swiss law, the prohibition against the retroactive application of law is well-established. In general, it is necessary to apply those laws, regulations or rules that were in force at the time that the facts at issue occurred (...).

This general principle is, however, subject to several exceptions, including an exception for laws or rules that are procedural in nature. In the absence of an express provision to the contrary, laws and rules relating to procedural matters apply immediately upon entering into force and regardless of when the facts at issue occurred (...).”

9. In the present instance, while the third sentence of Article 2 of the Regulations governing the implementation of the UEFA Statutes sets out the formal conditions which an application for UEFA membership has to meet, it is quite another question whether Article 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes is to be seen as merely procedural.

10. This provision sets out the substantive conditions that any applicant will need to fulfil in order to become a member. For this first reason, in accordance with the general principle of non-retroactivity of laws and rules, the Panel may have to consider that the New Rule may not apply to the GFA's application.
11. Even if the New Rule was to be regarded as a rule dealing only with procedural aspects, the Panel is of the opinion that its application in this matter would entail a violation of general principles of law which are widely recognised, particularly the principles of fairness and of good faith. In particular, the Panel refers to the principle of venire contra factum proprium. This principle provides that when the conduct of one party has led to raise legitimate expectations on the part of the second party, the first party is barred from changing its course of action to the detriment of the second party (see, AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague vs. UEFA, CAS 98/200, in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., pp. 38 and seq.; S. vs. FINA, CAS 2000/A/274, section 37, in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., p. 400; Art. 2 of the Swiss Civil Code).
12. In casu, upon receipt of the GFA's application in 1997, the UEFA administration processed it at first without any reservations. The visit on site in Gibraltar by a delegation of UEFA and FIFA representatives in May 2000 was carried out in knowledge of the fact that FIFA was already considering changing its rules on membership in the future (see above).
13. In July 2000, a favourable report was rendered by the UEFA representatives who had inspected Gibraltar's facilities, outlining that all requisite conditions set out in the applicable UEFA Statutes and Regulations were fulfilled (see above). Subsequently, the UEFA Executive Committee decided to ask for advice of an Expert Panel before rendering a decision on the GFA's application. It was therefore legitimate for the GFA to understand that UEFA would decide on its application on the basis of the conclusions of the Expert Panel, bearing in mind that the GFA, the English FA and the Spanish FA had all been requested to make written and oral submissions in this context.
14. The Expert Panel came to the main conclusion that the GFA was entitled to UEFA provisional membership. In the Expert Report which was submitted in writing to the UEFA Executive Committee on 27 August 2001, the members of the Expert Panel suggested to the UEFA Executive Committee "to amend the UEFA Statutes (...) to avoid similar problems in the future" (emphasized added). The Expert Panel thus proposed "an amendment to the effect that only UN-recognised States may apply for admission to and membership of UEFA".
15. However, before any decision on the merits was taken by UEFA on the GFA's application on the basis of the Expert Panel's main conclusion, as one would have reasonably expected, the relevant Old Rule on membership was changed in October 2001 upon a recommendation made in July of that same year by the UEFA Executive Committee. The New Rule actually implemented the recommendation that the Expert Panel had made, but only for future cases.

16. The present Panel is of the opinion that such a recommendation to replace the Old Rule by the New Rule was made in the light of the conclusions of the Expert Panel. The fact that the UEFA Executive Committee had already made such an amendment proposal at its meeting of 11-12 July 2001 (i.e. prior to receiving the Expert Panel's written report in August) tends to suggest that the UEFA Executive Committee was aware of the Expert Panel's conclusions at that time. The panel is thus satisfied that one of the main purposes for the amendment proposal made by the UEFA Executive Committee was to prevent the GFA's application from succeeding.
17. To apply the New Rule to the Claimant's case under these circumstances would be unfair and contrary to the above mentioned general principles of law. It were the actions of UEFA itself which created legitimate expectations that the GFA's application would be processed under the Old Rule, with adequate speed or at least upon receipt of and in compliance with the advice of the Expert Panel that UEFA had appointed specifically for that purpose.
18. The GFA's application to be admitted as a provisional UEFA member shall therefore be examined on the basis of the Old Rule, namely the rule applicable when the application was made and on the basis of which the Expert Panel appointed by the UEFA rendered its opinion.
19. As mentioned above, according to the Old Rule "Membership of UEFA is open to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe which are responsible for the organisation and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory".
20. When reviewing whether the GFA's application fulfilled the conditions set out in this provision, the Expert Panel considered that "given that Gibraltar is a European association which is no longer dependent on the [British] FA and which has become autonomous in a sporting respect, and given that the GFA indisputably exercises sole responsibility for the organisation and structure of football in its territory, Article 5 paragraph 1 can only be interpreted as to mean that the GFA from a legal perspective fulfils the criteria of the UEFA statutes for becoming a UEFA member".
21. The same opinion was given by the UEFA administration itself in its inspection report and recommendations issued on 11 July 2000 (see, sections 18 and 19 above).
22. The Panel considers that these opinions are accurate and that there is no reason for considering, as submitted by the Respondent on the basis of the words used in Article 5 paragraph 2 of the UEFA Statutes, that the Old Rule on UEFA membership should in fact – as the New Rule eventually expressed in an explicit way - be construed as restricting eligibility to associations of countries which are recognized politically as independent States.
23. Such a point of view is in fact not supported by the letter of the Old Rule. Neither is it consistent with the opinion of CAS, as expressed in previous cases, that the concept of "nation" or "country" in the sports environment must not necessarily be "understood within its common political meaning" (see, Celtic Plc vs. UEFA, CAS 98/2001, paragraphs 25 seq., in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., pp. 118-120). More importantly, the Respondent's argument is contradicted by the fact that UEFA already has – and had at the time when the application was made – a number of member associations from countries which do not enjoy independent statehood, such as Scotland, Wales or the Faroe Islands.

24. As a consequence of the above considerations the Panel is of the opinion that the GFA's application for UEFA membership meets the requirements set out in Article 5 paragraph 1 of the Old Rule.
25. Upon receipt of an application file from FIFA, as in the present case, UEFA must "decide whether to grant provisional membership or associate membership to the applicant association" (Article 4 paragraph 7 of the FIFA Statutes).
26. Article 6 paragraph 3 of the UEFA Statutes provides that the UEFA Executive Committee is competent to admit an applicant association as a provisional UEFA member, while the decision on full admission must be taken by the UEFA Congress.
27. The Respondent submits that even though the GFA's application might meet all requisite conditions for UEFA membership, an association like UEFA remains free to admit or to refuse the applicant as a new member by virtue of the principle of autonomy of the association under Swiss law.
28. The Panel must therefore examine whether the fact that the GFA's application meets the requirements of Article 5 paragraph 1 of the Old Rule entitles the GFA to provisional membership or whether UEFA has discretion to invoke the principle of freedom of association and has the right to deny membership on that basis.
29. Generally, freedom of association includes the freedom of an association to accept or to refuse any applicant for membership, even if the applicant fulfils all statutory conditions (see, inter alia HEINI A., Das Schweizerische Vereinsrecht, Bâle 1988, p. 48).
30. However, this principle is now generally considered to be limited, such limits being derived in particular from:
  - (i) the contractual nature of the membership to an association and the related obligation to act in good faith in the context of contractual or pre-contractual discussions (Article 2 Swiss Civil Code; see, inter alia ZEN-RUFFINEN P., Droit du sport, Zurich 2002, n° 279 and references; BADDELEY M., L'association sportive face au droit, Genève 1994, p. 75; HEINI A., op.cit., p.48);
  - (ii) the general prohibition of arbitrary decisions and the need of a control of the association's decision to refuse a new member (Article 2 paragraph 2 Swiss Civil Code);
  - (iii) in professional matters, the provisions of competition law and the related need to protect personality rights (see, JdT 1957 I 202-212; Article 7 of the Swiss Federal Law on Cartels).

31. Furthermore, in the context of sports associations, it is now often considered that associations in a monopolistic position – which is undoubtedly the case for the Respondent in Europe – have in fact a duty to accept new members if they fulfil all statutory conditions to that effect. This opinion is derived both from the legislation on cartels and from the provisions on the protection of the personality (see, HEINI A., op.cit., p. 49; BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 82).
32. The Panel holds, in that respect, that the exclusion of athletes, or of a sports association to which athletes are affiliated, from an international sports organisation which occupies a dominant or monopolistic position in the organisation of the sports competitions at issue may have the effect of a boycott. It is the Panel's opinion that such an exclusion should therefore be held invalid, at least to the extent that it is not grounded on objective and justified reasons.
33. The Respondent itself admitted that a refusal by UEFA to grant the GFA provisional membership could be considered as illegal if it were arbitrary or based on "unjustified reasons".
34. The above legal considerations lead to the general conclusion that, under Swiss law, an association does not remain entitled, under any circumstances, to accept or refuse a new member at its sole discretion. However, in order to rule on the present case, there is no need for the Panel to develop a position of principle on this question. The Panel thus leaves open the question of the right of UEFA to accept or refuse new members at its sole discretion. The Panel is of the opinion that it may rely on the particular circumstances surrounding the GFA's application and the way it was processed by UEFA to decide upon the present case.
35. As pointed out above, UEFA acted from the outset as if the applicant would be granted provisional membership if all applicable conditions were met. The GFA invested a considerable amount of time and resources in obtaining its admission as a UEFA member, relying on the legitimate expectation that UEFA would not refuse its application without any justified reason.
36. The Panel holds that it is therefore the behaviour of the UEFA itself which created such legitimate expectations on the part of the Claimant (visits on site, favourable visit report and recommendation, appointment of an Expert Panel to assist the Executive Committee to decide on the case, favourable conclusions of the Expert Panel following a comprehensive and adversary procedure, etc.).
37. UEFA chose to process thoroughly the GFA's application and by doing so, it led the Claimant to believe that it would be admitted as a provisional member if the Statutes' conditions were met. By doing so, UEFA waived the right that it may have had under Swiss law to reject the Claimant's request for membership without justified reasons.
38. In that respect, it is the Panel's opinion that neither the change of membership rules by UEFA, the purpose of which may have been to enable UEFA to dismiss the GFA's application, nor the clearly negative position allegedly taken by the Spanish FA, which may have influenced the UEFA's change of attitude and progressive reluctance to decide in a timely manner upon the GFA's application, constitute any such justified reasons.

39. The 11 July 2000 report by the UEFA delegation (see, section 18 above) lists certain conditions which have to be met in order for the GFA application for UEFA membership to succeed. It is for UEFA to decide whether these conditions are in fact met. Given the length of time which has elapsed since the application was first made, such a decision will have to be taken forthwith and will have to conform with the views expressed in this award.
40. The Panel further stresses that the possible change of FIFA rules on membership, which has been put forward by the Respondent as a reason for postponing any decision on the GFA's application, should not be an impediment to the UEFA granting provisional UEFA membership to the GFA.
41. Under Art. 4 paragraph 7 of the FIFA Statutes, the confederation "shall notify FIFA as soon as it considers a provisional member national association to be qualified to become a member of FIFA". This wording suggests that in two years' time, the UEFA shall remain entitled to assess whether the GFA fulfils the criteria for FIFA membership on the basis of the FIFA Statutes then in force.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport rules that:

1. UEFA is ordered to decide on the GFA's application for membership on the basis of the UEFA rules applicable at the time when the application was made. The decision has to be made by the UEFA no later than 31 March 2004.
2. GFA's other motions are rejected.
3. (...)

CLA-010

Arbitration CAS 98/200 AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague / Union of European Football Associations (UEFA), award of 20 August 1999

Panel: Mr. Massimo Coccia (Italy), President; Dr. Christoph Vedder (Germany); Dr. Dirk-Reiner Martens (Germany)

Football

Conflicts of interest related to multi-club ownership within the same competition

Application of EC law to sport

Status of UEFA according to EC law

Right to be heard

Principle of procedural fairness

1. If clubs with the same owner can take part in the same competitions, whether national or international, doubts may arise as to whether the outcome is really undecided in advance. The challenged UEFA Rule is therefore an essential feature for the organization of a professional football competition and is not more extensive than necessary to serve the fundamental goal of preventing conflicts of interest which would be publicly perceived as affecting the authenticity, and then the uncertainty, of results in UEFA competitions.
2. Membership of UEFA is open only to national football associations situated on the continent of Europe who are responsible for the organization and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory. The UEFA Statutes attribute voting rights only to national federations, and article 75 of the Swiss Civil Code (CC) refers to members which have voting rights within the association whose resolution is challenged. Clubs do not meet these requirements.
3. Under Article 75 CC, members of an association have the right to be heard when resolutions are passed which affect them to a significant extent. However, requiring an international sports federation to provide for hearing to any party potentially affected by its rule-making authority could quite conceivably subject the international federation to a quagmire of administrative red tape which would effectively preclude it from acting at all to promote the game.
4. The doctrine of venire contra factum proprium provides that where the conduct of one party has led to the legitimate expectations on the part of a second party, the first party is estopped from changing its course of action to the detriment of the second party. In casu, UEFA may not change its Cup Regulations without allowing the clubs sufficient time to adapt their operations to the new rules accordingly. However, such procedural defect by itself does not warrant the permanent annulment of the contested UEFA Rule.

- 5. Sport is subject to Community law only insofar as it constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 2 of the EC Treaty. EC law does not prevent the adoption of rules or of a practice excluding foreign players from participation in certain matches for reasons which are not of an economic nature, which relate to the particular nature and context of such matches and are thus of sporting interest only.

The Claimant AEK PAE (hereinafter «AEK») is a Greek football club incorporated under the laws of the Hellenic Republic and having its seat in Athens. AEK currently plays in the Greek first division championship and over the years has often qualified for the European competitions organized by UEFA. At the end of the 1997/98 football season AEK ranked third in the Greek championship, thus becoming eligible to participate in the 1998/99 UEFA club competition called «UEFA Cup». AEK is owned as to 78.4% by ENIC Hellas S.A., a company wholly controlled, through subsidiaries, by the English company ENIC plc.

The Claimant SK Slavia Praha (hereinafter «Slavia») is a Czech football club incorporated under the laws of the Czech Republic and having its seat in Prague. Slavia currently plays in the Czech-Moravian first division championship and along the years has often qualified for the UEFA competitions. At the end of the 1997/98 football season, Slavia ranked second in the Czech-Moravian championship, thus becoming eligible to participate in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup. Slavia is owned as to 53.7% by ENIC Football Management Sarl, a company wholly controlled, through subsidiaries, by ENIC plc.

Both AEK and Slavia are under the control of ENIC plc (hereinafter «ENIC»), a company incorporated under the laws of England and listed on the London Stock Exchange. In the last couple of years ENIC, through subsidiaries, has invested in several European football clubs, acquiring controlling interests in AEK, Slavia, the Italian club Vicenza Calcio SpA, the Swiss club FC Basel, and a minority interest in the Scottish club Glasgow Rangers FC.

The Respondent Union of European Football Associations (hereinafter «UEFA»), association which has its seat in Nyon, Switzerland, is a sports federation which has as its members all the fifty-one national football associations (i.e. federations) of Europe. UEFA is the governing body for European football, dealing with all questions relating to European football and exercising regulatory, supervisory and disciplinary functions over national associations, clubs, officials and players. Pursuant to the UEFA Statutes, member associations must comply with such Statutes and with other regulations and decisions, and must apply them to their own member clubs. Until the 1998/99 European football season UEFA has organized three main club competitions: the Champions' League, the Cup Winners' Cup and the UEFA Cup. UEFA has recently resolved to cancel the Cup Winners' Cup and, as of the 1999/2000 season, has reduced the main club competitions to the Champions' League and the UEFA Cup.

During 1997 ENIC acquired the above-mentioned controlling interests in AEK, Slavia and Vicenza. In the 1997/98 European football season, these three clubs took part in the UEFA Cup Winners'

Cup and all qualified for the quarter final. At this stage, the three ENIC-owned clubs were not drawn to play against each other and only one of them reached the semi-finals (AEK lost to the Russian club Lokomotiv Moscow, Slavia lost to the German club VfB Stuttgart, whereas Vicenza defeated the Dutch club Roda JC). Being confronted with a situation where three out of eight clubs left in the same competition belonged to a single owner, UEFA started to consider the problems at stake.

On 24 February 1998, at ENIC's request, representatives of UEFA and ENIC met in order to discuss the issue of «multi-club ownership», that is the ethical and non-ethical questions raised by the circumstance that two or more clubs controlled by the same owner take part in the same competition. In that meeting ENIC proposed to UEFA a «code of ethics» to be adopted by football clubs, with a view to convincing UEFA not to adopt a rule banning teams with common ownership from participating in the same UEFA competition.

After the meeting, ENIC exchanged correspondence with UEFA and submitted a draft code of ethics for consideration. Thereafter, UEFA referred the issue of multiple ownership to some of its internal bodies, namely the Committee for Non-Amateur Football, the Juridical Committee and the Committee for Club Competitions. These came to the conclusion that there was no guarantee that a code of ethics would be effectively implemented and that a code of ethics was not a viable solution. They therefore recommended to the Executive Committee of UEFA that the rule at issue in this arbitration be adopted.

On 7 May 1998, UEFA sent to its member associations several documents to be communicated to the clubs entitled to compete in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup. In particular, UEFA sent the regulations and the entry forms for the 1998/99 UEFA Cup and the booklet entitled «Safety and security in the stadium – For all matches in the UEFA competitions». The UEFA Cup regulations set forth the conditions of participation without any mention of a limitation related to multi-club ownership. Moreover, the regulations did not make reservation for future amendments, except in the event of «force majeure». At that time, pursuant to the regulations, both AEK and Slavia were entitled to compete in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup because of their results in the 1997/98 national championships.

On 19 May 1998, the UEFA Executive Committee finally addressed the issue of multi-club ownership and adopted the rule at issue in these proceedings (hereinafter the «Contested Rule»). The Contested Rule is entitled «Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs» and reads as follows:

«A. General Principle

It is of fundamental importance that the sporting integrity of the UEFA club competitions be protected. To achieve this aim, UEFA reserves the right to intervene and to take appropriate action in any situation in which it transpires that the same individual or legal entity is in a position to influence the management, administration and/or sporting performance of more than one team participating in the same UEFA club competition.

B. Criteria

With regard to admission to the UEFA club competitions, the following criteria are applicable in addition to the respective competition regulations:

1. No club participating in a UEFA club competition may, either directly or indirectly:
  - (a) hold or deal in the securities or shares of any other club, or
  - (b) be a member of any other club, or
  - (c) be involved in any capacity whatsoever in the management, administration and/or sporting performance of any other club, or
  - (d) have any power whatsoever in the management, administration and/or sporting performance of any other club participating in the same UEFA club competition.
2. No person may at the same time, either directly or indirectly, be involved in any capacity whatsoever in the management, administration and/or sporting performance of more than one club participating in the same UEFA club competition.
3. In the case of two or more clubs which are under common control, only one may participate in the same UEFA club competition. In this connection, an individual or legal entity has control of a club where he/she/it:
  - (a) holds a majority of the shareholders' voting rights, or
  - (b) has the right to appoint or remove a majority of the members of the administrative, management or supervisory body, or
  - (c) is a shareholder and alone controls a majority of the shareholders' voting rights pursuant to an agreement entered into with other shareholders of the club in question.
4. The Committee for the UEFA Club Competitions will take a final decision with regard to the admission of clubs to these competitions. It furthermore reserves the right to act vis-à-vis clubs which cease to meet the above criteria in the course of an ongoing competition».

On 20 May 1998, UEFA released a press statement announcing the adoption of the Contested Rule. On 26 May 1998, UEFA communicated the Contested Rule to all its member associations through Circular Letter no. 37, a copy of which was sent to ENIC, informing that the new provision would be effective as of the start of the new season.

Subsequently, pursuant to Paragraph B.4 of the Contested Rule, the UEFA Committee for Club Competitions decided that the following criteria would determine which of two or more commonly owned clubs should be admitted to a UEFA club competition: first, the club with the highest «club coefficient» (based on the club's results of the previous five years) would be admitted; then, if the club coefficients were the same, the club with the highest «national association coefficient» (based on the previous results of all the teams of a national association) would be admitted; lastly, in case of equal national association coefficients, lots would be drawn.

On 25 June 1998, UEFA informed AEK of the criteria adopted by the UEFA Committee for Club Competitions and of the resulting non-admission of AEK to the UEFA Cup, while Slavia was authorized to compete. The Hellenic Football Association was called upon to enter a substitute for AEK, by designating the club which finished the domestic championship immediately below AEK. In the same letter, UEFA granted AEK a last opportunity to take part in the competition, if it were to submit a statement confirming a change of control in compliance with the Contested Rule by 1 July 1998 (this was later extended to 20 July 1998).

On 12 June 1998, the parties executed an arbitration agreement, by which they agreed to submit the present dispute to the Court of Arbitration for Sport («CAS») in accordance with the Code of Sports-related Arbitration (the «Code»).

On 15 June 1998, AEK and Slavia filed with the CAS a request for arbitration together with several exhibits, primarily petitioning that the Contested Rule be declared void or annulled (see infra, para. 32). On the same day, AEK and Slavia also filed a request for interim relief, petitioning that during the proceedings UEFA be restrained from giving effect to the Contested Rule and, in particular, from excluding either Claimant from the 1998/99 UEFA Cup competition.

UEFA filed its reply to the Claimants' request for interim relief on 26 June 1998 and filed its answer to the request for arbitration, with some exhibits, on 22 July 1998.

On 15 July 1998, the President of the Ordinary Division of CAS held a hearing at the CAS offices in Lausanne, where the parties and their counsel answered questions of fact and law raised by the President and counsel presented oral arguments.

On 16 July 1998, the CAS issued a «Procedural Order on Application for Preliminary Relief», granting the following interim relief:

- «1. For the duration of this arbitration or for the duration of the 1998/99 season of the UEFA Cup, whichever is shorter, the Respondent shall not give effect to the decision taken by its Executive Committee on May 19, 1998 regarding the "Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs";
2. As a result, the Respondent shall admit AEK Athens to the 1998/99 UEFA Cup Competition, in addition to Slavia Prague;
3. The costs of the present stage of the proceedings shall be settled in the final award or in any other final disposition of this arbitration».

As a result, AEK and Slavia were allowed to participate in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup (where they were eliminated after winning a few rounds of the competition and did not end up playing each other).

According to the grounds of the interim order, released the following day, the CAS based its decision primarily on the circumstance that UEFA violated its duties of good faith and procedural fairness insofar as it enacted the Contested Rule too late, when the Cup Regulations for the 1998/99 season – containing no restriction for multiple ownership – had already been adopted, and shortly before the start of the 1998/99 season, at a time when ENIC and its clubs could legitimately expect that no restriction was going to be adopted for the said season.

In the interim order the CAS left open for the final award the question whether the Contested Rule could be deemed lawful under competition law and civil law, stating that all findings of fact and legal assessments were made on a prima facie basis, without prejudice to the CAS final award to be rendered after additional factual and legal investigation.

On 23 July 1998, the CAS issued a notice that the CAS Arbitration Panel for the present dispute (hereinafter the «Panel») was constituted in the following composition: Mr. Massimo Coccia as President, Dr. Christoph Vedder as arbitrator appointed by the Claimants and Mr. George Abela as arbitrator appointed by the Respondent.

On 4 September 1998, upon request of the Claimants, pursuant to Article R44.3 of the Code the Panel ordered the Respondent to produce the reports and minutes of the meetings of the UEFA Juridical Committee and of the UEFA Committee for Club Competitions related to the present case. UEFA produced such documents, later providing a few more internal documents upon request of the Claimants.

On 14 September 1998, the CAS issued an order of procedure, detailing the procedural guidelines for the conduct of the arbitration. The order of procedure was accepted and countersigned by both sides. Subsequently, in the course of the proceedings, the Panel supplemented the initial order of procedure with several other orders concerning procedural and evidentiary questions.

On 15 October 1998, the Claimants filed their statement of claim, together with eleven bundles of exhibits. UEFA's response, together with forty exhibits, was submitted to the CAS on 27 November 1998.

On 18 November 1998, the Claimants filed with the CAS a petition pursuant to Article R34 of the Code, challenging the appointment of Mr. George Abela as arbitrator, on the grounds that some circumstances gave rise to legitimate doubts over his independence vis-à-vis UEFA, and requesting his removal. On 25 November 1998, Mr. Abela communicated to the CAS that he deemed the Claimants' allegations to be totally unfounded and unjustified; however, because of the very fact that doubts had been expressed regarding his independence and impartiality, for the sake of the CAS he felt that he had to resign from his function as arbitrator in the present case.

On 3 December 1998, the Respondent communicated to the CAS that, in substitution of Mr. Abela, it appointed as arbitrator Dr. Dirk-Reiner Martens. Therefore, the Panel was reconstituted in the new formation comprising Mr. Coccia as President and Messrs. Vedder and Martens as arbitrators. No objection has been raised by either party with respect to the new formation of the Panel.

On 24 December 1998, the Claimants filed with the CAS their reply to UEFA's response. On 1 February 1999, the Respondent filed its rejoinder. Subsequently, on 26 and 28 February 1999, both sides submitted their lists of witnesses and expert witnesses to be summoned to the hearing.

On 12 March 1999, the Panel issued a procedural order detailing directions with respect to the hearing and to the witnesses and experts to be heard.

The hearing was held on 25 and 26 March 1999 at the World Trade Center in Lausanne. The Panel was present, assisted by the ad hoc clerk Mr. Stefano Bastianon, attorney-at-law in Busto Arsizio/IT, and by Mr. Matthieu Reeb, attorney-at-law and counsel to the CAS. The Claimants were represented by Mr. Petros Stathis, General Manager of AEK, and Mr. Vladimir Leska, General Manager of Slavia Prague, assisted by his personal interpreter, and represented and assisted by the following attorneys: Mr. Michael Beloff QC and Mr. Tim Kerr, attorneys-at-law in London/UK (Gray's Inn), Mr. Stephen Kon, Ms. Lesley Farrel and Mr. Tom Usher, attorneys-at-law in London/UK (SJ Berwin), Mr. Jean-Louis Dupont, attorney-at-law in Brussels/BEL, Mr. Marco Niedermann and Mr. Roberto Dallafior, attorneys-at-law in Zurich/CH. The Respondent was represented by Mr. Marcus Studer, Deputy Secretary General of UEFA, and represented and assisted by Mr. Ivan Cherpillod, attorney-at-law in Lausanne/CH, and by Mr. Alasdair Bell, attorney-at-law in Brussels/BEL. With the agreement of all parties two directors of ENIC, Mr. Rasesh Thakkar and (after his testimony had been given) Mr. Daniel Levy, also attended the hearing.

During the two days of hearing the following witnesses and expert witnesses were heard: Mr. Gerald Boon (economist of Deloitte & Touche), Mr. Ivo Trijbits (legal counsel to the Dutch club AFC Ajax NV), Mr. Daniel Levy (managing director of ENIC), Sir John Smith (advisor on security issues to the English Football Association), Lord Kingsland QC (former Member of the European Parliament) and Prof. Paul Weiler (professor of law at Harvard Law School), all called by the Claimants; Mr. Gordon Taylor (chief executive of the Professional Footballers Association) and Prof. Gary Roberts (professor of law at Tulane Law School), called by the Respondent. Each witness and expert witness was invited by the Panel to introduce himself and to tell the truth subject, as to statements related to facts, to the sanctions of perjury in accordance with Article R44.2 of the Code and Articles 307 and 309 of the Swiss Penal Code; each witness and expert witness rendered his testimony and was then examined and cross-examined by the parties and questioned by the Panel.

The parties presented their opening and intermediate statements on 25 March 1999 and their final arguments on 26 March 1999, the Respondent having the floor last in accordance with Article R44.2 of the Code. At the end of the final arguments both sides confirmed their written legal petitions (infra, paras. 1 and 4), with counsel for the Claimants also petitioning that the interim stay of the Contested Rule be extended indefinitely and that the award be communicated to the parties on a Friday after the closing of the London stock exchange and rendered public on the following Monday. The parties did not raise with the Panel any objection in respect of their right to be heard and to be treated equally in the present arbitration proceedings.

On 26 March 1999, after the parties' final arguments, the Panel closed the hearing and reserved its final award.

LAW

Parties' legal petitions and basic positions

1. The Claimants presented in their request for arbitration of 15 June 1998 and confirmed in their statement of claim of 15 October 1998 the following legal petitions:

«That it be declared that the resolution of the Executive Committee of the UEFA of 19 May 1998, as notified to the UEFA member associations on 26 May 1998, regarding the Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs is void;

eventualiter:

that the resolution of the Executive Committee of the UEFA of 19 May 1998, as notified to the UEFA member associations on 26 May 1998, regarding the Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs be annulled;

subeventualiter:

that the Defendant be ordered not to deny now and in the future the admission of the Clubs to the UEFA Club Competitions on the ground that they are under common control; with all costs and compensations to be charged to the Defendant».

At the hearing the Claimants also petitioned that the stay of the Contested Rule ordered by the CAS on 16 July 1998 be extended indefinitely and that the award be notified to the parties on a Friday afternoon and rendered public on the following Monday. The latter petition was subsequently reiterated in writing, with no objection raised by the Respondent.

2. The Claimants argue that the Contested Rule is unlawful because it violates Swiss civil law, European Community (hereinafter «EC») competition law and Swiss competition law, general principles of law, and EC provisions on freedom of establishment and free movement of capital. The Claimants focus their grievances particularly on Paragraph B.3 of the Contested Rule, providing that «in the case of two or more clubs which are under common control, only one may participate in the same UEFA club competition». In summary, they assert the unlawfulness of the Contested Rule on the following ten grounds:
  - (a) infringement of Swiss civil law (grounds 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the statement of claim): violation of the UEFA Statutes because of the argued creation of different categories of members; breach of the principle of equal treatment because of discrimination between clubs which are under common control and clubs which are not; disregard of the Claimants' right to be heard; unjustified violation of the Claimants' personality;
  - (b) infringement of EC competition law (grounds 5 and 7 of the statement of claim): contravention of Article 85 (now 81) of the EC Treaty, because of an agreement between undertakings which has the object and effect of restricting, distorting and preventing competition and limiting investment within the common market; contravention of Article 86 (now 82) of the EC Treaty, because of an abuse by

- UEFA of its dominant position within the market for the provision of European football and related markets;
- (c) infringement of Swiss competition law (grounds 6 and 8 of the statement of claim): contravention of Article 5 of the Swiss Federal Act on cartels, because of an agreement between undertakings significantly affecting competition; contravention of Article 7 of the Swiss Federal Act on cartels, because of an abuse of UEFA's dominant position;
  - (d) infringement of EC law on freedom of movement (ground 10 of the statement of claim): contravention of Articles 52 (now 43) and 73 B (now 56) of the EC Treaty, because of restrictions on freedom of establishment and on free movement of capitals;
  - (e) infringement of general principles of law (ground 9 of the statement of claim): abuse by UEFA of its regulatory power with the purpose of preserving its position as the dominant organizer of European football competitions.
3. Underlying all such grounds are the Claimants' basic allegations that UEFA's predominant purpose in adopting the Contested Rule has been to preserve its monopolistic control over European football competitions and that a code of ethics would be adequate enough to address the issue of conflict of interests in the event that two commonly owned clubs are to participate in the same UEFA competition.
4. The Respondent submitted both in its answer of 22 July 1998 and in its response of 27 November 1998 the following legal petition:
- «UEFA respectfully requests the Court of Arbitration for Sport to dismiss all the legal petitions submitted by the Claimants, with all costs and compensations to be charged to the Claimants».*
5. The Respondent asserts that each and every legal ground put forward by the Claimants is entirely without merit. In particular, the Respondent asserts that it enacted the Contested Rule with the sole purpose of protecting the integrity of European football competitions and avoiding conflicts of interests. The Respondent argues that a code of ethics would be inadequate to that purpose, whereas the Contested Rule is a balanced and proportionate way of addressing the question, as it deals only with the issue of common control – basing the definition of «control» on EC Directive no. 88/627 (the so-called «Transparency Directive») – rather than with investment in football clubs.

Procedural issues

Jurisdiction of the CAS

6. The CAS has jurisdiction over this dispute on the basis of the arbitration agreement executed by and between the parties on 12 June 1998. Neither side has contested the validity of such arbitration agreement nor raised any objection to the jurisdiction of the CAS over the present dispute.

7. In addition, the Panel notes that the CAS could also be deemed to have jurisdiction under Article 56 of the UEFA Statutes, according to which «CAS shall have exclusive jurisdiction to deal with all civil law disputes (of a pecuniary nature) relating to UEFA matters which arise between UEFA and Member Associations, clubs, players or officials, and between themselves» (emphasis added).

Applicable law

8. Pursuant to Article R45 of the Code, the dispute must be decided «according to the rules of law chosen by the parties or, in the absence of such a choice, according to Swiss law». The parties agreed at the hearing of 15 July 1998 and confirmed in their briefs that Swiss law governs all issues of association law arising in this arbitration, and that the Panel should apply EC competition law and Swiss competition law if the dispute falls within the scope of these laws.
9. The choice of Swiss law does not raise any questions. Even if the parties had not validly agreed on its application, Swiss civil law would be applicable anyway pursuant to Article R45 of the Code and to Article 59 of the UEFA Statutes, according to which UEFA Statutes are governed in all respects by Swiss law. As to Swiss competition law, an arbitration panel sitting in Switzerland is certainly bound to take into account any relevant Swiss mandatory rules in accordance with Article 18 of the Swiss private international law statute (Loi fédérale sur le droit international privé of 18 December 1987, or «LDIP»).
10. With regard to EC competition law, the Panel holds that, even if the parties had not validly agreed on its applicability to this case, it should be taken into account anyway. Indeed, in accordance with Article 19 of the LDIP, an arbitration tribunal sitting in Switzerland must take into consideration also foreign mandatory rules, even of a law different from the one determined through the choice-of-law process, provided that three conditions are met:
  - (a) such rules must belong to that special category of norms which need to be applied irrespective of the law applicable to the merits of the case (so-called lois d'application immédiate);
  - (b) there must be a close connection between the subject matter of the dispute and the territory where the mandatory rules are in force;
  - (c) from the point of view of Swiss legal theory and practice, the mandatory rules must aim to protect legitimate interests and crucial values and their application must allow an appropriate decision.
11. The Panel is of the opinion that all such conditions are met and that, pursuant to Article 19 of LDIP, EC competition law has to be taken into account. Firstly, antitrust provisions are often quoted by scholars and judges as fundamental rules typically pertaining to the said category of mandatory rules. Then, the close connection with the case derives from the fact that EC competition law has direct effect in eighteen European countries – fifteen from the European Union and three from the European Economic Area – in whose jurisdiction one can find most of the strongest football clubs taking part in UEFA competitions and, in particular, one of the Claimants (AEK). Lastly, the Swiss Cartel Law, as is the case with various national competition laws around Europe (well beyond the borders of the said eighteen countries), has been inspired by and modelled on EC competition law; accordingly, the interests and values protected by such EC provisions are shared and supported by the Swiss legal system (as well as by most European legal systems).

12. The Panel notes that the Claimants have argued inter alia that UEFA violated the provisions of the EC Treaty on the right of establishment and on free movement of capital, but the parties have not explicitly agreed on the applicability of such provisions to this case. However, for the same reasons outlined with respect to EC competition law (supra, paras. 10-11), the Panel holds that it must also take into account EC provisions on freedom of establishment and of movement of capital.

Merits

Relevant circumstances concerning European football

13. Prior to discussing the specific legal issues raised by the parties, the Panel wishes to describe and discuss certain circumstances and situations concerning European football which have to be taken into account with reference to all such legal issues. In particular, the Panel considers it useful to briefly describe the current structure and regulation of football in Europe and to address the issue of the so-called «integrity of the game».
  - a) Regulation and organization of football in Europe
14. In European football there are several private bodies performing regulatory and administrative functions, each of which has different institutional roles, constituencies and goals. Leaving aside the international football federation («FIFA»), which is certainly the body exercising the highest regulatory and supervisory authority worldwide, UEFA is the only regulator of football throughout Europe. UEFA performs its regulatory function with respect to both professional and amateur football, including youth football. For the time being, UEFA is also the only entity organizing pan-European competitions both for club teams and national representative teams. With particular regard to UEFA club competitions, each season the participating clubs are the few top-ranked clubs of each national league, which at the end of a season earn the right to play in the UEFA competitions of the subsequent season. As already mentioned, UEFA organizes the Champions' League, the Cup Winners' Cup (cancelled as of the 1999/2000 season) and the UEFA Cup, with the minor competition Intertoto Cup used also as a qualifier for the UEFA Cup. The competition format has traditionally been the knock-out system based on the aggregate result of one home-match and one away-match (played two weeks later), with away goals and penalty kicks as tie-breakers. Clubs (particularly those investing more) tend to dislike this system because a single unlucky match can be enough to terminate the whole international season, and because there are fewer high-level matches to play. Mainly for this reason, UEFA has in recent years organized rounds of competition (particularly in the Champions' League) based on small groups of teams playing each other home and away in round-robin fashion, with the top clubs of each group qualifying for the next round. The trend seems to be towards increasing this competition format, reserving the knock-out system only for a few rounds of the competition.

15. Since UEFA is a confederation of fifty-one national football federations, it has below it many football associations and organizations which set rules for their constituent members, in particular clubs and individuals associated with them, and organize and/or oversee all national, regional and local competitions. The structure of European football is often described as a hierarchical pyramid (see the EC Commission's «consultation document» drafted by the Directorate General X and entitled The European model of sport, Brussels 1999, chapter one).
16. At national level, the primary regulators are the national federations. Each national federation has a wide constituency of regional and local federations, associations, clubs, leagues, and individuals such as players, coaches and referees. National federations are private bodies which pursue the mission – which in some countries is entrusted upon them by national legislation as a form of delegation of governmental powers (as is the case, e.g., in France with Law no. 84-610 of 16 July 1984) – to promote and organize football at all levels and to care for the interests of the whole of the sport and all its members, whether they are involved in the amateur or in the professional game. National federations also organize and manage the national representative teams, selections of the best national players which compete against the other national representative teams in competitions such as the World Cup, the Olympic Games and the European Championship.
17. In the European countries where football is most developed, a very important role is also performed by professional «leagues» (e.g., the «Premier League» in England, the «Liga Nacional de Fútbol Profesional» in Spain or the «Lega Nazionale Professionisti» in Italy). National professional leagues are bodies concerned only with professional football, as their members are only the clubs which participate in the most important national professional championships. They organize and manage yearly, under the jurisdiction of the respective national federation, the highest national professional championship. Such annual championship is traditionally organized in round-robin format, with each club playing against all the other clubs twice, once at home and once away; clubs are awarded points depending upon whether they win (three points), draw (one point) or lose matches (no points), and the club with the highest number of points each season is the champion (usually with no final playoff, differently from other sports). National professional leagues are indeed similar in many respects to trade associations. They exist primarily to protect the interests of their member clubs and to provide them with some services, for instance settling disputes between them and trying to maximize their commercial benefits (e.g., selling collectively some of the television rights) and to minimize their costs (e.g., negotiating with players' associations).

18. Throughout Europe a general trend can be detected towards an increasing independence and autonomy of leagues vis-à-vis the national federations; accordingly, tense confrontation between leagues and federations is nowadays not rare. However, thus far leagues are still associated within, and supervised by, the respective national federations – in several countries, this is even mandated by the law – with degrees of autonomy varying from country to country. Due to this system, national football leagues around Europe do not enjoy the absolute independence and autonomy which United States sports leagues enjoy. In addition to other major differences, European professional leagues are not «closed» leagues, and their membership varies slightly each season because at the end of the season some of the bottom-ranked clubs are relegated to the inferior national division and the highest ranked clubs from such division are promoted to the higher national division. This system of relegation and promotion applies more or less in the same way to all the other national and regional divisions and championships below the high-level ones. Consequently, it can happen in European football – as indeed it has done more than just a few times – that amateur or semi-amateur clubs, even from small towns, over the years earn their way up to professional championships and eventually transform into successful professional clubs. This system of promotion and relegation is generally regarded as «one of the key features of the European model of sport» (EC Commission, DG X, The European model of sport, Brussels 1999, para. 1.1.2).

19. At pan-European level, no transnational football leagues exist yet. Currently, there is only an association of the main national leagues in Europe, which does not organize any competitions and is basically only a forum for discussion and an instrument of coordination. Recently, a private commercial group («Media Partners») has attempted to create ex novo a European football league outside of the UEFA realm and has even notified the EC Commission of a number of draft agreements between Media Partners and eighteen founder clubs – comprising some of the most famous European clubs – concerning the establishment and the administration of two main pan-European football competitions, the «Super League» and the «Pro Cup», involving a total of 132 clubs from all territories covered by UEFA-affiliated national associations (see Official Journal EC, 13 March 1999, C 70/5). For the time being this attempt seems to have been aborted, inter alia probably because UEFA has modified the organization of its competitions in a way which is certainly pleasing to most important European clubs.

20. As to European football clubs, they are not all shaped in the same legal manner around Europe. Most professional clubs are incorporated as stock companies – and sometimes their shares are even listed on some stock exchanges (e.g. Manchester United and several other clubs in England, S.S. Lazio in Italy) –, but there are countries where some or all the clubs are still unincorporated associations with sometimes thousands of members who elect the association’s board (e.g. F.C. Barcelona and Real Madrid C.F. in Spain or the German clubs).

21. The above outlined traditional structure of European football might change in the future. In particular, especially after the cited attempt of Media Partners, it might be envisaged that sooner or later there will be in some countries or at a pan-European level some closed (or semi-closed) leagues independent from national federations and from UEFA and modelled on United States professional leagues. However, for the time being, the above outlined structure still prevails and it is very difficult to compare it to the sports structure in the United States. Not only are there in Europe no closed professional leagues such as the NBA or the NFL, but there are no collegiate competitions such as the NCAA either. As a result, the Panel maintains that although any analysis of United States sports law is very instructive – in this respect the Panel appreciates the parties’ efforts in presenting the views and testimony of renowned experts on this subject – it has limited precedential value for the present dispute and its significance must be weighed very carefully. For example, the Panel considers that to characterize UEFA as a «league» comparable to United States professional leagues, as has been done in some testimony, is factually and legally misplaced and, therefore, potentially misleading for an examination of the present dispute.

b) The «integrity of the game» question

22. Much of the written and oral debate in this case has centred around the question of the «integrity of the game». Both Claimants and Respondent have shown that they are seriously concerned with this question. On the one hand, the Respondent has repeated over and over that it has a specific duty to protect the integrity of the game and that this has been the only motive behind the Contested Rule. On the other hand, the Claimants have expressly stated that they and ENIC accept and espouse the need to preserve sporting integrity, and that they also accept that UEFA has a current responsibility to safeguard the integrity of football in its role as organizer and regulator of European football competition.
23. Several witnesses have stated that the highest standards are needed for the integrity of the game (Mr. Taylor), that the integrity of sports is crucial to the sports consumer (Professor Weiler), and that «football can only continue to be successful if it is run according to the highest standards of conduct and integrity, both on and off the field» (Sir John Smith).
24. As concern for the integrity of the game is indeed common ground between the parties, the question is then how «integrity» needs to be defined and characterized in the context of sports in general and football in particular. Part of the debate between the parties has focused on integrity in its typical meaning of honesty and uprightness, and the Claimants have argued, supported by some witnesses (in particular Sir John Smith) for the necessity of a «fit and proper» test in order to vet owners, directors and executives of football clubs before allowing them to hold such positions. The debate has also evidenced the connection between the notion of integrity in football and the need for authenticity and uncertainty of results from both a sporting and an economic angle. Some witnesses have stated that uncertainty of results is the most important objective of football regulators (Mr. Taylor) and the critical element for the business value of football (Mr. Boon).
25. The Panel notes, quite obviously, that honesty and uprightness are fundamental moral qualities that are required in every field of life and of business, and football is no exception. More specifically, however, the Panel is of the opinion that the notion of integrity as applied to football requires something more than mere honesty and uprightness, both from a sporting and from a business point of view. The Panel considers that integrity, in football, is crucially related to the authenticity of results, and has a critical core which is that, in the public's perception, both single matches and entire championships must be a true test of the best possible athletic, technical, coaching and management skills of the opposing sides. Due to the high social significance of football in Europe, it is not enough that competing athletes, coaches or managers are in fact honest; the public must perceive that they try their best to win and, in particular, that clubs make management or coaching decisions based on the single objective of their club winning against any other club. This particular requirement is inherent in the nature of sports and, with specific regard to football, is enhanced by the notorious circumstance that European football clubs represent considerably more in emotional terms to fans – the ultimate consumers – than any other form of leisure or of business.

26. The Panel finds inter alia confirmation and support for the view that the crucial element of integrity in football is the public's perception of the authenticity of results in two documents exhibited by the Claimants, viz. the well researched and very insightful reports presented by Sir John Smith to the English Football Association on «Betting on professional football within the professional game» (1997) and on «Football, its values, finances and reputation» (1998). The Smith reports are particularly valuable evidence because they were not prepared specifically for this case. Both reports make quite clear that the most important requirement for football is not honesty in itself or authenticity of results in itself, but rather the public's perception of such honesty and such authenticity.

27. Here are a few excerpts from the Smith reports (with emphasis added):

«public perception dictates that players and others involved in the game should not benefit from their “insider” position»;

«the public has a right to expect that a participant in football will play for his team to win, or make management decisions based on the team winning, as their sole objective. Anything whatsoever that detracts from that prime purpose has to be positively discouraged»;

«even if a result of such a bet is not that a player or official actually intends not to try to win the game, the public's perception of the integrity of the game would be prejudiced in such a situation»;

«the interest of fans in the game would quite rightly not continue at present levels if they had reason to believe that the outcome of any matches was or may be controlled by factors other than personal efforts of those participating in the game, aimed at their team winning»;

«football must preserve its great strength in business terms: the enormous hold which individual clubs have over the loyalty of their supporters. This makes the game attractive to advertisers, sponsors, television and so on. Maintaining that loyalty is not being sentimental; being responsive to spectator concerns is simply good business. That means, amongst other things, being able to reassure supporters that the game is straight».

28. Having clarified what is meant by integrity of the game, the question is then whether multiple ownership of clubs in the context of the same competition has anything to do with such integrity and, therefore, represents a legitimate concern for a sports regulator and organizer. In other words, can multiple ownership within the same football competition be publicly perceived as affecting the authenticity of sporting results? Can the public perceive a conflict of interest which might contaminate the competitive process when two commonly owned clubs play in the same sporting event?

29. The Claimants have addressed this question mostly from the angle of match-fixing, arguing that it is highly unlikely that a match could be fixed without being detected sooner or later and that, insofar as match-fixing is possible at all, it is also feasible – as has happened on some occasions in the past – with respect to matches between unrelated clubs. In particular, the Claimants have argued that match-fixing necessarily involves complicity by a significant number of people whom, if the truth were discovered, would be ruined and each of whom would, after the event, have a hold over the accomplices. The Claimants have also argued that it is in the interest of a common owner, especially if the common owner is a corporation listed on the stock exchange, that each club does as well as possible on both the economic and sporting level, and that the existing criminal and sporting penalties are sufficient to deal with the risk of match-fixing as well as the perceived risk thereof. The Claimants have supported such arguments with several written statements by players, referees and managers, all essentially asserting in a similar vein that it is almost impossible to fix a football match, that multi-club ownership does not entail any greater threat to sporting integrity than single ownership and that a pledge to respect a «code of ethics» would suffice. Mr. Boon has also testified that multi-club owners would place their entire business at risk if they sought to fix matches and, therefore, this cannot be part of their financial strategy or activity. The Respondent has, in turn, presented some written statements supporting its argument that common ownership is a threat to the integrity of competition and that self-control by multi-club owners through a code of ethics would not be an adequate response to such threat.
30. The Panel is not persuaded that the main problem lies in direct match-fixing (meaning by this the instructions and bribes given to some players so that they lose a match). Indeed, the Panel finds some merit in the Claimants' arguments that direct match-fixing in football is quite difficult (albeit far from impossible, as notorious past cases in France, Italy or other countries demonstrate), that an attempt at direct match-fixing has a fair chance of being detected sooner or later, that any such discovery would eventually harm the multi-club controlling company and that in principle the honesty rate of multi-club owners, directors and executives cannot be any worse than that of single club owners, directors and executives.
31. However, even assuming that no multi-club owner, director or executive will ever try to directly fix the result of a match between their clubs or will ever break the law, the Panel is of the opinion that the question of integrity, as defined, must still be examined, also in the broader context of a whole football season and of a whole football competition. In short, the Panel finds that the main problem lies in the aggregate of three issues that need further analysis: the allocation of resources by the common owner among its clubs, the administration of the commonly owned clubs in view of a match between them, and the interest of third clubs.

32. The analysis of such issues relies on two assumptions. The first assumption, as already mentioned, is that multi-club owners, directors or executives do not try to directly fix a match and always act in compliance with any laws and with sporting regulations. The second underlying assumption is that the multi-club controlling company's executives are in constant contact with the controlled clubs' own executives and structures, as is normal within a group of companies; in fact, according to EC case law and practice all the companies within a group – parent companies, holding companies, subsidiaries, etc. – are considered as a single economic entity (see e.g. the EC Commission Notice «on the concept of undertakings concerned», in Official Journal EC, 2 March 1998, C 66/14, para. 19). The Panel has indeed been impressed by ENIC's description of its bona fide efforts at isolating the management of each of its controlled clubs from the controlling company's and from other clubs' structures. However, the analysis is not to be made with reference to ENIC but with reference to a hypothetical individual, company or group owning two or more football clubs and whose organization might be less careful than ENIC about isolating each controlled club's structure. After all, even ENIC's isolation policy does not seem so strict, as Mr. Boon reports that:

«during the time for completion of this report, I have also noted that employees from ENIC's head office in London have travelled to Greece, Italy, the Czech Republic and Switzerland to impart their industry and cross-club experience to individual clubs controlled by ENIC».

This has been confirmed by Mr. Patrick Comminos, General Manager of AEK, who has stated in his written testimony:

«As general Manager, my contact with the owners of the club is on a daily basis, especially with whichever member of ENIC is in Athens at the time».

Accordingly, the Panel is of the opinion that also the second underlying assumption is appropriate.

33. The first issue is the allocation of resources by the common owner among its clubs. Given that in UEFA competitions there is only one sporting winner and there are only a few business winners (the clubs which advance to the last rounds of the competition), and given that a huge amount of money is required in order to keep a football club at the top European level, it would appear to be a waste of resources for a common owner to invest in exactly the same way in two or more clubs participating in the same competition. This is particularly true if the commonly owned clubs are located in different countries (as is generally the case, since at national level there are often rules hindering multiple ownership). After the Bosman ruling (EC Court of Justice, Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921), competition for hiring the top European players is wholly transnational, whereas most of a club's revenues – television rights, game and season tickets, merchandising, advertising and sponsorship – still depend on the national and local markets because of consumer preferences and natural barriers. Therefore, although the costs of creating a team which will potentially be successful in a UEFA competition tend nowadays to be comparable all over Europe – players’ remuneration being by far the single most important cost for professional clubs – a club’s revenues and rates of return on investments are quite different even with comparable successful sporting results. Revenues and rates of return for football clubs are much higher in a few countries, such as England, France, Germany, Italy and Spain. This explains why the best, and most costly, players always end up in those few countries and why clubs from those countries currently dominate UEFA competitions.

34. The data contained in the economic report presented by Mr. Boon provide ample support for such propositions. As to transnational competition for players and as to their remuneration, Mr. Boon’s research shows that: «internationally renowned clubs in Europe are willing to compete for the services of leading football players to maintain their successful international position. They are also typically the clubs with the financial resources to do so. ... it costs a significant amount to buy a leading player out of his existing club contract and, typically, to offer the player a premium on his remuneration to entice him to move elsewhere. ... the rate of increase in players’ wages has been nothing short of spectacular in the last five years. In Italy, from 1995/96 to 1996/97 the increase was 24.1% and 35% in the English Premier League».

Mr. Boon’s report shows also that «there is an active cross-border European transfer market in which clubs compete for the top players. ... 31% of transfers between major European associations in 1996/97 were cross border».

With regard to the enormous disparity of revenues between different countries, Mr. Boon reports that «in 1996/97 the second largest English club (Newcastle) had a turnover of ... $69.9 million and Juventus’ turnover in Serie A was $74.1 million; whereas SK Slavia Prague (the number 2 Czech club) had an income of ... $2.2 million and AEK (one of the top 3 Greek clubs) an income of ... $4.9 million» (figures in national currencies have been omitted).

With regard to sporting results deriving from this situation, Mr. Boon confirms the well-known fact that «there is some polarisation of market power developing within the European market. That polarisation is manifest in that clubs from the larger (and relatively more prosperous) countries with bigger “budgets” for transfers and players’ wages have increasingly come to dominate European competition».

35. Given the above situation, assuming the viewpoint of the shareholders of a corporation controlling two clubs of different nationality participating in the same UEFA competition, it would certainly be a more efficient and more productive allocation of the available resources (and thus an economically sounder conduct by directors and executives) to allocate them, and thus to allocate the best players, in such a way as to have a «first team», capable of competing at top European level and situated in the richer market, and a «second team» located in the less developed market and which would be useful for, inter alia, allowing younger players to gain experience and to be tested with a view to a possible transfer to the first team. The testimony of Mr. Trijbits has given some empirical evidence of this kind of attitude by top rated clubs which acquire interests in clubs of lower rank.

36. The Panel is of the opinion that such differentiated allocation of resources among the commonly owned clubs is in itself perfectly legitimate from an economic point of view, and given its economic soundness it might even be regarded as a duty of the directors vis-à-vis the shareholders of the controlling corporation. However, the fans/consumers of the «second club» – which, in order to be eligible for UEFA competitions, is necessarily one of the top clubs of its country, supported in its international matches by most of the football fans of that country – would inevitably perceive that management decisions are not based on the only objective of their club winning against anybody else.
37. Furthermore, even if the different clubs are located in equally profitable (or unprofitable) markets and there is no diverse treatment as a first team and a second team, the common parent company might nevertheless decide, as is usual in a group of companies, to divert resources from one controlled club to another in order to follow wholly legitimate business strategies, for example if the sale of one of the clubs is contemplated. Some examples of such diversion of resources have been provided by Mr. Taylor, who stated in his written testimony:

«When we had common ownership in this country of Oxford United and Derby County by Robert Maxwell there was a transfer of Oxford United's leading players to Derby County at a sum that was less the normal market value and this was very much against the wishes of the then manager of Oxford, Mark Lawrenson. We also had problems regarding Peter Johnson, owner of Tranmere Rovers, moving to Everton and consequent problems with the transfer of monies and questions about the transfer of the goalkeeper from Tranmere to Everton. Similar problems occurred with common ownership by Anton Johnson of Rotherham United and Southern United and there were allegations of asset stripping».

In any event, the Panel is of the opinion that in situations of common ownership, even if a diversion of resources does not really happen, the fans of either club would always be inclined to doubt whether any transfer of players or other management move is decided only in the interest of the club they support rather than in the interest of the other club controlled by the same owner.

38. The second issue is the administration of commonly owned clubs before a match between them. It has already been described how shareholders, and thus executives, of the common parent company might have a legitimate economic interest in seeing a given controlled club prevail over another because of the better financial rewards which can be reaped from the success of the first one. In line with the initial assumption, the Panel considers that multi-club owners or executives might favour one club over another without any need to violate the law or to resort to risky attempts of direct match-fixing. In this respect, if a coach (or maybe a club physician) is encouraged or forced to ensure that the best team available is not fielded, it is unclear whether this could meet the definition of match-fixing. However, since there are sporting rules prescribing that clubs always field the best team available – albeit such rules are usually deemed impossible to apply and enforce – and risks (due to the involvement of coaches or physicians) perhaps close to those of direct match-fixing, the Panel does not wish to take into account this hypothetical circumstance in the present analysis.

39. Executives might have various ways of affecting or conditioning the performance of their teams in a given match, or set of matches, without even getting close to violating laws or sporting regulations and without even speaking to players or coaches. A first way might be connected with performance-related bonuses, which are wholly legitimate under any law. As has been evidenced at the hearing, bonuses linked to results in single matches or in entire championships are always a fair portion of players' (and coaches') remuneration, and ENIC clubs are no exception to this practice (Mr. Levy's testimony). In Mr. Boon's written report it is stated that one of the relevant costs associated with a club playing in Europe is «player bonuses for playing and winning UEFA matches». Mr. Boon also testified that all club owners and executives would, understandably, like a larger percentage of the total player remuneration to relate to performance than the percentage which usually applies (10% to 20%). The Panel observes that the widespread practice of bonuses demonstrates that professional players – no differently from other professionals (one can think of contingent fees) – are quite sensitive to incentives. Accordingly, it would be easily possible and perfectly legal for multi-club executives, by adjusting bonuses, to highly motivate the players of one team with suitable incentives and not at all (or much less) the players of the other team.
40. A second way might be connected with players' transfers. Up to a certain point in the football season (nowadays, very late in the season) it is always possible to obtain new players or to let players leave. It is quite easy to induce players to move from a club to another through a wage hike or the opportunity to play in a winning team. Therefore, at any moment before a match between the commonly owned clubs, team rosters could easily change because of management and business needs rather than coaching decisions. One can find in the sporting press plenty of examples of players given away or hired by club owners and executives without the prior consent, and sometimes even without the prior knowledge, of the coaching staff.
41. A third relevant way of influencing the outcome of a match between commonly owned clubs might be connected with «insider information». One team could have, through common executives, access to special knowledge or information about the other team which could give the first team an unfair advantage. There is a relevant difference between widely available information (such as tapes of the other team's official matches or any news which has appeared in the press) and confidential information obtained from a person within the opponent club's structure (e.g. with regard to unpublicized injuries, training sessions, planned line-up, match tactics and any other peculiar situation concerning the other team).
42. Another, more trivial, way of conditioning team performances could even be connected with the day-to-day administration of a team in view of a match, particularly of an away match. There are plenty of choices usually made by club executives – e.g. with regard to travel, lodging, training, medical care and the like – which may condition either positively or negatively the attitude and performance of professional football players.
43. The third issue concerns the interest of third clubs. Whenever competitions have qualification rounds based on groups of teams playing each other home and away in round-robin format, the interest of unrelated third clubs ending up in a qualification group together with two commonly owned clubs is quite evident. Football history provides unfortunately various instances of matches – even in the World Cup under the eyes of hundreds of millions of television viewers – where both teams needed a draw to the detriment of a third team and in fact obtained such a draw without much effort and without anybody explicitly admitting any agreement afterwards (in fact, probably true agreements were never made, common interest being enough for an unspoken understanding, an «entente cordiale»). It is true, this can happen with single owned clubs as well as with commonly owned clubs, but the multi-club owner or executive has additional ways of facilitating an (already easy) unspoken understanding between the teams, for example setting bonuses for drawing higher than, or even equal to, bonuses for winning the match. A third club's interest might also be affected when, before playing the last match or matches of a round-robin group, one of the two commonly owned clubs has already virtually qualified or been eliminated and the other is still struggling; in this case the multi-club owner or executive might be tempted to induce (by the described lawful means) the first club to favour the other club in the last match or matches.

44. As mentioned (supra, para. 14), due also to the preferences of the most influential clubs, the current trend in the organization of UEFA competitions (particularly the Champions' League) is more and more towards qualification rounds in round-robin format and, conversely, away from competition rounds played in knock-out format. Such an organizational trend renders this issue particularly delicate, because it increases the need to protect third competitors. Needless to say, even if in fact the outcome of a game between two commonly owned clubs is absolutely genuine, a disadvantaged third club and its fans will inevitably tend to perceive the outcome as unfair.
45. The analysis of the three above issues shows that, even assuming that multi-club owners, directors or executives always act in compliance with the law and do not try to directly fix any match, there are situations when the economic interests of the multi-club owner or parent company are at odds with sporting needs in terms of public perception of the authenticity of results. It may be desirable that multi-club directors and executives safeguard sporting values and act counter to the parent company's wishes and economic interests. However, what about the legitimate economic interests of the shareholders? What about the investors in the stock exchange? Would the shareholders and investors be prepared to accept from a director or an executive the «sporting uncertainty» justification for not having done his/her best, without violating any laws, to promote their economic interests? The Panel is of the opinion that in such a situation there is an inescapable pressure for legitimate (or sometimes «grey-area») behaviour which is in the interest of the controlling company and in the interest of some of the controlled clubs, but not in the interest of all the controlled clubs and their fans, or not in the interest of third clubs or football fans in general. As a result, the Panel holds that a problem of conflict of interest does exist in multi-club ownership situations.
46. Several sporting bodies and some State legislators have indeed issued rules in order to deal with this question. For example, among European sports bodies there are rules dealing with multi-club ownership in the English Premier League, the English Football League, the Scottish Football Association, and the Spanish football and basketball professional leagues.

In Spain a limit to multi-club ownership in the same competition is prescribed by law: Article 23 of the 1990 Sports Act («Ley 10/1990, de 15 de octubre, del Deporte» as subsequently amended) currently forbids any kind of cross-ownership between Spanish professional clubs and limits the possible direct or indirect shareholding or voting rights in more than one club participating in the same competition to 5%. In Spain, the issue appears to be of particular public awareness because of the case of a well-known entrepreneur who has been suspected and found to hold indirectly, through various companies or figure-heads, shares in various professional football clubs, some of them participating in the same league division. In particular, the Spanish press raised some serious suspicions with regard to the outcome of certain matches between clubs allegedly under common control. Rules prohibiting investment in more than one professional club can also be found in renowned United States sports leagues, such as the National Basketball Association («NBA»), the National Football League («NFL»), the National Hockey League («NHL»), and in baseball the American League and the National League (forming together the Major League Baseball or «MLB») and the minor leagues associated with the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues («NAPBL»). This attitude by the most important American sports leagues seems to be shared by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which has stated that «no single owner could engage in professional football for profit without at least one other competing team. Separate owners for each team are desirable in order to convince the public of the honesty of the competition» (Judgement of 27 January 1982, NASL v. NFL, 670 F.2d 1249, at 1251, emphasis added).

47. The Panel notes that there is evidence enough showing that a certain number of sports regulators, and some national legislators or judges, perceive that multi-club ownership within the same sporting competition implies a conflict of interest. Even Mr. Karel Van Miert, EC Commissioner for competition policy, has stated before the European Parliament, in reply to written and oral questions posed by some Parliament Members, that «clearly, if clubs with the same owner can take part in the same competitions, whether national or international, doubts may arise as to whether the outcome is really undecided in advance» (answers given by Mr. Van Miert on behalf of the Commission to parliamentary questions nos. E-3980/97, 0538/98, P-2361/98, emphasis added).

In his testimony, Professor Weiler characterized this conflict of interest issue as an «illusion» and counsel for the Claimants picked up and utilized such locution in the course of the final oral argument. The Panel is of the opinion that, even assuming (but not conceding) that there is no true conflict of interest, it must be acknowledged that «clearly ... doubts may arise» (as put by Mr. Van Miert). The mere fact that some knowledgeable authorities like sports regulators, national legislators or judges, and European commissioners are under such «illusion» proves that the general public – the consumers – might also easily fall under an analogous «illusion». After all, even Professor Weiler himself, a couple of years before studying in depth the issue of multi-club ownership in order to be an expert witness before this Panel, wrote that «from the point of view of the League as a whole, there are also significant potential advantages from assigning control and responsibility for individual teams to an identifiable owner. On the playing field or court, this reinforces the impression among fans that their favored team is fully committed to winning all its games. ... With respect to business decisions made off the field, separate ownership and control of individual teams may be more likely to enhance the team's appeal and extract the revenues available in its local market» (WEILER, Establishment of a European League, in FIBA International Legal Symposium (June 1997), Bilbao 1999, 77, at 87-88).

Therefore, the perception of an inherent conflict of interest in multi-club ownership within the same championship or competition seems wholly reasonable.

48. As a result, the Panel finds that, when commonly controlled clubs participate in the same competition, the «public's perception will be that there is a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results». This reasonable public perception, in the light of the above characterization of the integrity question within football (see supra, paras. 25-27), is enough to justify some concern, also in view of the fact that many football results are subject to betting and are inserted into football pools all over Europe. This finding in itself, obviously, does not render the Contested Rule admissible under the different principles and rules of law which still have to be analyzed. At this stage of its findings, the Panel merely concludes that ownership of multiple clubs competing in the same competition represents a justified concern for a sports regulator and organizer.

Swiss civil law

49. The Claimants argue that the Contested Rule is unlawful under Swiss civil law because of the procedure by which it was adopted and for reasons of substance. With respect to procedural grounds, the Claimants assert that in adopting and enforcing the Contested Rule the Respondent (1) violated the UEFA Statutes by creating different categories of members, and (2) failed to observe fair procedures, disregarding in particular the clubs' right to a legal hearing. As to substantive grounds, the Claimants assert that the Respondent (3) infringed the principle of equal treatment by discriminating between clubs which are under common control and clubs which are not, and (4) violated without justification the personality of the clubs. The Respondent rejects all such claims.
- a) Compliance with UEFA Statutes
50. Article 75 CC provides that a resolution taken by an organ of an association which contravenes the law or the association statutes can be judicially challenged by any member of the association who has not approved it.
51. The Claimants argue that they should be considered as «indirect members» of UEFA because they are members of the respective national associations (i.e. federations) which, in turn, are members of UEFA. Therefore, they claim that UEFA violated its own Statutes insofar as the Executive Committee created different categories of clubs – clubs under common control vis-à-vis clubs which are not – and thus different categories of indirect members, without the power to do so (as the creation of different categories of members would require an amendment to the Statutes, which can be done only by the UEFA Congress). In response, UEFA points out that the national federations rather than the clubs are its members and that, in any event, it did not create different membership categories but it merely amended the conditions of admission to UEFA club competitions in order to eliminate conflict of interest situations.

52. The Panel is not persuaded that clubs could be considered «indirect members» of UEFA. Art. 65.1 CC provides that the general assembly of a Swiss association is competent to decide on the admission of its members. If clubs had a right to be considered (indirect) members of UEFA because they are affiliated to their national federation, they evidently would acquire such status through a decision of such national federation, that is a body which surely is not the competent general assembly – the UEFA Congress – and this would be hardly compatible with Article 65.1 CC. Moreover, Article 5.1 of the UEFA Statutes, entitled «Membership», establishes that «membership of UEFA is open only to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe who are responsible for the organization and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory»; clearly clubs do not meet these requirements. Clubs are not ignored by the Statutes, as they are mentioned in several provisions (Articles 1, 7, 23, 45, 46, 49, 54, 55 and 56) but without any hint of them being considered indirect members. The UEFA Statutes attribute voting rights only to national federations, and Article 75 CC refers to members which have voting rights within the association whose resolution is challenged. Clubs are affiliated to and may have membership and voting rights within their national federations, where they can elect the federation’s board and president, who represents the national federation and thus all the national clubs within UEFA. Within the national federations there are indeed different categories of clubs – e.g. female and male clubs, amateur and professional clubs – but this depends only on provisions included in the statutes of the national federations.
53. In any event, even assuming that the clubs could be regarded as indirect members of UEFA, the Panel does not see in the Contested Rule any creation of different categories of member clubs but rather the establishment of conditions of participation in UEFA competitions. Among such conditions are also, for example, stadium safety requirements (Articles 3 and 8 of the 1998/99 Regulation of the UEFA Cup and the related booklet; see supra, para. 8). Applying the Claimants’ rationale, this would imply the creation of different categories of clubs, those with an adequate stadium and those without. In other words, any condition of admission to a competition could be interpreted as a creation of categories of clubs. The Panel considers that there is a substantial difference between «club categories» and «conditions of participation». On the one hand, the notion of category implies a club’s formal and steady status, which is prerequisite for any kind of competition (national or international) in which that club takes part, and which is modifiable only through given formal procedures (e.g., the transformation of an amateur club into a professional one, or vice versa). On the other hand, the notion of «conditions of participation» implies more volatile requirements which are checked when, and only when, a club enters a given competition, and which are often specific to that competition (e.g., in order to compete in some national championships, clubs must provide financial guarantees which are different in type and amount from country to country; at the same time, in order to compete in, say, the Greek championship it is absolutely irrelevant that the owner of a participating club controls other clubs abroad).

54. Article 46.1 of the UEFA Statutes provides that the «Executive Committee shall draw up regulations governing the conditions of participation in and the staging of UEFA competitions». As the UEFA Statutes confer to the Executive Committee the power to enact rules concerning conditions of participation in a UEFA competition, the Panel holds that in adopting the Contested Rule the UEFA Executive Committee did not act ultra vires, and thus UEFA did not violate its own Statutes.
- b) Right to a legal hearing and to fair procedures
55. The Claimants argue that, under Article 75 CC, members of an association have the right to be heard when resolutions are passed which affect them to a significant extent. Therefore, the Claimants assert that, being indirect members of UEFA, they were entitled to a legal hearing before the adoption of the Contested Rule, and that UEFA therefore infringed the principle audiatur et altera pars. More generally, the Claimants assert that association members have a right to fair procedures, and that inter alia the Respondent adopted the Contested Rule too shortly before the start of the new season. The Respondent replies by insisting that the clubs are not indirect members of UEFA and by asserting that it acted strictly in accordance with its statutory regulations and that AEK had enough time to adjust to the Contested Rule.
56. The Panel notes that the Claimants base this ground, like the previous one, on the assumption that clubs are «indirect» members of UEFA, because they are affiliated to their respective national federations which in turn are members of UEFA. For the reasons already stated, the Panel is not persuaded by this construction. The Panel finds the argument even less persuasive if such characterization of the clubs as indirect members implies, as the Claimants argue, the necessary consequence that every indirect member should be heard by UEFA before passing a resolution which could affect such indirect member. This would mean that, if a resolution affects amateur clubs, UEFA should consult with tens (perhaps even hundreds) of thousands of clubs. As all players, coaches and referees are also affiliated to their national federations – millions of individuals throughout Europe –, they could also claim to be indirect members and every one of them could request that he/she be heard by UEFA. Even if one was to limit the right to be heard only to clubs potentially interested in UEFA competitions – i.e. all clubs competing in the highest championship of every UEFA member federation – there would still be hundreds of clubs to be consulted. For an international federation, this would amount to a procedural nightmare and would paralyze any possibility of enacting regulations. The Panel maintains that the consequence is so absurd that the reasoning is fallacious.
57. In any event, even assuming that for some purposes clubs could be considered as indirect members of UEFA, the Panel is of the opinion that «indirect» members could not be wholly equated with «direct» members. Therefore, clubs could not claim anyway the right to be heard when general resolutions are adopted by UEFA. It is certainly opportune that UEFA consults with at least some of the clubs, or possibly with some of the national leagues, before adopting rules concerning conditions of admission to its competitions, but in the Panel's view this cannot be construed as a legal obligation under Swiss association law.

58. With regard to the right to be heard, the Panel wishes to stress that the CAS has always protected the principle audiatur et altera pars in connection with any proceedings, measures or disciplinary actions taken by an international federation vis-à-vis a national federation, a club or an athlete (see CAS 91/53 G. v. FEI, award of 15 January 1992, in M. REEB [ed.], Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, Berne 1998, 87, paras. 11-12; CAS 94/129 USA Shooting & Q. v. UIT, award of 23 May 1995, ibidem, 203, paras. 58-59; CAS OG 96/005, award of 1 August 1996, ibidem, 400, paras. 7-9). However, there is a very important difference between the adoption by a federation of an ad hoc administrative or disciplinary decision directly and individually addressed to designated associations, teams or athletes and the adoption of a general regulation directed at laying down rules of conduct generally applicable to all current or future situations of the kind described in the regulation. It is the same difference that one can find in every legal system between an administrative measure or a penalty decided by an executive or judicial body concerned with a limited and identified number of designees and a general act of a normative character adopted by the parliament or the government for general application to categories of persons envisaged both in the abstract and as a whole. The Panel remarks that there is an evident analogy between sports-governing bodies and governmental bodies with respect to their role and functions as regulatory, administrative and sanctioning entities, and that similar principles should govern their actions. Therefore, the Panel finds that, unless there are specific rules to the contrary, only in the event of administrative measures or penalties adopted by a sports-governing body with regard to a limited and identified number of designees could there be a right to a legal hearing. For a regulator or legislator, it appears to be advisable and good practice to acquire as much information as possible and to hear the views of potentially affected people before issuing general regulations – one can think of, e.g., parliamentary hearings with experts or interest groups – but it is not a legal requirement. As a United States court has stated, requiring an international sports federation «to provide for hearings to any party potentially affected adversely by its rule-making authority could quite conceivably subject the [international federation] to a quagmire of administrative red tape which would effectively preclude it from acting at all to promote the game» (Gunter Harz Sports v. USTA, 1981, 511 F. Supp. 1103, at 1122).
59. Furthermore, in any event, the Panel observes that ENIC – clearly being the most interested party and evidently representing also the Claimants – was in fact heard by UEFA at a meeting held on 24 February 1998 (supra, para 6). In a letter from Mr. Hersov of ENIC (enclosing the proposed Code of Ethics) sent on the following day to Mr. Studer of UEFA, it is possible to read inter alia:

«We appreciated your and Marcel's open and frank discussion with us, and the mutual recognition of UEFA and ENIC's interests, objectives and concerns. From UEFA's perspective, the sanctity of the game and the various European competitions are paramount. You are also under some pressure to be seen to be responding responsibly to members concerns, and we appreciate and recognize this pressure. ... We feel that the proposed rule change banning teams with common ownership from competing in the same competition would be extremely damaging to ENIC. Its implementation would be very harmful to ENIC and it would materially impact the clubs which we currently own ...» (emphasis added).

Hence, at the meeting of 24 February 1998 UEFA did raise the issue of a rule such as the Contested Rule being contemplated and the Claimants in fact had a possibility, through their common parent company ENIC, of expressing their opinion to UEFA and of making very clear their dissatisfaction with the envisaged new rule on multi-club ownership and the potential damage deriving therefrom. For all the above reasons, the Panel holds that the Respondent did not infringe the principle audiatur et altera pars and did not violate any right to be heard in adopting the Contested Rule.

60. With regard to the more general requirement of respecting fair procedures, however, the Panel considers that this is a principle which must always be followed by a Swiss association even vis-à-vis non-members of the association if such non-members may be affected by the decision adopted. In this respect, the Panel notes that the President of the Ordinary Division of the CAS based its interim order of 16-17 July 1998 on the circumstance that UEFA violated the principle of procedural fairness. The Panel agrees with the President's view that UEFA adopted the Contested Rule too late, when the Cup Regulations for the 1998/99 season, containing no restriction for multiple ownership, had already been issued. In the CAS interim order it was observed inter alia:

«By adopting the Regulation to be effective at the start of the new season, UEFA added an extra requirement for admission to the UEFA Cup after the conditions for participation had been finally settled and communicated to all members. It did so at a time when AEK already knew that it had met the requirements for selection of its national association. Furthermore, it chose a timing that made it materially impossible for the clubs and their owner to adjust to the new admission requirement. ...

The doctrine of venire contra factum proprium ... provides that, where the conduct of one party has led to the legitimate expectations on the part of a second party, the first party is estopped from changing its course of action to the detriment of the second party ...

By referring to this doctrine, CAS is not implying that UEFA is barred from changing its Cup Regulations for the future (provided, of course, the change is lawful on its merits). However, it may not do so without allowing the clubs sufficient time to adapt their operations to the new rules, here specifically to change their control structure accordingly».

61. The Panel essentially agrees with the foregoing remarks by the President of the Ordinary Division of the CAS and with the ensuing conclusion that UEFA violated its duties of procedural fairness with respect to the 1998/99 season. Indeed, a sports-governing organization such as an international federation must comply with certain basic principles of procedural fairness vis-à-vis the clubs or the athletes, even if clubs and athletes are not members of the international federation (see the Swiss Supreme Court decision in the Grossen case, in ATF 121 III 350; see also infra). The Panel does not find a hurried change in participation requirements shortly before the beginning of the new season, after such requirements have been publicly announced and the clubs entitled to compete have already been designated, admissible. Therefore, the Panel approves and ratifies the CAS Procedural

Order of 16 July 1998, which has granted interim relief consisting in the suspension of the application of the Contested Rule «for the duration of this arbitration or for the duration of the 1998/99 season of the UEFA Cup, whichever is shorter».

62. The Panel observes that the above conclusion does not require that the Contested Rule be annulled on procedural grounds, given that the lawfulness of the Contested Rule must be evaluated on its merits with respect to all future football seasons. In the Panel's view, if the Contested Rule would be found to violate any of the substantive rules and principles of Swiss and/or EC law invoked by the Claimants, no amount of procedural fairness could save it; conversely, if the Contested Rule would not be found to infringe such rules and principles, a minor lack of procedural protection could not render it unlawful per se. Therefore, while approving the interim stay of the Contested Rule, the Panel holds that UEFA's procedural unfairness concerning the timing of the new rule's entry into force is of a transitory nature and, as a result, it is not such as to render the Contested Rule unlawful on its merits with respect to all future football seasons. The Claimants' request to annul the Contested Rule on this procedural ground is thus rejected. However, as will be seen infra, the said procedural defect will have some consequences with respect to the temporal effects of this award.
- c) Principle of equal treatment
63. The Claimants remind that Article 75 CC also protects members of a Swiss association against resolutions which infringe the principle of equal treatment of the association's members and, therefore, argue that the Contested Rule violates the corresponding rights of the Claimants. In particular, the Claimants assert that UEFA formed different categories of members and violated the principle of relative equality because it established membership distinctions – clubs commonly controlled vis-à-vis the other clubs – in an arbitrary manner. The Claimants argue that there are no substantial objective grounds which UEFA could invoke to justify the unequal treatment provided by the Contested Rule because the Contested Rule is neither necessary, nor appropriate and, in addition, fails the test of proportionality insofar as it is a disproportionate means of achieving the objective of protecting the integrity of UEFA competitions. In reply, the Respondent argues that the principle of equal treatment does not prevent differentiation between objectively different situations, that the common control of clubs is an objectively relevant factor, and that in any event the Contested Rule is a proportionate response to the need to protect the integrity of the game.
64. The Panel notes that this argument is also based on the assumption that clubs are indirect members of UEFA, as under Article 75 CC only association members can judicially challenge a resolution infringing their right to equal treatment. The Panel has already disavowed such construction of the clubs' status within UEFA and here refers to the views previously stated in this respect (see supra, paras. 52 and 56).

65. The Panel has also already expressed the opinion that, even assuming that the clubs could be regarded as indirect members of UEFA, the Contested Rule did not create different categories of clubs but rather established an additional condition of participation in UEFA competitions (see supra, para. 53). The Panel does not find any discrimination or unequal treatment in establishing conditions of participation which are applicable to all clubs. It seems to the Panel that there is no discrimination in denying admission to a club whose owner is objectively in a conflict of interest situation; likewise, e.g., there is no discrimination in denying admission to a club whose stadium is objectively below the required safety standards. In both cases, if the shareholding structure or the safety conditions are modified, the club is admitted to the UEFA competition. Therefore, the Contested Rule does not target or single out specific clubs as such but simply sets forth objective requirements for all clubs willing to participate in UEFA competitions.

66. As a result, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not violate the principle of equal treatment. Since the proportionality test is supposed to be applied only in order to verify whether an unequal treatment is justified, it is not necessary to rule on the proportionality issue in connection with this ground. In any event, the Panel observes that the discussion on proportionality developed under Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty (infra, paras. 131-136) could be applied in its entirety to this ground as well.

d) Personality of the clubs

67. The Claimants argue that the Contested Rule is not compatible with Article 28 CC, which reads as follows:

«1. Celui qui subit une atteinte illicite à sa personnalité peut agir en justice pour sa protection contre toute personne qui y participe. 2. Une atteinte est illicite, à moins qu'elle ne soit justifiée par le consentement de la victime, par un intérêt prépondérant privé ou public, ou par la loi» («1. A person who is unlawfully injured in his personality may bring proceedings for protection against any party to such injury. 2. Such injury is unlawful unless it is justified by consent of the injured person, by an overriding private or public interest, or by the law»).

The Claimants assert that Article 28 CC applies both to individuals and to corporate legal entities, and that the development of both the sporting and economic personality of commonly owned clubs would be impaired as a consequence of the non-admission to a UEFA competition. The Respondent argues that Article 28 CC has no relevance at all because it is applicable to different types of situations, and that in any event UEFA pursued overriding interests in enacting the Contested Rule.

68. The Panel is not persuaded that Article 28 CC could be applied to the case at stake. The notion of «personality» (or of «personhood») is to be characterized by reference to the fundamental attributes which every person, and in some measure every legal entity such as an association or a corporation, has a right to see protected against external intrusion and interference. It is difficult to find definitions in the abstract as there is an indefinite number of liberties, varying from time to time and from country to country, which can be encompassed within the concept of personality rights. Examples are core rights related to privacy, name and personal identity, physical integrity, image, reputation, marriage, family life, sexual life and the like.

69. Swiss case law has sometimes stretched the notion of personality rights in order to protect a wider number of rights, such as the right to be economically active and even the freedom of performing sporting activities. The Claimants argue that the present dispute can be compared to the Gasser case, concerning the two-year exclusion of an athlete from any kind of competition due to a doping offence. In the Gasser case, the judge considered as a personality right the athlete's freedom of action and freedom of physical movement and, therefore, «the freedom of performing sporting activities and of participating in a competition between athletes of the same level» (Office of Judge III, Berne, Decision of 22 December 1987, in SJZ, 1988, 84 at 87). However, the Panel finds the Gasser case quite different from, and thus of no precedential value for, the present dispute. Indeed, the Contested Rule is a general regulation establishing a condition of participation applicable to all clubs (see supra, paras. 53 and 58) and not, as in the Gasser case, a disciplinary measure individually addressed to a designated athlete. Accordingly, the Contested Rule as such cannot be considered an exclusionary sanction within the meaning of the Gasser ruling. Moreover, the Contested Rule sets forth a condition for access to a single competition rather than an absolute exclusion from all sporting activities. The Panel considers that, while an unfairly adopted long doping ban might harm the whole sporting career of an athlete, and thus his/her personality, a club's non-participation in a UEFA competition would involve some loss of income but, since the club would still take part in other important football competitions such as the national championship and the national cup (which are competitions appreciated by fans and economically rewarding, as will be seen infra at para. 131), its «personality» would not be affected. In any event, even a restriction of a personality right could be justified by an «overriding private or public interest» (Article 28.2 CC), and the Panel is of the opinion that the public's perception of a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results (see supra, para. 48) would constitute such an «overriding interest».
70. The Claimants have also made reference to Swiss judgements limiting an association's right to exclude a member, pursuant to Article 72.2 CC, in situations where the exclusion would injure the personality of the member concerned. Swiss courts have applied this doctrine to associations which hold monopolistic positions, such as professional associations or sports federations. However, apart from the illustrated difficulty of considering the Claimants as (indirect) members of UEFA (see supra, paras. 52 and 56), the Panel observes that non-admission to a competition cannot be equated to the loss of membership due to expulsion from an association and, therefore, cannot be considered as an injury to personality. In any event, even if one were to admit that the effects of the Contested Rule could be compared to an actual exclusion from membership, according to Swiss case law this could always be justified if there is «good cause» (Swiss Federal Court, Decision of 14 March 1997, in SCP 123 III, 193). The Panel is of the opinion that the public's perception of a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results (see supra, para. 48) would constitute «good cause». In conclusion, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not violate Article 28 CC.

European Community competition law

a) Introductory remarks

71. Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty prohibits «as incompatible with the common market: all agreements between undertakings, decisions by associations of undertakings and concerted practices which may affect trade between Member States and which have as their object or effect the prevention, restriction or distortion of competition within the common market».

Under Article 81.2 (ex 85.2) «any agreements or decisions prohibited pursuant to this Article shall be automatically void».

Under Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty «any abuse by one or more undertakings of a dominant position within the common market or in a substantial part of it shall be prohibited as incompatible with the common market in so far as it may affect trade between Member States».

72. According to the EC Commission's «Notice on cooperation between national courts and the Commission in applying Articles 85 and 86 of the EC Treaty» (in Official Journal EC, 13 February 1993, C 39/6), before ascertaining whether there is an infringement of the prohibitions laid down in Article 85.1 (now 81.1) or 86 (now 82), national courts (and thus arbitrators) «should ascertain whether the agreement, decision or concerted practice has already been the subject of a decision, opinion or other official statement issued by an administrative authority and in particular by the Commission. Such statements provide national courts with significant information for reaching a judgement, even if they are not formally bound by them» (ibidem, para. 20).

73. The Panel is not aware of any decision, opinion or other official statement issued by the Commission or other administrative authority with regard to the Contested Rule. However, as already mentioned (supra, para. 47), there have been a few replies by the Commission under Article 197 (ex 140) of the EC Treaty to questions specifically devoted to the Contested Rule put to it by some Members of the European Parliament (questions nos. E-3980/97, 0538/98, P-2361/98). The wording of all such replies is similar or identical. In the answer given on 3 September 1998 (Official Journal EC, 1999, C 50/143), the EC Commissioner responsible for competition policy Mr. Van Miert, answering on behalf of the Commission, has stated as follows:

«The Commission is aware that the Union of European football associations (UEFA) has recently adopted rules that regulate the participation in European competitions of clubs belonging to the same owner. It seems at first sight that these rules have a sporting nature and that they aim to preserve uncertainty of results, an objective which the Court of Justice has recognised as legitimate in its judgement of 15 December 1995 in the Bosman case. Clearly, if clubs with the same owner can take part in the same competitions, whether national or international, doubts may arise as to whether the outcome is really undecided in advance. Nevertheless, it is necessary to determine whether these UEFA rules are limited to what is strictly necessary to attain the objective of ensuring the uncertainty as to results or whether there exist less restrictive means to achieve it. Provided that such rules remain in proportion to the sporting objective pursued, they would not be covered by the competition rules laid down in the EC Treaty. At this stage, the Commission does not possess all the necessary information to assess the compatibility of the rules with Articles 85 and 86 of the EC Treaty. Whether UEFA has or not consulted other bodies is not relevant for this assessment».

74. The Respondent has attributed great weight to this statement, while the Claimants have underlined that it has no legal force whatsoever and that anyway it provides no answer to the question of whether the Contested Rule is compatible with the EC Treaty. The Panel is not sure whether an answer given by the Commission in the European Parliament can be regarded as a «decision, opinion or other official statement» within the meaning of the above-mentioned Commission Notice. Probably, the Commission did not have in mind answers to parliamentary questions when it drafted the Notice, and its reference to official statements would imply a less informal statement than a parliamentary one. In any event, since Mr. Van Miert's answer is quite concise and given without the Commission «possess[ing] all the necessary information to assess the compatibility of the rules with Articles 85 and 86 of the EC Treaty», and since any statement issued in the Parliament inevitably has a political rather than a legal nuance, the Panel is of the opinion that it should not base this award on Mr. Van Miert's answer.
75. The Panel also notes that the EC Commission has recently issued a more general statement with regard to the application of competition rules to sport. The Commission has publicly noted as follows: «Sport comprises two levels of activity: on the one hand the sporting activity strictly speaking, which fulfils a social, integrating and cultural role that must be preserved and to which in theory the competition rules of the EC Treaty do not apply. On the other hand a series of economic activities generated by the sporting activity, to which the competition rules of the EC Treaty apply, albeit taking into account the specific requirements of this sector. The interdependence and indeed the overlap between these two levels render the application of competition rules more complex. Sport also has features, in particular the interdependence of competitors and the need to guarantee the uncertainty of results of competitions, which could justify that sporting organizations implement a specific framework, in particular on the markets for the production and the sale of sports events. However, these specific features do not warrant an automatic exemption from the EU competition rules of any economic activities generated by sport, due in particular to the increasing economic weight of such activities» (EC Commission, Press Release no. IP/99/133, 24 February 1999).
76. The Panel shares the EC Commission's position that the application of competition rules to sports regulations is a particularly complex task because of the peculiarities of sport and because of the inescapable link between sporting and economic aspects. Therefore, all the relevant elements of competition law have to be carefully weighed in this award together with the peculiar sporting elements, in order to ascertain whether the Contested Rule violates Articles 81 (ex 85) and 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty or not.
- b) Position of the parties
77. With respect to Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty, the Claimants assert, firstly, that the Contested Rule is a decision by an association of undertakings, and/or an agreement between undertakings, falling within the scope of such provision. Then, they argue that the Contested Rule has the effect of both actually and potentially affecting competition to an appreciable extent in the football market, and in various ancillary football services markets, by preventing or restricting investments by multi-club owners in European clubs, by changing the nature, intensity and patterns of competition between commonly controlled clubs and the others, and by enhancing the economic imbalance between football clubs. They also assert that the Contested Rule affects the pattern of trade between Member States. They also argue that no «sporting exception» could be applied to this issue, that the Contested Rule is unnecessary and disproportionate to the professed objective, and that less restrictive alternatives exist. For these reasons, the Claimants contend that the Contested Rule is incompatible with Article 81.1 and, as no exemption has been given by the EC Commission under Article 81.3, it is automatically void pursuant to Article 81.2. The Respondent counter-argues that the Contested Rule is not caught by Article 81, or by any other provision of the EC Treaty, because it is a rule of sporting interest only, which is proportionate to the legitimate objective of preventing situations of conflict of interest and, thus, of promoting and ensuring genuine competition between the clubs playing in pan-European competitions.

78. With respect to Article 82 (ex 86), the Claimants argue that UEFA is the only body empowered to organize European competitions and, consequently, holds a dominant position in the European professional football market and the ancillary football services markets. Then, they assert that the Contested Rule constitutes an abuse by UEFA of its dominant position contrary to Article 82 because, without any objective justification, it restricts competition, it is unnecessary and disproportionate, and it unfairly discriminates between clubs with different ownership structures. The Respondent replies by denying that it is in a dominant position, and by asserting that the adoption of a rule in order to preserve the integrity of club competitions could not amount to an abuse.

c) The «sporting exception»

79. The Respondent argues that the Contested Rule is not caught at all by EC law, because it is a rule of a merely sporting character purporting to protect the integrity of the game by preventing any conflict of interest within UEFA club competitions. The Respondent refers to what has come to be termed as the «sporting exception», after the EC Court of Justice stated in the Walrave and Donà cases that «the practice of sport is subject to Community law only in so far as it constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 2 of the Treaty» (Judgements of 12 December 1974, case 36/74, Walrave, in E.C.R. 1974, 1405, para. 4; 14 July 1976, case 13/76, Donà, in E.C.R. 1976, 1333, para. 12), that EC law «does not affect the composition of sport teams, in particular national teams, the formation of which is a question of purely sporting interest and as such has nothing to do with economic activity» (Walrave, para. 8), and that EC law does not «prevent the adoption of rules or of a practice excluding foreign players from participation in certain matches for reasons which are not of an economic nature, which relate to the particular nature and context of such matches and are thus of sporting interest only, such as, for example, matches between national teams from different countries» (Donà, para. 14).

In both cases, the Court also added that the «restriction on the scope of the provisions in question must however remain limited to its proper objective» (Walrave, para. 9; Donà, para. 15).

80. In the more recent Bosman case, the Court of Justice referred to the Walrave and Donà precedents in order to reiterate that «sport is subject to Community law only in so far as it constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 2 of the Treaty» (Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 73), and that «the provisions of Community law concerning freedom of movement of persons and of provision of services do not preclude rules or practices justified on non-economic grounds which relate to the particular nature and context of certain matches. It stressed, however, that such a restriction on the scope of the provisions in question must remain limited to its proper objective. It cannot, therefore, be relied upon to exclude the whole of the sporting activity from the scope of the Treaty» (ibidem, para. 76).
81. The Claimants acknowledge that some matters concerned with the rules of the game would fall within the so-called sporting exception, mentioning as examples «a ban on drugs, the size of the pitch or the ball, or the methods of selection of national teams». However, the Claimants deny that the Contested Rule might fall within such an exception because it is economic in its language, its subject matter and its effects. In the final oral argument, counsel for the Claimants vividly described the Contested Rule as «impregnated» with economic elements.
82. The Panel observes that it is quite difficult to deduce the extent of the «sporting exception» from the mentioned case law of the Court of Justice. It is clear that a sporting exception of some kind does exist, in the sense that some sporting rules or practices are somewhat capable of, as the Court puts it, «restricting the scope» of EC provisions. In the light of the Court's jurisprudence, it seems that a sporting rule should pass the following tests in order not to be caught by EC law: (a) it must concern a question of sporting interest having nothing to do with economic activity, (b) it must be justified on non-economic grounds, (c) it must be related to the particular nature or context of certain competitions, and (d) it must remain limited to its proper objective.
83. With regard to test (a), the Contested Rule certainly concerns a question of great sporting interest, such as the integrity of the game within the already illustrated meaning of the public perception of the authenticity of sporting results (see supra, para. 24 et seq.). However, the Contested Rule also has a lot to do with economic activity. Indeed, the Contested Rule addresses the question of ownership of clubs taking part in UEFA competitions, that is the economic status of clubs which certainly perform economic activities (see infra, para. 88). Therefore, the requirement of test (a) is not met, and the Panel holds that the Contested Rule is not covered by the «sporting exception». As a consequence, tests (b), (c) and (d) are not relevant in this context, and the Panel need not discuss them.
84. In the light also of the recent opinions of Advocate General Cosmas in the pending Delière case (opinion delivered on 18 May 1999, joint cases C-51/96 and C-191/97) and of Advocate General Alber in the pending Lehtonen case (opinion delivered on 22 June 1999, case C-176/96), the Panel wonders whether, applying the Court of Justice tests, it is really possible to distinguish between sporting questions and economic ones and to find sporting rules clearly falling within the «sporting exception» (besides those expressly indicated by the Court, concerning national teams). For instance, among the examples indicated by the Claimants, the reference to anti-doping rules might be misplaced, because to prevent a professional athlete – i.e. an individual who is a worker or a provider of services – from performing his/her professional activity undoubtedly has a lot to do with the economic aspects of sports. The same applies to the size of sporting balls, which is certainly of great concern to the various firms producing them. In conclusion, the Panel is not convinced that existing EC case law provides a workable «sporting exception» and it must, therefore, proceed with a full analysis of the present dispute under Articles 81 (ex 85) and 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty.

d) Undertakings and association of undertakings

85. Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty prohibits any cooperation or coordination between independent undertakings which may affect trade between Member States and which has the object or the effect of preventing, restricting or distorting competition. Such forbidden cooperation or coordination between undertakings may be accomplished through agreements, decisions by associations of undertakings or concerted practices. Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty prohibits any abuse of a dominant position by one or more undertakings which may affect trade between Member States. Both provisions, in order to be applied, require that the Panel ascertain whether the Respondent can be regarded as an undertaking and/or an association of undertakings.
86. The notion of undertaking is not defined in the EC Treaty. The EC Court of Justice has stated that such notion includes «every entity engaged in an economic activity, regardless of the legal status of the entity and the way in which it is financed» (Judgement of 23 April 1991, case C-41/90, Höfnér, in E.C.R. 1991, I-1979, para. 21). The fact that a given entity is a «non-profit» entity is irrelevant, provided that it does perform some economic activity.
87. As illustrated above, UEFA is a private association exerting regulatory authority in European football and organizing pan-European competitions. A good part of UEFA's activities is of a purely sporting nature, particularly when it adopts measures as a mere regulator of sporting matters. However, UEFA also carries out activities of an economic nature, e.g. with regard to advertising contracts and to contracts relating to television broadcasting rights (see EC Commission decision of 27 October 1992, 1990 World Cup, in Official Journal EC, 12 November 1992, L 326/31, para. 47). Therefore, with respect to the economic activities in which it is involved, UEFA can be characterized as an undertaking within the meaning of EC competition law, as construed by the Court of Justice. The fifty-one national federations affiliated to UEFA also carry out economic activities at national level, notably by exploiting their logos, managing their national teams and selling television rights; with respect to those activities, they are also undertakings within the meaning of EC competition law. Therefore, the Panel holds that UEFA, with respect to the economic activities in which it is engaged and in which national federations are engaged, is at the same time an undertaking and an association of undertakings.

88. The Panel wonders whether UEFA should also be regarded, as argued by the Claimants, as an «association of associations of undertakings» – within the meaning of the EC Commission decisions of 15 December 1982, BNIC, and of 7 December 1984, Milchförderungsfonds, in which Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) was applied to resolutions issued by trade associations having as their members other trade associations –, that is whether UEFA should be regarded not only as an association of (so to say) «federation undertakings» but also, through the federations, as an association of «club undertakings». In fact, if UEFA was found not to be an association of «club undertakings», its resolutions concerning the way club competitions are organized could not be considered as instruments of horizontal coordination of the clubs' competitive behaviour and would not be caught by Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty. In other words, with respect to UEFA rules which govern club competitions – e.g. establishing conditions of participation, disqualifying clubs or players from the competition, setting forth players' transfer rules, designating referees, fixing schedules, and the like – UEFA could be considered merely as a regulator above the clubs rather than a sort of clubs' trade association; accordingly, the Contested Rule would not be considered as the product of a horizontal collusion between the clubs and would not be caught by Article 81.1 (ex 85.1).
89. In order to ascertain whether UEFA should be regarded as an association of associations of undertakings or not, it is necessary to assess whether national football federations affiliated to UEFA are to be considered as associations of undertakings or not. There is no doubt that professional football clubs engage in economic activities and, consequently, are undertakings. In particular, they engage in economic activities such as the sale of entrance tickets for home matches, the sale of broadcasting rights, the exploitation of logos and the conclusion of sponsorship and advertising contracts. Numerous minor clubs, which are formally non-profit making, also engage in some of those economic activities – although on a much lower scale – and are also to be regarded as undertakings (for example, clubs taking part in championships pertaining to the third or fourth national divisions). In all national federations, there is also a very large number of truly amateur clubs (including youth clubs), which are run by unpaid volunteers, perform purely sporting activities and do not engage in any economic activity (the EC Commission has recently defined such clubs as «grassroots clubs» in the already quoted document The European model of sport, Brussels, 1999). Accordingly, these grassroots clubs should not be regarded as undertakings (see Judgement of 17 December 1993, joined cases C-159/91 and C-160/91, para. 18, where the Court of Justice held that an entity fulfilling a social function and entirely non-profit making does not perform an economic activity and thus is not an undertaking within the meaning of ex Article 85). The line between non-amateur clubs (which are undertakings) and amateur or grassroots clubs (which are not) should obviously be drawn at different levels from country to country, depending on the national economic development of football. What is common within all fifty-one European federations is the circumstance that the number of amateur or grassroots clubs is largely preponderant over that of non-amateur clubs.

90. Advocate General Lenz stated in his Bosman opinion that national football federations «are to be regarded as associations of undertakings within the meaning of Article 85. The fact that in addition to the professional clubs, a large number of amateur clubs also belong to those associations makes no difference» (Opinion delivered on 20 September 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 256).

Therefore, according to the argument of Advocate General Lenz, UEFA is an association of associations of undertakings, acting as a instrument of professional clubs' cooperation. Advocate General Lenz did not provide any further discussion on this issue. As is well known, in the Bosman case the Court of Justice declined to rule on competition law issues (Judgement of 15 December 1995, ibidem, para. 138), and the previous sports cases decided by the Court did not involve competition rules either (Judgement of 12 December 1974, case 36/74, Walrave, in E.C.R. 1974, 1405; Judgement of 14 July 1976, case 13/76, Donà, in E.C.R. 1976, 1333; Judgement of 15 October 1987, 222/86, Heylens, in E.C.R. 1987, 4097). Therefore, no specific guidance can be found on this question in the European Court jurisprudence related to sport.

91. The Panel is not entirely persuaded by the assertion of Advocate General Lenz that it «makes no difference» that national federations encompass a large number of amateur or grassroots clubs. In fact, the amateur or grassroots clubs, truly not engaged in economic activities, may condition the will and the acts of national federations more than professional and semi-professional clubs. Due to the democratic voting and electoral systems prevailing within national federations, the majority of votes tend to be controlled by amateur or grassroots clubs, and federations' executive organs – the President and the Board – often tend to be the expression of such majority. In some national federations even athletes and coaches have some electoral standing. This deficit of representativeness vis-à-vis professional clubs is the main reason why such clubs have created national «leagues» as their own truly representative bodies and why there are often conflicts between leagues and federations (see supra, paras. 17-18). Through the leagues, which are their true trade associations, professional clubs tend to manage their championships by themselves, retaining all the related revenues (television rights, advertising, etc.), and in several countries have progressively acquired a noticeable degree of autonomy from federations (e.g. the Premier League in England or the «Lega Nazionale Professionisti» in Italy).
92. In other words, the executives of national federations formally represent all the clubs of their respective countries but their constituency is mostly composed of amateur or grassroots clubs. Also within UEFA, representatives of national federations should be regarded less as delegates of the clubs engaged in economic activities than as delegates of amateur or grassroots clubs. It should also be mentioned that federation posts are honorary, and individuals elected to such posts are not bound by instructions or orders coming from the electors. Obviously, professional clubs have their ways of influencing federations and federation executives much more than their mere electoral weight would suggest, but it would still seem inaccurate sic et simpliciter to regard national federations as associations of undertakings and, automatically, national federations' regulations as decisions by associations of undertakings within the meaning of Article 81.1. It should not be overlooked that decisions by associations of undertakings are caught by Article 81.1 in order to prevent circumvention of the prohibition of restrictive agreements and concerted practices. Decisions by associations of undertakings are typically a medium for the coordination and cooperation of undertakings of a given sector. The Panel observes that national leagues (where they exist) rather than federations currently seem to be the actual medium for the coordination of professional clubs. Therefore, national leagues seem to be the true associations of «club undertakings», league executives seem to be the true delegates of such undertakings, and the acts and conduct of leagues seem to truly reflect the will of such undertakings. National leagues are not direct members of UEFA and, as mentioned (supra, para. 19), the most important of them have recently constituted their own independent association in order to have their interests truly represented at pan-European level.

93. The Panel notes that in the BNIC/Clair case, the Court of Justice held that BNIC – the French cognac industry board – was in fact an association of undertakings because its measures were negotiated and adopted by individuals who were (formally appointed by the competent Minister but in fact) designated by the undertakings or associations of undertakings concerned and had to be considered as their representatives (Judgment of 30 January 1985, case 123/83, BNIC/Clair, in E.C.R. 1985, 391, para. 19). In Reiff, the Court of Justice held that the individuals composing a German tariff commission for road freight, appointed by the Minister upon the proposal of the undertakings or associations of undertakings of the interested sector, could not be deemed as representatives of the industry because they were not bound by instructions or orders coming from those undertakings or associations; therefore, the Court concluded that the tariff commission was not an association of undertakings and that its decisions were not caught by Article 85 (now 81) of the EC Treaty (Judgment of 17 November 1993, case C-185/91, Reiff, in E.C.R. 1993, I-5801, para. 19).

94. In the light of this case law and in the light of the circumstances described above (supra, paras. 91-92), the Panel is quite doubtful as to whether UEFA can be truly characterized as an association of associations of undertakings and as to whether members of the UEFA Executive Committee or of the UEFA Congress can be seen as actually representing the «club undertakings». At the very least, before reaching any such conclusions, it would be necessary to examine in detail the process leading to the appointment or election of individuals to national federation posts and to the various UEFA bodies, to look into the links of those individuals with professional clubs, and to investigate case by case whether a UEFA measure is in fact the expression of an agreement by or with the professional clubs or whether it strengthens already existing agreements between these clubs. Neither the Claimants nor the Respondent have supplied any evidence which could help the Panel in any such analysis. Therefore, the Panel must content itself with the stated conclusion (supra, para. 87) that UEFA, with respect to the economic activities in which it is involved and in which national federations are involved, is surely an undertaking and an association of «federation undertakings», leaving the question open as to whether UEFA is also an association of «club undertakings» through which clubs coordinate their economic behaviour. In any event, despite underlying doubts on this issue, given that UEFA essentially advanced no arguments to counter the Claimants' assertion that UEFA is an association of associations of undertakings, the Panel will assume for the purposes of the ensuing discussion of competition law that UEFA is in fact an association of «club undertakings» whose decisions and rules concerning club competitions constitute a medium of horizontal cooperation between the competing clubs (as asserted by Advocate General Lenz in his Bosman opinion; see supra, para. 90). As a result, in order to proceed with its analysis, the Panel assumes that the Contested Rule is a decision by an association of associations of undertakings and, as such, falls within the scope of Article 81.1 (ex 85.1).

e) Market definition

95. The Panel notes that, in order to examine whether the Contested Rule has the object or the effect of appreciably restricting competition (Article 81) or constitutes an abuse of dominant position (Article 82), it is necessary to identify and define the relevant market in both its product and geographic dimensions.
96. As to product market definition, the Panel observes that, according to EC law and practice, essentially «a relevant product market comprises all those products and/or services which are regarded as interchangeable or substitutable by the consumer, by reason of the products' characteristics, their prices and their intended use» (EC Commission Notice «on the definition of relevant market for the purposes of Community competition law», in Official Journal EC, 9 December 1997, C 372/5, para. 7).
97. The Claimants, referring to the economic report prepared by Mr. Boon upon their request, allege that the relevant product market is a «European football market». According to the Claimants, such market would comprise the supply of all football matches played in Europe and a variety of related «ancillary football services markets», such as the market for capital investment in football clubs, the players market, the media rights market, the sponsorship and advertising market and the merchandising market. In his written report, Mr. Boon includes within the boundaries of this general «European football market» all UEFA «matches played out before a paying public across Europe and in the wider world». At the hearing, the Panel asked Mr. Boon to better identify the product, the demand side (the consumers) and the supply side (the suppliers) in the alleged «European football market». Mr. Boon answered that the product is constituted by all matches played in UEFA club competitions, the consumers are all the football fans and supporters, and the suppliers are the clubs and the players together. The notion that clubs and players supply matches together on the market is clearly unfounded in terms of competition law (and inconsistent with Mr. Boon's several references in his report to a players' market where clubs are on the demand side and players on the supply side), and the Panel can thus discard it immediately without further discussion.
98. The Panel finds that the Claimants' definition of the product market is not a viable one in terms of competition law. The notion of a general European football market is too ample, and the other related markets are too heterogeneous to be included therein. Given that the definition of a market should be determined primarily by interchangeability (or substitutability) from the consumers' viewpoint, it is implausible to regard all European football matches as interchangeable. Certainly, in terms of stadium attendance most of the matches are not interchangeable because of geographic constraints and of consumer preferences, notably constituted by the supporters' allegiance to a given team. Indeed, virtually every club playing in a UEFA competition can be deemed to hold a sort of «captive market» with regard to live attendance of its home matches. Even in terms of television audience, a UEFA Cup or Champions' League match between a Swiss and a German team would hardly be considered by British viewers as a substitute – possibly with the only exception of the final match of the competition or some other unusual circumstances (e.g. the presence of several renowned British players in the match), and even in such cases it would be a poor substitute – for a match involving a British team (see Monopolies and Mergers Commission, British Sky Broadcasting Group plc and Manchester United plc. A report on the proposed merger, London, 12 March 1999, hereinafter «MMC Report», paras. 2.16-2.24). Furthermore, if the products of the European football market are the European matches, most of the various other markets mentioned by the Claimants are certainly related in some way or another to the supply of such football matches, but they cannot be «comprised» within that market. A few examples suffice: the sale of merchandise can and does take place regardless of European matches; contracts for advertising on panels within a given stadium can be concluded regardless of any connection with football matches (e.g. in view of a series of rock concerts or of non-football sporting events) or regardless of any connection with European football matches; some of the mentioned products or services are not offered to the final consumers (in particular sponsorship contracts, free-to-air broadcasting rights and capital investment in clubs not listed on the stock exchange).

99. The Panel observes that in fact there appears to be no single «European football market» comprising various ancillary markets. Rather, there are several «football markets» in which professional football clubs operate, such as those referred to by the Claimants, but they are all separate markets for the purposes of competition law. Support for such proposition can be found in the already quoted recent report by the British Monopolies and Mergers Commission (now transformed into the Competition Commission) concerning the proposed acquisition of the football club Manchester United by the broadcasting company BskyB, where it is evidenced how Manchester United operates in several separate markets such as the supply of football matches, television rights to football matches, advertising and sponsorship, retailing of merchandise, and various services such as catering and hospitality associated with its stadium (MMC Report, para. 2.16).

100. Most of such football markets are clearly segmented in both their product and geographic dimensions. With regard to the television broadcasting market, there appears to be a growing consensus among competition authorities that pay (including pay-per-view) television and free-to-air television are separate product markets (see MMC Report, paras. 2.36 and 2.39; Office of Fair Trading, The Director General's review of BskyB's position in the wholesale pay TV market, London, December 1996, paras. 2.3 and 2.6; «Autorità garante della concorrenza e del mercato», that is the Italian competition authority, Decision no. 6999 of 26 March 1999, Stream/Telepiù, in Bollettino 12/1999, para. 9). Also from the geographic point of view, although sports broadcasting is becoming more and more international and cross-border, competition authorities and courts throughout Europe tend to maintain that broadcasting markets are mostly national, even if some of the broadcasting companies are multi-national and some of the events are covered worldwide (see e.g. the Decision of 11 December 1997 by the «Bundesgerichtshof», that is the highest German court in civil matters, upholding the previous decisions of the German competition authority «Bundeskartellamt» and of the appellate court «Kammergericht» in a case concerning television rights to European matches). As mentioned (supra, para. 98), another example of extreme geographic segmentation is to be found in the market for gate revenues (including both season tickets and match tickets). The sale of a club's merchandise tends also to be geographically very defined, with the only possible exception of a few top European clubs.

101. Having found that separate football markets exist, rather than a single and comprehensive European football market, the Panel must establish the relevant product market within which to assess whether the Contested Rule restricts competition or not. It is undisputed that the Claimants' basic grievance in this case concerns UEFA's interference with their wish to keep owning (and even further acquiring) various football clubs capable of competing in UEFA competitions. Indeed, the Claimants repeatedly stressed in their written and oral submissions that the Contested Rule would restrict investments in European football clubs' stocks. Accordingly, the Panel finds that the market more directly related to, and potentially affected by, the Contested Rule appears to be a market which can be defined as the «market for ownership interests in football clubs capable of taking part in UEFA competitions». A market for ownership interests in professional clubs has been identified as the relevant market in some United States antitrust cases, particularly in cases related to league rules banning cross-ownership of clubs of other professional sports leagues or subjecting to authorization the sale of a club. See e.g. NASL v. NFL, 505 F.Supp. 659 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), reversed 670 F.2d 1249 (2d Cir. 1982); Sullivan v. NFL, 34 F.3d 91 (1st Cir. 1994); Piazza v. MLB, 831 F.Supp. 420 (1993). The Panel finds also, in the light of the content of the Contested Rule and on the basis of the available evidence, that the Contested Rule appears to be only indirectly related, if at all, to the various other markets suggested by the Claimants, such as the market for players, the sponsorship market, the merchandising market, the media rights market and the market for gate revenues. Therefore, the effects on these markets will be considered only on a subsidiary basis to the said principal relevant market, concerning ownership interests in European professional football clubs.

102. The Panel considers that the relevant market, as defined, would include on the supply side – that is, the potential sellers of ownership interests – all the owners of European football clubs which can potentially qualify for a UEFA competition. Mr. Boon has illustrated how an investment in clubs which can qualify for UEFA competitions (referring to the main UEFA competitions, the Champions' League and the UEFA Cup) is much more attractive than an investment in other football clubs because «from a financial perspective, access to European club competition is disproportionately important to club success». Therefore, according to this economic analysis, clubs which cannot hope to qualify for one of the main UEFA competitions should not be viewed as substitutes by investors interested in football clubs. In principle, only clubs competing in the top division of one of the fifty-one European national federations can hope to qualify (the only exception being the rare occurrence of a club from a lower division winning the national cup). According to the Boon report, there are currently 737 clubs playing in the top divisions of the fifty-one UEFA countries. While the number of such clubs is basically the same every year, their identity varies slightly every football season because of the promotion/relegation system which has already been described (see supra, para. 18). Of those 737 clubs, however, probably less than a half – perhaps 350 clubs – have a realistic chance of qualifying for one of the two main UEFA competitions, given that less than 200 slots are available. It should also be considered that the number of clubs having a realistic chance of passing the first rounds is even smaller: as reported by Mr. Boon, over the five year period 1993/94-1997/98 only 66 clubs have achieved a place in the quarter final of one of the three main UEFA competitions.

103. The Panel observes that, because of the peculiarities of the football sector, investment in football clubs does not appear to be interchangeable with investments in other businesses, or even in other leisure businesses. The publicity and notoriety given by the ownership of a football club, besides the inherent excitement and gratification of running such a popular and emotional business, have always rendered such activity particularly attractive in terms of so-called VIP status and of high profile relationships with politicians and local communities. Indeed, ownership of a football club has often proved to be quite helpful, and sometimes expedient, to other business or political activities. Nowadays, because of the enormous increase in the amounts paid to clubs for television broadcasting rights, the profitability of professional clubs is also becoming interesting (see MMC Report, para. 3.79 et seq.). In particular, ownership of European professional football clubs appears to be an attractive strategic fit for media groups, given that football is a key media asset with further growth potential (see MMC Report, paras. 2.136-2.139 and 3.103). In economic terms, the circumstance that club ownership involves significant additional aspects to the mere profitability of a club means that the individual or corporate owner places on its club a significant instrumental and consumption value in addition to its possible investment value. This is not to be found in other business activities, which, therefore, are not interchangeable with the ownership of a football club. Moreover, given the largely leading position of football in European sports, clubs of other sports (e.g. a professional basketball club) can be deemed as potential substitutes only in few and very defined locations where such other sports enjoy popular success. Looking at Europe as a whole, other sports do not appear to offer a suitable alternative to the acquisition and ownership of football clubs.

104. In the light of the above, on the demand side (that is, the potential buyers of ownership interests) the market would include any individual or corporation potentially interested in an investment opportunity in a football club which could qualify for a UEFA competition. In this respect, the Claimants assert that availability of capital for investment in clubs is limited, that multi-club ownership is a rational economic investment strategy and, thus, multi-club owners are a key source of capital for football clubs within UEFA's jurisdiction. The Panel finds this argument unconvincing. As has already been said, ownership of football clubs has always been particularly attractive for reasons that go beyond mere economic considerations. Changes in clubs' ownership are notoriously quite common, and the Claimants have provided no substantial evidence proving that owners willing to sell a club of UEFA level encounter particular problems in finding suitable buyers. In fact, there is even some empirical evidence that in some markets football clubs have been able to attract substantial capital investment from new sources, not from the historic owners of the clubs, despite the presence of a rule somewhat analogous to, or even stricter than, the Contested Rule (see infra, para. 120).

105. The Panel remarks that the possible profitability of a football club and its attractiveness to investors depends much more on its specific characteristics, particularly its location and its «brand», than on the identity of the potential buyers. The Boon report mentions that multi-club owners enjoy economies of scale and synergies such as sharing of information and expertise, single sourcing of supplies and centralized services. However, the extent to which football clubs located in different countries could share resources appears to be quite limited, particularly if clubs must be kept isolated from each other for sporting reasons as ENIC affirms it is doing (see supra, para. 32). Moreover, most of such economies of scale – such as headquarters costs, in-house expertise and common purchase of services of various kinds (e.g. computer consultancy) – would also be available to clubs belonging (as most often is the case) to entrepreneurs or groups involved in other non-football businesses. As to media rights, given the current negative attitude of most competition authorities and judges throughout Europe concerning the collective sale of television broadcasting rights (see e.g. the notorious Decision of 11 December 1997 by the Bundesgerichtshof, supra at para. 100), multi-club owners would conceivably be barred from collectively selling the rights to their clubs' matches and, therefore, no economies of scale could be enjoyed in this area. In any event, given the said separation of national television markets (supra, para. 100), the joint sale of broadcasting rights to matches of clubs located in different countries would appear not to afford a particular negotiating advantage.
106. The Panel observes that several of the benefits mentioned by the Claimants, which clubs allegedly attain when they are controlled by multi-club owners are, in fact, benefits that any clubs would derive from qualified and efficient management, regardless of the ownership structure. In this respect, the Panel is impressed by the improvements allegedly brought by ENIC to the management of its clubs, but it is not prepared to accept the proposition that multi-club owners are better owners than single club owners. In the Panel's view, it is changes in management rather than in ownership that affect the way football clubs are run. Moreover, the Panel remarks that, given the cost structure of football clubs, the savings due to the supposed economies of scale would be negligible compared to the current costs for players' (or even coaches') remuneration (see supra, paras. 32-33). In other terms, economies of scale do not yield what mostly matters in order to keep clubs successful on and off the field: good players and coaches. An instance of this can be given by the sporting results of the Italian club Vicenza; notwithstanding the supposed economies of scale and efficient management related to its being controlled by ENIC, at the end of the 1998/99 season Vicenza has been relegated to the Italian second division. Furthermore, the Panel finds the Claimants' argument (that there is a scarcity of potential buyers of clubs) particularly unconvincing in the light of the circumstance that the price for obtaining control of a club able to qualify for UEFA competitions – although not one of the top European clubs – appears to be affordable by a large number of corporate or individual entrepreneurs. For instance, in order to obtain control of the Claimants – clubs at the top of their countries and able to achieve the quarter final of a UEFA competition – ENIC paid approximately £ 2.5 million for AEK and £ 2.2 million for Slavia, which are prices comparable to those of rather small enterprises in various European business sectors. As a result, the Panel concludes that there are countless potential buyers of ownership interests in football clubs which could qualify for a UEFA competition.

107. As to geographic market definition, the Panel observes that, according to EC law and practice, essentially «a relevant geographic market comprises the area in which the undertakings concerned are involved in the supply and demand of products or services, in which the conditions of competition are sufficiently homogeneous and which can be distinguished from neighbouring areas because the conditions of competition are appreciably different in those areas» (EC Commission Notice «on the definition of relevant market for the purposes of Community competition law», in Official Journal EC, 9 December 1997, C 372/5, para. 8).
108. The evidence provided by the Claimants shows how the geographic dimension of the market for ownership interests in football clubs potentially taking part in UEFA competition is pan-European. There are no impediments for clubs in attracting potential investors from all over Europe and, conversely, almost no obstacles for a potential investor in buying an ownership interest in any given club around Europe. The actual investments by ENIC confirm this pan-European dimension. Therefore, the Panel concludes that the relevant geographic market extends to Europe as a whole, or more precisely to the territories of the fifty-one European federations affiliated to UEFA (which in reality, for historical reasons, encompasses federations that do not correspond to States, such as Scotland or Wales, and goes beyond geographical Europe, insofar as it includes Israel). As mentioned, other football markets tend to be geographically more segmented (see supra, para. 99).
- f) Compatibility with Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty
109. For an agreement between undertakings or a decision by an association of undertakings to be caught by Article 81.1, it must have the «object or effect» of restricting competition (as is customary in EC case law and practice, reference is here made only to «restriction» of competition as the general term encompassing also prevention and distortion). Since the «object» and the «effect» are not cumulative but alternative requirements, as suggested by the conjunction «or» (see Court of Justice, Judgement of 30 June 1966, case 56/65, Société Technique Minière, in E.C.R. 1966, 235, at 249), the Panel needs first to consider the object of the Contested Rule, i.e. its purpose in the context in which it is to be applied. Then, if the purpose of the Contested Rule does not appear to be anti-competitive, the Panel needs to take into consideration its actual effect on the relevant market. Should the Contested Rule have either the object or the effect of hindering competition, the Panel would then be required by EC case law to assess the Contested Rule in its economic context in order to decide whether it affects competition and trade between Member States to an appreciable extent (see e.g. Court of Justice, Judgement of 9 July 1969, case 5/69, Völk, in E.C.R. 1969, 295, para. 3; Judgement of 8 February 1971, case 22/71, Béguelin, in E.C.R. 1971, 949, para. 16).

110. As to the object of the Contested Rule, the Claimants assert that UEFA's predominant purpose has been to preserve its monopoly control over European football competitions rather than to preserve the integrity of the game. The Claimants' argue that support for this assertion can be found in the UEFA internal memorandum of 25 February 1998, drafted by Mr. Marcel Benz after the meeting with ENIC representatives of the previous day, and in the rules of the UEFA Statutes providing for the monopoly power of UEFA over European competitions. In the UEFA internal memorandum, under the heading «possible problems, questions and risks», it is possible to read inter alia:

«Does the ENIC group form the basis for a European league ... Couldn't a media mogul take advantage of ENIC's groundwork and create a European league with the ENIC clubs? Couldn't other investors (e.g. IMG) pursue the same strategy and buy up clubs on a large scale? ... Isn't it a risk for UEFA in the media sector if TV stations own the rights of clubs in the domestic competition? Won't central marketing by UEFA be infringed upon sooner or later? The search for UEFA Champions League sponsors could also become harder, as sponsors would also get a similar market presence throughout Europe with ENIC».

111. The Respondent replies by asserting that, besides the endeavour to prevent a clear conflict of interest situation and thus to ensure that competition is genuine, there was no ulterior motive for the adoption of the Contested Rule. The Respondent finds support in the same UEFA internal memorandum of 25 February 1999, where questions are raised on «how UEFA could guarantee sporting competition if two clubs of the ENIC group met in the same UEFA competition. Who would win? Would ENIC or its management decide, or would the winners be decided on the pitch, in a purely sporting encounter, as desired by UEFA and its public? ... UEFA must take all legal measures possible to guarantee clean competition. ... The interests of clean competition in sport are at stake».

112. The Panel notes that both the title and the text of the Contested Rule appear prima facie to support the Respondent's assertion that the Contested Rule is only designed to ensure that competition is genuine. The title reads «Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs», while Paragraph A declares the object of the Contested Rule as follows:

«It is of fundamental importance that the sporting integrity of the UEFA club competitions be protected. To achieve this aim, UEFA reserves the right to intervene and to take appropriate action in any situation in which it transpires that the same individual or legal entity is in a position to influence the management, administration and/or sporting performance of more than one team participating in the same UEFA club competition».

Moreover, the Panel points out that the Contested Rule is not limited to banning multi-club ownership within the same competition but also forbids any other type of structure or behaviour which could potentially enable a club (or a related person) to influence a competitor in the same competition (see Paragraphs B.1 and B.2 of the Contested Rule).

113. The Panel considers that the Claimants had the burden of rebutting such prima facie evidence by proving that the true object of the Contested Rule was an anti-competitive one. The Panel finds that the Claimants have not satisfied this burden of proof, given that the only plausible evidence relied upon is the UEFA internal memorandum of 25 February 1998, which is at best ambiguous. Apart from the fact that it was drafted by an individual who is not a member of the body which adopted the rule, the memorandum appears to contain meeting notes rather than statements of policy and questions rather than answers. As a matter of fact, the memorandum lends support to contradictory arguments; therefore, it is of little avail for the rebuttal of the said prima facie evidence. As to the provisions of the UEFA Statutes mentioned by the Claimants, they simply confirm the notorious circumstance that UEFA is the institutional and regulatory authority over European football, as normally happens with all international sports federations: in no way do such provisions prove or disprove a particular object of the Contested Rule. The Panel finds, therefore, that in enacting the Contested Rule UEFA did purport to prevent the conflict of interest inherent in commonly owned clubs taking part in the same competition and to ensure a genuine athletic event with truly uncertain results. As a result, the Panel holds that the object of the Contested Rule is not to restrict competition within the meaning of Article 81.1 of the EC Treaty.

114. As to the effect of the Contested Rule, the Claimants assert that it appreciably restricts competition by preventing or restricting investment by multiple owners in European clubs, by changing the nature, intensity and pattern of competition between commonly controlled clubs and those having other ownership structures, and by enhancing the economic imbalance between football clubs leading to an increase in the market dominance of a few clubs over the majority of smaller and medium-sized clubs. On the other hand, the Respondent asserts that the Contested Rule has an overwhelmingly pro-competitive purpose and effect, namely to preserve the integrity of sporting competition between football clubs.
115. According to EC case law, in order to ascertain whether competition is in fact restricted to an appreciable extent, the Panel must essentially look at the competition which would occur on the relevant market in the absence of the Contested Rule (see Court of Justice, Judgement of 30 June 1966, case 56/65, Société Technique Minière, in E.C.R. 1966, 235, at 250; Judgement of 11 July 1985, case 42/84, Remia, in E.C.R. 1985, 2545, para. 18).
116. The Panel observes that the Contested Rule undoubtedly discourages to some extent any current owner of a club potentially capable of qualifying for UEFA competitions from buying ownership interests in another club having the same capability. In the absence of the Contested Rule, not only would there not be such discouragement but, according to the Boon report, multi-club control could be expected to expand. Assuming that Mr. Boon's conjecture is correct, single club owners would probably perceive that multi-club owners retain market advantages from their expanded dimension and might decide that the best way to improve their own position would be also to acquire additional clubs. With an expansion of multi-club ownership throughout Europe the total number of club owners, and thus the total number of undertakings on the market, would evidently decrease, even though the number of clubs realistically aspiring to a slot in a UEFA competition would probably remain the same because the number of talented players cannot be increased at will. As mentioned (supra, para. 102), probably no more than 350 clubs can each year realistically aspire to a UEFA slot, of which substantially less than one hundred could realistically hope to pass the first rounds and achieve a satisfactory number of matches and sufficient television exposure. In economic terms, within the relevant market there would be a reduction of the number of actors on the supply side vis-à-vis an unvarying large number of actors on the demand side (see supra, para 104). In other words, there could be a process of concentration of club ownership into fewer hands, given that there is a sporting barrier to any sudden entry into the market. As is well known, an entry into the market is hindered by the circumstance that in the European sporting system a new club must go through the pyramidal structure of national championships for several years before attaining a top professional level (see supra, paras. 15 and 18). As nobody can suddenly create a new football club and apply to directly enter into a top national championship or a UEFA competition (as happens for instance when United States professional leagues expand and add new franchises), a viable entry into the market is possible only through the purchase of an already existing club playing at good level in one of the fifty-one European top divisions.

117. The Panel observes that, from an economic point of view, the said decrease in the number of club owners could be expected either not to have any effect on prices of ownership interests in clubs – because club owners willing to sell their club would still be quite numerous, and because price is determined not only by supply and demand but also by the mentioned instrumental and consumption value placed by owners on clubs (see supra, para. 103) – or to bring about an increase in prices once the decrease in owners becomes noticeable. If, stretching the argument to extremes, the said concentration trend led to there being only a few owners of clubs capable of qualifying for UEFA competitions, the market for ownership interests in such clubs would be characterized by an oligopoly – presenting inherent incentives for cartel behaviour – with which any interested buyer would have to deal. Even on other football markets mentioned by the Claimants, where clubs are on the supply side – gate revenues, media rights, merchandising –, the reduction of club owners and the potentially resulting oligopoly could eventually bring about increases in prices to the detriment of consumers (e.g. increase in prices of match tickets or of pay television subscriptions). The Panel finds such an oligopoly scenario to be probably too extreme. The fact that when the Contested Rule was enacted the total number of European clubs controlled by multi-club owners was very low – only 12 clubs, according to the Boon report – seems to demonstrate, first, that a rush towards multi-club ownership would be unlikely (at least in the short term) and, second, that the postulated concentration process would in any event need several years to develop. However, even without admitting all the way the oligopoly scenario, it must be acknowledged that in the absence of the Contested Rule the number of undertakings on the market would sooner or later decline while the effects on prices, although scarcely noticeable in the short term, would in due course tend to show an increase.
118. As a result of the foregoing analysis, the Panel finds that, in the absence of the Contested Rule, competition on the relevant market and on other football markets would initially probably remain unaffected and, when affected, it would be restricted. In the light of this a contrario test, the Panel finds that the actual effect of the Contested Rule is to place some limitation on mergers between European high level football clubs, and thus to increase the number of undertakings on the relevant market and on other football markets; accordingly, the Contested Rule preserves or even enhances economic competition between club owners and economic and sporting competition between clubs. The Panel notes that, according to the Court of Justice, clauses restraining competitors' freedom which are indirectly conducive to increasing the number of undertakings on the relevant market must be deemed as pro-competitive (Judgement of 11 July 1985, case 42/84, Remia, in E.C.R. 1985, 2545, last sentence of para. 19).

119. The Panel observes, consequently, that either the Contested Rule does not affect the relevant market at all or, if it does, it exerts a beneficial influence upon competition, insofar as it tends to prevent a potential increase in prices for ownership interests in professional football clubs (and to prevent potential price increases in other football markets as well), and thus it tends to encourage investment in football clubs. As a result, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule, by discouraging merger and acquisition transactions between existing owners of clubs aspiring to participate in UEFA competitions, and conversely by encouraging investments in such football clubs by the many potential newcomers, appears to have the effect of preserving competition between club owners and between football clubs rather than appreciably restricting competition on the relevant market or on other football markets.
120. Empirical support for the proposition that the Contested Rule not only does not prevent or restrict investment in football clubs, but even favors it, can be found in the British market. There the Premier League has a rule not allowing any person or corporate entity, except with the prior written consent of the Board (which thus far has never been granted), to «directly or indirectly hold or acquire any interest in more than 10 per cent of the issued share capital of a Club while he or any associate is a director of, or directly or indirectly holds any interest in the share capital of, any other Club».

Despite a rule substantially stricter than the Contested Rule – 10% rather than a controlling interest – British clubs, as reported by Mr. Boon, have successfully attracted capital investment in recent years and a substantial proportion of such capital investment has been from new corporate investors, not from the historic owners of the clubs.

121. The Claimants also allege that the Contested Rule has the effects of altering the nature, intensity and pattern of competition between commonly controlled clubs and other clubs, and of enhancing the economic imbalance between football clubs, leading to an increase in the market dominance of a few big clubs over the majority of smaller and medium sized clubs. In other words, the Claimants argue that the Contested Rule favours the rich and strong clubs over the weak and poor ones. The Claimants base this argument on the assumption that multi-club owners would tend to own only small and medium clubs and to invest more in countries where football is economically less developed, and thus would mitigate the process of polarization of market power between the bigger clubs in the larger football countries and other clubs. The Claimants' evidence in support of this argument is basically the pattern of ENIC's own investments.

122. The Panel finds that the said assumption is unsupported by meaningful evidence and fails to discern the logic of the argument. Certainly, ENIC has thus far followed the strategy of acquiring medium-sized clubs; however, if such an investment strategy is convenient, nothing will prevent owners of big clubs from acquiring medium-sized clubs as well. As mentioned, it appears to be a reasonable strategy to control clubs of different sporting levels, and some big clubs are indeed doing it: Mr. Boon has mentioned the well known media magnate group controlling AC Milan which also owns Monza (a smaller Italian club not playing in the top Italian division) and Mr. Trijbits has testified with regard to the attitude of top Dutch clubs (see supra, para. 35). Therefore, in the absence of the Contested Rule, not only would the polarization of market power between bigger and smaller clubs continue but, in the light of the previous findings, it would probably even be enhanced. After all, polarization of market power is what usually happens in any business sector when mergers and acquisitions are completely left to market dynamics and dominant companies are free to acquire smaller competitors (which is why regulators enact rules such as the EC Merger Regulation no. 4064/89). Moreover, the problem with this scenario is that, while in other types of business it is economically desirable for consumers that marginal and less efficient undertakings disappear from the market, in the sports business consumer welfare requires that numerous clubs remain on the market and achieve the highest possible economic and sporting balance between them. The Panel is of the view that to provide incentives for actual or potential club owners to invest their resources in only one high level club, as the Contested Rule tends to do, is conducive to an economic and sporting balance, rather than an imbalance, between football clubs. Therefore, from this point of view as well, the Panel finds the Contested Rule to be beneficial to competition in football markets.
123. Furthermore, in terms of consumer welfare, the quality of the entertainment provided to European football fans – with reference to both live attendance and television audience – does not appear to be appreciably affected by the Contested Rule. The only conceivable effect of the Contested Rule is that a club which has qualified for a UEFA competition would be replaced by the club from the same country which, in the previous season's national championship, ranked immediately below the excluded club. Obviously, the replaced club would suffer a harm and its committed supporters would resent the replacement, but at the same time the substitute club and its committed supporters would enjoy a benefit exactly corresponding to the injury of the replaced club. The Panel observes in this respect that in principle competition law protects competition and the market as a whole, not individual competitors. Accordingly, in order to establish an injury to consumer welfare – i.e. that fans with a general interest in football are harmed – evidence should be provided that the substitute team would be less skilled and entertaining than the excluded one. This has not been proven by the Claimants and, in any event, it appears quite hard to prove, given that the quality and talent of the players and coach of two closely ranked teams are essentially analogous, and given that participation in UEFA competitions occurs one season later, when the coach or several players might have moved elsewhere and, in fact, the substitute team might well be more talented and entertaining than the replaced one. Therefore, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule does not appear to appreciably affect the quality of the sporting product offered to consumers.

- g) Objective necessity of regulating multi-club ownership and proportionality of the Contested Rule
124. The foregoing findings appear to suffice for rejecting the contention that the Contested Rule appreciably restricts competition, and thus appear to suffice for excluding it from the scope of the prohibition set forth by Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty. However, in order to further support those findings, the Panel deems it opportune to verify whether the limitation on multi-club ownership can also be regarded as an essential feature in order to ensure the proper functioning of a professional football competition. In this regard, the Panel notes that the EC Court of Justice has held in several judgements that restraints on competitors' conduct do not amount to restrictions on competition within the meaning of Article 81.1 (ex 85.1), provided that such restraints do not exceed what is necessary for the attainment of legitimate aims and remain proportionate to such aims (see e.g. Judgement of 11 July 1985, case 161/84, Remia, in E.C.R. 1985, 2545; Judgement of 28 January 1986, case 161/84, Pronuptia, in E.C.R. 1986, 353; Judgement of 19 April 1988, case 27/87, Erauw, in E.C.R. 1988, 1919; Judgement of 15 December 1994, case C-250/92, DLG, in E.C.R. 1994, I-5641; Judgement of 12 December 1995, case C-399/93, Oude Luttikhuis, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4515).
125. The Claimants assert that the means employed by UEFA are disproportionate to the objective of protecting the integrity of European football competitions and have submitted for consideration a variety of «less restrictive alternatives». In particular, the Claimants argue that criminal penalties provided by the various State laws, in addition to UEFA disciplinary powers, are sufficient to deal severely with match-fixing in any case where such wrongdoing is proved. In addition, according to the Claimants, a more proportionate approach could include the adoption by UEFA and by all clubs participating in UEFA competitions of a code of ethics, and more particularly of a draft document prepared by ENIC and by the Claimants entitled «Proposed measures to guarantee sporting integrity in European football competition organised by UEFA». The Claimants have also suggested that the Contested Rule could include a clause for a case by case examination of multi-club ownership in order to appraise particular circumstances, and have proposed a «fit and proper» test for every club owner as a condition for participation in UEFA competitions or even as a requirement for the purchase of a club. They have also proposed that UEFA enact rules limiting the number of clubs which the same owner can control, or that an independent trust be established to which control of commonly owned clubs could be transferred for the duration of UEFA competitions. Moreover, in order to avoid problems with bonuses and transfers, inevitably connected with multi-club ownership (see supra, paras. 39-40), suggestions were also advanced that UEFA enact schemes, either general or special to commonly owned clubs, limiting bonuses and transfers of players.
126. The Respondent replies by asserting that the Contested Rule corresponds to the minimum degree of regulation necessary to protect the integrity of football competition and is, therefore, fully compatible with the law. The Respondent argues that the Contested Rule does not prohibit multi-club ownership, but simply prevents commonly controlled clubs from participating in the same UEFA club competition, and that any investor may acquire a shareholding of up to 50% in any two or more European football clubs participating in UEFA competitions without ever being affected by the Contested Rule. In this respect, the Respondent mentions the stricter regulations which may be found in the United Kingdom, such as the rules of the Premier League, the Football League and the Scottish Football Association, or in the United States, such as the rules of the NBA, the NFL, the NHL and the MLB. The Respondent also argues that preventive measures are necessary in order to avoid conflicts of interest, and cites in this respect the principles applicable to lawyers and arbitrators. The Respondent also criticizes the draft regulation submitted by the Claimants for proposing rules which already exist (such as the obligations to play always to win and to field the best available team, and the disciplinary proceedings for anyone suspected of match-fixing), or rules which are impractical and unrealistic to enforce (such as the obligation for any multi-club owner to ensure the autonomy of each club's coaching and playing staff and the limitation of contacts between the clubs in the event that they play against each other, or the obligation to include in any club at least one minority shareholder capable of exercising minority shareholder's rights), or measures hard to assess and which would probably be challenged in court (such as the exclusion from competition of clubs whose owner is not a fit and proper person).

127. The Panel has already analyzed the «integrity question» and has found that, when commonly controlled clubs participate in the same competition, the consumers would reasonably perceive this situation as a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results (supra, paras. 22-48). Accordingly, the Panel has concluded that multiple ownership of clubs in the context of the same competition is a justified cause for concern by a sports regulator and organizer such as UEFA (supra, para. 48). The Panel has also already found that the intention of the Contested Rule is to prevent the conflict of interest inherent in commonly controlled clubs participating in the same UEFA competition and to preserve the genuineness of results (supra, para. 113). In this respect, the Panel is persuaded that this is a legitimate goal to pursue, and finds evident support for this proposition in the Bosman ruling, where the EC Court stated that the aim «of maintaining a balance between clubs by preserving a certain degree of equality and uncertainty as to results ... must be accepted as legitimate» (Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 106).
128. The Panel observes that organizing sports leagues and competitions needs a certain amount of coordination and horizontal restraints between clubs in order to supply the «product» to the consumers. As was remarked by a leading United States antitrust scholar (and later federal judge) «some activities can only be carried out jointly. Perhaps the leading example is league sports» (R.H. BORK, The antitrust paradox. A policy at war with itself, 2nd edition, New York 1993, 278). Indeed, each professional club competing in a league or in a competition has an evident interest in combining sporting and economic rivalry with sporting and economic cooperation. In the words of the Supreme Court of the United States, sport is «an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all. ... What the NCAA and its member institutions market in this case is competition itself – contests between competing institutions. Of course, this would be completely ineffective if there were no rules on which the competitors agreed to create and define the competition to be marketed. A myriad of rules affecting such matters as the side of the field, the number of players on a team, and the extent to which physical violence is to be encouraged or proscribed, all must be agreed upon, and all restrain the manner in which institutions compete. ... And the integrity of the “product” cannot be preserved except by mutual agreement» (Judgement of 27 June 1984, NCAA v. Board of Regents of the University of Oklahoma, in 468 U.S. 85, 101-102).

Advocate General Lenz basically espoused such line of reasoning when he stated that «the field of professional football is substantially different from other markets in that the clubs are mutually dependent on each other» and that «certain restrictions may be necessary to ensure the proper functioning of the sector» (Opinion delivered on 20 September 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 270).

129. The Panel is of the opinion that among the «myriad of rules» needed in order to organize a football competition, rules bound to protect public confidence in the authenticity of results appear to be of the utmost importance. The need to preserve the reputation and quality of the football product may bring about restraints on individual club owners' freedom. In this respect, the Panel sees an analogy with restraints which the Court of Justice has regarded as inherent in, and thus necessary for, franchising systems (Judgement of 28 January 1986, case 161/84, Pronuptia, in E.C.R. 1986, 353, para. 15 et seq.).

130. Given that the Panel has found that in multi-club ownership situations a problem of conflict of interest objectively exists (supra, para. 45), and that this has been found to affect the public perception of the authenticity of results (supra, para. 48), the Panel is persuaded that a rule concerning multi-club ownership is objectively necessary in order to provide the consumers with a credible sporting contest. The question is whether the Contested Rule is proportionate to the legitimate objective pursued or whether UEFA should have adopted a less restrictive means to achieve it. With regard to the principle of the «less restrictive alternative», however, the Panel is of the opinion that this does not necessarily mean that it is necessary to test the Contested Rule against any conceivable alternative. Judges should not substitute for legislators, and the former should always allow the latter to retain a certain margin of appreciation. In other words, «the principle of proportionality cannot be applied mechanically» and «the less restrictive alternative test is not an end in itself but simply facilitates the judicial enquiry» (T. TRIDIMAS, The principle of proportionality in Community law: from the rule of law to market integration, in The Irish Jurist 1996, 83, at 93-94). Such position is supported by some significant Court of Justice case law (see e.g. Judgement of 10 May 1995, case C-384/93, Alpine Investment, in E.C.R. 1995, I-1141, paras. 51-54).

131. With regard to proportionality, the Panel observes that the Contested Rule has been narrowly drawn to proscribe only the participation in the same UEFA competition of commonly controlled clubs and does not prohibit multi-club ownership as such. The Contested Rule does not proscribe the participation of commonly controlled clubs in two different UEFA competitions and does not prevent the acquisition of shares – up to 49% of the voting rights – in a large number of clubs participating in the same competition. As the scope of the Contested Rule is strictly limited to participation in the same UEFA competition, a multi-club owner can control clubs in several countries and obtain a good return on the investments even if only one of its clubs is allowed to take part in a given UEFA competition. In this respect, the already quoted MMC Report contains some evidence – referred to the British market, but arguably representative of other national markets – suggesting that the top national championship (in England the Premier League) and the national cup (in England the FA Cup) are the football competitions most preferred by consumers and most economically rewarding, because of their unique combination of volume and popularity of matches (MMC Report, para. 2.22). Indeed, in response to a 1996 British survey, 71% of pay-television subscribers who watched football said that the Premier League was very important to them and 68% said the same of the FA Cup; only 50% said the same of UEFA matches involving British clubs (ibidem). Moreover, the number of UEFA matches played by a club (even achieving the final) is substantially fewer than the number of national championship and national cup matches. Accordingly, European football clubs still derive most of their revenues from national championship and cup matches; for example, about 75% of Manchester United’s profits come from Premier League matches (ibidem, para. 2.125). In the light of the foregoing data and remarks, and of the circumstance that participation in national competitions is not affected at all, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule appears prima facie to be limited to its proper objective and not to be disproportionate or unreasonable. This prima facie conclusion needs now to be examined in the light of the less restrictive alternative test.

132. Before proceeding with the less restrictive alternative test, the Panel remarks that, as a normative technique, rules which are applied a priori differ from rules which are applied a posteriori. Rules that are applied a priori tend to prevent undesirable situations which might prove difficult or useless to deal with afterwards, rather than imposing a penalty on someone guilty of something. On the other hand, rules that are applied a posteriori are bound to react to specific behaviours. For example, under EC law and several national laws, rules on mergers are applied a priori, whereas rules on abuses of dominant position are applied a posteriori. Merger operations are checked before they actually take place, and are blocked if the outcome of the merger would be the establishment of a dominant position because of the possible negative consequences on the market and not because the individuals owning or managing the merging undertakings are particularly untrustworthy and the company after the merger is expected to abuse of its dominant position. Among the myriad of possible examples, another obvious example of rules applied a priori can be found in provisions of company law restraining cross-ownership of shares (see Article 24a of the Second Council Directive of 13 December 1976, no. 77/91/EEC, in Official Journal EC, 31 January 1977, L 26/1, as subsequently amended by Council Directive of 23 November 1992, no. 92/101/EEC, in Official Journal EC, 28 November 1992, L 347/64). One can think also of all the rules providing for incompatibility between a given position and another (say, between membership of a company’s board of directors and membership of the same company’s board of auditors). All such a priori rules are applied on a preventive basis, with no appraisal of any specific wrongdoing and no moral judgement on the individuals or companies concerned. On the other hand, rules setting forth obligations and corresponding penalties or sanctions, such as criminal or disciplinary rules, can be applied only after someone has been found guilty of having violated an obligation. In summary, a priori and a posteriori rules respond to different legal purposes and are legally complementary rather than alternative. Therefore, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule, which is clearly to be applied a priori, can be supplemented but cannot be substituted by any sporting rules establishing disciplinary sanctions or any State laws forbidding match-fixing. Therefore, such disciplinary and criminal rules cannot be «less restrictive alternatives» insofar as they are not truly «alternative» to the Contested Rule.

133. As to the other alternative means proposed by the Claimants, the Panel is not persuaded that they are viable or that they really can be considered as less restrictive. The Claimants have particularly relied on a draft document headed «Proposed measures to guarantee sporting integrity in European football competition organised by UEFA» (hereinafter «the Claimants' Proposal»). According to the Claimants' Proposal, inter alia, UEFA would be required in consultation with the relevant national association to control the ownership structure of every club wishing to participate in a UEFA competition and would be «entitled to take appropriate steps in cases where it considers that a particular individual or legal entity is not a fit and proper person to be or become an owner of a club», and could «after giving that person or legal entity a reasonable opportunity to make representations, decide that the club or clubs owned or to be owned by him or it may, subject to giving one season's notice, become ineligible to participate in European competitions».

At the hearing, the Claimants also proposed to extend this fit and proper test to clubs' directors and executives. Since one season's notice should be granted, the Claimants' Proposal would imply that every summer the UEFA offices should check the ownership structures of all the clubs (established in about fifty different legal systems) which can potentially qualify for the UEFA competitions of the following season – as said, in all the European top national divisions there are 737 clubs, of which perhaps 350 have a realistic chance of qualifying for UEFA competitions (see supra, para. 102) – and, after a legal hearing, pass moral judgements on the owners', directors' and executives' adequacy to run a football club. The Panel finds that, from a substantive point of view, it would be very difficult to come up with some objective requirements in order to fairly carry out a fit and proper test and, from a procedural point of view, the administrative costs involved and the legal risks of being sued for economic and moral damages after publicly declaring in front of the whole of Europe that someone is not a fit and proper person are practically incalculable (in this respect, as UEFA is a private body, no comparison can be made with fit and proper tests carried out by public authorities prior to granting bookmaking licences, because such public authorities are essentially immune from being sued for declaring that someone is not «fit and proper»). The Panel notes that the Court of Justice has stated, with reference to the fashion sector, that if it is too difficult to establish objective quality requirements and it is too expensive to control compliance with such requirements, some preventive restraints are acceptable and do not violate Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty (Judgement of 28 January 1986, case 161/84, Pronuptia, in E.C.R. 1986, 353, para. 21). Analogously, the Panel finds that the Claimants' Proposal would be very difficult and way too expensive to administer and cannot be regarded as a viable alternative to the Contested Rule. Moreover, hardly could a UEFA rule requiring an inherently intrusive ethical examination of clubs' owners, directors and executives be characterized as a «less restrictive» alternative.

134. The Claimants have also mentioned approvingly some of the rules adopted by national leagues with reference to multi-club ownership – in the United Kingdom: Section J.4.2 of the FA Premier League Rules, Paragraph 84.1 of the Football League Regulations, and Paragraph 13 of the Articles of Association of the Scottish Football Association; in the United States: Article 3 of the NBA Articles of Association, and Article 3, Section 3.11 of the MLB National League Constitution – because they have provision for derogation and for individual cases to be considered on their own merits. The Panel, however, upon reading such rules finds that they are in principle more restrictive than the Contested Rule, insofar as they forbid a holding of more than 10% of the shares of another club (the Premier League), or a holding of or dealing in any shares or securities of more than one club (Football League, Scottish Football Association), or a holding of any financial interest in more than one club (NBA, MLB National League). Admittedly, most of these rules provide for the possibility of trying to obtain the prior approval of the respective sports governing body. However, apart from the fact that in practice no such approval has ever been granted, it seems to the Panel that such possibility for derogation in individual cases is strictly linked to the extremely rigorous rules in force within those leagues. Support for this interpretation can be found in the NBA rules, which clearly distinguish between the mere holding of financial interests, where application for derogation is possible, and control of more than one club, which is absolutely forbidden with no provision for derogation. The Panel finds that control of more than one club taking part in the same football competition is so inherently conducive to a conflict of interest, and to the related public suspicions, that there is no scope for the examination of individual cases. In addition, any legal regime based on ad hoc authorizations would cause unpredictability and uncertainty, and every denial of authorization would in all likelihood bring about expensive litigation, such as the present one. In this respect, the Panel is of the opinion that, for the good of sports and of consumers, it is advisable that sports leagues and federations try to shape their regulations in such a way that organization and administration of sports are not permanently conditioned by the risk of being sued.
135. The Claimants have then proposed other miscellaneous measures as alternatives to the Contested Rule, but the Panel finds that they are not suitable options. One proposed measure is the enactment of rules limiting the number of clubs that the same owner can control but, as has been seen, even two commonly controlled clubs suffice to give rise to conflict of interest problems. Other proposals try to address the issue by requiring that multi-club owners divest their ownership interests in all but one of the owned clubs solely for the period of the UEFA competition. This would be done through the establishment of an independent trust to which control of commonly owned clubs could be transferred for the duration of UEFA competitions or through the appointment of an independent nominee who would exercise the owner's voting rights in its sole discretion. The Panel finds that this solution would be not only complex to administer but also quite intrusive upon the clubs' structure and management; in any event, the true problem would be that the interim suspension of control or voting rights does not modify the substantial ownership of a club, and thus does not exclude the underlying continuance of a conflict of interest. Lastly, the proposed regulations restricting bonuses and transfers of players in view of a game between two commonly owned clubs would only take care of some aspects of the conflict of interest but, in particular, would not avoid the objective problems related to the allocation of resources by the multi-club owner among its clubs (supra, para. 33 et seq.) and to the interest of third clubs (supra, para. 43).

136. In conclusion, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule is an essential feature for the organization of a professional football competition and is not more extensive than necessary to serve the fundamental goal of preventing conflicts of interest which would be publicly perceived as affecting the authenticity, and thus the uncertainty, of results in UEFA competitions. The Panel finds the Contested Rule to be proportionate to such legitimate objective and finds that no viable and realistic less restrictive alternatives exist. As a result, also in the light of the previous findings that the Contested Rule does not appear to have the object or effect of restricting competition, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not violate Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty.

h) Compatibility with Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty

137. The Claimants assert that UEFA is the only body empowered to organize European competitions and, consequently, holds a dominant position in the various European football markets. According to the Claimants, UEFA enjoys a position of economic strength which enables it to behave to an appreciable extent independently of the other undertakings which operate in the relevant markets, including the football clubs which participate in European competitions, and ultimately independently of supporters and spectators. The Claimants also assert that UEFA and its member associations, which normally enjoy monopoly power in their respective countries, enjoy joint dominance by virtue of their economic and legal links. The Claimants argue that the adoption of the Contested Rule constitutes an abuse of UEFA's dominant position contrary to Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty because the Contested Rule restricts competition, is unnecessary and disproportionate, unfairly discriminates between commonly controlled clubs and other clubs, and is not objectively justified. In order to support their contention that UEFA's conduct amounts to an abuse, the Claimants expressly rely on essentially the same arguments already advanced in connection with Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty.

138. The Respondent replies by denying that UEFA is in a dominant position within the meaning of Article 82 (ex 86), and in particular by denying that UEFA is able to behave independently of the clubs. The Respondent remarks that adopting a rule to preserve the integrity of the UEFA club competitions cannot amount to an abuse of a dominant position. The Respondent also asserts that the allegations concerning proportionality, discrimination and anti-competitive behaviour contain nothing new, and thus relies on the arguments advanced with reference to previous grounds.

139. The Panel notes that currently UEFA is the only pan-European regulator and administrator of football in general. However, it is not enough to state that a federation enjoys a monopolistic role in regulating and administering its sport, because this is inherent in the current European sports structure and «is recognized to be the most efficient way of organising sport» (EC Commission, The European model of sport, Brussels 1999, para. 3.2; see also CAS 96/166 K. v. FEI, preliminary award of 18 November 1997, in Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, op. cit., p. 371, para. 38). The Panel observes that in order to establish whether an undertaking has a dominant position, it is necessary to evaluate such dominance not in the abstract but in relation to one or more specific relevant markets. In this respect, UEFA's activities as an undertaking are developed as the sole – thus far – organizer of pan-European football competitions, retaining the related revenues from the sale of television rights for Champions' League matches and for the final match of the UEFA Cup and from the Champions' League group of sponsors. UEFA also cooperates with local undertakings (national federations or other entities) in organizing the final matches of its competitions. Revenues derived from UEFA's organization of pan-European competitions are apportioned among UEFA, including therein member national associations, and the participating clubs. In substance, UEFA can exert a dominant market power in the market for the organization of pan-European football matches and competitions.

140. In order to find an abuse of dominant position, the Panel needs to find that UEFA is seeking to overcome rival competitors through its dominant market power. In this respect, the Panel observes that if UEFA were found to exploit its market power in order, for example, to obstruct the establishment of another entity organizing pan-European football matches, this should certainly be analyzed with particular attention being paid to Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty. A case of this kind was faced by the Italian competition authority, which held that the Italian sailing federation violated Article 3 of the Italian competition statute – essentially identical to Article 82 of the EC Treaty – insofar as it used its dominant position to obstruct and boycott in various ways an independent organizer of sailing regattas with the purpose of profiting more from the organization of its own regattas (see Autorità garante della concorrenza e del mercato, Decision no. 788 of 18 November 1992, AICI/FIV, in Bollettino 22/1992). However, these theoretical and actual examples appear to bear no analogy to the enactment of the Contested Rule. The Claimants are not trying to organize pan-European competitions, nor are they selling television rights to existing pan-European competitions organized in competition with UEFA (as Media Partners would have done if the planned new pan-European football competitions, the Super League and the Pro Cup, had in fact been created outside of UEFA; see supra, para. 19).
141. The Panel has already identified the relevant product market as the market for ownership interests in football clubs capable of taking part in UEFA competitions (see supra, para. 100). The Panel observes that UEFA does not own any football club, nor can it buy or run one. Accordingly, UEFA is not present at all on this market and cannot be held to enjoy a dominant position. With respect to the relevant market it appears that UEFA may act, and has acted, only as a mere regulator. The Panel also observes that the national federations are not on the relevant market either; therefore, UEFA and its member associations do not enjoy a joint dominant position on such market. The Panel finds that, as a United States court has recognized, «if a regulation is adopted by an independent sanctioning organization with no financial stake in the outcome, a court will have maximum assurance that the regulation is to protect fair competition within the sport», (M&H Tire v. Hoosiers, 733 F.2d 973, 1st Cir. 1984, at 982-983).

142. The Claimants have pointed out that, according to EC case law, in certain circumstances an undertaking dominant on one market can commit an abuse on a neighbouring market (see Court of Justice, Judgement of 6 March 1974, cases 6-7/73, Commercial Solvents, in E.C.R. 1974, 223; AKZO, Judgement of 3 July 1991, case C-62/86, in E.C.R. 1994, I-3439; Court of First Instance, Judgement of 1 April 1993, case T-65/89, British Gypsum, in E.C.R. 1993, II-392; Judgement of 6 October 1994, case T-83/91, Tetra Pak II, in E.C.R. 1994, II-762).
143. The Panel remarks, however, that in all such EC precedents the dominant undertakings were active on both the market of dominance and the neighbouring non-dominated market. Accordingly, in order to find an abuse of dominant position on a market other than the market of dominance it must be proven that, through the abusive conduct, the dominant undertaking – or the group of dominant undertakings in the event of joint dominance – tends to extend its presence also on the other market or tends to strengthen its dominant position on the market of dominance (or at least tends to undermine the competitors' competitiveness). In the present case, UEFA (or any national federation) is obviously not going to enter, let alone extend its presence, in the market for ownership interests in football clubs. Furthermore, the Claimants have not provided adequate evidence that UEFA, in adopting the Contested Rule, has tried to strengthen its monopolistic position on the market for the organization of pan-European football matches and competitions (nor have Claimants provided any evidence that there is conduct of this kind attributable to the national federations collectively). Besides such lack of evidence, the Panel fails to see any logical link between the rule on multi-club ownership and the alleged attempt or intent to hinder the entry into the market of a new competitor (which could be the group that has planned to establish a «Super League» or some other entity or individual who might try to create a football league in Europe modelled on United States leagues). The opposite would seem more logical, insofar as the Contested Rule tends to alienate multi-club owners and thus might eventually tend to facilitate their secession from UEFA in order to join alternative pan-European competitions or leagues (see also supra, paras. 110-113).
144. In any event, with regard to the various abuses alleged by the Claimants, the Panel observes that it has already dealt with them in connection with other grounds. The Panel has found above that the Contested Rule does not restrict competition (see supra, paras. 114-123), that it is necessary and proportionate to the objective pursued (see supra, paras. 125-136), that it does not unfairly discriminate between commonly controlled clubs and other clubs (see supra, para. 65), and that it is objectively justified (see supra, para. 130).
145. In conclusion, the Panel holds that the adoption by UEFA of the Contested Rule has not constituted an abuse of an individual or a collective dominant position within the meaning of Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty.

Swiss competition law: articles 5 and 7 of the Federal Act on Cartels

146. Article 5.1 of the «Loi fédérale sur les cartels et autres restrictions à la concurrence» of 6 October 1995 (i.e. the Swiss Federal Act on Cartels and Other Restraints of Competition, hereinafter «Swiss Cartel Act») reads as follows:

«Les accords qui affectent de manière notable la concurrence sur le marché de certains biens ou services et qui ne sont pas justifiés par des motifs d'efficacité économique, ainsi que tous ceux qui conduisent à la suppression d'une concurrence efficace, sont illicites» («All agreements which significantly affect competition in the market for certain goods or services and are not justified on grounds of economic efficiency and all agreements that lead to the suppression of effective competition are unlawful»).

It is a provision which essentially corresponds to Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty (supra, para. 71).

147. Article 7.1 of the Swiss Cartel Act reads as follows:

«Les pratiques d'entreprises ayant une position dominante sont réputées illicites lorsque celles-ci abusent de leur position et entravent ainsi l'accès d'autres entreprises à la concurrence ou son exercice, ou désavantagent les partenaires commerciaux» («Practices of undertakings having a dominant position are deemed unlawful when such undertakings, through the abuse of their position, prevent other undertakings from entering or competing in the market or when they injure trading partners»).

This provision essentially corresponds to Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty (supra, para. 71).

148. With respect to the relevance of the Swiss Cartel Act, the Claimants have remarked that the Contested Rule affects trade within Switzerland in that Swiss football clubs are eligible to compete in, and do compete in, UEFA competitions; moreover, the Swiss club FC Basel is currently controlled by ENIC. The Respondent has not objected to the possible relevance of the Swiss Cartel Act in the present dispute. Both the Claimants and the Respondent have essentially relied on the analysis developed with reference to Article 81 (ex 85) and 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty. The only alleged difference with EC law is that, according to the Claimants, there is no «sporting exception» in Switzerland but only a very narrow exemption (to be interpreted quite rigorously) for the «rules of the game» vis-à-vis the «rules of law», which cannot be applied in the present case. The Respondent agrees with the Claimants that the Contested Rule cannot be considered as a «rule of the game» under Swiss law, but contends that Swiss competition law is not more restrictive than EC competition law and, therefore, limitations which are introduced with the sole aim of guaranteeing or enhancing sporting quality of competitions can be justified by a sort of sporting exception.
149. With regard to the «sporting exception», the Panel notes that it has already excluded that it can serve the purpose of exempting the Contested Rule from the application of competition rules (supra, para. 83). Consequently, the Panel need not rule on whether such an exception exists under Swiss competition law or not. Furthermore, the Panel observes that, in the light of the textual similarities and the conceptual correspondence of Swiss competition law to EC competition law, the above findings concerning Articles 81 (supra, paras. 109-136) and 82 of the EC Treaty (supra, paras. 137-145) are applicable mutatis mutandis to Articles 5 and 7 of the Swiss Cartel Act. With particular regard to Article 5, the Panel remarks that the envisaged oligopoly scenario (supra, para. 117) is much more likely within a small market such as Switzerland, where there are not many teams aspiring to participate in UEFA competitions; indeed, there are only twelve clubs in the Swiss first division. Therefore, the described pro-competitive effect of the Contested Rule is even amplified within the Swiss market. As a result, the Panel holds that, within the Swiss market, the Contested Rule does not significantly restrict competition within the meaning of Article 5 of the Swiss Cartel Act, nor does it constitute an abuse of dominant position within the meaning of Article 7 of the Swiss Cartel Act.

European community law on the right of establishment and on free movement of capital

150. Article 43 (ex 52) of the EC Treaty prohibits «restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a member State in the territory of another Member State». Under Article 56 (ex 73 B) all restrictions on movement of capital and on payments within the Community and between the Member States and third countries are prohibited. Both provisions are directly effective and can therefore be applied by national tribunals or arbitration courts.
151. The Claimants assert that the essence of the Contested Rule is to restrict the possibility of multi-club owners setting up subsidiaries in more than one EC Member State, in violation of Article 43 (ex 52) of the EC Treaty. The Claimants also assert that the Contested Rule restricts capital movements within the meaning of Article 56 (ex 73 B) of the EC Treaty. The Respondent replies that the Contested Rule, even if caught by such EC provisions, would not infringe them because it is a proportionate means to achieve a legitimate objective.
152. The Panel observes that the Contested Rule does not entail any discrimination based on a person's (or corporation's) nationality; therefore, under EC law jargon, it can be characterized as an «equally applicable measure». As a result, even assuming that the Contested Rule somewhat restricts the right of establishment or the free movement of capital, EC case law envisages the existence of justifications on grounds of reasonableness and public interest, provided that the requirements of necessity and proportionality are met (see supra, para. 130).
153. As the Panel has already noted, the Court of Justice has stated that «in view of the considerable social importance of sporting activities and in particular football in the Community, the aims of maintaining a balance between clubs by preserving a certain degree of equality and uncertainty as to results ... must be accepted as legitimate» (Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 106).

Therefore, the aim of the Contested Rule of preserving the authenticity and uncertainty of results – by preventing the conflict of interest inherent in commonly owned clubs participating in the same football competition – is certainly to be considered in principle as a legitimate justification, as long as the aim is pursued through necessary and proportionate means.

154. The Panel has already found that the Contested Rule meets the requirements of objective necessity and of proportionality (see supra, paras. 125-136). Consequently, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not infringe Article 43 (ex 52) and Article 56 (ex 73 B) of the EC Treaty.

General principle of law

155. The Claimants assert that it is a general principle of law that a quasi-public body exercising regulatory powers, such as an international federation, must not abuse its powers. The Claimants argue that in adopting the Contested Rule UEFA has abused its powers because it has tried to protect its monopoly power over the organization of pan-European football competitions. The Respondent rejects this allegation.

156. The Panel is of the opinion that all sporting institutions, and in particular all international federations, must abide by general principles of law. Due to the transnational nature of sporting competitions, the effects of the conduct and deeds of international federations are felt in a sporting community throughout various countries. Therefore, the substantive and procedural rules to be respected by international federations cannot be reduced only to its own statutes and regulations and to the laws of the country where the federation is incorporated or of the country where its headquarters are. Sports law has developed and consolidated along the years, particularly through the arbitral settlement of disputes, a set of unwritten legal principles – a sort of lex mercatoria for sports or, so to speak, a lex ludica – to which national and international sports federations must conform, regardless of the presence of such principles within their own statutes and regulations or within any applicable national law, provided that they do not conflict with any national «public policy» («ordre public») provision applicable to a given case. Certainly, general principles of law drawn from a comparative or common denominator reading of various domestic legal systems and, in particular, the prohibition of arbitrary or unreasonable rules and measures can be deemed to be part of such lex ludica. For example, in the CAS award FIN/FINA the Panel held that it could intervene in the sanction imposed by the international swimming federation (FINA)

«if the rules adopted by the FINA Bureau are contrary to the general principles of law, if their application is arbitrary, or if the sanctions provided by the rules can be deemed excessive or unfair on their face» (CAS 96/157 FIN v. FINA, award of 23 April 1997, in Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, op. cit., p. 358, para. 22; see also CAS OG 96/006 M. v. AIBA, award of 1 August 1996, ibidem, p. 415, para. 13).

157. The Panel, on the basis of previous remarks, finds that UEFA did not adopt the Contested Rule with the purpose of protecting its monopoly power over the organization of pan-

European football competitions (see supra, paras. 110-113 and 143), and finds that the Contested Rule is not arbitrary nor unreasonable (see supra, paras. 48 and 125-136). Therefore, with regard to the substantive content of the Contested Rule, the Panel holds that UEFA did not abuse its regulatory power and did not violate any general principle of law.

158. The Panel observes, however, that under CAS jurisprudence the principle of procedural fairness is surely among the unwritten principles of sports law to be complied with by international federations (see CAS OG 96/001 US Swimming v. FINA, award of 22 July 1996, in Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, op. cit., p. 381, para. 15; CAS 96/153 Watt v. ACF, award of 22 July 1996, ibidem, p. 341, para. 10). The Panel has already found that UEFA violated its duty of procedural fairness because it adopted the Contested Rule too late, when the Cup Regulations for the 1998/99 season, containing no restriction for multiple ownership, had already been issued and communicated to the interested football clubs (see supra, para. 61). The Panel has also already remarked that such procedural defect by itself does not warrant the permanent annulment of the Contested Rule (see supra, para. 62). Therefore, as is going to be seen (infra, paras. 159-163), the said lack of procedural fairness will have some consequences only in connection with the temporal effects of this award.

Temporal effects of this award

159. The Panel, approving the CAS interim order of 16 July 1998, has held that UEFA violated its duties of procedural fairness with respect to the 1998/99 season, insofar as it modified the participation requirements for the UEFA Cup at an exceedingly late stage, after such requirements had been publicly announced and the clubs entitled to compete had already been designated (see supra, paras. 60-62 and 158). This procedural defect caused the above-mentioned interim suspension of the Contested Rule, freezing the situation as it was before the enactment of the Contested Rule.
160. These proceedings then required more than one whole year to fully develop and come to an end with this award. The interim order appropriately remarked: «At this preliminary stage, CAS is further of the opinion that the outcome of the Claimants' action is uncertain» (CAS Procedural Order of 16-17 July 1998, para. 69). The number and complexity of the issues involved and the wide-ranging nature of the dispute have all along given the proceedings a state of uncertainty as to the outcome of the present case. With the release of the present award the CAS ends such state of uncertainty. However, the 1999/2000 football season has already begun and an immediate application of the Contested Rule for this season might involve for some clubs a sudden loss of their eligibility to participate in UEFA competitions (eligibility obtained on the basis of their results in 1998/99 national championships, at a time when the Contested Rule was not in force because of the interim order and there was uncertainty as to the outcome of this case).
161. Moreover, in their written briefs and oral arguments, the Claimants have drawn the Panel's attention to the harmful consequences which might ensue for them and for ENIC from an award rejecting their petitions. The interim order already stated (see CAS Procedural Order of 16-17 July 1998, para. 54) that an adjustment to the Contested Rule should not be arranged hurriedly, and commonly controlled clubs and their owners should have some time to determine their course of action, also taking into account possible legal questions (e.g. if shares are to be sold, minority shareholders may be entitled to exercise preemptive rights within given deadlines). There is an obvious need for a reasonable period of time before entry into force, or else the implementation of the Contested Rule may turn out to be excessively detrimental to commonly controlled clubs and their owners.

162. The Panel considers that an immediate application of the effects of the award could be unreasonably harmful to commonly owned clubs which during the recently terminated 1998/99 season have qualified for one of the 1999/2000 UEFA competitions. Such clubs, if any, would find themselves in the same situation as they were in when the CAS rightly stayed the implementation of the Contested Rule. If UEFA had announced in the Summer of 1998 that the Contested Rule was going to be implemented at the beginning of the 1999/2000 football season, no club could have later claimed to have legitimate expectations with respect to the treatment of multi-club ownership. In other words, without a ruling on the temporal effects of this award, the Panel would not give sufficient weight to the procedural defect which occurred in the adoption of the Contested Rule.

163. In conclusion, paramount considerations of fairness and legal certainty, needed in any legal system, militate against allowing UEFA to implement immediately the Contested Rule in the 1999/2000 football season which has already begun. Accordingly, the Panel partially upholds the Claimants' petition to extend the stay of the Contested Rule, and deems it appropriate to extend such stay until the end of the current 1999/2000 football season; for the remaining part, the petition for an indefinite extension of the stay is rejected. As a result, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule can be implemented by UEFA starting from the 2000/2001 football season.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport:

1. Rejects the petitions by AEK Athens and Slavia Prague to declare void or to annul the resolution adopted by UEFA on 19 May 1998 on the «Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs».

2. Partially upholding the petition by AEK Athens and Slavia Prague to extend indefinitely the interim stay ordered by the CAS on 16 July 1998, orders the extension of the stay until the end of the 1999/2000 football season and, accordingly, orders UEFA not to deny admission to or exclude clubs from the 1999/2000 UEFA club competitions on the ground that they are under common control; consequently, UEFA is permitted to implement its resolution of 19 May 1998 starting from the 2000/2001 football season.

3. Rejects all other petitions lodged by AEK Athens and Slavia Prague.

Wrestling

Doping (nandrolone)

Use of nutritional supplements

Strict Liability Rule

Mitigating circumstances

1. The legal relations between an athlete and a federation are of a civil nature and do not leave room for the application of principles of criminal law. This is particularly true for the principles of in dubio pro reo and nulla poena sine culpa and the presumption of innocence as enshrined in Art. 6 ECHR.
2. It is perfectly proper for the rules of a sporting federation to establish that the results achieved by an athlete at a competition during which he was under the influence of a prohibited substance must be cancelled irrespective of any guilt on the part of the athlete. This conclusion is the natural consequence of sporting fairness against the other competitors. The interests of the athlete concerned in not being punished without being guilty must give way to the fundamental principle of sport that all competitors must have equal chances.
3. If the federation is able to establish the objective elements of a doping offence, there is a presumption of guilt against the athlete. The principle of presumed fault on the part of the athlete does not, however, leave him without protection because he/she has the right to rebut the presumption, i.e. to establish that the presence of the prohibited substance in his/her body was not due to any intent or negligence on his/her part.
4. An athlete cannot exculpate himself/herself by simply stating that the container of the particular product taken by him/her did not specify that it contained a prohibited substance. It is obvious that the sale of nutritional supplements, many of which are available over the internet and thus sold without an effective governmental control, would go down dramatically if they properly declared that they contain (or could contain) substances prohibited under the rules governing certain sports. Therefore, to allow athletes the excuse that a nutritional supplement was mislabelled would provide an additional incentive for the producers to continue that practice. In summary, therefore, it is no excuse for an athlete found with a prohibited substance in his/her body that he/she checked the label on the product he took and that the label did not specify that the product contained a prohibited substance.

A. participated in the XXVII Olympic Games in Sydney as a wrestler in the 85 kg weight category, Greco Roman Style. He finished fourth in his competition which took place on September 27, 2000.

After the end of his competition he underwent a doping control. The A sample (No. A403123) showed the presence of "metabolites of nandrolone, norandrostenedione or norandrostenediol (19-norandrosterone and 19-noretiocholanolone). The concentration of norandrosterone in the sample was more than twice the IOC threshold" (4 ng/ml). In his subsequent request for arbitration A. specified the concentration as having been 8 ng/ml.

By decision of the IOC Executive Board of October 1, 2000, A. was disqualified and excluded from the Games of the XXVII Olympiad for the use of prohibited substances (Chapter II, Article 2.2 of the Olympic Movement Anti-Doping Code). He did not challenge this disqualification.

Upon the request of the athlete's national delegation, the test of the B-sample (No. B403123) was carried on October 3, 2000 in the presence of Mr. J. Segura and Mr. S. Nolan. No member of the national delegation was present at the opening of the B-sample since the Chef de Mission and all physicians had already left. The test result of the B-sample confirmed the result of the A-sample.

The FILA Sport Judge suspended A. from all national and international wrestling competitions for a period of two years. On November 3, 2000 this decision was notified to the national Wrestling Federation and subsequently communicated by it to A. The athlete and his national Wrestling Federation unsuccessfully challenged this decision before internal FILA instances.

Over a period of several months prior to the Olympic Games in Sydney A. had taken 8 to 10 different vitamins/nutritional supplements in accordance with a schedule developed by his sponsor, the witness L. who is a wholesaler of health products in Sweden. During this period A. underwent several doping control tests which were always negative. Approximately 5 to 6 weeks before the Sydney Olympic Games A. began taking six tablets a day of Pyrovate 500, a nutritional supplement produced by the US-company Pinnacle and recommended and supplied to A. by L.. A. did not undergo a doping test after he began taking Pyrovate 500 until the positive test at the Olympic Games. When already in Australia in a training camp, the athlete's trainers heard that a weight-lifter had tested positive for nandrolone and that food supplements were suspected to be responsible for this result. As a consequence, the labels of every product taken by A., in particular the Pyrovate 500 label, were checked as to whether the products contained any prohibited substances. The label did not show any such substance and A. continued to take – inter alia – Pyrovate 500. Following the athlete's positive doping test in Sydney Pyrovate 500 was tested by the IOC accredited laboratory in Cologne. The test revealed the presence of anabolic androgenic steroids (nandrolone precursors) which were not declared on the label.

On January 4, 2001 Appellant filed a request for arbitration with the Court of Arbitration for Sport against the decision of FILA's Sport Judge of October 24, 2000.

By letter dated February 19, 2001 the Respondent filed its response to the request for arbitration.

The Appellant claims that his rights were infringed during the internal FILA-proceedings since he was not given the benefit of a fair hearing before the decision of the FILA Sport Judge. With respect to the merits of the case, the Appellant contends that the Respondent cannot rely on "strict liability". Athletes who have broken the rules without intent or negligence should not be punished. Moreover, since the FILA doping regulations required "use" of a forbidden substance, they themselves showed that an intentional element was required for a doping offence. Since Appellant took the forbidden substance neither intentionally nor negligently, the FILA decision should be annulled. Even if the FILA doping rules were considered to contain a strict liability regime the Panel should take into account that there was a case of exceptional circumstances which did not warrant a suspension in addition to disqualification from the Olympic Games. Regarding the product Pyrovate 500 the Appellant observes that neither he nor his trainer were aware of the fact that this supplement could contain a forbidden substance. Finally, A. adds that all his previous doping tests had been negative and that his clean record should also be considered. In conclusion, the Appellant requests that the FILA decision be declared invalid.

The Respondent requests the CAS to reject the appeal and to confirm the decision to suspend the Appellant for a duration of two years. Since in the case in hand it was not contested that a forbidden substance was found in the Appellant's body, in the Respondent's view the suspension was correct since the Appellant was unable to show that he had fulfilled all his duties of care. The Respondent submits that high level athletes have known for several years that nutritional supplements available from US-American producers may sometimes contain forbidden substances. In this respect Respondent cites press releases by the IOC issued in 1999 and at the beginning of 2000 as evidence of the level of awareness in the sports world. The fact that the Appellant tested positive after ingestion of a product which contained a prohibited substance not marked on the label could not in itself provide a valid excuse because this would open a wide door to any kind of abuse. However, the Respondent conceded that the special circumstances of the case might allow the sanction to be reduced.

A first hearing was held on April 3, 2001 and a second one on May 15, 2001, both in Lausanne.

LAW

1. The Appellant alleges a violation of his right to be heard since he was not given the opportunity to present his case before the FILA Sport Judge rendered his decision on the suspension.
2. The CAS jurisdiction is based on the arbitration agreement reached by the parties at the hearing of 3 April 2001 but also results from FILA's rules and regulations (Article 37(c) of the FILA Constitution and Article 6 of the FILA Disciplinary Regulations).

3. Pursuant to Article R58 of the Code, the Panel is required to decide the dispute according to the applicable regulations of FILA and Swiss law since Respondent has its seat in Switzerland and the parties did not choose a different governing law.
4. Since the doping control and the analysis of the samples took place after the FILA Congress held on September 22, 2000 in Sydney the Panel will apply the FILA Constitution as amended at that Congress (FILA Official Bulletin No. 166-167/2001) and the FILA Doping Regulations as well as the Disciplinary Regulation in force at that time. For the interpretation of the FILA rules the Panel will have special regard to Swiss law in accordance with Article R58 of the Code.
5. Indeed, there is no evidence that the FILA Sport Judge heard the Appellant either personally or by written submissions. It seems that he rendered his decision without further inquiries, only on the basis of the documentation on the disqualification by the IOC, provided to him by FILA.
6. However, the Panel will not deal with this argument in detail. It observes that the CAS has always considered the right to be heard as a general legal principle which has to be respected also during internal proceedings of the federations (CAS 91/53 G. v/ FEI, award of January 15, 1992, Digest, p. 79, 86 f). Federations have the obligation to respect the right to be heard as one of the fundamental principles of due process.
7. However, according to Article R57 of the Code, the Panel will hear the case de novo. This means that, even if a violation of the principle of due process occurred in the first instance, any such violation may be cured by a full hearing following appeal to the CAS (CAS 94/129 USA Shooting & Q. v/ UIT, Digest, p. 187, 203).
8. The Panel is satisfied that the Appellant committed a doping offence under the relevant FILA Rules as interpreted pursuant to Swiss law.
9. Provisions on doping can be found in several places in FILA's regulations (the following quotes are based on the version of the regulations as applicable after the 22 September 2000 FILA Congress).
10. FILA Constitution
*"Article 9. – Doping
The absorption of any substance intended to artificially improve the performance of the athlete is strictly prohibited. The IOC's official list is authoritative."*
[The French text reads: "L'absorption de toutes substances destinées à accroître artificiellement la performance..."].
11. The FILA Doping Regulations state the following:
"Art. 1 – Definition of doping in sport

Doping is defined as the use, intake or administration of any substance that may affect the mental state or the physical performance of the competitor in a positive or negative way.

Doping consists of

- a) the administration, intake and use of substances belonging to the classes of forbidden pharmacological agents and the use of forbidden methods by athletes...,
- b) resorting to substances or methods which are potentially dangerous for the athlete's health, or are capable of increasing his performance artificially,
- c) the presence in the athlete's organisation of forbidden substances or the certification of the use of methods which are not allowed, by referring to the list provided by the IOC and to its successive updates".

12. Art. 27 of the FILA Doping Regulations then makes reference to the IOC Anti-Doping Code by stating:

"Art. 27 Particular and Final Provisions

...

2. Concerning anything which is not indicated in these Regulations, the standards and provisions laid down by the IOC's anti-doping code are applicable.

...

6. *Bearing in mind that the anti-doping code of the Olympic Movement has been drawn up in close cooperation with the International Federations, it must apply to ... the various Championships ..., to all other competitions organised by the FILA...
Therefore, any problems of interpretation of any article in these Regulations or for any question not dealt with here, must be referred to the IOC's Anti-Doping Code Lausanne 2000."*

13. Finally, the IOC Anti-Doping Code to which the FILA Doping Regulations refer states that (Chapter II Art. 2 and Art. 3):

"Article 2

Doping is:

...

2. the presence in the athlete's body of a Prohibited Substance or evidence of the use thereof or evidence of the use of a Prohibited Method.

Article 3

1. In a case of doping, the penalties for a first offence are as follows:

...

- b) If the prohibited substance is one other than those referred to in a) above:

...

- III) Suspension from any competition for a minimum period of two years. However, based on specific, exceptional circumstances to be evaluated in the first instance by the competent IF bodies, there may be a provision for a possible modification of the two-year sanction.

2. In case of

- a) intentional doping:

...

The sanctions are as follows: [sanctions of up to a life ban]"

The notion of "intentional doping" is further defined in the IOC's Explanatory Memorandum (p. 9):

"With regard to intentional doping, this is a new notion which is added to that of doping as a breach of these rules. The latter exists as soon as the presence of a banned substance has been detected in an athlete's body, independent of any element of intention. Therefore, the athlete has to be punished. Nothing has changed as far as this is concerned. However, in the rare cases where it can be proved that doping was intentional, the Code allows for the imposition of much stricter sanctions..."

14. As to sanctions, Annex D of the FILA Anti-Doping Regulations provides:

"Sanctions

1. In the event of proving responsibility, the sanctions laid down by the IOC and quoted in annexe 1 which is an integral part of the FILA anti doping regulations. Any updates by the Olympic Movements will be introduced following deliberation by the Executive Committee and defined as follows:

Constitutes a violation of the anti doping standards:

A. *Administering or use of substances which are part of the following classes of forbidden medication:
... anabolising agents ...*

B. The use of doping practices ...

C. The absorption of substances belonging to the following classes of pharmaceutical classes whose use is subject to restriction: alcohol ...

D. The administration or absorption of the following substances: ephedrine ...

2. For violations mentioned in point 1, letters A, B, C, the following sanctions are applicable:

- two years for the first offence;

- life ban for the second offence."

15. Finally, with regard to sanctions, Art. 26 of the FILA Doping Regulations provides the following:

"Art. 26 Violations of the anti-doping standards and the relative sanctions

...

4. The FILA, depending on the case, for positive doping results, can apply heavier sanctions than those laid down in the Regulations.

5. The FILA, through its own justice bodies, can find specific and exceptional attenuating circumstances which will enable the sanctions to be reduced."

16. The Panel finds the provisions on doping in the various FILA regulations rather confusing.

According to the Constitution, doping is the "absorption" of a "substance intended to artificially improve the performance". In turn Art. 1 of the FILA Anti Doping Regulations states that it is sufficient for the substance to "affect" the performance and the same Article declares that "the presence in the athlete's organism of forbidden substances" constitutes a doping offence.

The FILA Doping Regulations then confirm that the IOC Anti Doping Code "must apply" to all FILA competitions and this very IOC Anti-Doping Code states that "Doping is ... the presence in the athlete's body of a Prohibited Substance" and the IOC's Explanatory Memorandum further explains that doping "exists as soon as the presence of a banned substance has been detected in an athlete's body, independent of any element of intention".

17. Finally, according to Annex D of the FILA Anti Doping Regulations there seems to be a requirement of "proving responsibility" in order for sanctions to be imposed. The same can be concluded from Art. 17.21 of the same regulations which provides for sanctions of a "wrestler at fault".

18. The Panel observes that this "cocktail" of definitions and legal principles in connection with the fight against doping certainly falls short of the clarity and certainty desirable in an area as sensitive as doping and as demanded by CAS (CAS 94/129, USA Shooting & Q. v/ UIT, Digest, p. 187, 203). However, in the opinion of the Panel, the lack of clarity in the FILA Regulations does not go quite far enough to justify rejecting them as a whole as being so unclear that they cannot be applied at all. The Panel will therefore apply these rules as they are but will, if necessary, interpret any uncertainties contra stipulatorem, i.e. against FILA.

19. The facts of the case in hand are more straight forward than in most other doping cases:

It is uncontested that a substance prohibited under Art. 6 of the FILA Doping Regulations (metabolites of nandrolone, norandrostenedione or norandrostenediol (19-norandrosterone and 19-noretiocholanolone)) in quantities in excess of that allowed under the FILA rules (2ng/ml according to Article 27.2 of the FILA Doping Regulations; indeed, the Appellant himself states "a level of 8ng/ml of nandrolone") were found in the Appellant's urine sample taken on 27 September 2000. The Appellant admits that he took Pyrovate 500 during the time preceding his doping test and that – according to the findings of the IOC accredited laboratory in Cologne – this product contained anabolic-androgenic-steroids although this was not declared on the label. No challenge has been brought forward with respect to the conduct of the doping test, the chain of custody of the sample or the laboratory analysis.

20. The parties differ in their interpretation of the FILA rules and the consequences to be drawn from them.

According to the Appellant

"(I)t is clear that athletes, who have not broke the rules of doping with intent or negligently, cannot be punished" (Statement of Appeal dated 5 December 2000), while the Respondent is of the opinion that:

"(I)he doping definition resulting from the applicable FILA Regulations is a strict liability definition. If the presence of a doping agent is established, then the sanction applies. No intention has to be shown" (Answer dated 19 February 2000).

21. If, indeed, under the FILA rules no subjective element, i.e. no intent or negligence on the part of the athlete were required for a doping offence to have been committed the Panel would in principle have to apply the two-year sanction provided for in Annex D, Section 2 of the FILA Doping Regulations and would be limited to evaluating whether there are "specific and exceptional attenuating circumstances which will enable the sanctions to be reduced" (Art. 26, Section 5 of the FILA Doping Regulations).

22. However, the Panel is of the opinion that as a matter of principle and irrespective of "specific and exceptional circumstances" an athlete cannot be banned from competition for having committed a doping offence unless he is guilty, i.e. he has acted with intent or negligence. Even if the rules and regulations of a sports federation do not expressly provide that the guilt of the athlete has to be taken into account the foregoing principle will have to be read into these rules to make them legally acceptable.
23. CAS panels have to interpret the rules in question in a way "which seeks to discern the intention of the rule maker, and not to frustrate it" (CAS 96/149 A.C. v/ FINA, award of March 13, 1997, Digest, p. 251, 259). In interpreting the FILA rules the Panel does not find any indication that they intended to ignore the subjective elements as such. Since the Panel is of the opinion that under Swiss law an athlete cannot validly be banned in the absence of any fault (see infra), an interpretation to the contrary would lead to the rules being void which would frustrate the objective of the fight against doping pursued by the entire sporting world.
24. Before explaining the reasons for the principle of guilt the Panel wishes to clarify that this principle does not apply to the disqualification of a "doped athlete" from the event at which the doping test was conducted. It is therefore perfectly proper for the rules of a sporting federation to establish that the results achieved by a "doped athlete" at a competition during which he was under the influence of a prohibited substance must be cancelled irrespective of any guilt on the part of the athlete. This conclusion is the natural consequence of sporting fairness against the other competitors. The interests of the athlete concerned in not being punished without being guilty must give way to the fundamental principle of sport that all competitors must have equal chances (CAS 94/129 USA Shooting & Q. v/ UIT, Digest, p. 187, 193 et seq.; CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, p. 17; CAS 94/126 N. v/ FEI, p. 8).
25. The Panel comes to a different conclusion with regard to the suspension of an athlete from future competition. The so-called "strict liability" rule, i.e. a rule as advocated by the Respondent according to which the mere presence of a prohibited substance in an athlete's body justifies his suspension, does not, in the Panel's opinion, sufficiently respect the athlete's right of personality ("Persönlichkeitsrecht") as established in Articles 20 and 27 et seq. of the Swiss Civil Code which CAS panels are required to apply (Art. 58 of the Code of Sports-related Arbitration). In fact, under Swiss law also sporting federations are under a duty to respect the framework established by Articles 20 and 27 et seq. Swiss Civil Code (BADDELEY M., L'association sportive face au droit, Basel et al. 1994, p. 227).
26. As a preliminary remark the Panel wishes to clarify that the legal relations between an athlete and a federation are of a civil nature and do not leave room for the application of principles of criminal law. This is particularly true for the principles of in dubio pro reo and nulla poena sine culpa and the presumption of innocence as enshrined in Art. 6 ECHR (Swiss Federal Tribunal, ASA Bull. 1993, p. 398, 409 et seq. [G. v/ FEI] and Swiss Federal Tribunal judgment of March

- 31, 1999 [5P. 83/1999], unreported, p. 12; see also BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 220; SCHERRER U., in: FRITZWEILER J. (ed), Doping-Sanktionen, Beweise, Ansprüche, Bern et al. 2000, p. 119, 127).
27. When deciding whether a "strict liability" rule is proper under Swiss law, the Panel has to weigh the interests of the federation against those of the athlete, in particular his right of personality (see BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 239).
  28. In recent times the fight against doping has become sport's most burning problem. At times, public attention and, in particular, that of the media is focused more on whether the athletes are under the influence of doping substances than on the sporting event itself and its results. This development is a very serious threat to the entire sporting movement and, indirectly, to an industry which accounts for an important percentage of the world economy.
  29. It is obvious that it would be an important weapon in the fight against doping if the federations were able to impose sanctions on athletes who have tested positive, without having to establish any element of guilt on the part of the athlete. However, this argument, which is one of prevention and deterrence, loses sight of the general objective of doping sanctions, namely the punishment of the athlete for having violated the rules (BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 219).
  30. On the other hand, it has to be recognised that in professional sport doping sanctions have the effect of restraining the athlete from carrying out his chosen trade and thus from earning a living for a certain period of time. In addition, doping sanctions clearly affect the honour and social standing of the athlete concerned and are a stigma on his future.
  31. When weighing up the interests of both sides the Panel is of the view that the interests of the athlete take precedence over those of the federation to enforce a rule of "strict liability". The contrary view would only be acceptable if a strict liability rule were the only meaningful weapon in the fight against doping. (see BADDELEY M., in: FRITZWEILER J. (ed), op. cit., p. 9, 22; SCHERRER U., op. cit., p. 119, 127; see also CAS 95/142 L. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 225, 231). As will be shown below, there are other means, in particular when allocating the burden of proof, to ensure an effective fight against doping without accepting the risk of sanctioning an athlete who is not guilty of an offence or whose level of guilt does not justify the full extent of the sanction.
  32. The Panel further notes that in a recent decision the Court of Appeals of Frankfurt/Main, Germany also held that liability without fault was incompatible with the rights of the athlete and German law (OLG Frankfurt/Main, judgment of May 18, 2000, 13W29/00 [B. v/ DLV] p. 15).
  33. Having established the principle that the suspension of an athlete for a doping offence requires fault on his/her part, this does not, in the Panel's view, mean that it is for the federation to provide full proof of every element of the offence, as is necessary in respect of a criminal act for which a presumption of innocence operates in favour of the accused. There is no doubt that the federation has to establish and – if contested – to prove the objective elements of the offence, in particular, for example, that the sample was taken properly, that there was a complete chain of custody of the sample on its way to the laboratory and that the analysis of the sample was state-of-the-art. This follows from the general rule that a person who alleges a fact has the burden of proof (CAS 98/208 N., J., Y., W. v/ FINA, Digest II, p. 247; CAS 99/A/234 & CAS 99/A/235 M.M. & M. v/ FINA, award of February 29, 2000, p. 14).

34. However, it would put a definite end to any meaningful fight against doping if the federations were required to prove the necessary subjective elements of the offence, i.e. intent or negligence on the part of the athlete (CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, Digest II, p. 318 et seq.). In fact, since neither the federation nor the CAS has the means of conducting its own investigation or of compelling witnesses to give evidence, means which are available to the public prosecutor in criminal proceedings, it would be all too simple for an athlete to deny any intent or negligence and to simply state that he/she has no idea how the prohibited substance arrived in his/her system (see CAS 96/156 F. v/ FINA).
35. For this reason the Panel believes that, with regard to the subjective elements of a doping offence, when weighing the interests of the federation to combat doping and those of the athlete not to be punished without fault, the scales tip in favour of the fight against doping. In fact, doping only happens in the sphere of the athlete: he/she is in control of his/her body, of what he/she eats and drinks, of who has access to his/her nutrition, of what medication he/she takes, etc. In these circumstances it is appropriate to presume that the athlete has knowingly or at least negligently consumed the substance which has led to the positive doping test (see also: BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 243; BELOFF M., Drugs, Laws and Versapaks, in O'LEARY J. (ed.), Drugs and Doping in Sport, London 2000, p. 39, 49; STEINER U., Doping aus verfassungsrechtlicher Sicht, in RÖHRICHT/VIEWEG (eds.), Doping Forum, Stuttgart et al. 2000, p. 125, 134; BADDELEY M., in: FRITZWEILER (ed.), op. cit., p. 9, 22).
36. Therefore, if the federation is able to establish the objective elements of a doping offence, there is a presumption of guilt against the athlete.
37. The principle of presumed fault on the part of the athlete does not, however, leave him without protection because he/she has the right to rebut the presumption, i.e. to establish that the presence of the prohibited substance in his/her body was not due to any intent or negligence on his/her part (CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220 et seq.; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, Digest II, p. 319). The athlete may for example provide evidence that the presence of the forbidden substance is the result of an act of malicious intent by a third party (CAS 91/56 S. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 93, 97; CAS 92/63 G. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 115, 121; CAS 92/73 N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 157).
38. It is noteworthy that the Swiss Federal Tribunal has accepted an interpretation of doping rules to the effect that it is admissible to presume an athlete's guilt if he/she has been tested positive for a prohibited substance. The athlete is then accorded the opportunity to rebut the presumption (Swiss Federal Tribunal, Digest, p. 561, 575 [G. v/ FEI]; Swiss Federal Tribunal, 5P.83/1999 [W., C., Z., W. v/ FINA], p. 12).

39. The principle of presumption of guilt and rebuttal thereof by the athlete has also been applied by several CAS decisions, not only with respect of the rules of the FEI which expressly provide for a presumption of guilt, but also in connection with regulations which appear to follow a system of liability without fault (see CAS 91/56 S. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 93, 95; CAS 92/63 G. v/ FEI, p. 115, 120; CAS 92/73 N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 157; CAS 92/86 W. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 161, 163; CAS 98/204 R. v/ FEI, p. 8; CAS 91/53 G. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 79, 87; see especially: CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220; CAS 96/156 F. v/ FINA, p. 40 et seq.; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, Digest II, p. 319; CAS 99/A/252 FCLP v/ IWF, p. 22 et seq.; CAS 2000/A/309 R. v/ RLVB, p. 5). On the other hand, the Panel is conscious of the fact that there have been CAS decisions where the Panel was prepared to apply a strict liability standard with respect to suspensions and was not willing to take into account the subjective elements of the case in questions (see: CAS 98/208 N., J., Y., W.. v/ FINA, Digest II, p. 25; CAS 98/222 B. v/ ITU, Digest II, p. 336-337; see also: CAS 95/150 V. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 265, 272). However, it should be noted that all these decisions took account of the level of "guilt" on the part of the athlete when establishing the duration of the suspension. It can also be taken from these awards that their reasoning was often based on arguments invoked to justify a simple disqualification. They did not consider the very purpose of suspensions as opposed to a mere disqualification and the differences between them. For these reasons the Panel is not prepared to follow these decisions.
40. The Panel recognises that the opinions of the courts and legal authorities differ as to whether the reversal of the burden of proof puts too much burden on the athlete. As an example the OLG Frankfurt in its decision of 18 May 2000 (see above) is in favour of a rule pursuant to which the presence of a prohibited substance in an athlete's body provides prima facie evidence of guilt on the part of the athlete; this leaves the athlete with the burden of proving that, in his/her particular case, the facts were different from the normal sequence of events. In many cases the practical results of both scenarios – a reversal of the burden of proof or the rebuttal of prima facie evidence – will be the same, but the Panel does recognise that the burden on the athlete is slightly less in the latter case. The Panel does, however, believe that, as a matter of principle, the reversal of the burden of proof and thus the burden being on the athlete to provide full proof of the absence of intent or negligence, is adequate and appropriate when weighing the interests of both sides.

In the case in hand, in which none of the objective elements of the offence is in dispute, the Appellant is thus presumed to have intentionally or negligently committed the offence.

41. As has been shown above, the burden is on the Appellant to prove that he is not guilty of a doping offence. To this end, the Panel took the testimony of several witnesses proffered by the Appellant.
42. It is the opinion of the Panel that the Appellant has not succeeded in proving that he was without fault.

43. The Appellant contends that he was not aware that Pyrovate 500 contained a substance which was the source of his positive doping test in Sydney.
44. In fact, the Panel accepts, in the Appellant's favour, that he did not intentionally take a prohibited substance, in other words, that he did not know that Pyrovate 500 contained precursors of nandrolone. The Panel further assumes, in the Appellant's favour, that his use of Pyrovate 500 was in fact the cause for his positive doping test in Sydney.
45. However, the Panel is of the opinion that under the circumstances the Appellant acted negligently when he took Pyrovate 500 without making certain that it did not contain a prohibited substance.
46. As a general remark, the Panel observes that the sporting world has, for quite some time even before the 2000 Sydney Games, been well aware of the risks in connection with using so called nutritional supplements, i.e. the risk that they may be contaminated or, in fact, "spiked" with anabolic steroids without this being declared on the labels of the containers. There have been several cases of positive tests for nandrolone which have been attributed to nutritional supplements and which have been widely publicised in the sports press. This fact was the likely motive for the IOC press releases in October 1999 and February 2000 which give an unequivocal warning about the use of imported and unlicensed nutritional supplements and their possible mislabelling.
47. Under these circumstances it is certainly not a valid excuse for an athlete to contend that he/she – personally – was not aware of these warnings. In fact, athletes are presumed to have knowledge of information which is in the public domain. In this context, the Panel notes that there is CAS case law to the effect that athletes are themselves solely responsible for, inter alia, the medication they take and that even a medical prescription from a doctor is no excuse for the athlete (CAS 92/73, N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 158). Furthermore an athlete cannot exculpate himself/herself by simply stating that the container of the particular product taken by him/her did not specify that it contained a prohibited substance. It is obvious that the sale of nutritional supplements, many of which are available over the internet and thus sold without an effective governmental control, would go down dramatically if they properly declared that they contain (or could contain) substances prohibited under the rules governing certain sports. Therefore, to allow athletes the excuse that a nutritional supplement was mislabelled would provide an additional incentive for the producers to continue that practice. In summary, therefore, it is no excuse for an athlete found with a prohibited substance in his/her body that he/she checked the label on the product he took and that the label did not specify that the product contained a prohibited substance.
48. The Panel can leave open the question whether a "doped athlete" can be sanctioned on the basis alone that he/she knew (or is presumed to have known) the risk involved in taking nutritional supplements which may contain a prohibited substance not declared on the label. In the case in hand there are additional elements which establish negligence on the Appellant's part:

49. In his statement before this Panel the Appellant admitted that during his training camp before the Olympic Games he had been informed that a weightlifter had tested positive for nandrolone and that nutritional supplements were suspected to be the cause of his positive test. At that point in time at the very latest the Appellant should have ceased taking a nutritional supplement which, it should be noted, was not prescribed to him by a medical doctor but was supplied by his "sponsor", a wholesaler of health products with a direct economic interest in marketing (and testing) these products in the sports world.
50. The rules and regulations of the Respondent (and of the IOC) provide for a two-year sanction in the case of a positive doping test for nandrolone. Even though it is well established that a two-year suspension for a first time doping offence is legally acceptable, there are several CAS decisions according to which a sanction may not be disproportionate and must always reflect the extent of the athlete's guilt (CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p 215, 222; CAS 92/73 N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 159; CAS 96/156 F. v/ FINA, p. 48). Therefore, this Panel in its capacity as an appeals body enjoys the same discretion in fixing the extent of the sanction as the Respondent's internal instances (Art. 26.5 of the FILA Doping Regulations, see above). In fact, the Panel would enjoy this discretion even if there were no "exceptional attenuating circumstances".
51. When taking into consideration all the elements of this case, in particular the fact that the Appellant acted negligently but without intent to indulge in doping, the Panel is of the view that, based on the evidence produced, there are mitigating circumstances which warrant a reduction of the maximum penalty allowed under the rules and regulations of the Respondent. As a result, the Panel is of the opinion that it is adequate and appropriate to suspend the Appellant for 15 months. As regards the date upon which the suspension should begin, the Panel takes note of the fact that the sanction imposed by the Respondent started to run on the date the test was carried out (27 September 2000). The Panel sees no reason why it should change this date. Therefore, the Appellant's suspension will last until 26 December 2001.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport rules:

1. The appeal filed by A. on 3 January 2001 is partially upheld.
2. The decision of the FILA Sport Judge of 24 October 2000 shall be modified as follows:
A. is suspended for a period of 15 months from 27 September 2000 to 26 December 2001.

Federazione Italiana Nuoto (FIN) v Fédération Internationale de Natation Amateur (FINA), Award, CAS Case No. 1996/A/157, 23 April 1997

The Federazione Italiana Nuoto (hereinafter "FIN" or the appellant) whose seat is in Rome/ITA, is a member of the Fédération Internationale de Natation Amateur (FINA) and of the Ligue Européenne de Natation (LEN). The FINA, whose seat is in Lausanne/CH, is the international body governing Water Polo.

In July 1995, the Italian National Junior Team took part at the VIII Junior Men's World Water Polo Championships in Dunkerque/FRA. During these championships, the Italian team played against the Croatian team on July 27, 1995. Croatia won the match 8-7.

Certain incidents occurred immediately at the end of the match. As described by FIN these incidents were minor in nature: the Croatian page "351" players, still in the water, assaulted one Italian player, then other Italian players moved to the referee's table.

According to the FINA, a fight took place between players of both teams which began among players still in the pool. Then players from the benches, and, in particular, players from the Italian bench, joined in the fight.

Both departments of the incident concurred in stating that the coaches of the Croatian team dived into the water to separate the players. The referee's report of July 27, 1995 states that coaches of both teams intervened to calm down the players and make them leave the pool. The incident was then ended and no one suffered injury.

The Technical Water Polo Committee ("TWPC"), one of the Standing Committees of FINA, established its Report of the incident the following:

Immediately after the match won by Croatia 9-8 an incident occurred which resulted in violence in the water and players leaving the benches of both teams and entering the water to join the fighting. The altercation occurred in front of the Croatian bench: the Italian players swimming and running the length of the pool. Coaches left the Croatian bench and entered the water in an attempt to stop the altercation. The players were then separated and the coaches shook hands, the altercation ending.

On the morning of July 28, 1995, the TWPC met and considered the incident. It decided to apply the "Interim Guidelines for Disciplinary Action in Water Polo" to this case. These Interim Guidelines were approved by the FINA Bureau in March 1995 and were to be presented in the Extraordinary Water Polo Congress 1996.

In its report, the TWPC stresses the fact that copies of the Interim Guidelines had been specifically provided to each team at the technical meeting immediately before the beginning of the Junior World Water Polo Championships, adding that the TWPC Honorary Secretary had advised all teams to read them and to be aware of the harshness of the sanctions involved.

As a result of the violence following the match, the TWPC members unanimously decided to exclude both the Italian and the Croatian teams from the World Championships in Dunkerque on the basis of art. 5 of the Interim Guidelines.

The application of this provision entailed not only the exclusion of both teams from the event but also a suspension for the next FINA Event, in this case the IX Junior World Water Polo Championships. However, after hearing the referees of the match and the members of page "352" the TWPC present at the match, the TWPC considered that the Italian team was the instigator of the incident and that the Croatian team was "essentially".

Thus, in application of art. 7 of the Interim Guidelines the TWPC decided to recommend to the FINA Bureau that "the team of Italy not be allowed to participate in the IX Junior World Water Polo Championships but that the team from Croatia be allowed to if it qualifies." The report does not mention the result of the vote.

Digest of CAS Awards Series Set Volume 1 (© Kluwer Law International, Kluwer Law International 1998) pp. 351-360.

In conclusion, the TWPC noted that "its ability to identify the instigators either as individuals or as teams of the incident is limited by the prohibition on viewing videotape evidence and by the fact that many players had removed their hats"

Finally, the TWPC served a written decision on both teams involved, pronouncing the exclusion from the 1995 Junior World Water Polo Championships. The decision is dated July 28, 1995 and does not mention the exclusion of the Italian team from participation in the next Junior World Water Polo Championships.

On the afternoon of July 28, 1995, the teams of Croatia and Italy submitted written appeals challenging the decision to exclude them from the event. In the evening, a Jury of Appeals composed of the Bureau Lausanne chairs and the members of the TWPC, rejected the appeals and upheld the decision pronounced in the morning.

After the end of the World Championships, the file of the FIN was forwarded to the FINA Bureau. The FINA Bureau summoned the FIN to a hearing which took place in Bern on February 9, 1996. On August 3, 1996, the FINA Bureau decided to confirm the suspension of the Italian Junior Water Polo team from the IX Men's World Water Polo Championships to be held in 1997. The decision was not fed to the FIN on August 8, 1996.

On September 6, 1996, the FIN lodged an appeal with the CAS against the decision of the FINA Bureau.

The appellant requests relief from the decision of the FINA Bureau as follows: "The Italian Swimming Federation herewith demands the revocation of the decision of the FINA Bureau so that the Italian Junior Men's Water Polo Team may take part in the IX Junior Men's Water Polo World Championships".

In Law

1. According to art. C 10.5.3 of the FINA Rules, "An appeal against a decision by the Bureau shall be referred to the Court of Arbitration for Sport (CAS) in Lausanne Switzerland within the same term as in C 10 5 2" that is to say not later than one month after the member or individual has received the sanction.
2. The FINA Bureau decision is dated August 3, 1996. It was notified to the appellant on August 8, 1996. FIN filed its appeal with the CAS on September 6, 1996 and is thus within the time limit laid down by the FINA Constitution. Moreover, it complies with the requirements as to form stipulated in articles R48 and R51 of the Code of Sports related Arbitration (the Code). The appeal is therefore admissible.
3. Art. R47 of the Code provides that: "a party may appeal from the decision of a disciplinary tribunal or similar body of a federation association or sports body insofar as the statutes or regulations of the said body so provide or as the parties have concluded a specific arbitration agreement and insofar as the appellant has exhausted the legal remedies available to him prior to the appeal in accordance with the statutes or regulations of the said sports body"
4. Art. C 10.5.3 of the FINA Rules, quoted above, explicitly provides that the CAS is competent to hear appeals. This provision applies to a "Member of FINA", as well as an "Individual" (art. C 10.5.1 of FINA Rules). The "Member" is clearly defined as being the national body governing swimming (art. C 5.1 of FINA Rules). FIN is such a national body governing swimming and is a member of the FINA; consequently, art. C 10.5.3 applies to it. Moreover, all the judicial remedies granted by the FINA Constitution had been exhausted prior to the appeal to the CAS. We, therefore, conclude that the conditions laid down by art. R47 of the Code are met, and that the competence of the CAS must be accepted in this case.
5. In conformity with art. R58 of the Code, "the Panel shall decide the dispute according to the applicable regulations and the rules of law chosen by the parties or in the absence of such a choice according to the law of the country in which the federation association or sports body is domiciled" The FINA Rules contained in the "FINA Handbook", in force for the period 1994 to 1996, are thus applicable in this case, in the same manner as Swiss law. FIN indeed has its headquarters  page "354" in Lausanne, and the parties did not agree to apply the law of any other country.
6. The applicable procedure in this case is the appeal arbitration procedure stipulated under R47 ff. of the Code.

7. As expressly requested by the parties, the Panel agreed to waive the oral hearing and to rule on the basis of the written submissions.
8. The decision by the TWPC to exclude the teams of Italy and Croatia from the 1995 World Junior Water Polo Championships dated July 28, 1995 and is worded as follows:

As a result of the incidents occurring at the end of the match Italy/Croatia, won by Croatia 9/8 the TWPC has applied paragraph 5 of the 'Interim Guidelines for Disciplinary Action in Water-Polo' which were approved by the FINA Bureau and were circulated to all teams at the beginning of the competition

Accordingly the teams of both Italy and Croatia are immediately ejected from the 1995 World Junior Water-Polo Championships.

As a result the schedule of matches for the last 2 days will be re-adjusted by deleting Italy and Croatia from the rankings of Groups A, B, and a teams will be not fed.

9. The report and the decision of the TWPC refer to art. 5 and 7 of the Interim Guidelines which state:

Art. 5. If the disciplinary incident involves any bench players of any team that team or teams will be immediately ejected from the event in question. Additionally that country will not be entitled to participate in the next FINA Event involving that team. For example if the team is a junior team it will be the next junior men's FINA Event. Likewise if it is a senior women's team it will be the next senior women's FINA Event

Art. 7. The FINA TWPC shall impose or recommend as the case may be action in accordance with these 'Interim Guidelines' provided that if extenuating circumstances dictate it shall be entitled to impose or recommend as the case may be a lesser sanction by a two-thirds majority vote

Furthermore, art. 9 states that "A FINA Event shall mean the World Championships (senior and junior) the World Cups Olympic Games Olympic Games Qualification Tournaments and the Olympic Year Women's Tournament "

10. The decision confirming the suspension of the Italian Junior Team from the next Junior World Championships was taken by the FINA page "355" Bureau on August 3, 1996. The notification of the decision to FINA dated August 8, 1996 contains no statement of grounds but announces the following:

At the meeting held in Atlanta on 3 August 1996 the FINA Bureau considered the appeal presented by the Italian Swimming Federation against the decision to suspend the Italian junior men's water polo team from the IX Junior Men's Water Polo World Championships to be held in Havana (CUB) in 1997

Please be informed that the FINA Bureau rejected the appeal

11. In its Appeal Brief, the appellant considers that the incident which occurred during the game Italy - Croatia of "July 27, 1995" was not a real fight but only "movement in the water" and did not constitute a serious act of violence or brutality. Although the appellant does not challenge the application of a specific rule and has no objection regarding the proceedings before the authorities of FINA, it criticizes the harshness of the sanction. The FINA believes that the Italian Junior Team was a ready punishment enough with the immediate exclusion from the World Championships in Dunkerque. The appellant also asserts that the sanction will not affect the protagonists of the incident but other athletes who were absolutely not involved in this case and adds that, as a consequence of this, the sanction will have no educative effects on the athletes responsible for the aforesaid facts.

12. For its part, the respondent considers that the decision of the FINA Bureau is a correct application of the rules. In particular, it understands that it was clearly correct to apply only the art. 5 of the Interim Guidelines, taking into account the absence of extenuating circumstances for the Italian team which might have justified the application of the art. 7 of the Interim Guidelines.
13. The parties differ in their description of the facts. In particular, they do not share the same opinion about the gravity of the incident. Accordingly, the Panel chooses to rely on the facts reported by the TWPC, which refers to the referees' reports on the game.
14. On the basis of the referees' reports, the Panel considers as established the fact that several Italian and Croatian players in the water began fighting, that other players from both teams left the benches and jumped into the water to join the fight. These versions confirmed in the aforementioned reports, confirmed by FINA in its answer and not denied by the appellant in its Appeal Brief ("while the other [page "356" Italian players were leaving the water [...] Finally almost the majority of both teams were in the water]")
15. Given these facts, the validity of the decision challenged must be examined in the light of the applicable rules. The incident occurred during the Junior Men's World Water Polo Championship in 1995. Thus, the FINA Rules contained in the FINA Handbook 1994-1996 are applicable. The Junior Men's World Water Polo Championships are conducted by FINA (art. GR 12 of the Rules). According to the FINA Constitution, the FINA Bureau shall decide on and publish regulations for FINA events (art. C 14.11.6 of the Rules). In March 1995, the FINA Bureau approved the Interim Guidelines for Disciplinary Action in Water Polo and decided to present them in the Extraordinary Water Polo Congress 1996. Consequently, these Interim Guidelines were in force during the World Championships in Dunkerque and each team taking part in this competition was informed of these new regulations.
16. In view of the evidence presented to it, the Panel holds that the incident between the Italian and Croatian players constitutes a disciplinary incident involving bench players. Thus, the Panel holds that the TWPC was correct in applying art. 5 of the Interim Guidelines and, as a consequence, was justified in excluding both teams from the event. Pursuant to this provision, the countries sanctioned are automatically suspended from participating in the next Junior World Championships, except if the TWPC imposes or recommends a lesser sanction (art. 7 of the Interim Guidelines).
17. In the present case, the TWPC decided to recommend to the FINA Bureau that the Croatian team be entitled to participate in the next FINA event, notwithstanding. However, the TWPC did not find the same extenuating circumstances with regard to the Italian team. The TWPC properly exercised the authority granted to it in the Interim Guidelines to evaluate and to decide upon such facts which it has established. As a result, the Panel has no grounds upon which to raise objection.
18. The Panel also notes that the decision challenged does not violate the procedural rules provided by the Interim Guidelines, namely:

1 The initial decision of the TWPC shall be made by the members of the TWPC present at the tournament whether they were present at the match or not

3 Sanctions shall be immediately imposed upon the decision of the FINA TWPC or FINA Bureau if present In the case of a decision by the FINA TWPC an appeal shall lie to the Bureau but in the interim the decision of the FINA TWPC shall stand

19. Since 1996, the Interim Guidelines have been definitively adopted by the competent authorities of FINA and are now entitled "Regulations for Disciplinary Actions in Water Polo at FINA Events". These regulations are not merely the same as the former Interim Guidelines. In particular, the art. 5 of the new regulations is drafted as follows:

5 If the disciplinary incident involves any bench players of any team that team or teams will be immediately ejected from the event in question. Additionally it may be recommended to the FINA Bureau to exclude the team(s) from the next FINA event relevant for the team(s)

20. Even if the wording of the art. 5 of these new regulations is different from that of the art. 5 of the former Interim Guidelines, the Panel notes that the application of the new regulations would not have resulted in a different decision for the appellant. In its Report to the FINA Bureau, the TWPC expressly recommended to the Bureau that the team of Italy not be allowed to participate in the IX Jun or World Water Polo Championships, but that the team from Croatia be allowed to be so, if they qualify. Acting upon this recommendation, the FINA Bureau ejected both teams from further games of the 1995 World Jun or Water Polo Championships and barred the appellant from participating in the IX Jun or Men's Water Polo World Championships to be held in Havana in 1997. This decision was confirmed on appeal of FIN on August 3, 1996.
21. The appellant asserts that the sanction is not fair and appropriate punishment in light of the significance of the incident and that it will have no educative effects on the "personnel" involved in the fight. The athletes who are and who will ultimately be punished by the sanction are not the actors in the incident which took place on July 27, 1995, but rather on other athletes who have nothing to do with the present case.
22. It is the holding of the Panel that it can intervene in the sanction imposed only if the rules adopted by the FINA Bureau are contrary to the general principles of law, if the application is arbitrary, or if page "358" the sanctions provided by the rules can be deemed excessive or unfair on the face. To the extent the properly-constituted deciding body of the federation acts within the limits of the rules which have been validly laid down, it is the opinion of the Panel that the CAS cannot reopen an examination of the decision on the issue whether the measure of the sanctions imposed is fair and appropriate in light of the facts which the deciding body has established. It is the deciding body of the federation which is in the best position to decide which rules and which sanctions are fair and appropriate in light of the facts constituting the violation.
23. In the present case, the Panel holds that the sanction imposed by FINA on the appellant, although not provided of a thoroughly written motivation, is not subject to review or objection. In particular, the Panel wishes to point out that the decision challenged has indeed an educative purpose and effect vis-à-vis the FIN. It will encourage those in charge of the 1997 Italian Jun or Team (i.e. the coaches) to forewarn and educate the players that brutality will be met with swift and certain punishment similar to that which occurred during the 1995 Jun or Men's World Water Polo Championships held in Dunkerque.
24. It is indeed to be regretted that the players involved in the brutality which followed the Italian-Croatian match are not subject to individual punishment. It is these players who may now be permitted, despite their reprehensible conduct during the match in July 1995, to participate in the 1997 World Championships, not as members of the Jun or Water Polo Team, but rather as members of senior teams. In a general way, the Panel believes that the national federations should review the rules to determine whether provisions may not be adopted, on the individual level, to punish individual players for aggressive and violent conduct during play. Sanctions imposed on individual players would also contribute to combatting violence in water polo. However, the Panel observes that this solution will not be easy to apply, taking into account the decision of the FINA not to accept videotape evidence.

25. In conclusion, the Panel considers that the Interim Guidelines applicable to the 1995 Junior Men's World Water Polo Championships have been properly and validly enforced and that the sanction imposed is neither contrary to the general principles of law, as argued by the appellant, nor is it arbitrary, excessive or unfair in light of the page "359" facts as established through available evidence. Accordingly, the appeal by FINA shall be dismissed.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport pronounces:

1. The appeal by Federazione Italiana Nuoto of September 6, 1996 against the decision of August 3, 1996 taken by the FINA Bureau is dismissed;

1. Introduction

1. In 1989, the Czech and Slovak people overthrew the communist regime and adopted a democratic governance system embracing market economy. New laws had to be adopted, foreign investment was encouraged.
2. Various Bilateral Investment Treaties were concluded to create the necessary legal protection for new investments, among them the Treaty between the United States of America and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic Concerning the Reciprocal Encouragement and Protection of Investment, entered into on 22 October 1991 (the Treaty).
3. On 30 October 1991, a new Act on Operating Radio and Television Broadcasting (the Media Law) was adopted. It provided for the creation of the Council of the Czech Republic for Radio and Television Broadcasting (the Media Council) to ensure the observance of the Media Law, the development of plurality in broadcasting, and the development of domestic and European audio-visual work. The Media Council was also competent to grant operating licences.
4. In 1992, the Media Council commenced the necessary licensing procedures for nationwide private television broadcasting, and, on 9 February 1993, it granted License No 001/1993 to Central European Television 21, CET 21 spol. s r.o. (hereafter „CET 21“), a company founded by a small number of Czech citizens.
5. During the license application proceedings, CET 21 had worked closely with a foreign group, Central European Development Corporation GmbH (hereafter “CEDC”), in which Mr. Ronald S. Lauder (hereafter the “Claimant” or “Mr. Lauder”), an American citizen, had an important interest. At that time and since then, Mr. Lauder has among other activities been an important player in the audio-visual media in the former communist States of Central and Eastern Europe.
6. The formula which was finally adopted envisaged the formation of a new joint company, Česká nezávislá televizní společnost , spol. s r.o. (hereafter”CNTS”), with the participation of CET 21, a Czech bank and, as a majority shareholder, a company representing the foreign investors.

7. The key person was Dr. Vladimír Železný, a Czech citizen with a long experience in the media field, also a scriptwriter, etc. Mr. Železný became at the same time what amounted to the Chief Operating Officer of both CET 21 and CNTS. The new television station, TV Nova, immediately became very popular and very profitable.
8. The successful venture came to an end in 1999 when CNTS, on April 19, fired Mr. Železný from his functions with CNTS and when CET 21, on 5 August 1999, terminated its contractual relations with CNTS, after CNTS, on 4 August 4 1999, had not submitted the so-called Daily Log regarding the broadcasting for the following day.
9. During all this period the Media Council of the Czech Republic played an important role, especially during three periods. First, at the end of 1992 and the beginning of 1993, when it granted the License. Then, at the end of 1995 and in 1996, when a new Media Law became effective and the Media Council commenced administrative proceedings against CNTS, whereupon the agreements between CNTS and CET 21 were modified. Finally, during the Spring and Summer of 1999, when the final breach between CET 21 and CNTS occurred.
10. On 19 August 1999, Mr. Lauder commenced arbitration proceedings against the Czech Republic (hereafter the “Defendant”) under the Treaty, claiming that the Czech Republic, through its Media Council, had violated the Treaty. This Award examines the claims brought forward by Mr. Lauder.

2. Procedural History

11. On 19 August 1999, Ronald S. Lauder initiated these arbitration proceedings by giving Notice of Arbitration to the Czech Republic. The Notice submitted that the dispute is subject to arbitration pursuant to Articles VI(2) and (3) of the Treaty and should be heard by a panel of three arbitrators pursuant to Article 5 of the UNCITRAL Rules. The Notice of Arbitration also stated that the Czech Republic had consented to submit the dispute to arbitration pursuant to Article VI(3)(b) of the Treaty. The Claimant sought the following relief:

“[An] order [to] the Czech Republic to take such actions as are necessary to restore the contractual and legal rights associated with the claimant’s investments. Among other things, the Czech Republic should:

- a) be ordered to impose conditions on the License that adequately reflect and secure CNTS's exclusive right to provide broadcast services and its right to obtain all corresponding income in connection with the operation of TV Nova;*
- b) be required to enforce such conditions, including by revoking the License and reissuing it to CNTS or to such other entity and under such other circumstances as would restore the initial economic underpinnings of Mr. Lauder’s investment; and*
- c) be held liable for the damages Mr. Lauder has incurred to date, in an amount to be determined by the Tribunal, taking into account, among other factors, the fair market value of Mr. Lauder’s investment prior to the breaches of the Treaty”.*

12. The Claimant appointed Mr. Lloyd N. Cutler as co-arbitrator. The Respondent appointed Mr. Bohuslav Klein as co-arbitrator. Both co-arbitrators chose Mr. Robert Briner as Chairman of the Arbitral Tribunal.
13. On 5 November 1999, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 1 provisionally fixing Geneva, Switzerland, as the place of arbitration, and determining English as the language of arbitration.
14. On 13 December 1999, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 2 taking note of the agreement of the Parties proposing London as the place of arbitration.
15. On 31 January 2000, the Czech Republic submitted a Statement of Defence in which it requested that reference to arbitration by Mr. Lauder be dismissed on the grounds that the Arbitral Tribunal has no jurisdiction over the claim; and/or no investment dispute contemplated by the Treaty exists; and/or Mr. Lauder’s Notice of Arbitration was premature or otherwise formally defective.

16. On 17 March 2000, a Procedural Hearing was held in London. The Arbitral Tribunal (i) decided that the issue of jurisdiction would be joined to the merits and that no separate decision on jurisdiction would be taken unless the Arbitral Tribunal would hold that a separate determination would shorten the proceedings; (ii) took note of the agreement of the Parties that they would make good faith efforts to agree by 30 April 2000 on a solution to the issue of the scope and timing of the production of documents required from the Respondent; (iii) took note of the agreement of the Parties that in general the IBA Rules on the Taking of Evidence in International Commercial Arbitration would be used; (iv) took note of the agreement of the Parties on the schedule for the submission of further briefs; (v) considered that a bifurcation of liability and remedy would not be helpful; (vi) took note of the agreement of the Parties with respect to the issues of confidentiality of the proceedings; (vii) took note of the absence of an agreement between the Parties to consolidate or coordinate the parallel UNCITRAL arbitration between CME and the Czech Republic; and (viii) addressed some other minor issues.
17. On 10 May 2000, the Claimant sent a letter to the Arbitral Tribunal regarding the production of further documents. The 14 March 2000 Declaration of Mr. Richard Bačėk was attached to this letter.
18. On 17 May 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 3 pursuant to which the Respondent was given a time limit until 23 May 2000 to answer the Claimant's request for production of further documents.
19. On 31 May 2000, after receipt of the Claimant's letter of 10 May 2000 requesting the production of further files, documents, minutes and other records in the possession of the Media Council, and of the Respondent's letter of 23 May 2000 requesting that the application be rejected, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 4 rejecting the Claimant's request for production of further documents on the ground that it first needed to receive the Claimant's Memorial and the Respondent's Response.
20. On 30 June 2000, the Claimant filed his Memorial of Claimant. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of the Memorial:

- 29 June 2000 Declaration of Michel Delloye
- 29 June 2000 Declaration of Fred T. Klinkhammer
- 30 June 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Richard Baček
- 30 June 2000 Declaration of Laura DeBruce
- 30 June 2000 Declaration of Martin Radvan
- 30 June 2000 Declaration of Jan Vávra

21. On 16 October 2000, the Respondent filed its Response. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of the Response:

- 13 October 2000 Statement of Doc. Ing. Pavel Mertlík CSc
- 16 October 2000 Statement of Josef Josefík
- 16 October 2000 Statement of RNDR. Josef Musil
- 16 October 2000 Statement of PhDr. Helena Havíková

22. On 6 November 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 5 inviting the Respondent to respond by 10 November 2000 to the renewed request of the Claimant that the Respondent be ordered to produce documents and material identified in the Supplemental Statement in Support of the Claimant's Request for Documents of 30 June 2000.

23. On 13 November 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 6 inviting the Claimant to respond by 16 November 2000 to the letter of the Respondent of 10 November 2000.

24. On 17 November 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 7 pursuant to which it decided that the Claimant's request for production of general categories of documents was inappropriate, but that the Respondent was ordered to submit to the Claimant and to the Arbitral Tribunal copies of those documents which the Claimant had previously been able to inspect but had not been allowed to copy.

25. On 8 December 2000, the Claimant filed his Reply Memorial. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of this Reply Memorial:

- 14 November 2000 Declaration of Jacob Z. Schuster

- 5 December 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Jan Vávra
  - 5 December 2000 Statement of Ing. Jiří Brož
  - 5 December 2000 Declaration of OhDr Marína Landová
  - 7 December 2000 Declaration of Leonard M. Fertig
  - 7 December 2000 Declaration of Nicholas G. Trollope
  - 8 December 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Laura DeBruce
  - 8 December 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Fred T. Klinkhammer
  - 8 December Supplemental Declaration of Martin Radvan
  - 21 December 2000 Declaration of Ing. Miroslav Pýcha
26. On 31 January 2001, the Respondent filed its Sur-Reply. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of this Reply Memorial:
- 19 February 2001 Second Statement of Josef Josefík
  - 20 February 2001 Statement of Mgr. Milan Jakobec
27. On 19 February 2001, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 8 in which the Respondent's Requests No 1 for an order for the Claimant to provide certain documents was denied; the Respondent's Request No 2, repeating the Request No 1 and asking in addition that Mr. Morgan-Jones be subpoenaed was denied; the Claimant's request that the Respondent be directed to cease its review of certain stolen and confidential documentation was denied; and the Respondent's Request No3 to submit pleadings, submission and evidence which had been submitted in other proceedings between other parties was denied.
28. On 20 February 2001, the Claimant filed the following additional Witness Declarations:
- 20 February 2001 Second Supplemental Declaration by Laura DeBruce
  - 20 February 2001 Supplemental Declaration of Jacob Z. Schuster
  - 20 February 2001 Declaration of Ira T. Wender
29. From 5 March to 13 March 2001, the Arbitral Tribunal held hearings in London. The Claimant presented the following witnesses:
- Mrs. Marina Landová

- Mr. Jan Vávra
- Mr. Martin Radvan
- Mrs. Laura DeBruce
- Mr. Leonard M. Fertig
- Mr. Fred T. Klinkhammer
- Mr. Michael Delloye

The Respondent presented the following witnesses:

- Mr. Josef Josefík
- Mr. Milan Jakobec
- Mrs. Helena Havlíková
- Mr. Josef Musil

Two witnesses, Mr. Jiří Brož and Mr. Josef Musil, did not attend the hearings. It was agreed by the Parties on 13 March 2001 that the Arbitral Tribunal would give these witnesses' recorded statements the weight the Tribunal believes to be appropriate (Transcript of 13 March 2001, p. 225-226).

On 13 March 2001, the Chairman declared that the proceedings were closed subject to the Parties' filing of their Written Closing Submissions by 30 March 2001 and their Replies by 6 April 2001, as well as the Parties' filing of their Statement of Costs and Expenses as agreed between the Parties (Transcript of 13 March 2001, p, 230-232).

30. On 30 March 2001, the Claimant filed a Summary of Summation, and the Respondent filed a Written Closing Submissions.
31. On 6 April 2001, the Claimant filed a Rebuttal to the Respondent's Written Closing Submission and the Respondent a Reply Written Closing Submissions.
32. On 17 April 2001, the Claimant filed a Statement of Costs, and the Respondent a Summary of the Costs.

33. On 19 April 2001 the Respondent filed an Amended Summary of Costs to include costs incurred between 1 April and 6 April 2001 and the advance on costs paid to the Tribunal. In this exchange, the Respondent also provided Comments on Costs of the Claimant.
34. On 18 June 2001, the Respondent, referring to an agreement of the Parties, asked for permission to submit pages from the transcript of the hearing held in Stockholm in the arbitration between CME and the Czech Republic (the Stockholm Hearing).
35. On 21 June 2001, the Claimant confirmed his agreement with respect to the submission of excerpts from the transcript of the Stockholm Hearing.
36. On 25 June 2001, the Arbitral Tribunal agreed that each Party may submit (i) by 3 July 2001 a maximum of 25 pages of excerpts from the Stockholm Hearing, together with a short brief not exceeding 10 pages, and (ii) by 10 July 2001 rebuttals not exceeding 5 pages.
37. On 3 July 2001, the Claimant filed Comments on Selected Excerpts from Testimony in Stockholm Proceedings and the Respondent a letter concerning submission of parts of the record from the Stockholm Hearing.
38. On 10 July 2001, both Parties filed their Replies to Submission of the other Party of 3 July 2001.
39. On 12 July 2001, the Respondent filed a larger excerpt of Mr. Klinkhammer's statements at the Stockholm hearing.
40. On 19 July 2001 the Claimant submitted, as proposed by the Respondent, a further excerpt from Mr. Klinkhammer's testimony.
41. The sole remaining dispute regarding discovery was with respect to specific communications (e-mails) from the Media Council, which the Respondent wanted the Claimant to provide along with the name of the person who had provided said communications to the Claimant (see Respondent's Request No 1 of 30 January 2001), which request the Arbitral Tribunal had denied in Procedural Order No 8. On 1 March 2001, the Respondent declared that it accepted to participate in the arbitration under protest and reserved all its rights with respect to the denial of its request. At the 13 March 2001 hearing, the Chairman stated that the Respondent had not pointed out during the hearing that there was anything which would have impeded presentation of its defence but that due note was taken of the Respondent's reservation thereon (Transcript of hearing of 13 March 2001, p 232-233).

42. In the course of the proceedings, the Claimant withdrew his two first reliefs (see 1.1(a) and 1.1 (b) above), and maintained the relief for damages (see 1.1 (c)) above; Transcript of 5 March 2001, p. 57-58). The final relief sought by the Claimant is an award:

(1) Declaring that Respondent has violated the following provisions of the Treaty:

- a. The obligation of fair and equitable treatment of investments (Article II(2)(a));*
- b. The obligation to provide full protection and security to investments (Article II(2)(a));*
- c. The obligation to treat investments at least in conformity with principles of international law (Article II(2)(a));*
- d. The obligation not to impair investments by arbitrary and discriminatory measures (Article II(2)(b)); and*
- e. The obligation not to expropriate investments directly or indirectly through measures tantamount to expropriation (Article III);*

(2) Declaring that Claimant is entitled to damages for the injury that he has suffered as a result of Respondent's violations of the Treaty, in an amount to be determined at a second phase of this arbitration; and

(3) Directing Respondent to pay the costs Claimant has incurred in these proceedings to date, including the costs for legal representation and assistance (Relief Sought By Claimant of 10 March 2001).

43. The final relief sought by the Respondent is an award that:

- (1) Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed on grounds of lack of jurisdiction, namely (i) no "investment dispute" as contemplated by the Treaty exists; and/or (ii) Mr. Lauder's Notice was premature or otherwise formally defective.
- (2) And/or Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed on grounds of lack of admissibility, namely it is an abuse of process
- (3) And/or Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed on grounds that the Czech Republic did not violate the following provisions of the Treaty as alleged (or at all):-
  - (a) The obligation of fair and equitable treatment of investments (Article II(2)(a)).
  - (b) The obligation to provide full protection and security to investments (Article II(2)(a)).
  - (c) The obligation to treat investments at least in conformity with principles of international law (Article II(2) (a)).
  - (d) The obligation not to impair investments by arbitrary and discriminatory measures (Article II(2)(b)).
  - (e) The obligation not to impair investments directly or indirectly through measures tantamount to expropriation (Article III).
- (4) And/or Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed and/or Mr. Lauder is not entitled to damages, on ground that the alleged injury to Mr. Lauder's investment was not the direct and foreseeable result of any violation of the Treaty.
- (5) And Mr. Lauder pay the costs of the proceedings and reimburse the reasonable legal and other cost of the Czech Republic (Relief Sought by the Czech Republic of 13 March 2001).

3. Facts

3.1 The 1992-1993 events

43. On 30 October 1991, the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic adopted the Act on Operating Radio and Television Broadcasting (hereinafter: the “Media Law”). The Media Law empowered the Federal Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting (hereinafter: “the Media Council”) to grant a license to broadcast radio and television programs (Exhibit R2).
44. Pursuant to the Act on the Czech Republic Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting of 21 February 1992, one of the duties of the Media Council is to supervise the observance of legal regulations governing radio and television broadcasting (Exhibit R6).
45. In 1992, the Media Council invited interested candidates to apply for a license for a new radio and television broadcasting on the third channel (hereinafter: “the License”) (Exhibit R53).
46. On 27 August 1992, CET 21, a Czech company originally owned by some individuals (hereinafter: “the Founders”), and whose General Director was Mr. Železný, a Czech citizen, filed an application for the License (Exhibit C63).
47. Prior to the filing of the application, CET 21 had held discussions with the CEDC, a German company over which Mr. Ronald S. Lauder (hereinafter: “Mr. Lauder” or “the Claimant”), an American citizen, had indirect voting control.
48. The original idea was that CEDC would participate in the broadcasting operation by acquiring stock of CET 21 (Exhibit C134). Such a participation would comply with the requirements of the Media Law, which expressly envisaged in Article 10.6 the applications for license “from companies with foreign equity participation” (Exhibit R2).

49. On 31 August 1992, CEDC and the Founders of CET 21 agreed on a draft document named "Terms of Agreement". This document provided that CEDC would invest a sum of at least USD 10,000,000 in the establishment of a commercial television station in Prague "through an equity investment in CET21" in the form of redeemable "preferred stock or equivalent equal to 49% ownership of CET 21" and of "an equal amount of common stock". The Founders would be entitled to 2% of CET 21 each, i.e. 14% in total. The remaining 37% of CET 21 would be held by the Founders in reserve for additional investors (Exhibit C139).
50. On 28 September 1992, CET 21 prepared a document named "Project of an Independent Television Station". This document stated that CEDC "is a direct participant in CET21's application for the license" (Exhibit C9).
51. On 21 December 1992, the Media Council held preliminary hearings for the granting of the License. Messrs. Mark Palmer, President of CEDC, and Len Fertig, then consultant with CEDC, were present at the portion of the hearings on CET 21's application. The record of this portion of the hearings, drafted by the Media Council, speaks of "extensive share reserved for foreign capital" and "direct capital share, not credit". It also states that "they [CEDC] see themselves as a predominantly passive investor, we want a station independent of foreign influence and political influence" (Exhibit R58).
52. On 5 January 1993, CEDC and the Founders of CET 21 signed a document named "Terms of Agreement". This document provided for the same participation of CEDC in CET 21 as the above mentioned draft agreement dated 31 August 1992, i.e. 49% of redeemable preferred stock and of common stock (Exhibit C61).
53. The same day, the Media Council held a hearing which was attended by Messrs. Palmer, Fertig and Železný. The participants addressed the issues of other possible partners besides CEDC in the CET 21 investments, mainly Česká spořitelna, a.s., the Czech Savings Bank (hereinafter: "CSB"), the scope of CEDC's investments in the project, and the programming (Exhibit C141).

54. On 22 January 1993, the Media Council held further preliminary hearings. The record of the portion of the hearings on CET 21 expressly referred to CEDC. It stated that “the participation of foreign capital is expected” and “the combination of domestic and foreign capital is important, necessity of safeguard - diversification of the investments sources” (Exhibit C64).
55. On 30 January 1993, the Media Council held a session on the issuance of the License. It was decided that CET 21 was awarded the License. The following statements were made by some members of the Media Council at this session: “(...) it is very significant that this is a business which can not be financed only by credit” (Mr. Brož); “considers the Czech and foreign capital in CET 21 positive” (Mr. Brož); “positive in that there is a stabilisation factor, as far as foreign capital and its involvement is concerned” (Mr. Pýcha) (Exhibit R54).
56. The same day, the Media Council issued a press release announcing that CET 21 had been awarded the License. The press release stated that “A direct participant in the application is the international corporation CEDC (...)” (Exhibit C11).
57. The same day, the Media Council sent a letter to CET 21 informing them of its decision on the award of the License. This document also referred to “(...) a direct party to the application being the international corporation CEDC (...)” (Exhibit R9).
58. The Media Council’s decision to award the License to CET 21 raised strong opposition, mainly from the political party ODS. The ODS blamed the Media Council for having hastily chosen a company, CET 21, whose representatives were bankrupt politicians and in which foreign capital prevailed (Exhibits R83, C144, and C145).
59. On 3 February 1993, CET 21 and CEDC submitted to the Media Council a document named “Overall Structure of a New Czech Commercial Television Entity”. This document stated that CET 21 and CEDC would jointly create a new Czech company, which would have the exclusive use of the License “(...) as long as CET 21 and CEDC have such a license”. The shareholders of the new company would be CET 21, CEDC and CSB, the last two of them providing the necessary funds (Exhibits C14 and C149).

60. At the oral request of Mr. Jakobec, director of the Programming and Monitoring Section of the Media Council, the above mentioned document of 3 February 1993, was significantly modified, mainly to reflect the fact that the License would be granted to CET 21 only, and not to CET 21 and CEDC jointly. The modified document was issued on 5 February 1993 (Exhibit C150; declaration of Mrs. Landová of 5 December 2000, p. 8).
61. The same day, the Media Council held a meeting to which representatives of CET 21 were invited. The latter submitted to the Media Council the modified version of the above mentioned document named "Overall Structure of a New Czech Commercial Television Entity" (Exhibit R55).
62. On 9 February 1993, CET 21 issued a document stating that its general assembly, which had met the previous day, approved the conditions of the Media Council for the legal confirmation of the License (Exhibit R78).
63. The same day, the Media Council rendered the decision to award the License to CET 21. This decision referred to CEDC as CET 21's "contractual partner" (Exhibits R10 and C16).
64. The same day, the Media Council issued the License for a period of 12 years, expiring on 30 January 2005. The Appendix to the License set forth 31 conditions (hereinafter: "the Conditions") that CET 21 had to observe. Condition 17 required among other matters that CET 21, CEDC and CSB submit a business agreement to the Media Council for approval within 90 days (Exhibit R5).
65. The same day, CET 21 accepted without reservation the License, including the Conditions (Exhibits R11 and R77).
66. The same day, CSB confirmed its intention to participate in the broadcasting company to be set up together with CET 21 and CEDC (Exhibit R81).
67. On 8 April 1993, Mr. Železný acquired a 16.66% participation in CET 21.

68. On 21 April 1993, after having held several sessions to discuss the draft business agreements between CET 21, CEDC and CSB, and after having had several contacts in this matter with the representatives of these companies, the Media Council issued a letter approving the last version of the business agreement (Exhibit C19).
69. On 4 May 1993, CET 21, CEDC and CSB signed the final version of the business agreement, named “Memorandum of Association and Investment Agreement” (hereinafter: “the MOA”). The MOA provided for the formation of the CNTS, a Czech company which would manage the television station. CEDC would contribute 75% of CNTS’s capital and obtain a 66% ownership interest (Article 1.4.3), CSB would contribute 25% of the capital and obtain a 22% ownership interest (Article 1.4.2). and CET 21 would contribute “the right to use, benefit from, and maintain the License (...) on an unconditional, irrevocable and exclusive basis” and obtain a 12% ownership interest (Article 1.4.1) (Exhibit R12).
70. On 12 May 1993, the Media Council rendered a decision amending and clarifying the License issued on 9 February 1993. The main amendment regarded Condition 17, which stated that the MOA was “an integral part of the license terms” (Exhibit C20).
71. On 8 July 1993, CNTS was incorporated in the Commercial Register administered by the District Court for Prague (Exhibit C89).
72. Mr. Železný was appointed General Director of the company.
73. CNTS then launched a television station named TV Nova, which soon became very successful.

3.2 The 1994-1997 events

74. On 12 May 1994, the Czech Parliament’s Committee for Science, Education, Culture, Youth, and Physical Training PSP issued a statement that the Media Council had allowed television broadcasting by an unauthorized entity, i.e. CNTS.

75. In an undated opinion, the Media Council answered that CET 21 was the holder of the License, and CNTS was authorized by the former to perform all acts related to the development and operation of TV Nova. However, the License “as such has not been contributed to CNTS and is separate from all other activities of CNTS”. The Media Council added that, after having consulted “with a number of leading legal experts, both Czech and foreign”, this “standard business procedure” was discussed and approved, and did not violate any effective legal regulations (Exhibit C21).
76. On 4 July 1994, CNTS and CSB acquired 1.25% each of CET 21’s stock (Exhibit R107). As a result, the participation in CET 21 was as follows:
- Mr. Železný: 16,66%
  - The remaining Founders: 80.84%
  - CEDC: 1.25%
  - CSB: 1.25%.
77. On 28 July 1994, CEDC assigned all its capital interest in CNTS to CME Media Entreprises B.V. (hereinafter: “CME”), a Dutch company over which the Claimant also exercised control (Exhibit C128).
78. In the summer of 1994, the Czech Parliament replaced some members of the Media Council.
79. On 8 December 1995, the Czech Parliament amended the Media Law, effective 1 January 1996. Among the most relevant modification was the deletion of Article 12(3) of the original Media Law, which stated that “In addition to conditions stated in paragraph 2, the decision to grant a license also includes conditions which the license-granting body will set for the broadcasting operator”. The Media Law in Article 3 also contained a much narrower definition of the term “broadcaster” as the person to whom a license had been granted (see also the memorandum of Mrs. DeBruce of CME of 15 May 1996; Exhibit C111) (Exhibit R3).

80. On 2 January 1996, CET 21 applied to the Media Council for the cancellation of most of the Conditions set in the License (Exhibit R31).
81. On 18 January 1996, the Media Council asked the District Court for Prague 1, acting as authority for the Commercial Register, to re-examine CET 21's and CNTS's registrations and to submit a report thereon, being noted that such request had already been made on 2 February 1995, and was later repeated on 11 April 1996 (Exhibits R30, R32 and R33).
82. On 12 February 1996, the Media Council requested Mr. Bárta, at the State and Law Institute of the Academy of Science of the Czech Republic, to provide an expert opinion on CNTS's authority to operate television broadcasting (Exhibit C27).
83. On 19 February 1996, Mr. Bárta issued the requested expert opinion on the letterhead of the State and Law Institute of the Academy of Science of the Czech Republic. Based on the assumption that television broadcasting of TV Nova was operated by CNTS, the author came to the conclusion that administrative proceedings could be initiated to impose a fine for unauthorized broadcasting against CNTS. In addition, the Media Council could decide to cancel the License of CET 21 (Exhibit R14).
84. On 13 March 1996, a meeting was held between the Media Council and CET 21. Several issues were discussed, among them the relationship between CET 21 and CNTS regarding the operation of television broadcasting. The Media Council was concerned with the fact that CNTS was operating television broadcasting without being the holder - or the co-holder - of the License. Mr. Železný, acting on behalf of CET 21, argued that the current situation had been approved by the Media Council. At the Media Council's request, it was eventually agreed that a contract on the provision of performances and services between CET 21 and CNTS would be drafted and further discussed. It was also agreed that CET 21 would not require, in its application for cancellation of license conditions dated 2 January 1996, the cancellation of Condition 17. The application for cancellation of this specific condition would be the subject of further administrative proceedings (Exhibit C84).
85. On 21 March 1996, CET 21 applied for cancellation of Condition 17 (Exhibit R62).

86. At some time in April 1996 and as requested at the meeting of 13 March CET 21 and CNTS submitted to the Media Council two draft agreements setting forth their legal relationships (Exhibit R15).
87. On 2 May 1996, the State and Law Institute of the Academy of Science of the Czech Republic provided the Media Council with a legal opinion on the two above mentioned draft agreements between CET 21 and CNTS. It concluded that the situation of CET 21 was correctly resolved, the key point being that CET 21, and not CNTS, actually operated broadcasting on its own account (Exhibit R16).
88. On 15 May 1996, CME expressed its concern to Messrs. Železný and Fertig with respect to the contemplated changes to the MOA resulting from the above mentioned draft agreements. CME specifically referred to CET 21's envisaged power to withdraw CNTS's use of the License if CNTS allegedly breached the agreement (Exhibit C111).
89. On 23 May 1996, after two additional meetings between the Media Council and CET 21 (Exhibits R105 and C85), CNTS and CET 21 entered into a new agreement (hereinafter: "the May 1996 Agreement") setting forth their legal relationships. The Agreement stated in preamble that the MOA was not changed. In substance, it set forth that CET 21 was the holder of the License and the operator of television broadcasting, that the License was non-transferable, and was not the subject of a contribution from CET 21 to CNTS. CNTS's role was to arrange the television broadcasting (Exhibit R17).
90. On 4 June 1996, the Media Council informed CET 21 that the latter had breached the License by failing to timely announce changes in the registered capital, in the signing process, and in the company's registered office. It directed CET 21 and CNTS to change their registrations with the Commercial Registry, in particular to modify CNTS's business activity with respect to "television broadcasting" (Exhibit R95).
91. In June 1996, the Supreme State Attorney Office requested the Media Council to enable it to consult the files relating to the issue of the License to CET 21 and to CNTS's rights as the administrator of TV Nova. On this occasion, the Media Council was informed that criminal investigations were pending with respect to CET 21's and CNTS's rights to administer TV Nova (Exhibit R89).

92. On 28 and 29 June 1996, the Media Council held a meeting during which it decided to cancel most of the Conditions to the License. The cancellation of Condition 17 was postponed in light of the court proceedings with respect to the registration in the Commercial Registry and the criminal investigation (Exhibit R56).
93. On 17 July 1996, CME purchased the 22% interest in CNTS held by CSB for a consideration in excess of USD 36,000,000 (declaration of Mrs. DeBruce of 30 June 2000, p. 5; declaration of Mr. Radvan of 30 June 2000, p. 5). As a result, CME held 88% of CNTS's stock, and CET 21 maintained its participation of 12% in CNTS.
94. On 22 July 1996, as its previous requests of 2 February 1995, 18 January and 11 April 1996, had been ignored, the Media Council asked the Regional Commercial Court in Prague to start proceedings on compliance of CET 21's and CNTS's registrations in the Commercial Register (Exhibit R36).
95. On 26 July 1996, the Media Council issued a decision regarding the cancellation of most of the Conditions to the License, as per its above mentioned meeting of 28 and 29 June (Exhibit R35).
96. The same day, the Media Council issued a decision to interrupt the administrative proceedings with respect to the envisaged cancellation of Condition 17 to the License because of the pending criminal investigation (Exhibit R34).
97. On 23 July 1996, the Media Council decided to commence administrative proceedings against CNTS for operating television broadcasting without authorization. CNTS was informed of said decision the same day (Exhibits R37 and R18).
98. On 1 August 1996, CME and Mr. Železný entered into a loan agreement pursuant to which the former would provide the latter with a loan of USD 4'700'000 for acquiring from the other individual shareholders 47% of CET 21's stock. The agreement provided for Mr. Železný to exercise all his voting rights as directed by CME until full repayment of the loan (Exhibit R38). As a result, the participation in CET 21 was as follows:

- Mr. Železný: 60%
- The four remaining Founders: 37.5%
- CME: 1.25%
- CSB: 1.25%.

99. The Media Council was not informed of the change in CET 21's ownership.
100. On 13 August 1996, the Institute of the State and Law of the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic issued a legal opinion to CNTS pursuant to which the Media Council was obliged to meet CET 21's application to cancel the Conditions to the Licence (Exhibit C28).
101. On 21 August 1996, CET 21 requested the Media Council to cancel Condition 17 to the Licence (Exhibit R63).
102. On 4 October 1996, CET 21 and CNTS made proposals to the Media Council aimed at resolving the differences with respect to the legal relationships between the two companies. CET 21 and CNTS would enter into a new agreement providing that CET 21 is the operator of television broadcasting and is entirely responsible before the Media Council. Both companies would request that their registrations with the Commercial Register be modified. The Media Council, in turn, would continue the administrative proceedings on the cancellation of Condition 17 to the License, and would confirm that the arrangements between the two companies are in compliance with legal regulations. However, there was no mention of the administrative proceedings initiated by the Media Council against CNTS for unauthorized conducting of television broadcasting (Exhibit R19).
103. The same day, CNTS provided the Media Council with its position with respect to the initiation of the administrative proceedings against it. It denied the allegation of unauthorized television broadcasting (Exhibit C26).

104. The same day, CET 21 and CNTS signed an agreement (hereinafter: “the October 1996 Agreement”) specifying their legal relationships as set forth in the amended MOA. The October 1996 Agreement was similar to the May 1996 Agreement. The main difference was in the October 1996 Agreement’s statement that such agreement did not affect CET 21’s exclusive liability for the programming (Exhibit R21).
105. On 6 November 1996, the Media Council’s legal department issued an internal memorandum on the legal aspects of the October 1996 Agreement. It stated that said agreement “undoubtedly reacts to the commencement of administrative proceedings against CNTS for illegal broadcasting with the aim of making it seem that CNTS has not been committing such illegal acts”. The memorandum nevertheless expressed some doubts if the October 1996 Agreement fully achieved this purpose (Exhibit R96).
106. On 14 November 1996, CME issued a memorandum expressing its concern about the contemplated amendment of Article 1.4.1 of the MOA. CME’s main fear was that the draft amendment would allow CET 21 to chose another party to benefit from the License (Exhibit C112).
107. The same day, a meeting was held between CNTS’s shareholders, i.e. CME, CSB and CET 21. Article 1.4.1(a) of the MOA was amended and replaced as follows: “the Company is granted the unconditional, irrevocable, and exclusive right to use and maintain the know-how and make it the subject of profit to the Company, in connection with the License, its maintenance, and protection”. In addition CNTS was granted the right to acquire the License from CET 21 “[i]n the case of change in the legal regulation and in the prevailing interpretation of the legal community” (Exhibit C59).
108. On 20 November 1996, the Media Council expressed to the Police of the Czech Republic its opinion that none of the Media Council’s members could be criminally liable with respect to CNTS’s alleged illegal television broadcasting (Exhibit R66).
109. On 13 December 1996, the October 1996 Agreement was slightly amended (Exhibit R21).

110. On 17 December 1996, the Media Council decided to cancel Condition 17 to the Licence (Exhibits R57 and C30).
111. In December 1996, CME acquired from CET 21 a 5,2% participation in CNTS for a consideration of about USD 5,300,000. During the same period, the Founders of CET 21 transferred an additional 5,8% interest to Nova Consulting a.s. (hereinafter: “Nova Consulting”), a Czech company owned by Mr. Železný (declaration of Mrs. DeBruce of 30 June 2000, p. 5; declaration of Mr. Radvan of 30 June 2000, p. 5). As a result, the participation in CNTS was as follows:
- CME: 93,2%
  - Nova Consulting: 5,8%
  - The Founders: 1%.
112. On 29 January 1997, the Media Council, which had become aware of the loan agreement between CME and Mr. Železný, held a meeting with CET 21 for the purpose of obtaining information thereon from Mr. Železný (Exhibit R123).
113. On 5 February 1997, the October 1996 Agreement was amended to replace all previous agreements between CET 21 and CNTS with respect to their legal relationships (see Exhibit R21).
114. On 12 February 1997, CNTS’s registration in the Commercial Registry was modified as to delete, under the company’s business, the sentence “operating television broadcasting under license no. 001/93” (Exhibit R25).
115. On 21 April 1997, Mr. Radvan, counsel for CME, issued an affidavit stating that the loan agreement between CME and Mr. Železný had been terminated pursuant to an agreement entered into by the parties on 24 February 1997 (Exhibit C91).
116. On 15 May 1997, the criminal investigation against CNTS for alleged illegal operation of television broadcasting was suspended (Exhibit R25).
117. On 21 May 1997, CNTS and CET 21 entered into an agreement named “Contract on cooperation in ensuring service for television broadcasting,” together with a supplement to this agreement (hereinafter: “the 1997 Agreement”), replacing all previous agreements between the parties. The 1997 Agreement confirmed that CET 21 was the holder of the License and the operator of television broadcasting and had the exclusive responsibility for programming. CNTS had the exclusive rights and obligations to arrange services for television broadcasting (Exhibits C29 and R22).

118. The same day, CME transferred all its interests in CNTS to CME Czech Republic B.V. (hereinafter: also “CME”), a Dutch company, for a consideration of USD 52,723,613 (Exhibit C130).
119. On 1 July 1997, the Czech Parliament passed the Act on the Czech Republic Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting, which represented a consolidated version of the statute (Exhibit R7).
120. In August 1997, CME purchased Nova Consulting, which owned a 5.8% participation in CNTS, from Mr. Železný for a consideration of USD 28,500,000. As a result, CME held 99% of CNTS’s stock and the founders of CET 21 were left with a 1% participation in CNTS (declaration of Mrs. DeBruce of 30 June 2000, p. 5; declaration of Mr. Radvan of 30 June 2000, p. 5).
121. On 16 September 1997, the Media Council decided to stop the administrative proceedings against CNTS for illegal operation of television broadcasting. The Media Council’s main reasoning was that CNTS had “removed the inadequacies” by modifying its registration with the Commercial Registry and by proceeding to “amendments to the contractual relationship” with CET 21 (Exhibit R25).

3.3 The 1998-2000 events

122. On 31 January 1998, the Media Council issued its 1997 Report to the Czech Parliament. The report contained a long statement of the Media Council’s relationship with CNTS and CET 21. The Media Council explained that the legal relationship set up at the time the License was granted complied with the law as it then was in force and the Conditions to the License, mainly Conditions 17 and 18 had been issued in accordance with the Law. When the Media Law was amended and provided for the cancellation of all the Conditions, the Media Council protested on the ground that it "practically lost every possibility of checking on CNTS and its relationship to CET21. (...) The situation changed fundamentally when the amendment of the broadcasting law became effective. The licensing conditions that in principle guaranteed the legal character of the existing links between the license holder and the servicing firms were annulled and the Council had to solve the issue about how to attend, in the newly formed situation, to the sharp loosening up of the regulatory possibilities. The Council had an expertise made concerning the related issues and on the basis of it, initiated gradually negotiations with the affected Companies and opened up administrative proceedings in the subject of unauthorized broadcasting (...)". CET 21 and CNTS took the necessary steps to carry out the necessary adjustments, by changing their registrations in the Commercial Registry and the agreements setting forth their legal relationships. These actions led to the termination of the administrative proceedings for unauthorized television broadcasting. However, the Media Council's decision was not unanimous (5 in favor, 3 against and 1 abstention), and even reflected "the big difference of opinions over this case" (Exhibit C12).

123. On 21 June 1998, Mr. Radvan, counsel for CME, had lunch with Mrs. Hulová, Vice Chairman of the Media Council. According to Mr. Radvan, Mrs. Hulová said during lunch that CNTS had become "the target for a group of disgruntled persons" (Exhibit R102).
124. On 1 July 1998, the Media Council informed CET 21 that it was opening administrative proceedings against the latter to revoke the License on the ground that the television station was not providing information "in an objective and balanced manner" (Exhibit R124).
125. On 17 November 1998, the Media Council decided to stop the above mentioned administrative proceedings against CET 21, due to the fact that appropriate actions had been taken (Exhibit R125).

126. On 15 December 1998, CME and CET 21 amended the MOA so that all prior changes were incorporated (Exhibit C60).
127. On 24 February 1999, a Meeting of the Board of Representatives of CNTS took place during which the relationships between CET 21 and CME were discussed. The Minutes of the meeting indicate that Mr. Železný reported that at least one member of the Media Council had claimed that the actual situation contravened the law, and that "the Council wants to change its original decision and to write a letter with the statement that the present relationship between CET 21 and CNTS is not correct". Mr. Železný asserted that in his view, which he claimed was confirmed by his lawyers, the 1997 Agreement was not exclusive and CET 21 could request any services then provided by CNTS from any other company. He informed CNTS that, based on this assertion, CET 21 would hire another advertising agency. He added that, "in case he would be asked", he would resign from his function of executive as well as General Director of CNTS. He stated that "his proposal was an ultimatum, which meant that CME could either accept or not" (Exhibit C31).
128. On 2 March 1999, the Media Council held a meeting to which Mr. Železný was invited. According to the Minutes, CME's alleged financial difficulties were discussed. Mr. Železný, acting on behalf of CET 21, asked the Media Council to repeat some of its previous statements about exclusivity and the withdrawal of the License "in relation to all steps within the logic of the development of the relationships between CET and the Council". It was then stated that "[I]f Zelezny wants to affect the interests of CNTS, he will need to be supported by a formal or informal letter" (Exhibit R97).
129. On 3 March 1999, Mr. Železný, on the letterhead of CET 21, sent a letter to the Media Council requesting that the latter issue an opinion defining the relationship between CET 21 and CNTS, to be used by CET 21 "for discussions with our contractual partners". The opinion was to assert that "[r]elations between the operator of broadcasting [CET 21] and its service organisations must be established on an nonexclusive basis". CET 21 "should order services from service organizations at regular prices so as to respect rules of equal competition. (...) the licensed subject must have the ability to select relevant services anytime and anywhere at will" (Exhibit C33).

130. On 15 March 1999, the Media Council issued a letter to CET 21 laying out, inter alia, the non-exclusive basis of the relations between the operator of broadcasting and the service organizations, the operator's responsibility for structuring and composing the program, and the allocation to the operator of the revenues from advertising (Exhibit C34).
131. In March 1999, CME set up an action plan to deal with the tense situation with CET 21 (Exhibit R132).
132. On 19 April 1999, Mr. Železný was dismissed from his position as General Director and Chief Executive of CNTS (Exhibit C68).
133. On 24 June 1999, CNTS requested the Media Council to give its position or to take measures aimed at resolving the current dispute between CNTS, CME and CET 21, resulting, among other reasons, from CET 21 entering into contracts with third parties, which "were granted rights to trade benefits from the License" (Exhibit C39).
134. On 28 June 1999, after CNTS had positioned two commercial spots into television broadcasting despite CET 21's disapproval, the Regional Commercial Court in Prague rendered a preliminary measure ordering CNTS to refrain from any interference with television broadcasting operated by CET 21 (Exhibit C13).
135. On 13 July 1999, in the context of the Media Council's opinion to the Permanent Media Commission of the Parliament of the Czech Republic, CNTS provided the Media Council with an analysis of its legal relationship with CET 21 (Exhibit C40).
136. On 26 July 1999, the Media Council sent a letter to CNTS calling it to stop its media campaign in connection with its dispute with CET 21. CNTS was also to inform the Media Council on the steps taken to minimize the risks described in its opinion to the above-mentioned Commission, mainly the risks of breaches of the Media Law, and on the actions taken to come to a final settlement of the dispute. Enclosed with this letter were Sections 7 and 8 of the Media Council's opinion to the Permanent Media Committee with respect to the dispute between CET 21 and CNTS (Exhibit C44).

137. On 2 August 1999, CNTS and CME sent a letter to the Permanent Media Committee of the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Czech Republic in response to Sections 7 and 8 of the Media Council's opinion to the Permanent Media Committee, a copy of which had been provided to CNTS with the Media Council's letter of 26 July 1999 (Exhibit C41), raising the question that the acts of the Media Council might constitute violations of the Treaty.
138. On 5 August 1999, Mr. Rozehnal, counsel for CET 21, informed CNTS that CET 21 "hereby withdraws from the Agreement on Cooperation in Provision of Services for Television Broadcasting, as amended, concluded on May 21, 1997". This decision was based on CNTS's failure on 4 August 1999 to submit to CET 21 within the usual deadline the Daily Log, which contains the daily programming, regarding the broadcasting for the following day (Exhibit C35).
139. On 6 August 1999, CNTS filed a request with the Media Council for the withdrawal of the License to CET 21 (Exhibit C42).
140. On 13 August 1999, CNTS informed the Media Council of its willingness to conduct negotiations with CET 21 to resolve their dispute, and requested that CNTS and CME be invited to the Media Council's ordinary session to be held on 17 August 1999 (Exhibit C43).
141. On 16 August 1999, CET 21 sent a letter to CME Ltd. detailing the business relationship between CET 21 and CNTS (Exhibit C13).
142. On 19 August 1999, Mr. Lauder initiated the present arbitration proceedings.
143. Numerous other court and arbitration proceedings opposing CNTS, CME, CET 21, Mr. Lauder and/or Mr. Železný were commenced in the context of the disputes between CNTS, CME and Mr. Lauder, on the one side, and CET 21 and Mr. Železný, on the other side. In particular:
- CME initiated parallel UNCITRAL arbitration proceedings against the Czech Republic on the basis of the bilateral investment treaty between the Netherlands and the Czech Republic;

- CME brought ICC arbitration proceedings against Mr. Železný (Exhibit R46);
- Numerous civil actions were commenced before the Czech courts, most of them opposing CNTS and CET 21 (Exhibit R49).

144. On 19 September 1999, the Media Council issued a written opinion for the Permanent Media Commission of the House of Deputies of the Parliament with respect to the dispute between CET 21 and CNTS. It was qualified as a “typical commercial dispute” related to the assessment of the real value of CME in the context of its merger with Scandinavian Broadcasting Services. Generally, this dispute could be identified as an issue of relations between the broadcaster, investors and service organizations, resulting from insufficiently transparent arrangements and leading to a dual broadcasting system. Similar problems were encountered with almost all nationwide broadcasters (Exhibit C68).
145. On 30 September 1999, the Standing Committee for Mass Media of the House of Representatives of the Czech Republic issued a resolution stating its serious dissatisfaction with the work of the Media Council in the context of the dispute between CNTS and CET 21 (Exhibit C108).
146. On 15 November 1999, the Media Council provided the Permanent Commission for the Media of the House of Representatives of the Czech Republic with a supplement to its position on the situation of TV Nova (Exhibit R126).
147. On 21 December 1999, the Media Council rendered a decision pursuant to which CME could be a party to the administrative proceedings regarding changes in the License at CET 21’s request (increase in the registered capital, changes in the participants and values of their capital contributions) (Exhibit C50).
148. As a result of the end of the relationships between CET 21 and CNTS, the latter had to take drastic measures to cut its spending, e.g. to lay off many employees (Exhibit C38).
149. On 4 May 2000, the Regional Commercial Court in Prague decided that CET 21 was obligated to procure all services for television broadcasting exclusively through CNTS. However, the Court refused to decide that CET 21's withdrawal from the 1997 Agreement was invalid, nor to confirm the existence of CNTS's exclusive right on the basis of the 1997 Agreement (Exhibit C54).

150. On 1 June 2000, CET 21 filed an appeal against the above mentioned judgment with the High Court in Prague (Exhibit C55).
151. On 14 December 2000, the High Court in Prague granted CET 21's appeal and decided that CET 21 was not obligated to procure all services for television broadcasting exclusively through CNTS (Exhibit R134).
152. The case is now pending before the Czech Supreme Court.

4. Jurisdiction and Admissibility

4.1 Introduction

153. At various stages of the proceedings, the Respondent challenged the Arbitral Tribunal's jurisdiction on several grounds:
  - a) The Claimant has failed to prove that he owns or controls an investment within the Czech Republic;
  - b) The Claimants claim is not an investment dispute under the Treaty;
  - c) The Claimant already submitted the same dispute to the courts of the Czech Republic and to other arbitral tribunals (Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty);
  - d) The Claimant may not concurrently pursue the same remedies in different fora;
  - e) The Claimant's claim constitutes an abuse of process;
  - f) The Claimant did not comply with the six-month waiting period (Article VI(2)(a) of the Treaty) (see Statement of Defence, p. 12-13; Response, p. 40-49; Sur-Reply, p. 14-17).
154. In the Written Closing Submissions of 30 March 2001, the Respondent stated that it did not dispute that:

- The Treaty is prima facie applicable to events occurring after 19 December 1992;
- Mr. Lauder is a national of the United States;
- CEDC's (and later CME's) shareholding in CNTS is an investment;
- The Claimant's allegations constitute an investment dispute for the purpose of the Treaty;
- For jurisdictional purpose only, the Claimant controlled the investment (see Written Closing Submissions, p. 4-5).

155. The Arbitral Tribunal therefore takes note that the Respondent has withdrawn the two grounds under a) and b) above. The Arbitral Tribunal will therefore only address the four remaining grounds under c), d), e) and f) above.

4.2 The same dispute is submitted to state courts and to other arbitral tribunals

156. The Respondent argues that Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty precludes the Arbitral Tribunal from exercising jurisdiction on the ground that the same dispute was submitted to Czech courts and to another arbitral tribunal before the present proceedings were initiated. Those proceedings arise from the same circumstances and seek the same substantive remedy, so that the issue in dispute is the same in all cases. As a result, Mr. Lauder has removed the dispute from any arbitral tribunal under the Treaty (Response, p. 47-48).

157. The Claimant argues that the present proceeding is the only one in which he claims that the Czech Republic violated obligations under the Treaty. Article VI(3)(a) actually sets forth a limited form of the principle of lis alibi pendens, whose elements are not met (Reply Memorial, p. 50-62).

158. Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty reads as follows:

"(...) Once the national or company concerned has so consented, either party to the dispute may institute such proceeding provided:

- (i) the dispute has not been submitted by the national or the company for resolution in accordance with any applicable previously agreed dispute-settlement procedures; and
- (ii) the national of company concerned has not brought the dispute before the courts of justice or administrative tribunals or agencies of competent jurisdiction of the Party that is a party to the dispute. (...)

159. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the word “dispute” in Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty has the same meaning as the words “investment dispute” in Article VI(1), which reads as follows:

“For the purposes of this Article, an investment dispute is defined as a dispute involving (a) the interpretation or application of an investment agreement between a Party and a national or company of the other Party; (b) the interpretation or application of any investment authorization granted by a Party’s foreign investment authority to such national or company; or (c) an alleged breach of any right conferred or created by this Treaty with respect to an investment”.

160. It is undisputed that the Claimant’s allegations concern an investment dispute under Article VI(1)(c) of the Treaty, i.e. “an alleged breach of any right conferred or created by this Treaty with respect to an investment”.

161. The purpose of Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty is to avoid a situation where the same investment dispute (“the dispute”) is brought by the same the claimant (“the national or the company”) against the same respondent (a Party to the Treaty) for resolution before different arbitral tribunals and/or different state courts of the Party to the Treaty that is also a party to the dispute.

162. The resolution of the investment dispute under the Treaty between Mr. Lauder and the Czech Republic was not brought before any other arbitral tribunal or Czech court before – or after - the present proceedings was initiated. All other arbitration or court proceedings referred to by the Respondent involve different parties, and deal with different disputes.

163. In particular, neither Mr. Lauder nor the Czech Republic is a party to any of the numerous proceedings before the Czech courts, which opposed or are opposing CNTS or the various CME entities, on the one side, and CET 2.1 or Mr. Železný, on the other side. The Respondent has not alleged - let alone shown - that any of these courts would decide the dispute on the basis of the Treaty.
164. The ICC arbitration proceeding was between CME and Mr. Železný, and dealt with the latter's alleged breach of the 11 August 1997 Share Purchase Agreement pursuant to which CME acquired a 5.8% participation in CNTS held by Nova Consulting, a.s., an entity owned by Mr. Železný.
165. The parallel UNCITRAL arbitration proceeding (hereinafter: "the Stockholm Proceedings") is between CME and the Czech Republic, and is based on the bilateral investment treaty between the Netherlands and the Czech Republic.
166. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal holds that Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty does not preclude it from having jurisdiction in the present proceedings.

4.3 The same remedies are sought in different fora

167. The Respondent argues that, independently of Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty, the Claimant cannot seek the same remedies in multiple parallel actions.
168. At first the Respondent asserted that if the Claimant chooses to pursue a contractual remedy in the local courts or in an arbitral tribunal, he should not be allowed to concurrently pursue a remedy under the Treaty. The Claimant could indeed not complain of any mistreatment of his investment by the State until that State's courts had finally disposed of the case. In addition, by initiating proceedings under the Treaty, the Claimant deprives the other party to the court proceedings of the opportunity to argue its case before the Treaty tribunal. Here, the existence of multiple proceedings creates a risk of incompatible decisions, a prospect of disorder "that the principle of lis alibi pendens is designed to avert" (Response, p. 46-47).

169. Later the Respondent indicated that it was not seeking “to rely upon technical doctrines of lis alibi pendens or res judicata”, but on a new “important issue of principle, not yet tested (...) in previous court or arbitral proceedings”. The multiplicity of proceedings involving, directly or indirectly, the State “amounts to an abuse of process”, in that no court or arbitral tribunal would be in a position to ensure that justice is done and that its authority is effectively upheld. The Respondent added that there is “an obvious risk of conflicting findings between the two Treaty tribunals” (Sur-Reply, p. 14-15).
170. The Claimant argues that no principles of lis alibi pendens are applicable here. Should such principles apply, it would not deprive the Arbitral Tribunal of jurisdiction, since the other court and arbitration proceedings involve different parties, different claims, and different causes of action. However, if CNTS could obtain any recovery from the Czech courts, this may reduce the amount of damage claimed in the present proceedings (Reply Memorial, p. 50-62).
171. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the Respondent’s recourse to the principle of lis alibi pendens to be of no use, since all the other court and arbitration proceedings involve different parties and different causes of action (see 4.2 above). Therefore, no possibility exists that any other court or arbitral tribunal can render a decision similar to or inconsistent with the award which will be issued by this Arbitral Tribunal, i.e. that the Czech Republic breached or did not breach the Treaty, and is or is not liable for damages towards Mr. Lauder.
172. It is to be noted that the risk of conflicting findings is even less possible since the Claimant withdrew his two reliefs on the imposition of conditions to the License and the enforcement of such conditions, and only maintained its relief for damages. Assuming that the Arbitral Tribunal would decide that the Respondent breached the Treaty and that the Claimant is entitled to damages, such findings could not be contradicted by any other court or arbitral decision. The damages which could be granted in the parallel proceedings could only be based on the breach by CET 21 and/or Mr. Železný of their contractual obligations towards CNTS or any CME entity (decision by Czech courts or the ICC arbitral tribunal) or on the breach by the Czech Republic of its obligations towards CME pursuant to the Dutch/Czech bilateral investment treaty (decision by the parallel UNICTRAL arbitral tribunal). The only risk, as argued by the Claimant, is that damages be concurrently granted by more than one court or arbitral tribunal, in which case the amount of damages granted by the second deciding court or arbitral tribunal could take this fact into consideration when assessing the final damage.

173. There might exist the possibility of contradictory findings of this Arbitral Tribunal and the one set up to examine the claims of CME against the Czech Republic under the Dutch-Czech Bilateral Investment treaty. Obviously, the claimants in the two proceedings are not identical. However, this Arbitral Tribunal understands that the claim of Mr. Lauder giving rise to the present proceeding was commenced before the claims of CME was raised and, especially, the Respondent itself did not agree to a de facto consolidation of the two proceedings by insisting on a different arbitral tribunal to hear CME's case.
174. Finally, there is no abuse of process in the multiplicity of proceedings initiated by Mr. Lauder and the entities he controls. Even assuming that the doctrine of abuse of process could find application here, the Arbitral Tribunal is the only forum with jurisdiction to hear Mr. Lauder's claims based on the Treaty. The existence of numerous parallel proceedings does in no way affect the Arbitral Tribunal's authority and effectiveness, and does not undermine the Parties' rights. On the contrary, the present proceedings are the only place where the Parties' rights under the Treaty can be protected.
175. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal holds that the seeking of the same remedies in a different fora does not preclude it from having jurisdiction in the present proceedings.

4.4 The abuse of process

176. Besides the already addressed issue of alleged abuse of process in connection with the fact that the same remedies are sought in different fora (see 4.3 above), the Respondent argues that the Claimant commits an abuse of process (i) in pursuing his claim in the present proceedings under the Treaty whereas it is alleged in the parallel arbitration proceedings that CME has a better claim, and (ii) in not disclosing a prima facie case that the Respondent has breached the Treaty (Response, p. 48-49).

177. The Arbitral Tribunal does not see any abuse of process by the Claimant's pursuit of his claim in the present proceedings and by CME's pursuit of its claim in the parallel arbitration proceedings. As already stated (see 4.3 above), the claimants and the causes of action are not the same in the two cases. Only this Arbitral Tribunal can decide whether the Czech Republic breached the Treaty towards Mr. Lauder, and only the arbitral tribunal in the parallel Stockholm Proceedings can decide whether the Czech Republic breached the Dutch/Czech bilateral investment treaty in relation to CME. As a result, CME has neither a better - nor a worse - claim in the parallel arbitration proceedings than Mr. Lauder's claim in the present arbitration proceedings. It only has a different claim.
178. It should furthermore be noted that the Respondent refused to allow the constitution of identical arbitral tribunals to hear both treaty cases. If the same tribunal would have been appointed in both cases the procedure could have been co-ordinated with the corresponding reduction in work and time and of cost to the Parties. The possibility of conflicting decisions would also have been greatly reduced.
179. There is also no abuse of process by the Claimant's alleged non-disclosure of a prima facie case that the Respondent has breached the Treaty. No such obligation derives from the Treaty or from the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules. Even less would the absence of such disclosure result in the Arbitral Tribunal lacking jurisdiction. Furthermore, as stated hereunder, the Claimant actually disclosed more than just a prima facie case against the Respondent.
180. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal holds that there is no abuse of process on the part of the Claimant which would preclude it from having jurisdiction in the present proceedings.

4.5 The six-month waiting period

181. The Respondent argues that the Claimant did not comply with the waiting period set forth in Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty pursuant to which arbitration can be initiated only six months after the dispute arose. For the purpose of this provision, the dispute arises when the State is advised that a dispute exists. Here, the Czech Republic was first advised of Mr. Lauder's complaints under the Treaty by CNTS's and CME's letter to the Media Committee of the Czech Parliament of 2 August 1999. Therefore, the Notice of Arbitration served only 17 days later is defective, and the Arbitral Tribunal lacks jurisdiction (Statement of Defence, p. 13; Written Closing Submissions, p. 5).
182. The Claimant argues that the Respondent has waived or abandoned this objection by not having advanced it between its Statement of Defence of 31 January 2000 and its Written Closing Submissions of 30 March 2001 (Rebuttal to The Respondent's Written Closing Submission, p. 4-5).
183. Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty reads as follows:
- "At any time after six months from the date on which the dispute arose, the national or company concerned may choose to consent in writing to the submission of the dispute for settlement by conciliation or binding arbitration (...)"*
184. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that, as stated above with respect to the Respondent's other objection based on Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty (see 4.2 above), the word "dispute" in the context of the six-month waiting period shall have the same meaning as the words "investment dispute" in Article VI(1), i.e. in this case "an alleged breach of any right conferred or created by this Treaty with respect to an investment".
185. However, the waiting period does not run from the date at which the alleged breach occurred, but from the date at which the State is advised that said breach has occurred. This results from the purpose of the waiting period, which is to allow the parties to enter into good-faith negotiations before initiating arbitration.

186. Here, the Respondent's alleged violations of the Claimant's rights under the Treaty occurred during the period from February 1993, when the License was granted, until 15 March 1999, when the Media Council sent a letter to CET 21 expressing its opinion on the requirements of television broadcasting (see Summary of Summation, p. 1-9). No evidence was, however, put forward that the Czech Republic was advised of said alleged Treaty violations before CNTS's and CME's 2 August 1999 letter to the Media Committee of the Czech Parliament. Only 17 days lie between said letter and the filing of the Notice of Arbitration on 19 August 1999.
187. However, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that this requirement of a six-month waiting period of Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty is not a jurisdictional provision, i.e. a limit set to the authority of the Arbitral Tribunal to decide on the merits of the dispute, but a procedural rule that must be satisfied by the Claimant (Ethyl Corp. v. Canada, UNCITRAL June 24, 1998, 38 I.L.M. 708 (1999), paragraphs 74-88). As stated above, the purpose of this rule is to allow the parties to engage in good-faith negotiations before initiating arbitration.
188. Here, although there were only 17 days between CNTS's and CME's letter to the Media Committee of the Czech Parliament of 2 August 1999 and the filing of the Notice of Arbitration on 19 August 1999, there is no evidence that the Respondent would have accepted to enter into negotiation with Mr. Lauder or with any of the entities he controlled and which were involved in the dispute during the waiting period. On the contrary, the Media Council did not react at all to CNTS's letter of 13 August 1999 requesting that CNTS and CET 21 be invited to the Media Council's ordinary session to be held on 17 August 1999 in order to try to find a solution to their dispute (Exhibit C43).
189. Furthermore, the Respondent did not propose to engage in negotiations with the Claimant following the latter's statement in his Notice of Consent of 19 August 1999, filed together with the Notice of Arbitration, that he remained "open to any good faith efforts by the Czech Republic to remedy this situation". Had the Respondent been willing to engage in negotiations with the Claimant, in the spirit of Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty, it would have had plenty of opportunities to do so during the six months after the 19 August 1999 Notice of Arbitration.

190. To insist that the arbitration proceedings cannot be commenced until 6 months after the 19 August 1999 Notice of Arbitration would, in the circumstances of this case, amount to an unnecessary, overly formalistic approach which would not serve to protect any legitimate interests of the Parties.
191. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal holds that the requirement of the six-month waiting period in Article VI(3)(a) of the Treaty does not preclude it from having jurisdiction in the present proceedings.

5. Findings

5.1 Introduction

192. The Claimant alleges that the Respondent, through the Media Council actions, has breached five independent obligations under the Treaty within three separate time periods.
193. The five obligations are the followings:
- a) the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures;
  - b) the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment;
  - c) the obligation to provide full protection and security;
  - d) the obligation of treatment in accordance with general principles of international law;
  - e) the obligation not to expropriate unlawfully (Reply Memorial, p. 62; Summary of Summation, p. 13-14).
194. The three time periods are the followings:
- a) the 1993-1994 period;
  - b) the 1996-1997 period;
  - c) the 1998-1999 period (see Mr. Kiernan's oral opening submission, 5 March 2001, p. 18).

195. The Arbitral Tribunal feels it appropriate to address the issues in the following order:
- a) the obligation not to expropriate unlawfully with respect to all time periods;
  - b) the obligation of treatment in accordance with the general principles of international law with respect to all time periods;
  - c) all remaining alleged violations of the Treaty within the 1992-1993 time period;
  - d) all remaining alleged violations of the Treaty within the 1994-1997 and 1998-1999 time periods.

5.2 The obligation not to expropriate unlawfully (all time periods)

196. The Claimant alleges that the Media Council committed unlawful expropriation by instituting administrative proceedings against CNTS in 1996 and by other actions that forced CNTS to amend the MOA, as well as by the accumulation of actions and inactions over the period from 1996 through 1999 to which the Claimant never consented voluntarily or otherwise. The Claimant precisely referred to (i) the 1996 administrative and criminal proceedings, (ii) the indication by the Media Council in 1998 and thereafter that it did not accept an exclusive business relationship between CET 21 and CNTS, coupled with the Media Council's continued pressures to restructure said relationship, (iii) the Media Council's 15 March 1999 letter to CET 21, and (iv) the Media Council's refusal to take action against CET 21 when the latter severed all dealings with CNTS (Reply Memorial, p. 73-77).
197. The Claimant argues that the Treaty protects foreign investors from direct and indirect expropriation, i.e. not only from the taking of tangible property, but also from measures tantamount to expropriation. Expropriation includes interference by the State in the use of property or with the enjoyment of its benefits, even if legal title to the property is not affected. There is even heightened protection against deprivations resulting from regulatory actions when the acquired rights have obtained legal approval on which investors justifiably rely. The intent of the State to deprive the investor of property is not a necessary element of expropriation. There is no regulatory exception (Memorial, p. 50-52; Reply Memorial, p. 63-73).

198. The Respondent argues that, although the Treaty includes both direct and indirect forms of expropriation, interference with property rights has to be so complete as to amount to a taking of those rights. Detrimental effect on the economic value of property is not sufficient. Parties to the Treaty are not liable for economic injury that is the consequence of bona fide regulation within the accepted police powers of the State. The Respondent asserts that the lawful commencement of administrative proceedings against CNTS in 1996 in respect of a suspected violation of the law did not constitute expropriation. Furthermore, there is no evidence that the Media Council threatened to revoke the License. In addition, CNTS and/or Mr. Lauder made no mention of expropriation before the Notice of Arbitration was filed on 19 August 1999. Finally, Mr. Lauder failed to prove that the Czech Republic caused CET 21 to withdraw from its contractual relationship with CNTS, the acts of the latter's contractual counter-party not constituting expropriation by the State (Response, p. 50-55; Written Closing Submissions, p. 9-10).

199. Article III(1) of the Treaty provides:

"Investments shall not be expropriated or nationalized either directly or indirectly through measures tantamount to expropriation or nationalization ("expropriation") except for a public purpose; in accordance with due process of law; in a nondiscriminatory manner; upon payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation; and in accordance with the general principles or treatment provided for in Article II(2) ".

200. The Bilateral Investment Treaties (hereinafter: "BITs") generally do not define the term of expropriation and nationalization, or any of the other terms denoting similar measures of forced dispossession ("dispossession", "taking", "deprivation", or "privation"). Furthermore, the practice shows that although the various terms may be used either alone or in combination, most often no distinctions have been attempted between the general concept of dispossession and the specific forms thereof. In general, expropriation means the coercive appropriation by the State of private property, usually by means of individual administrative measures. Nationalization involves large-scale takings on the basis of an executive or legislative act for the purpose of transferring property or interests into the public domain. The concept of indirect (or “de facto”, or “creeping”) expropriation is not clearly defined. Indirect expropriation or nationalization is a measure that does not involve an overt taking, but that effectively neutralizes the enjoyment of the property. It is generally accepted that a wide variety of measures are susceptible to lead to indirect expropriation, and each case is therefore to be decided on the basis of its attending circumstances (Rudolf Dolzer & Margrete Stevens, Bilateral Investment Treaties, p. 98-100 (1995); Georgio Sacerdoti, Bilateral Treaties and Multilateral Instruments on Investment Protection, 379-382 (1997)). The European Court of Human Rights in Mellacher and Others v. Austria (1989 Eur.Ct.H.R. (ser. A, No. 169)), held that a “formal” expropriation is a measure aimed at a “transfer of property”, while a “de facto” expropriation occurs when a State deprives the owner of his “right to use, let or sell (his) property”.

201. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that the Respondent did not take any measure of, or tantamount to, expropriation of the Claimant’s property rights within any of the time periods, since there was no direct or indirect interference by the Czech Republic in the use of Mr. Lauder’s property or with the enjoyment of its benefits.

202. The Claimant has indeed not brought sufficient evidence that any measure or action taken by the Czech Republic would have had the effect of transferring his property or of depriving him of his rights to use his property or even of interfering with his property rights. All property rights of the Claimant were actually fully maintained until the contractual relationship between CET 21 and CNTS was terminated by the former. It is at that time, and at that time only, that Mr. Lauder’s property rights, i.e. the use of the benefits of the License by CNTS, were affected. Up to that time, CNTS had been in a position to fully enjoy the economic benefits of the License granted to CET 21, even if the nature of the legal relationships between the two companies had changed over the time. Because the Claimant has not alleged – and even less proved – that the action which seriously interfered with the Claimants property rights, i.e. CET 21’s decision to withdraw from the 1997 Agreement on 5 August 1999, was one of the State, and not one of a private entity completely independent of the State, there can be no expropriation under the Treaty.

203. In addition, even assuming that the actions taken by the Media Council in the period from 1996 through 1999 had the effect of depriving the Claimant of his property rights, such actions would not amount to an appropriation - or the equivalent - by the State, since it did not benefit the Czech Republic or any person or entity related thereto, and was not taken for any public purpose. It only benefited CET 21, a independent private entity owned by private individuals.
204. Finally, the Claimant, directly or through CNTS or any other entity controlled by himself, did not complain of any action taken by the Media Council and which allegedly constituted an expropriation, or a measure tantamount to expropriation, before CME's and CNTS's letter to the Czech Parliament of 2 August 1999, after Mr. Železný had been dismissed of his functions with CNTS and at a time of great tensions between CNTS and CET 21. This failure by the Claimant to invoke the Treaty or to advance any violation of the obligations of the Czech Republic when the now disputed actions were taken, tends to show that no violations of his property rights were committed at that time.

5.3 The obligation of treatment in accordance with general principles of international law (all time periods)

205. The Claimant alleges that the Media Council violated its obligations arising under international law when it withdrew its prior approval of CNTS's activities, and by committing "the same wrongs that establish its breach of other individual protections under the Treaty" (Reply Memorial, p. 89; Mr. Kiernan's oral closing submissions, p. 177-178).
206. The Claimant argues that the general principles of international law include, among others, a variant of pacta sunt servanda, the protection of acquired rights, the treatment of foreign investment in good faith, the principle of estoppel, and recognized standards relating to the protection of property. These general standards refer exclusively to international law, to the exclusion of domestic law (Reply Memorial, p. 88-89; Mr. Kiernan's oral closing submissions, p. 177-178).

207. The Respondent argues that the Claimant has not identified any obligation of treatment in accordance with general principles of international law which is distinct to the other obligations (Written Closing Submissions, p. 14).
208. Article II(2)(a) of the Treaty provides that "[i]nvestment (...) shall in no case be accorded treatment less than that which conforms to principles of international law".
209. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the Claimant has not identified any specific obligation of international law which would provide the foreign investor with a broader protection than the other four Treaty obligations on which he otherwise relies. In particular, the Claimant does not allege that either the variant of the principle pacta sunt servanda, which would create under certain circumstances a sui generis investor-state relationship, or the general obligation of good faith goes further in the protection of the foreign investor than the Respondent's obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment (see below 5.5.3) or the Respondent's obligation to provide full protection and security (see below 5.5.4). On the contrary, by stating that the Respondent's alleged "breach of the obligation to adhere to general international law arises from the same wrongs that establish its breach of other individual protections under the Treaty", the Claimant himself recognizes that there is no action or inaction by the Czech Republic which could amount exclusively to a violation of the obligation of treatment in accordance with general principles of international law, without also constituting a violation of other obligations under the Treaty.
210. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal will refer to the developments made in the other sections of the present award.

5.4 The 1992-1993 time period

5.4.1 Introduction

211. Because the Claimant, in his more general statement about the "totality of other actions and inactions by the Media Council", expressly refers to the rights provided to

CNTS, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that his allegation of unfair and inequitable treatment does not cover the events leading to the creation of CNTS and the replacement of the Media Council, i.e. the first time period in 1993-1994, but includes only the second and third time periods in 1996-1997 and 1998-1999.

212. With respect to the separate obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment, the Claimant alleged that the Respondent breached said obligation through the Media Council's reversal of critical prior approvals, i.e. when the Media Council directed in 1996 the removal in the MOA of the provision giving CNTS the exclusive right to use, benefit from and maintain the License, and through its hostile conduct towards CNTS, i.e. the totality of other actions and inactions by the Media Council that undermined the rights which had been provided to CNTS (Reply Memorial, p. 77-83; Summary of Summation, p. 13).
213. The only identified alleged violation of specific Treaty obligations within the 1992-1994 time period concerns the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures. Such measures occurred when the Media Council insisted on CEDC not becoming a direct shareholder of CET 21 in 1993 (Reply Memorial, p. 87; Mr. Kiernan's oral closing submissions, 12 March 2001, p. 175).

5.4.2 The prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures

214. The Claimant alleges that the Respondent took arbitrary and discriminatory measures when the Media Council insisted in 1993 on CEDC not becoming a direct shareholder of CET 21. The Claimant argues that the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures must be inferred from the circumstances. It is not necessary that a measure be founded on a violation of domestic law for such a measure to be arbitrary and/or discriminatory. Arbitrary action may actually include regulatory actions without good-faith governmental purpose (Memorial, p. 54; Reply Memorial, p. 85-88; Mr. Kiernan's closing submissions, Transcript of 12 March 2001, p. 175-176; Summary of Summation, p. 14).

215. The Respondent argues that Article II(2)(b) of the Treaty, in comparison with Article II(1), requires the Claimant to prove that the Respondent's conduct was both arbitrary and discriminatory. Only an illegal act under domestic law can be - but is not necessarily - arbitrary, and the Claimant did not even prove that the Czech Republic behaved unlawfully. For an act to constitute discrimination, it must first result in actual injury and, second, it must be done with the intention to harm the aggrieved party. In particular, there is no discrimination in the requirement that foreign investors invest in the State through the medium of a locally-incorporated company, since it is only a regulation on how foreign investment is to be organized. Here, the Media Council awarded the License on the precise terms of CET 21's application, pursuant to which CEDC would become a minor shareholder in CET 21. The CNTS structure was proposed by CEDC (Response, p. 56-57; Written Closing Submissions, p. 12-13).

216. Article II(2)(b) of the Treaty provides:

“Neither Party shall in any way impair by arbitrary and discriminatory measures the management, operation, maintenance, use, enjoyment, acquisition, expansion, or disposal of investment. For the purpose of dispute resolution under Articles VI and VII, a measure may be arbitrary and discriminatory notwithstanding the fact that a party has had or has exercised the opportunity to review such measure in the courts or administrative tribunals of a Party”.

217. Article II(1) of the Treaty reads as follows:

“Each Party shall permit and treat investment, and activities associated therewith, on a nondiscriminatory basis, subject to the right of each Party to make or maintain exceptions falling within one of the sectors or matters listed in the Annex to this Treaty. (...)”.

218. Clause 3 of the Annex to the Treaty provides:

“Consistent with Article II, paragraph 1, the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic reserves the right to make or maintain limited exceptions to national treatment in the sectors or matters it has indicated below:

ownership of real property; and insurance".

219. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that a violation of Article II(2)(b) of the Treaty requires both an arbitrary and a discriminatory measure by the State. It first results from the plain wording of the provision, which uses the word "and" instead of the word "or". It then results from the existence of Article II(1) of the Treaty, which sets forth the prohibition of any discriminatory treatment of investment, except in the sectors or matters expressly listed in the Annex to the Treaty. If Article II(2)(b) prohibited only arbitrary or discriminatory measures, it would be partially redundant to the prohibition of discriminatory measure set forth in Article II(1).
220. A discriminatory measure is defined in Article II(1) and the Clause 3 of the Annex to the Treaty. It is one that fails to provide the foreign investment with treatment at least as favorable as the treatment of domestic investment ("national treatment": see Annex 3 to the Treaty). For a measure to be discriminatory, it does not need to violate domestic law, since domestic law can contain a provision that is discriminatory towards foreign investment, or can lack a provision prohibiting the discrimination of foreign investment. It is only in the sectors or matters for which it has reserved the right to make or maintain an exception in the Annex to the Treaty that the State may treat foreign investment less favorably than domestic investment. Due to the fact that the Czech Republic has not made any reserve in the matter of broadcasting television, contrary to the reserve made by the United States of America in the matter of "ownership and operation of broadcast or common carrier radio and television stations" (Clause 1 of the Annex to the Treaty; Exhibits R1 and C1), the Czech Republic is bound to provide U.S. investment in the field of broadcasting with a treatment at least as favorable as Czech investment.
221. The Treaty does not define an arbitrary measure. According to Black's Law Dictionary, arbitrary means "depending on individual discretion; (...) founded on prejudice or preference rather than on reason or fact" (Black's Law Dictionary 100 (7th ed. 1999)).

5.4.2.1 CEDC not becoming a shareholder in CET 21

222. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that the Czech Republic took a discriminatory and arbitrary measure against Mr. Lauder in violation of Article II(2)(b) of the Treaty when the Media Council, after having accepted the idea of a direct investment in CET 21 by CEDC , a company which Mr. Lauder controlled, eventually did not allow such investment, and required that a third company, CNTS, be created.
223. There is clear evidence that CEDC intended to acquire a direct participation in CET 21, should the latter be awarded the License. The draft “Terms of Agreement” prepared by CEDC and CET 21 in August 1992 (Exhibit C139) as well as the final version of this document signed by both companies in January 1993 (Exhibit C61) expressly referred to “an equity investment in CET 21” from CEDC. The document named “Project of an Independent Television Station” drafted by CET 21 in September 1992 stated that CEDC is “a direct participant in CET 21's application for the license” (Exhibit C9).
224. There is also clear evidence that the Media Council was aware of such intention. The Minutes of the preliminary hearings held on 21 December 1992 by the Media Council with the various bidders for TV Nova stated, as regards CET 21, that “extensive share [is] reserved for foreign capital; (...) direct capital share, not credit”(Exhibit R58). The Minutes of the further preliminary hearings held on 22 January 1993 provided that “[t]he participation of foreign capital is expected” and that “the combination of domestic and foreign capital is important, necessity of safeguard - diversification of the investments sources” (Exhibit C64). The Minutes of the session of the Media Council of 30 January 1993, where the decision to award the License to CET 21 was made, stated some member’s of the Media Council’s words that “(...) it is very significant that this is a business which can not be financed only by credit”, “the Czech and foreign capital in CET 21 [is] positive”, and it is “positive in that there is a stabilisation factor, as far as foreign capital and its involvement is concerned” (statements of Messrs. Brož and Pýcha; Exhibit R54).

225. The above mentioned statements also clearly indicate that the Media Council had accepted, and even was satisfied with, the fact that CEDC would be a shareholder of CET 21. As a result, this Tribunal Arbitral considers that there can be no doubt that when the Media Council informed CET 21 in its letter of 30 January 1993 (Exhibit R9) and the public in its press release of the same day (Exhibit C11) that the License had been granted to CET 21 and that "[a] direct participant in the application is the international corporation CEDC", the Media Council agreed and approved meant that CEDC would be a shareholder of CET 21.
226. Even assuming that the Media Council thought of another form of participation of CEDC at the time it made the decision to award the License to CET 21, CEDC could reasonably believe that its project of becoming a shareholder in CET 21 had been properly understood and accepted by the Media Council. At no time until the decision was made did the Media Council express any misunderstanding or dissatisfaction with such project.
227. The various statements of the members and staff of the Media Council in the beginning of 1993 submitted in the present proceedings, the immediate rising of strong political opposition to the Media Council's choice in favor of CET 21, and the overall circumstances of the case show that the Media Council realized immediately after the decision on the award of the License had been made that it had to bring some modifications to the project of CET 21 and CEDC. In particular, the Media Council could no longer accept CEDC as a shareholder of CET 21, as it became clear from the political reactions to the recent decision to award the License to CET 21 that even stronger political opposition would arise, opening the way for an attack on the entire selection process. The Media Council therefore gave CET 21 and CEDC the task of proposing an acceptable structure (declaration of Mrs. Landová of 5 December 2000, p. 6-7; declaration of Mr. Brož of 5 December 2000, p. 2-3; declaration of Mr. Pýcha of 21 December 2000, p. 1-3; Exhibits R83, C144 and C145).
228. As a result, CET 21 and CEDC prepared a document named "Overall Structure of a New Czech Commercial Television Entity" pursuant to which CET 21 and CEDC would jointly create a new Czech company which would have the exclusive use of the License. The shareholders of the new company would be CET 21, CEDC and CSB, the last two of them providing the necessary funds. There was no mention anymore of any direct participation of CEDC in CET 21 (Exhibits C14 and C149). After some modifications were made at the request of the director of the Programming and Monitoring Section of the Media Council, the final version of the document was submitted to the Media Council on February 5, 1993 (Exhibits C150 and R55). On the basis of this document, the Media Council rendered its decision to award the License to CET 21, which stated that CEDC was a "contractual partner" of CET 21 (Exhibits R10 and C16).

229. The 1997 Report of the Media Council to the Czech Parliament actually provides a good summary of the actions and their motivations which took place between 30 January and 9 February 1993: "When granting the license to the Company CET 21, for fear that a majority share of foreign capital in the license holder's Company might impact the independence of full-format broadcasts, the Council assumed a configuration that separates the investor from the license holder himself. That is how an agreement came into existence (upon a series of remarks from the Council) by which the Company CNTS was established the majority owner of which is CEDC/CME".
230. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that the Media Council decision to move from a direct participation by CEDC, a German company controlled by Mr. Lauder, an American citizen, to a contractual relationship providing for the creation of a third company amounted to an arbitrary and discriminatory measure.
231. The measure was discriminatory because it provided the foreign investment with a treatment less favorable than domestic investment. It indeed results from the above mentioned circumstances that the Media Council changed its mind because of its fear that the strong and rising political opposition to the granting of the License to an entity with significant foreign capital could lead to an attack on the entire selection process. It is probable that if CEDC had been a Czech investor, there would have been no political outcry, and the original plan of becoming a shareholder in CET 21 could have been carried out.

232. The measure was arbitrary because it was not founded on reason or fact, nor on the law which expressly accepted "applications from companies with foreign equity participation" (Exhibit R2), but on mere fear reflecting national preference.
233. However, there is no single piece of evidence that CEDC opposed, or protested against, or even less fought against, this measure. On the contrary, it results from the circumstances that CEDC immediately proposed a new structure in which it would become a contractual partner of, rather than a shareholder in, CET 21. CEDC and its successor CME actually accepted the measure without reservation for the next six years, as long as it was able to conduct the joint venture profitably. It is only in the context of the present proceedings, after CET 21 had terminated the contractual relationship with CNTS, which was by that time fully controlled by CME, that CME complained about the measure. Even the Notice of Arbitration did not refer to the measure, which was first mentioned in the Memorial (p. 1-2).
234. The question therefore arises if the breach by the Respondent of its Treaty obligations gives rise to any damages to be paid to the Claimant. It is most probable that if in 1993 Mr. Lauder's investment in the Czech television could have been made directly in CET 21, the Licence holder, the possible breach of any exclusive agreements in 1999 could not have occurred in the way it did. Even if the breach therefore constitutes one of several "sine qua non" acts, this alone is not sufficient. In order to come to a finding of a compensable damage it is also necessary that there existed no intervening cause for the damage. In our case the Claimant therefore has to show that the last, direct act, the immediate cause, namely the termination by CET 21 on 5 August 1999 (and the preceding conclusions by CET 21 of service agreements with other service providers) did not become a superseding cause and thereby the proximate cause. In other words, the Claimant has to show that the acts of CET 21 were not so unexpected and so substantial as to have to be held to have superseded the initial cause and therefore become the main cause of the ultimate harm. This the Claimant has not shown. First of all, the Claimant itself in 1993 did not protest against the change imposed by the Media Council. Furthermore, it was completely impossible at that time to envisage that the Claimant itself would actively participate in all those later steps which allowed Mr. Železný to disengage himself from CNTS and to acquire control of CET 21 in order to be able to pursue his own interests without having to rely on CME. These acts of CET 21, and through it by Mr. Železný, are the real cause for the damage which apparently has been inflicted to the Claimant.

235. The arbitrary and discriminatory breach by the Respondent of its Treaty obligations constituted a violation of the Treaty. The alleged harm was, however, caused in 1999 by the acts of CET 21, controlled by Mr. Železný. The 1993 breach of the Treaty was too remote to qualify as a relevant cause for the harm caused. A finding on damages due to the Claimant by the Respondent would therefore not be appropriate.

5.5 The 1994-1997 and 1998-1999 time periods

5.5.1 Introduction

236. Within the 1994-1997 and 1998-1999 time periods, the Claimant alleges that the Respondent violated all five obligations under the Treaty (see above 5.1). As the Arbitral Tribunal has already addressed the alleged violations of the obligation not to expropriate unlawfully (see above 5.2) and of the obligation of treatment in accordance with general principles of international law (see above 5.3) with respect to all time periods, it will address the three other alleged violations in the context of the events which occurred in the period from 1994 through 1999, i.e.:
- a) the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures;
  - b) the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment;
  - c) the obligation to provide full protection and security (Reply Memorial, p. 62-89; Summary of Summation, p. 13-14).

5.5.2 The prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures

237. The Claimant alleges that the Respondent took arbitrary and discriminatory measures (i) when the Czech Parliament replaced the Media Council in 1994, (ii) when the Media Council initiated in 1996 the administrative proceedings against CNTS for unauthorized television broadcasting, (iii) when the Media Council stated in its 1996 and 1998 reports that the target of its investigations was CNTS, and that the others did not receive any attention: (iv) through ongoing efforts to eliminate the original structure between CET 21 and CNTS in favor of non-exclusive contractual arrangements; (v) by statements of a Media Council's member, Mr. Štěpánek, that CNTS was promoting flight of Czech capital abroad; and (vi) when Mr. Josefík admitted that it did not even occur to him to consider the interest of foreign investor after Mr. Železný's request of March 2, 1999 (Reply Memorial, p. 87-88; Mr. Kiernan's closing submissions, Transcript of 12 March 2001, p. 175-176).

238. The Respondent mainly alleges that the Media Council did not discriminate in the treatment of the Claimant's investment. The administrative proceedings were initiated because there were objective grounds for suspecting a breach of the law, especially when similar proceedings were commenced against others in a similar situation. Furthermore that the existence of anti-American feelings within the Czech Republic was the result of a democratic freedom of expression (Response, p. 56-57; Written Closing Submissions, p. 12-14).
239. As regards the content of the prohibition against discriminatory and arbitrary measures, the Arbitral Tribunal refers to the developments made in the context of the 1992-1993 time period (see above 5.4.2).

5.5.2.1 The replacement of the Media Council

240. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that the replacement of the Media Council in 1994 did not amount to an arbitrary and discriminatory measure of the Czech Republic.
241. There is indeed no evidence that this replacement was in any direct relation to the involvement of Mr. Lauder in TV Nova, nor that it constituted in any manner a discriminatory and arbitrary measure vis-a-vis the Claimant and his investment in CNTS.

242. Furthermore, any country is entitled to organize its own organs as it pleases as long as this does not result in a discriminatory and arbitrary measure against a foreign investor, protected by the investment Treaty.
243. The replacement of the Media Council in 1994 as such did not cause any harm to Mr. Lauder's investment in the Czech Republic.

5.5.2.2 The Media Council's 1996 and 1998 reports, and Messrs. Štěpánek 's and Josefik's statements

244. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that the Claimant's allegations of discriminatory and arbitrary measures with respect to the Media Council statements in its 1996 and 1998 reports that the target of its efforts was CNTS; to Mr. Štěpánek's statements that CNTS was promoting flight of Czech capital abroad; and to Mr. Josefik admission that it did not even occur to him to consider the interest of foreign investor after Mr. Železný's request of 2 March 1999, are clearly unfounded for similar reasons. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal will examine these three allegations together.
245. First, the Media Council alleged statement in its 1996 and 1998 reports that its target effort was CNTS does not constitute a "measure" under the Treaty. Such a statement did indeed not have any direct effect on the Claimant's investment, and it is not alleged that it had such an effect. In the light most favorable to the Claimant, it may only have been evidence of the Media Council's intent to treat CNTS as a target in the context of a measure contemporaneously taken by the Media Council. Therefore, such a statement in itself cannot amount to an arbitrary and discriminatory measure.
246. Then, the alleged statements of Mr. Štěpánek that CNTS was promoting flight of Czech capital abroad does not constitute a "measure" under the Treaty either. Furthermore, a statement by a member of the Media Council is not attributable as such to the Media Council, and to the Czech Republic. On the contrary, it must be considered as a personal opinion of said member, which may or may not reflect the Media Council's opinion on the subject. Therefore, it cannot amount to an arbitrary and discriminatory measure. It apparently also did not occur to the Claimant that this alleged measure would constitute a violation of the Treaty at the time the statement was made, as this allegation of a violation of the Treaty was raised for the first time in the course of the present arbitration proceedings.

247. Finally, the alleged admission by Mr. Josefík that it did not even occur to him to consider the interest of foreign investor after Mr. Železný's request of 2 March 1999 is also a personal statement, and, as such, does not constitute a "measure" under the Treaty. In addition, it is not attributable to the Czech Republic. Therefore, it cannot amount to an arbitrary and discriminatory measure. Apparently it did also not occur to the Claimant until the August 2, 1999 letter of CNTS and CME (Exhibit C41)!

5.5.2.3 The initiation of the administrative proceedings

248. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that the initiation in 1996 of the administrative proceedings against CNTS for unauthorized television broadcasting did not constitute an arbitrary and discriminatory measure of the Czech Republic.

249. There is indeed sufficient evidence that the Media Council thought – or could think – that CNTS was violating the Media Law. The Media Council had indeed received complaints from the public on the content of the programs of TV Nova. As regulatory body for radio and television broadcasting, it was responsible, among other duties, for ensuring the observance of the Media Law (Article 16(2)).

250. Article 3(l) of the Media Law, as amended with effect on 1 January 1996, set forth that a broadcasting operator was one who had "acquired authorization to broadcasting on the basis of law (a "broadcaster by law") or being granted a license under this Act (a "licensed broadcaster") or by registration under this Act (a "registered broadcaster")". According to Article 2(1)(a), broadcasting "means dissemination of program services or pictures and sound information by transmitters, cable systems, satellites and other means intended to be received by the public" (Exhibit R3).

251. Here, the License had been granted to CET 21, and not to CNTS (Exhibits R10 and C16). CNTS actually did not enter into any of the three categories of broadcaster under Article 3(1) of the Media Law (broadcaster by law, licensed broadcaster and registered broadcaster).
252. Several objective facts existed which could cast the doubt on whether CET 21 or CNTS was actually operating the broadcasting of TV Nova. For instance, CNTS's entry into the Commercial Registry stated that its business activity was "operating television broadcasting on the basis of the license no. 001/1003" (Exhibits R10 and C16). CNTS had also directly entered into agreements with other companies for the dissemination of broadcasting. In addition, Mr. Železný held at that time the position equivalent to that of a Chief Operating Officer of both companies. Finally, most activities in connection with TV Nova were performed from CNTS's large premises in Prague with an important staff, whereas CET 21 had a much smaller organization.
253. All these facts lead to a confusion of the roles actually played by CNTS and CET 21, and the Media Council could legitimately fear that a situation had arisen where there had been a de facto transfer of the License from CET 21 to CNTS.
254. Furthermore, the Media Council, upon its request, had been provided with an expert opinion from Mr. Jan Bárta from the State and Law Institute of the Academy of Science of the Czech Republic stating that the License was issued to CET 21, and therefore this company had to itself operate the broadcasting activities. Assuming that broadcasting was actually operated by CNTS, administrative proceedings to impose a fine could be initiated against the latter (Exhibits C27 and R14). In this respect, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that this opinion was issued by the State and Law Institute of the Academy of Science of the Czech Republic and not only by Mr. Bárta personally, since the Media Council's letter requesting the opinion had been sent to Mr. Bárta at the Institute, and the opinion was issued on the Institute's letterhead.
255. The commencement of the administrative proceedings against CNTS for alleged unauthorized broadcasting constituted the normal exercise of the regulatory duties of the Media Council. Therefore, this measure was not arbitrary.

256. In addition, administrative proceedings for unauthorized broadcasting were not only initiated against CNTS, a company controlled by a foreign investor, but also against two other companies, Premiera TV a.s. and Radio Alfa a.s. (Exhibits R37 and C22). Although Radio Alfa was also controlled by CME in 1996 and thus can equally be qualified as a foreign investor, Premiera TV was controlled by a domestic investor.
257. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the Media Council decision to initiate administrative proceedings against CNTS was objectively not discriminatory, since the same measure was taken against Premiera TV, which was controlled by a domestic investor. The foreign investment of Mr. Lauder was therefore not provided a treatment less favourable than the domestic investment controlling Premiera TV. In this respect, the Arbitral Tribunal is of the opinion that the Claimant's allegation that the consequences of the administrative proceedings were less serious for Premiera TV than for CNTS is not relevant, because the measure itself is the same in both cases, i.e. the existence of administrative proceedings for unauthorized broadcasting. Discrimination can only occur when the measure against foreign investment and the measure against domestic investment are of a different nature, and the former is less favourable than the latter.
258. Therefore, the initiation of the administrative proceedings against CNTS was also not discriminatory.
259. This being said, the Arbitral Tribunal notes that neither CNTS nor CME raised any objection at the time the administrative proceedings were initiated that this action was in violation of any Czech law let alone that they violated the Treaty or any obligation of the Czech Republic.

5.5.2.4 The Media Council's ongoing efforts to eliminate the original structure between CET 21 and CNTS

260. The Arbitral Tribunal also considers that the alleged ongoing efforts by the Media Council to eliminate the original structure between CET 21 and CNTS in favor of non-exclusive contractual arrangements did not constitute an arbitrary and discriminatory measure of the Czech Republic.

261. It is first to be noted that this allegation is rather vague. The Arbitral Tribunal understands that the alleged ongoing efforts to eliminate the original structure between CET 21 and CNTS refer both to the changes in their contractual relationships, i.e. the amendment to the MOA and the conclusion of the various agreements, and to the issuance by the Media Council of its 15 March 1999 letter, in response to CET 21's request of 3 March 1999 (Exhibit C34).
262. For the sake of clarity, the Arbitral Tribunal will examine these two sets of facts separately.

5.5.2.4.1 The changes to the contractual relationships between CET 21 and CNTS

263. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the Media Council's actions leading to the changes to the MOA and the conclusion of the various agreements between CET 21 and CNTS did not constitute arbitrary and discriminatory measures.
264. The Arbitral Tribunal is of the opinion that the main reason for the Media Council to direct CME, CET 21 and CNTS to bring some modifications to their legal relationships was the same as the ground for initiating the administrative proceedings against CNTS for unauthorized broadcasting, i.e. the fear that the unclear legal and factual situation could actually amount to a de facto transfer of the License from CET 21 to CNTS, in violation of the Media Law.
265. Article 1.4.1(a) of the original MOA stated that "CET shall contribute to the Company unconditionally, unequivocally, and on an exclusive basis the right to use, exploit and maintain the License held by CET". The MOA did not contain any definition of the words "use, exploit and maintain", which remained open for interpretation.

266. This legal uncertainty, reinforced by the doubts about the factual allocation of responsibilities between CET 21 and CNTS, led the Media Council to ask the two companies to enter into a service contract setting forth their respective roles in the operation of TV Nova. This process was initiated at the meeting between the Media Council and CET 21 of 13 March 1996. The first conclusion of this meeting was that "[l]awyers of the Council and CET 21 will prepare the first version of a contract on provision of performances and services between CET 21 and CNTS (...)" (Exhibit C84).
267. As a result, CET 21 and CNTS concluded the May 1996 Agreement. This agreement expressly set forth in the preamble that its "purpose (...) is to specify the mutual rights and mutual obligations which arise to CET 21 as the party making and CNTS as the party accepting a contribution made under the memorandum of association of May 4, 1993, by which CNTS was established. The memorandum of association is not changed by this agreement". The agreement stated that CNTS had the authorization to "arrange" the television broadcasting operated on the basis of the License (Article 2(1); Exhibit R17).
268. The amendment to the MOA in November 1996 (Exhibit C59), as well as the conclusions of the October 1996 Agreement (Exhibit R21) and of the 1997 Agreement (Exhibits C29 and R22), were further steps of the same process consisting in specifying the legal relationship between CET 21, CME and CNTS in order to ensure the creation of a clear situation in observance of the Media Law.
269. In this respect, the October 1996 Agreement was mainly similar to the May 1996 Agreement, except for the new Article 1(3) providing that said agreement "does not affect the exclusive liability of CET 21 for the programming" under the Media Law. The amended Article 1.4.1(a) of the MOA stated that "the Company is granted the unconditional, irrevocable, and exclusive right to use and maintain the know-how and make it the subject of profit to the Company, in connection with the License, its maintenance, and protection". Finally, the 1997 Agreement further specified CNTS's activities by listing the scope of its business (Article 1(3)), and expressly stated that the contracts on the provision of services would be concluded by CNTS on behalf of CET 21 (Article 5(1) and (2)).

270. As they were based on an objective ground, i.e. the efforts to create a clear legal situation in compliance with the Media Law, and as there is no sufficient evidence that they were specifically targeted against foreign investment, the Media Council's actions leading to the changes to the MOA and the conclusion of the various agreements between CET 21 and CNTS did not constitute arbitrary and discriminatory measures.
271. This being said, neither CNTS nor CME raised any objections to this process to the Media Council. On the contrary, both CET 21 and CNTS fully collaborated. The letter sent by both companies to the Media Council on 4 October 1996 indeed constituted a proposal to take several steps "(...) for how to best and most quickly meet the parliamentary commission's demands and thus how to amicably resolve the prolonged differences which arose in addressing the legal situation concerning the arrangement of legal relationships between [CNTS] and CET 21 s.r.o., as well as around the cancellation of license conditions (...)" (Exhibit R19). These steps were, among others, the above mentioned amendment to the MOA and conclusion of the agreements between CET 21 and CNTS.
272. This collaboration took place despite the CME's awareness that their legal situation vis-à-vis CET 21 might be affected. In an memorandum dated 15 May 1996, Mrs. DeBruce of CME indeed expressed her concern with respect to the contemplated amendment to the MOA. All proposed amendments to the MOA and contracts between CET 21 and CNTS should be reviewed by legal counsel prior to be entered into (Exhibit C111).
273. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal holds that the Claimant acquiesced to the Media Council's above mentioned actions, and is in any event barred from making a claim deriving therefrom.
274. Finally, the Arbitral Tribunal notes that no sufficient evidence was offered that the damage claimed by Mr. Lauder in the present arbitration proceedings, i.e. the termination of the contractual relationship between CET 21 and CNTS on 5 August 1999 on the initiative of the former, was caused by the insistence of the Media Council on the respect of the Media Law in 1996 and 1997. On the contrary, such damage was the direct result of Mr. Železný's own behavior, which was not backed in 1996 or 1997 by the Media Council or any other organ of the Respondent. Regarding further the question of causality between the alleged acts of the Media Council and the damage claimed see above § 234 and 235.

5.5.2.4.2 The 15 March 1999 opinion of the Media Council

275. The Claimant especially draws the attention of the Arbitral Tribunal to the visit by Mr. Železný to the Media Council on 2 March 1999 (R97), the following letter of CET 21, signed by Mr. Železný to the Media Council on 3 March 1999 (C33) and the answer to the Media Council by its Chairman Josef Josefík of 15 March 1999, addressed to Mr. Železný “CEO of TV NOVA and Executive Director of CET 21” (C34). According to these documents, and especially the description of the oral discussion which took place between Mr. Železný and the Media Council, it is clear that the Media Council was informed of the differences between Mr. Železný as master of CET 21 and CNTS. It was clear that Mr. Železný wanted the support of the Media Council in his struggle to free CET 21, and therefore himself, from the restrictions of the arrangements with CNTS. Although not in all points but at least in one of the key issues, namely the exclusive nature of the agreements between CET 21 and CNTS, the Media Council clearly expressed its opinion that in the context of television broadcasting the “business relations between the operator of broadcasting and service organizations are built on a non-exclusive basis.”
276. This view would seem to be contrary to what the 1996 Agreements, which were discussed and agreed with the Media Council in 1996, with the very active participation of Mr. Železný, then wearing the two hats of CEO of both CNTS and CET 21 have stipulated. The question which this Arbitral Tribunal, however, has to decide is not whether the Media Council was allowed to send such a letter, but whether the sending of the letter constituted a breach of the Treaty obligations of the Respondent.

277. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the issuance of the Media Council's 15 March 1999 letter does not constitute an arbitrary measure and therefore cannot be considered as a breach of the Treaty.
278. As stated above (see 5.5.2.3 and 5.5.2.4.1), the Media Council was concerned with the fact that the unclear legal and factual situation may lead to a de facto transfer of the License to CNTS, in violation of the Media Law. The exclusive relationship between CET 21, the licensed broadcaster, and CNTS, its partner in the operation of TV Nova, was regarded with suspicion, because the Media Council was of the opinion that it presented the inherent danger of a de facto transfer of the License.
279. The Media Council's view on this issue was expressed, for instance, in its opinion to the Permanent Media Commission of the House of Deputies of the Parliament of 19 September 1999 with respect to the dispute between CET 21 and CNTS. Chapter 4 reads as follows: "Each party has its own version of the heart of the issue based on a different interpretation of concluded agreements. CME insists on exclusivity and claims that CET 21 is obliged to broadcast exclusively through CNTS whereas CET 21 denies exclusivity and claims its right to conclude service agreements with any companies it pleases. As in the past, the Council's position in this matter is closer to the opinion that an exclusive relationship between the license holder and a service company is not desirable as it gives an opportunity to manipulate with the license" (Exhibit C68). The Media Council also expressed its view on this issue in the supplementary report of 15 November 1999 to the same Commission: "Administrative proceedings to revoke a license can be started only in the event of serious violation of the Broadcasting Act, and there must be provable reasons for them. Interrupting the cooperation of two private companies is not such a reason, and in addition, the council considers the exclusive relationship between the broadcaster and the only service organization as undesirable, due to the danger of a hidden transfer of the license" (Exhibit R126).
280. The disputed 15 March 1999 letter to CET 21 contained the following statement: "Business relations between the operator of broadcasting and service organizations are built on a nonexclusive basis. Exclusive relations between the operator and the service organization may result in de facto transfer of some functions and rights pertaining to the operator of broadcasting and, in effect, a transfer of the license” (Exhibit C34).

281. This statement is to be replaced in the context of the letter, which expressed the Media Council’s opinion on the requirements of the Media Law with respect to television broadcasting: “Because the Council was also asked by the Parliamentary Media Committee to issue an opinion on whether commercial television broadcasting complies with the Act on Broadcasting and valid licenses, we would like to summarize requirements that, in our opinion, express the contents of television broadcasting: (...).” Beside the list of said requirements, among them the above mentioned statement on regarding the exclusive relationship, the letter also explained the reason for terminating the administrative proceedings against CNTS for unauthorized broadcasting, and requested CET 21 to inform the Media Council about the implementation of the various changes with respect to the legal relationships between CET and CNTS, and to submit the current program composition and broadcasting schedule.
282. Although the statement about the non exclusive basis of the relationship between the holder of the license and the service organization might be viewed as a change of the previous position of the Media Council with respect to this issue, because the Media Council had been satisfied with the amendment of the MOA and the various 1996 and 1997 agreements between CET 21 and CNTS, which all stated the exclusive basis of the relationship between the two companies, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that it does not constitute a “measure” within the meaning of the Treaty, but merely expresses the general opinion of a regulatory body regarding the proper interpretation which should be given to the Media Law.
283. This letter was not aimed at having, and could not have, any legal effect. Condition 17 to the License, which required CET 21 to submit to the Media Council for approval any change in the MOA, had been cancelled end of 1996 (Exhibits R57 and C30). Since then, the Media Council had no authority to approve or disapprove any modification to the relationship between CET 21 and CNTS.

284. Since the Media Council's 15 March 1999 letter to CET 21 did not amount to a "measure", the Respondent did not violate the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures.
285. The Arbitral Tribunal also considers that said letter was neither arbitrary nor discriminatory. There indeed existed reasonable grounds, even if not necessarily conclusive, for the Media Council to view the existence of an exclusive relationship between CET 21 and CNTS as a danger of a de facto transfer of the License.
286. In addition, the Media Council remained independent from the dispute between CET 21 and CNTS. The 15 March 1999 letter was indeed significantly different from the request for said letter filed by CET 21 on 3 March 1999. In particular, the Media Council's letter did not reproduce CET 21's statement that the operator, i.e. CET 21, "should order services from service organizations at regular prices so as to respect rules of equal competition ", nor the statement that "[f]or the level of provided services to agree with the terms of the license and Czech regulatory requirements, the licensed subject must have the ability to select relevant services anytime and anywhere at will" (Exhibit C33). Those differences between CET 21's request and the Media Council's letter show that the latter did not just follow the wishes Mr. Železný, who controlled CET 21 at that time.
287. In this respect, the Arbitral Tribunal notes that the Claimant or the entities he controls did not commence any administrative or other proceedings before the appropriate courts of the Czech Republic in the course of which the issue of the overall attitude of the Media Council in this affair, mainly its alleged contradictory interpretation of the Media Law, could be addressed and decided. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that these proceedings do not constitute the appropriate forum to decide on hypothetical questions of the interpretation of the Media Law.
288. The Arbitral Tribunal also considers that the issuance of the Media Council's 15 March 1999 letter was not the cause of the damage incurred by the Claimant. Although this letter might have strengthened the resolve of Mr. Železný to break up the relationship between CET 21 and CNTS, it was not used to achieve this purpose. CET 21 did not terminate the 1997 Agreement on the basis that it provided for an exclusive relationship with CNTS whereas the Media Council expressed the view such a relationship was undesirable. The legal reason for the termination was that CNTS had failed to submit a television program (Daily Log) on time, a requirement under the 1997 Agreement. Furthermore, there is no evidence that even if the Media Council had not written the 15 March 1999 letter, CET 21 would not have tried to terminate the 1997 Agreement on the ground of breach of contract.

5.53. The obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment

289. The Claimant alleges that the Respondent breached the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment to the Claimant's investments through the Media Council's reversal of critical prior approvals. This concerns the Media Council's proceedings in 1996 aimed at removing in the MOA the provision giving CNTS the exclusive right to use, benefit from and maintain the License. Furthermore the Claimant asserts that the Media Council demonstrated hostile conduct towards CNTS, by the totality of its other actions and inactions that undermined the rights which had been provided to CNTS (Reply Memorial, p. 81; Summary of Summation, p. 13).
290. The Claimant argues that the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment has its basis in the general principle of good faith. The State bound by the Treaty must indeed pursue the stated goal of achieving a stable framework for investment. The minimum requirement is that the State not engage in inconsistent conduct, e.g. by reversing to the detriment of the investor prior approvals on which he justifiably relied. Such a requirement is independent of the State's domestic law, i.e. the obligation to provide fair and equitable investment can be violated even if the State complied with the requirements under its domestic law. In addition, it is not relevant whether domestic investors in the same field received the same treatment as the foreign investor, since the level of protection may be different under domestic law and under the Treaty (Reply Memorial, p. 77-83; Mr. Kiernan's oral closing submissions, p. 161-168).

291. The Respondent argues that there exists no precise definition of the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment. What is fair and equitable is to be determined on the basis of the facts in each individual case. Anyway, this obligation is concerned with the conduct of the State, not with the results of the investments. Therefore, the fact that the investor loses money does not indicate that the State has breached the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment. There is no evidence of a violation of this obligation by the Czech Republic. Up to 1997, the Media Council was indeed seeking to monitor and enforce the Media Law in the face of growing concern that CNTS was breaching it. The Media Council did not discriminate against the Claimant in favor of nationals, did not reverse prior express permissions, and did not maliciously misapply the law. Between 1997 and 1999, the Media Council did not want to take sides with respect to the dispute between CET 21 and CNTS, which was considered a commercial dispute. In particular, the Media Council's letter of March 15, 1999, whose wording is different from the one requested by Mr. Železný, expressed the Media Council's policy in a lawful and non-discriminatory manner (Response, p. 55; Written Closing Submissions, p. 10-11).
292. Article II(2)(a) of the Treaty sets forth that "[i]nvestments shall at all times be accorded fair and equitable treatments, (...)". As with any treaty, the Treaty shall be interpreted by reference to its object and purpose, as well as by the circumstances of its conclusion (Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, Articles 31 and 32). The preamble of the Treaty states that the Parties agree "that fair and equitable treatment of investment is desirable in order to maintain a stable framework for investment and maximum effective utilization of economic resources". The Arbitral Tribunal notes that there is no further definition of the notion of fair and equitable treatment in the Treaty. The United Nations Conference On Trade And Development has examined the meaning of this doctrine. Fair and equitable treatment is related to the traditional standard of due diligence and provides a "minimum international standard which forms part of customary international law" (U.N. Conference On Trade & Development: Bilateral Investment Treaties In The Mid-1990s at 53, U.N. Doc. UNCTAD/ITE/IIT/7, U.N. Sales No. E.98.II.D.8 (1998) (English version). In the context of bilateral investment treaties, the "fair and equitable" standard is subjective and depends heavily on a factual context. It "will also prevent discrimination against the beneficiary of the standard, where discrimination would amount to unfairness or inequity in the circumstances” (U.N. Conference On Trade & Development: Fair And Equitable Treatment, Vol. III at 10,15, U.N. Doc. UNCTAD/ITE/IIT/II, U.N. Sales No. E.99.11.D.15 (1999) (English version)).

293. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that none of the actions and inactions of the Media Council, which have already been examined with respect to the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures (see above 5.5.2), constitutes a violation of the duty to provide fair and equitable treatment.
294. In order to avoid redundancy, the Arbitral Tribunal mainly refers to the developments made under the chapter addressing the issue of the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures, for most of the arguments denying the existence of any arbitrary and discriminatory measure from the Czech Republic as from 1996 also apply to the Respondent’s compliance with the obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment.
295. This being said, the Arbitral Tribunal does not see any inconsistent conduct on the part of the Media Council which would amount to an unfair and inequitable treatment.
296. In particular, the initiation of the administrative proceedings for unauthorized broadcasting in 1996 was not inconsistent with any prior conduct of the Media Council. At that time, the Media Council had objective reasons to think that CNTS was violating the Media Law, i.e. that it was the broadcaster of TV Nova in lieu of CET 21, the holder of the License. The Media Council’s duties were, among others, to ensure the observance of the Media Law.
297. There can not be any inconsistent conduct in a regulatory body taking the necessary actions to enforce the law, absent any specific undertaking that it will refrain from doing so. No such undertaking was given by the Media Council or any other organ of the Czech Republic.
298. The prior approval by the Media Council of the MOA, in the context of the License being granted to CET 21, contained no commitment to allow CET 21 and CNTS to violate the Media Law. On the contrary, the License expressly stated that “[t]he license holder (...) also agrees to observe the conditions stated in the appendix to this license". Condition 1 to the License set forth that "[t]he license holder agrees (...) that its broadcasting will be in accordance with the laws of the Czech Republic and the international obligations of the Czech Republic. Broadcasting will, in particular, observe (...) the provisions of Act no. 468/1991 Coll., on operating radio and television (...)" (Exhibit R5). The amendment to the Media Law did not change anything with respect to CET 21's obligation to comply with the Media Law.

299. The administrative proceedings against CNTS for unauthorized broadcasting was not initiated on the ground that CNTS would have abided by the previously approved MOA, which would itself then be considered as violating the Media Law. As already stated, the reason for commencing such proceedings was the Media Council's concern that CNTS was operating the broadcasting of TV Nova in violation of the License and of the Media Law.
300. Regarding the changes to the legal relationships between CET 21 and CNTS, i.e. the amendment to the MOA and the conclusion of the various agreements between the two companies, there was also no inconsistent conduct on the part of the Media Council.
301. At no time did the Media Council decide that the approval of the original MOA was deemed null and void, and that any guarantee given to CET 21 and CNTS at that time had to be withdrawn. As stated above (see 5.5.2.4.1), all changes to the legal relationships between CET 21 and CNTS made in 1996 and 1997 were aimed at specifying, not altering, the content of said relationships in order to ensure a clear situation in observance of the Media Law.
302. Furthermore, CET 21, CNTS and CME fully cooperated to this process, after being given proper legal advice on the various issues addressed.
303. Finally, the issuance of the 15 March 1999 letter by the Media Council, although in some way in contradiction with the previously approved MOA on the question of the exclusive nature of the contractual relationship between CET 21 and CNTS, was nothing more than an opinion without any legal effect. It did not alter - and was not aimed at altering – the contractual relationships between the two companies, which remained governed by the 1997 Agreement then in force.

304. In addition, the Arbitral Tribunal is of the opinion that the 15 March 1999 letter was not the direct cause of the damage allegedly suffered by the Claimant. Any damage resulted from the decision of CET 21, controlled by Mr. Železný, to terminate the 1997 Agreement with CNTS. CET 21 made no use of the 15 March 1999 letter. There is no evidence that CET 21 would not have terminated the contractual relationships with CNTS if the Media Council had not issued the 15 March letter, or, for argument's sake, had stated that it was of the opinion that an exclusive relationship between the two companies fully complied with the Media Law. With respect to causality in general see above § 234 and 235.

5.5.4 The obligation to provide full protection and security

305. The Claimant alleges that the Respondent failed to provide full protection and security to his investment (i) by forcing a change in the Media Law, (ii) by initiating the administrative proceedings against CNTS in 1996, (iii) by subsequent pressures to bring about the restructuring of CNTS, (iv) by issuing the 15 March 1999 letter, (v) by refusing all CNTS's requests to halt CET 21's dismantling of all dealings with the former, and (vi) by authorizing a share capital increase in CET 21 with knowledge that it would frustrate the ICC arbitral panel's interim order and would defy an express contrary request from Parliament (Reply Memorial, p. 85).

306. The Claimant argues that the obligation of full protection and security requires that the State take all steps necessary to protect foreign investments whatever the requirements of domestic law are and regardless of whether the threat to the investment arises from the State's own actions. The State has an obligation of vigilance under which it must take all measures necessary to ensure the full enjoyment of protection and security of the foreign investment (Memorial, p. 55; Reply Memorial, p. 83-85).

307. The Respondent argues the obligation of full protection and security is not an absolute obligation. A State is only obliged to provide protection which is reasonable under the circumstances. Furthermore, the obligation is limited to the activities of the State itself, and does not extend to the activities of a private person or entity. There can also be no legitimate expectation that there will not be any regulatory change (Response, p. 57-59).
308. Article II(2)(a) of the Treaty provides that "[i]nvestment (...) shall enjoy full protection and security". There is no further definition of this obligation in the Treaty. The Arbitral Tribunal is of the opinion that the Treaty obliges the Parties to exercise such due diligence in the protection of foreign investment as reasonable under the circumstances. However, the Treaty does not oblige the Parties to protect foreign investment against any possible loss of value caused by persons whose acts could not be attributed to the State. Such protection would indeed amount to strict liability, which can not be imposed to a State absent any specific provision in the Treaty (Dolzer and Stevens, Bilateral Investment Treaties, p. 61).
309. The Arbitral Tribunal holds that none of the facts alleged by the Claimant constituted a violation by the Respondent of the obligation to provide full protection and security under the Treaty.
310. Here again, in order to avoid redundancy, the Arbitral Tribunal refers to the findings made under the chapter addressing the issue of the prohibition against arbitrary and discriminatory measures (see above 5.5.2), for most of the arguments denying the existence of any arbitrary and discriminatory measure from the Czech Republic as from 1996 also apply to the Respondent's compliance with the obligation to provide full protection and security.
311. In particular, as regards the amendment to the Media Law in late 1995, effective on 1 January 1996, there is no evidence that such amendment, enacted by the Czech Parliament, was forced by the Media Council. Furthermore, the change in the Media Law did not constitute a danger for the Claimant's investment in the Czech Republic. In particular, the deletion of Article 12(3) authorizing the Media Council to include conditions to the grant of a license was not aimed at, nor suited to, destroying

Mr. Lauder's investment. On the contrary, such a change was favorably viewed by the entities operating TV Nova, since CET 21, represented by Mr. Železný, who was at that time on the side of the Claimant, immediately applied to the Media Council for the cancellation of most of the Conditions set in the License, among others Condition 17 (Exhibit R31).

312. Furthermore, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that it is not the Media Council's role to halt the alleged dismantling by CET 21 of all its dealings with CNTS, nor to enforce an ICC arbitral tribunal interim order. In any event, if the Media Council had acted in violation of its own obligations in respect of these two issues, the present arbitration proceedings are not the proper forum to seek relief. The Claimant should have and in fact did initiate action before the competent administrative or civil courts of the Czech Republic.
313. In addition, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that none of the actions or inactions of the Media Council caused a direct or indirect damage to Mr. Lauder's investment. The action which actually caused the Claimant to lose part of his investment was the termination by CET 21 of its contractual relationship with CNTS in 1999. In other words, the business relationship between CET 21 and CNTS survived all the alleged actions and inactions of the Media Council. It so did until Mr. Železný changed sides and decided to act in favor of CET 21, which by 1999 he controlled, against CNTS in which he no longer had any direct or indirect control. Regarding the issue of causality for the alleged loss suffered by the Claimant see especially § 234 and 235 above.
314. The investment treaty created no duty of due diligence on the part of the Czech Republic to intervene in the dispute between the two companies over the nature of their legal relationships. The Respondent's only duty under the Treaty was to keep its judicial system available for the Claimant and any entities he controls to bring their claims, and for such claims to be properly examined and decided in accordance with domestic and international law. There is no evidence - not even an allegation - that the Respondent has violated this obligation. On the contrary, the numerous Czech court proceedings initiated by CNTS, CME and Mr. Lauder against CET 21 and Mr. Železný show that the Czech judicial system has remained fully available to the Claimant. In particular, the 4 May 2000 decision by the Regional Commercial Court in Prague that CET 21 was obligated to procure all services for television broadcasting exclusively through CNTS (Exhibit C54) is conclusive evidence of this availability. While this decision was later annulled by the High Court in Prague (Exhibit R134) an appeal is now pending before the Czech Supreme Court, which may still rule in favor of CNTS.

6. Costs

315. Article 38 of the UNCITRAL Rules states that the Arbitral Tribunal shall fix the costs of arbitration in its Award and defines the term “costs”.
316. At the Hearing of 17 March 2000 the Parties and the Arbitrators agreed on the formula for the fees of the Arbitral Tribunal. The fees and travel and other expenses incurred by the Arbitrators are herewith fixed at United States Dollars 501'370.20
317. According to Article 40 of the UNCITRAL Rules, the costs of arbitration shall in principle be borne by the unsuccessful party. However, the Arbitral Tribunal may apportion such costs between the Parties if it determines that apportionment is reasonable, taking into account the circumstances of the case. The same applies according to Article 40(2) with respect to the costs of legal representation and assistance. The Arbitral Tribunal can take into account the circumstances of the case and is free to determine which Party shall bear such costs or may apportioned such costs between the Parties if it determines that apportionment is reasonable.
318. Among the circumstances the Tribunal has taken into account is its finding that the Respondent, at the very beginning of the investment by the Claimant in the Czech Republic, breached its obligations not to subject the investment to discriminatory and arbitrary measures when it reneged on its original approval of a capital investment in the licence holder and insisted on the creation of a joint venture. Furthermore, various steps were taken by the Media Council, especially, but not only, the 15 March 1999 letter to CET 21. Although the Arbitral Tribunal came to the conclusion that such acts did not constitute a violation of the Treaty obligations of the Respondent, the Claimant bona fide could nevertheless feel that he had to commence these arbitration proceedings. Furthermore, the behaviour of the Respondent regarding the discovery of documents, which the Claimant could rightly feel might shed more light on the acts of the Respondent, needs to be mentioned in this context.

319. Taking all these circumstances of the case into account, the Arbitral Tribunal comes to the decision that each Party shall pay one half of the fees and expenses of the Arbitral Tribunal and the hearing cost and bear its own costs for legal representation and assistance and the costs of its witnesses.

NOW THEREFORE THE ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL

DECIDES

1. It has jurisdiction to hear and decide this case.
2. The Respondent committed a breach of its obligation to refrain from arbitrary and discriminatory measures when in the Winter of 1993 it changed its original position, which had been made known to the Claimant and to the public at large, allowing an equity investment of the Claimant in CET 21, the holder of the licence to broadcast, and insisted that the participation of the Claimant could not be made in the form of an equity participation but only through a joint venture company.
3. The claim for a declaration that the Respondent committed further breaches of the Treaty are denied and all claims for damages are denied.

4. Each Party shall pay one half of the fees and expenses of the Arbitral Tribunal which are fixed at US$ 501'370.20
5. Each Party shall pay one half of the direct costs involved in the London Hearings, including room hire, cost of court reporters, etc.
6. Each Party shall carry its own costs for legal representation and assistance, including the travel and other expenses of witnesses presented by the respective Party.
7. All other claims are herewith dismissed.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. This dispute arises out of the activities of the Claimant, Metalclad Corporation (hereinafter “Metalclad”), in the Mexican Municipality of Guadalcazar (hereinafter “Guadalcazar”), located in the Mexican State of San Luis Potosi (hereinafter “SLP”). Metalclad alleges that Respondent, the United Mexican States (hereinafter “Mexico”), through its local governments of SLP and Guadalcazar, interfered with its development and operation of a hazardous waste landfill. Metalclad claims that this interference is a violation of the Chapter Eleven investment provisions of the North American Free Trade Agreement (hereinafter “NAFTA”). In particular, Metalclad alleges violations of (i) NAFTA, Article 1105, which requires each Party to NAFTA to “accord to investments of investors of another Party treatment in accordance with international law, including fair and equitable treatment and full protection and security”; and (ii) NAFTA, Article 1110, which provides that “no Party to NAFTA may directly or indirectly nationalize or expropriate an investment of an investor of another Party in its territory or take a measure tantamount to nationalization or expropriation of such an investment (‘expropriation’), except: (a) for a public purpose; (b) on a non-discriminatory basis; (c) in accordance with due process of law and Article 1105(1); and (d) on payment of compensation in accordance with paragraphs 2 through 6”. Mexico denies these allegations.

A. The Claimant

2. Metalclad is an enterprise of the United States of America, incorporated under the laws of Delaware. Eco-Metalclad Corporation (hereinafter “ECO”) is an enterprise of the United States of America, incorporated under the laws of Utah. ECO is wholly-owned by Metalclad, and owns 100% of the shares in Ecosistemas Nacionales, S.A. de C.V. (hereinafter “ECONSA”), a Mexican corporation. In 1993, ECONSA purchased the Mexican company Confinamiento Tecnico de Residuos Industriales, S.A. de C.V. (hereinafter "COTERIN") with a view to the acquisition, development and operation of the latter's hazardous waste transfer station and landfill in the valley of La Pedrera, located in Guadalcazar. COTERIN is the owner of record of the landfill property as well as the permits and licenses which are at the base of this dispute.

3. COTERIN is the "enterprise" on behalf of which Metalclad has, as an "investor of a Party", submitted a claim to arbitration under NAFTA, Article 1117.

4. In these proceedings, Metalclad has been represented by:

Clyde C. Pearce, Esq.
Law Offices of Clyde C. Pearce
1418 South Main Street
Suite 201
Salinas, California 93908
USA.

B. The Respondent

5. The Respondent is the Government of the United Mexican States. It has been represented by:

Lic. Hugo Perezcano Diaz
Consultor Juridico
Subsecretaria de Negociaciones Comerciales Internacionales
Direccion General de Consultoria Juridica de Negociaciones
Secretaria de Comercio y Fomento Industrial Alfonso Reyes No.30, Piso 17
Colonia Condesa
Mexico, Distrito Federal, C.P. 06149
Mexico.

III. OTHER ENTITIES

6. The Town Council of Guadalcazar, SLP, is the municipal government of Guadalcazar, the site of the landfill project. While neither Guadal-cazar nor SLP are named as Respondents, Metalclad alleges that Guadalucazar and SLP took some of the actions claimed to constitute unfair treatment and expropriation violative of NAFTA.

IV. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

7. On October 2, 1996, Metalclad delivered to Mexico a Notice of Intent to Submit a Claim to Arbitration in accordance with NAFTA, Article 1119, thereby instituting proceedings on behalf of its wholly owned enterprise, COTERIN, for purposes of standing under NAFTA, Article 1117. On December 30, 1996, Metalclad delivered to Mexico a written consent and waiver in compliance with NAFTA, Article 1121(2)(a) and (b).

8. On January 2, 1997, and pursuant to the NAFTA, Article 1120, Metalclad filed its Notice of Claim with the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (hereinafter “ICSID”),<sup>1</sup> and requested the Secretary-General of ICSID to approve and register its application and to permit access to the ICSID Additional Facility.

9. On January 13, 1997, the Secretary-General of ICSID informed the parties that the requirements of Article 4(2) of the ICSID Additional Facility Rules had been fulfilled and that Metalclad’s application for access to the Additional Facility was approved. The Secretary-General of ICSID issued a Certificate of Registration of the Notice of Claim on that same day.

10. On May 19, 1997, the Tribunal was constituted. The Secretary-General of ICSID informed the parties that the Tribunal was “deemed to have been constituted and the proceedings to have begun” on May 19, 1997, and that Mr. Alejandro A. Escobar, ICSID, would serve as Secretary to the Tribunal. All subsequent written communications between the Tribunal and the parties were made through the ICSID Secretariat.

<sup>1</sup> Under NAFTA, Article 1120(1)(b), a disputing investor may submit its claim to arbitration under the Additional Facility Rules of ICSID provided that either the disputing Party whose measure is alleged to be a breach referred to in Article 1117 (in this case, Mexico) or the Party of the investor (in this case, the United States of America), but not both, is a party to the ICSID Convention. The United States of America is a party to the ICSID Convention; Mexico is not. Hence the Additional Facility Rules of ICSID appropriately govern the administration of these proceedings.

11. The first session of the Tribunal was held, with the parties' agreement, in Washington, D.C. on July 15, 1997. In accordance with Article 21 of the ICSID Arbitration (Additional Facility) Rules (hereinafter "the Rules"), the Tribunal then determined that the place of arbitration would be Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. The parties accepted that determination by the Tribunal.

12. Numerous requests for production of documents were exchanged by the parties, some of which were allowed, and some of which were disallowed, particularly those that came later in the proceedings. Through instructions given by its President,<sup>2</sup> the Tribunal issued a ruling on April 27, 1999, relating to Mexico's April 14, 1999 Request for Production of Documents. The President of the Tribunal indicated that he could not, at that stage of the case, decide the extent to which the requested documents and materials might be relevant to the case, but ordered Metalclad to produce the documents at issue and noted that Metalclad might seek an award of costs related to the production should the requests be adjudged unreasonable or improper. No such finding has been made.

13. On September 10, 1997, pursuant to NAFTA, Article 1134 providing for interim measures of protection and Article 28 of the Rules providing for Procedural Orders, Mexico filed a Request for a Confidentiality Order seeking a formal order that the proceedings be confidential. Metalclad filed its response on October 9, 1997. On October 27, 1997, the Tribunal issued a determination, which in its material part reads as follows:

"There remains nonetheless a question as to whether there exists any general principle of confidentiality that would operate to prohibit public discussion of the arbitration proceedings by either party. Neither the NAFTA nor the ICSID (Additional Facility) Rules contain any express restriction on the freedom of the parties in this respect. Though it is frequently said that one of the reasons for recourse to arbitration is to avoid publicity, unless the agreement between the parties incorporates such a limitation, <sup>2</sup> At the first session of the Tribunal, of July 15, 1997, the parties agreed that the President of the Tribunal should have the power to determine procedural matters.

each of them is still free to speak publicly of the arbitration. It may be observed that no such limitation is written into such major arbitral texts as the UNCITRAL Rules or the draft Articles on Arbitration adopted by the International Law Commission. Indeed, as has been pointed out by the Claimant in its comments, under United States security laws, the Claimant, as a public company traded on a public stock exchange in the United States, is under a positive duty to provide certain information about its activities to its shareholders, especially regarding its involvement in a process the outcome of which could perhaps significantly affect its share value.

“The above having been said, it still appears to the Arbitral Tribunal that it would be of advantage to the orderly unfolding of the arbitral process and conducive to the maintenance of working relations between the Parties if during the proceedings they were both to limit public discussion of the case to a minimum, subject only to any externally imposed obligation of disclosure by which either of them may be legally bound”.

14. On October 14, 1997, Metalclad filed its Memorial. On December 17, 1997, Mexico filed a Request for an Extension of Time for the filing of its Counter-memorial. Metalclad filed an Opposition to the requested extension, Mexico filed a Reply and Metalclad filed a Rejoinder. On January 7, 1998, the Tribunal granted Mexico’s request for an extension and ordered that Mexico’s Counter-Memorial be filed February 17, 1998.

15. On February 17, 1998, Mexico filed its Counter-Memorial without objection. Certain exhibits of Mexico’s Counter-Memorial were filed May 22, 1998, and Mexico’s translations of certain exhibits were filed with the Claimant on July 17, 1998 and with the Secretariat on July 20, 1998.

16. On February 20, 1998, Metalclad filed a Motion for Sanctions regarding Mexico’s “untimely” filing of its Counter-Memorial. Metalclad objected to Mexico’s failure to submit translations of all pertinent documents with the Counter-Memorial on the date due and set by previous

Order of the Arbitral Tribunal. Mexico filed an Opposition to the Motion for Sanctions, to which Metalclad filed a Reply and Rejoinder, to which Mexico filed an additional Opposition. On March 31, 1998, the Tribunal denied Metalclad's Motion for Sanctions and stated that non-acceptance of the Counter-Memorial and/or the exclusion of certain documents from consideration would be excessive under the circumstances. The Tribunal further stated that it had been "unable to identify significant, if any, harm suffered by the Claimant by reason of the delay in the filing of the translations".

17. On April 6, 1998, Metalclad filed a Request to Submit a Reply to Mexico's Counter-Memorial, to which Mexico filed an Opposition. On April 20, 1998, the Tribunal granted Metalclad's Request to Submit a Reply, and ordered Metalclad to file the same by June 30, 1998. In its Order, the Tribunal noted that the date for Mexico's Rejoinder would be set after the Tribunal had considered the Reply.

18. On June 22, 1998, Metalclad filed a Motion for Additional Time to File its Reply, to which Mexico filed a Response. On June 29, 1998, the Tribunal granted Metalclad's Motion for Additional Time and ordered the Reply to be filed August 6, 1998. On July 28, 1998, the Tribunal granted the Claimant's request for a further extension of the time period for filing its Reply until August 21, 1998.

19. On August 21, 1998, Metalclad filed its Reply without objection. Transcriptions of portions of the American Appraisal Associate's ("AAA") Expert Report were filed September 3, 1998. Translations of the Reply were filed September 22, 1998 and translations of the AAA Expert Report were filed September 28, 1998.

20. On October 5, 1998, Mexico filed Observations regarding Metalclad's Reply. Metalclad filed a Reply to the Observations, to which Mexico filed a Reply. On November 13, 1998, the Tribunal denied Mexico's requests for exclusion of certain information submitted with the Reply and for the award of costs at that point in time. The Tribunal ordered Mexico to file its Rejoinder by March 19, 1999.

21. On February 22, 1999, Mexico filed a Request for an Extension of Time for the Filing of its Rejoinder. On March 4, 1999, the Tribunal granted Mexico's Request for an Extension of Time and ordered Mexico to file the Rejoinder by April 19, 1999. In the same Order, the Tribunal set the pre-hearing conference for the marshalling of the evidence for July 6, 1999 in Washington, D.C. The Tribunal also ordered the parties' witness lists to be filed by June 11, 1999, together with an outline of each witness's testimony and an estimate of time for each party's presentation of its case and for the examination of witnesses. The Tribunal further set the hearing on the merits for August 30, 1999.

22. On March 11, 1999, Mexico filed a Request for Production of Documents. Metalclad filed a Response to Mexico's Request, to which Mexico filed a Reply. On April 14, 1999, Mexico then filed a request for an extension of one month in the time for filing its Rejoinder. On April 16, 1999, the Tribunal granted in part Mexico's Request for an Extension and ordered that the Rejoinder be filed by May 3, 1999. The Tribunal further extended the time for the parties to submit their marshalling of the evidence briefs to June 18, 1999. On May 3, 1999, Mexico filed its Rejoinder.

23. During the written phase of the pleadings, statements from the following persons were submitted by the Parties: by Metalclad – American Appraisal Associates, Augustina Armijo Bautista, Kevin C. Brennan, Gustavo Carvajal Isunza, Francisco Castillo Ayala, Centro JURICI, Ramon Chavez Quirarte, Anthony Dabbene, Daniel de la Torre, Jorge de la Torre, Lee A. Deets, William E. Gordon, Javier Guerra Cisneros, Bruce H. Haglund, Jaime E. Herrera, Ambassador James R. Jones, Grant S. Kesler, Ariel Miranda Nieto, Paul Mitchener, T. Daniel Neveau, Herbert L. Oakes Jr., Sandra Ray-Baucom, David Robinson, Sergio Reyes Lujan, Humberto C. Rodarte Ramon, Mario Salgado de la Sancha, Leland E. Sweetser, Anthony Talamantez, Mike Tuckett, Roy Zanatta; by Mexico – Luis Manuel Abella Armella, Sergio Aleman Gonzalez, Rene Altamirano Perez, Salomon Avila Perez, Antonio Azuela de la Cueva, Fernando Bejarano, Alan Borner, John C. Butler III, Julia Carabias Lillo, Juan Carrera Mendoza, José Ramón Cossío Díaz, Pablo Cruz Llañez, Kevin Dages, Jaime de la Cruz Noguera, Jose Mario de la Garza Mendizabal, Carlos de Silva, Fernando Diaz-Barriga Martinez, Hector Raul Garcia Leos, Jorge Adolfo Hermosillo Silva, Francisco Enrique Hernandez Sanchez, Sergio Lopez Ayllon, Joel Milan, Pedro Medellin Milan, Hermilo Mendez Aguilar, Angelina Nunez, Santiago Oñate Laborde, Rogelio Orta Campos, Jose Antonio Ortega Rivero, Praxedis Palomo Tovar, Officials of PRODIN, Leonel Ramos Torres, Ronald E. Robertson, Aurelio Romo Navarro, Juan

Antonio Romo, Horacio Sanchez Unzueta, Leonel Serrato Sanchez, Ulises Schmill Ordonez, Marcia Williams, Ramiro Zaragoza Garcia, Mark Zmijewski.

24. As permitted by NAFTA, Article 1128, Canada made a written submission to the Tribunal on July 28, 1999. Although Canada does not have any specific commercial interest in the dispute in this case, the submission addressed the interpretation of NAFTA, Article 1110 relating to expropriation and compensation. Specifically, Canada rejected Metal-clad's suggestion that NAFTA, Article 1110 is a codification of the United States' position on the rules of international law regarding expropriation and compensation.

25. With the agreement of the parties, a hearing was held in Washington, D.C. from August 30, 1999 through September 9, 1999, at which both parties appeared and presented witnesses. The Tribunal directed that only those portions of the written submissions that were disputed were to be introduced at the hearing. Witnesses called by Metal-clad for cross-examination were Julia Carabias Lillo, Horacio Sanchez Unzueta, Pedro Medellin Milan, Leonel Ramos Torres, Marcia Williams and John Butler III; witnesses called for cross-examination by Mexico were Grant S. Kesler, Gustavo Carvajal Isunza, Anthony Dabbene, Lee A. Deets and Daniel T. Neveau.

26. The Tribunal posed questions to the parties, which were addressed by the parties in their post-hearing briefs submitted on November 9, 1999. Full verbatim transcripts were made of the hearing and distributed to the parties.

27. As permitted by NAFTA, Article 1128, the United States made a written submission to the Tribunal on November 9, 1999. Although the United States does not have any specific commercial interest in the dispute in this case, the submission set forth the United States' position that the actions of local governments, including municipalities, are subject to NAFTA standards. The United States also submitted that the NAFTA, Article 1110, term "tantamount to expropriation" addressed both measures that directly expropriate and measures tantamount to expropriation that thereby indirectly expropriate investments. The United States rejected the suggestion that the term "tantamount to expropriation" was intended to create a new category of expropriation not previously recognized in customary international law.

V. FACTS AND ALLEGATIONS

A. The Facilities at Issue

28. In 1990 the federal government of Mexico authorized COTERIN to construct and operate a transfer station for hazardous waste in La Pedrera, a valley located in Guadalucazar in SLP. The site has an area of 814 hectares and lies 100 kilometers northeast of the capital city of SLP, separated from it by the Sierra Guadalucazar mountain range, 70 kilometers from the city of Guadalucazar. Approximately 800 people live within ten kilometers of the site.

29. On January 23, 1993, the National Ecological Institute (hereinafter “INE”), an independent sub-agency of the federal Secretariat of the Mexican Environment, National Resources and Fishing (hereinafter “SEMARNAP”), granted COTERIN a federal permit to construct a hazardous waste landfill in La Pedrera (hereinafter “the landfill”).

B. Metalclad’s Purchase of the Site and its Landfill Permits

30. Three months after the issuance of the federal construction permit, on April 23, 1993, Metalclad entered into a 6-month option agreement to purchase COTERIN together with its permits, in order to build the hazardous waste landfill.

31. Shortly thereafter, on May 11, 1993, the government of SLP granted COTERIN a state land use permit to construct the landfill. The permit was issued subject to the condition that the project adapt to the specifications and technical requirements indicated by the corresponding authorities, and accompanied by the General Statement that the license did not prejudice the rights or ownership of the applicant and did not authorize works, constructions or the functioning of business or activities.

32. One month later, on June 11, 1993, Metalclad met with the Governor of SLP to discuss the project. Metalclad asserts that at this meeting it obtained the Governor’s support for the project. In fact, the Governor acknowledged at the hearing that a reasonable person might expect that the Governor would support the project if studies confirmed the site as suitable or feasible and if the environmental impact was consistent with Mexican standards.
